Three incidents then occurred with some bearing upon the lovers. One day it was announced that the Foundell with all her precious cargo, whatever it might be, had been made the prize of an American-cruiser, and taken into an American harbor. Another day, news came that Sir D'Arlincourt D'Arlincourt had departed this life; all hopes of the D'Arlincourt direction died with him. The third bit of news was the declaration of peace. The loss of the Foundell wounded things yet a little longer; and, after that, to show her impetuous lover that she was yet mistress of herself, Sabrina put off her wedding-day another time. The death of her cousin destroyed all her plans for Gabriel's advancement and her own. The declaration of peace brought a proclamation of great wealth and some pressure from baltimore to the Provinces. "He was a relative of Mrs. Howard's, and, according to the true Provincial hospitality, made her house his home; and with her the saying proved only too true that blood is thicker than water. The old Lady could not bely wedding-day another time. The death of her cousin, that it was not Mr. Hilary instead of Gabriel that was going to take her away; and then the young woman would go off into dilations upon the style and splendor of the Hilary mansions: their retinue of servants, their equipages, and entertainments, till Gabriel being out of the way—more especially as Mr. Hilary himself was evidently of that way of thinking—Sabrina could hardly help waking so too. And Gabriel, seeing dimly how the tide was setting, continued out of the way, giving his rival unlimited advantage; and Mr. Hilary made the most of every opportunity afforded him, loading her with flowers, putting his superb horses at her service, since the lady had long been ailed, with every thing else that could in any way lower her father's debts, bringing her music and books, paying her compliments as a matter of course to Gabriel's talent—though perhaps none the less sincere for that—and finally one day, through Mrs. Howard, making to Sabrina the most direct offer of his hand.

That very day Gabriel came in, and in her own room found Sabrina seated before her mirror. He tossed into her lap a bunch of damask roses that must have blossomed under his touch upon some favorite bush. He was ready to be scolded not to be found outdoors upon that late autumn day with its light snow falling. "Some roses for my rose," said he. "Although, as we no need of any bud in our own." They bloomed on Sabrina's cheek afresh as he spoke, but she silently gathered the stems with one hand while the other she hummed over the strings of the harp still vibrating with the tune. Gabriel laid his palm upon the strings to deaden them, and bent his head to hers. "All," said he, "and to that my morning greeting?"

"Don't be idle now, Mr. Gabriel Angier," was answered with a pretty dignity.

"Ah!" said Gabriel, drawing back, "there is no sorrow, I have heard say, like that of the phrase of one's own words."

Just then Mr. Hilary went down the stair and went out. "Is that creature here yet?" asked Gabriel.

"That creature is my very good friend," said Sabrina, with sauciness.

"Ah, the more pity. Shall I tell you what I have heard? No, not I, will take my love's name away from it." She possessed herself of her sketching-book. But Sabrina knew very well that it could be nothing but mention of herself in another that he would speak of. "Up to me, Sabrina," said he, half-lying back among the cushions and watching the slow descent of the large flakes without. "But great heavens, my dear; "play some tune like that these flakes are falling to. I remember, before I came, I did I was born in a snow-storm out upon moors like these beyond this town; the snow has ever since had a cruel kind of fascination to me. Give me a tune to it, and I shall be back ground to your picture so long, so long ago?—Play, my love."

So Sabrina played, a slender, ringing, melancholy tune, as if the thing in the night its wings between the strings. "Ah," said Gabriel, as she finished, "when I have you and your music always with me I shall wonder how I ever lived not do! I will paint the Archangel listening to music, and nobody will guess that it is only Sabrina D'Arlincourt."

Gabriel asked her when they should begin.

With a curious word Sabrina put him off; she had not been ill, so she said herself and none of her servants, but she was low. And when he would not accept her answer by lady withdrew into her shell and kept herself.

"Sabrina," said Gabriel, "if you care for me, you can not torture me so. I love you, and I can not endure it."

"Put an end to it then, Mr. Angier," said Sabrina, coldly.

Gabriel rose, walking up and down the room; stopped at last an instant before her, gave her one long look, a look full of pathos and fire, and then, without a word, went out. Then the door closed behind him, soft and dull, Sabrina found in her hand the ring that once she had given him. And just then Mrs. Howard came in, the bearer of Mr. Hilary's proposal. There was no time to think, no time to feel, and, with her clock running like an autumn leaf, Sabrina—angry, pained, proud, pleased at once—gave her answer.

But whether Gabriel sailed away that day in any outward-bound ship for the United States or England; or whether he wandered out upon that wild stormy moor that was the town, and, bewildered in the thickening snow-storm, the trackless, misty day, the starless, windy night, with that tune her harp-strings sung still ringing slavishly in his ears, he had lost himself and perished in the drifts, Sabrina never knew.

Certainly after seeking her in the full knowledge of her existing relations with another, Mr. Hilary deserved a loveless wife, and certainly he got one. He had no idea of uniting upon captives; affairs were ordained at his pleasure; before he could elect the virginity of his youth he carried his wife with him back to Baltimore.

Plunged at once into fur cayer society than ever her native town afforded, with its officers and barracks, quartering in her set all day, and its hearts by storm, Mrs. Hilary might well forget Sabrina D'Aricourt. The day that left her free with the ring between her fingers she had shut down and lid upon all her inner self, and fastened it, it seemed, with bands of iron. She ignored the past, gave no heed to the future, lived only in the gorgeous present. The dinners, the balls, the entertainments that she gave, were unequaled by any others; her diamonds, her lace, her shawls, and her velvets, were the despair of her female friends each and every; her horses and her coachmen were sent in to all the regions on gentleman's passionate excelled. To those who saw her only in the drive or on the street she seemed too brilliant a meteor to dwell long but pass; to those who haunted her hearth she was the thing to make them forget all the world besides in the intoxication of her smile, to her husband this did not displease him; she was a part of his entourage—he wished her worshiped. Gay, flattered, adored, commanding, the cup of triumph was forever at her lips. From the hour that she rose until that when she sunk wearily among her pillows at night, followed by guests, and gathering from a round of perpetual festival, there was scarcely the moment when she was alone, no instant for thought or memory, no blank, dark moment for any look to rise in. Her beauty seemed only to deepen with every season; whether in winter lights she looked from her opera-box like a picture from the past, or whether in summer days she held her court upon the sea-shore, that autumn leaf turned yet a richer by upon her cheek as ever in its Italian-summer sunshine on the bough; that lustre yes shone in her eye, that seemed illumined like the fires of the grace yet followed all her movements. The black day that should change all this bloom to frost was yet to come.

Mrs. Hilary had been married several years. She had never spoken of her girlhood since; she had seen no one from her native town; she had perhaps ceased to remember that such a man as Gabriel Angier had ever lived. It may be she had not yet seen that hour which would give her memory life to evoke her shadows and let them flap their wings about her; it may be she was strong enough to keep them all imprisoned as the seal of Solomon bound the Djins. To look at her you would have said she had no shadows, except those cast by her own radiance. To know well that her life was hollow and worthless; she was beginning to tire of adulation, of envy, and of conquest. Sometimes as she stepped into her carriage she felt a careful hand close the cashmere round her, where hand was none but in her sudden fancy; sometimes, if she woke bewildered in the dark, she felt a tender arm about her, a warm breath on her brow—she had her lamp kept trimmed and burning after that, she feared lest she were growing weak, and only threw herself into silver, more extravagant gavottes.

One summer-time, when Mrs. Hilary and her husband entertained a large party of their town acquaintance at their country-place, a rainy week came on, and they wearied at the close of the first time since Mrs. Hilary's marriage, for fresh amusement—and fitting out extemporary theatricals had recourse to a little drama, whilked the elder Mrs. Hilary directed them. The placid old lady, who had lived out her heyday, went with her daughter-in-law and the group willingly followed.

"There now," said she, "are suits, my dear, that you could play Shakspeare's queens in—and there are those that would do well for the witches. I remember we all went through one of Milton's Masques in that part there, and very well we looked it, as you say nowadays; and we played Molière once in these wigs and farthingales and folderols—the old thing has been turned into a pretty nursery since then, but it would do quite well enough again, my dear. Perhaps there are other things in all those chests gathered since that time. Open them, Mr. Bryant—shall he not, my dear? and we will see. Ah yes, that now. It was brought in here some dozen years ago. We were full of the prizes of one of my son's privateers, and I suppose it was nothing of value—it ought to have gone, I seem to have heard, to our cousin Howard in Nova Scotia; only it was of no use then, my son said, and so he sent it up here. If I remember rightly, it looked like a trousseau—it would do now for the Icy Bride. That one, Mr. Bryant."

The person addressed speedily did as desired, removed the cover of the box, and extracted first a square of hempen matting.

"To keep out sea-water, I suppose," said the old lady.

Then came, slowly lifted out, a large package, the twines yet united that had once bound it; and roll on roll of the old linen that wrapped it being opened, slip after slip being loosened the old lady gingerly raised what met her fingers at last, and, raised by the two shoulders, and shaking down fold after fold of rustling gauze-paper, there slowly came into the gray light of day a gown, where the tawny woven flowers and sprays swimming to the surface of the rich heavy fabric and curdling in every pocket, one would have said, seemed like the tarnished specter of some frosty morning's brother. It had grown yellow with the years; the full length of its drapery was streaked with dun breadths, as if snow could throw a shadow. Once it was dazzling enough for any bride, a gown of old Spanish brocade, each fold falling in lustre and amplitude silver-white and thick as some waxen leaf, and the garnishing of the whole in Irish lace gown with seed-pearl.

Mrs. Hilary stood there talking lightly with one of her crowd of conquests, the wit sparkling on her tongue, the light in her eye, on her cheek still that glowing autumn leaf burning itself away.

Suddenly, as she saw what her mother was doing, the moment came that had power to turn all her gems to cinders, her days to darkness—to lay its silent finger on her lips, to refuse to her forever the relief of tears. Gray hairs seemed all at once to cluster among her curls; the vivid hue of the autumn leaf fell from her face—the snow of winter gathered there and never left it.

For lifted slowly there before her, as if it were issuing from a sepulchre, and brought all the vanity, damps and mouldy stains of the grave with it, rising not like the ghost of past joys, but lifted like the dead body of joys that had lain with it, rotting in it, lying and loam in flaccid folds, the old hands there before her held her wedding-gown.

And then like an arrow piercing her heart in twain, the last look she had received from Gabriel Angier, that she had never since, in memory even, allowed herself to see, that look from the pale, blue, anguished eyes, full of pathos and full of love, came and smote her and hung before her, and with the apparition of that dead agony and the sudden act of its snow-drifts, the other apparition, avenging, unfading, like the rings and rays of light one sees when the eyes have been long pressed, now and staid forever there before her shuddering, aching gaze. Yet never was she desolate, whose life henceforth was bound and lived by a specter; and Mrs. Hilary's splendor went out in gloom and her fires in ashes.

MISS PRECIOSA'S PRINCIPLES.

In the most precise of country villages, in the primmest mansion ever built, dwelt the most precise maiden ever born, Miss Precious Lockwood. Even in that village, ruled by a spectre, Miss Precious reckoned one of the smaller sins, and the family in whose dwelling lights were seen burning after ten o'clock were considered dissipated, there was a current joke regarding Lockwood Cottage, which giddy girls had dubbed "The Nunnery," and some even went so far as to call "Miss Precious" by the name "perior."

Certainly convent walls never closed themselves more grimly against mankind, gentle and simple, old and young. What in many an excellent spinster has been an affectation was genuine with Miss Precious.

Long ago a pretty little cousin, who had been her confidential companion for some years, quarreled with a rascal with a handsome face and a sergeant's seal, and had eloped with him. They heard of her wearing clothes of flaming colors, of her dancing-ring, and driving about New Orleans in a handsome carriage, wondered at and admired for her beauty and shunned for her sin. Then, long after a long silence about her doings, a faded thing in rags came creeping at night to Miss Precious's cottage, begging for bread for her children, and for her in to die. Miss Precious did the reverse of what most women do. She gave a sister's hand to the poor victim—cared for her, fed her well, and buried her decently, and thenceforth shut her spinster home to man. She was twenty-seven, then, and far from young, but she argued thus: Something in a stove-pipe hat and boots has wrought this ill—all who wear those habiliments must be tabooed.

She kept her resolution. From the poor-house she selected a little orphan-girl who was old enough to think of "followers." As cook she kept a hideous old female, too far advanced in years to remember them. For a gardener she had a German woman. The butcher's wife, by request, brought in the joints. Even a woman cut the grass in the garden—it was the first time that it was approached the gates ancient Deborah, the cook, was sent forth to parley with and obstruct his approach. Having thus made "Perior" inviolate, Miss Precious went to New York and brought home a dead sister's daughter, who had hitherto been reared by a boarding-school, and the arrangements were complete.

Miss Lockwood took her niece to church, also to weekly meetings. They spent afternoons out with widow ladies with no grown-up sons, or with spinsters who resided in the village.

The elder lady kept an Argus eye upon her blooming niece, and bold indeed would have been the man who dared address her.

For her part, Miss Bella Bloom was an arch-hypocrite. She had learned that at boarding-school, where impunity is granted to those who flatter the authorities, and doing always exactly what is most forbidden. Bella Bloom came to Lockwood Cottage perfectly prepared to look for and find her aunt.

She did it. Precious blessed her stars that her niece was not a romantic, but a dull, matter-of-fact wonderer how any young lady could walk and talk and be sociable with and marry them. And when she thought that she had found in some widow lady could not intrude, how thankful she was Aunt Precia could never guess.

And all the while Bella was chafing inwardly at her restraint, envying girls who had pleasant little flirtations at will, and keeping up a private correspondence with a cousin. "Dear George," who used his letters under cover to the butcher's wife, who brought them in with the beef and mutton, and said, "Miss Jane, you're a lucky young lady to get such maids; and I was a gal myself once afore Cleaver courted me."

Dear George was desperate. He could not live without seeing his Bella. He wrote bitter things about cigar-smoke in the parlor, and threats to stone rendezvous in the back garden of the seminary, with Miss Clever standing sentry at the gate on the look-out for a governess and enemy. The first opportunity he was coming to Plainacres, and intended to see his Bella or die. Was he not twenty-three and also seventeen, and ready to waste their lives at a spinster's bidding? No.

Miss Precious, with her Argus-eyed watchfulness, sat calmly hour by hour two inches from the locked drawer of a cabinet which contained the gentleman's letters, and dined from meats which had been the means of conveying them across the threshold, inculcating her principles into the minds of her niece and handmaiden, the letter of whom grinned behind her lady's chair without reserve. Charity Pratt, having grown to be sixteen, also had her secret. It was the apothecary's boy who, in his own peculiar fashion, had expressed admiration at church by staring.

A few days after Mr. Green, the bachelor minister, called at the cottage. Deborah went out to huff and snap, and was subdued by the big eyes. She came in.

"Miss," said she, "the clergyman is out there."

"Where?" gasped Precious.

"In the parlor, with his beautiful' you."

"Ma! You said, of course, I was out?"

"No, Miss. Every body receives their pastor."

So the pastor was ushered in. He conversed of church affairs. Miss Precious answered by polite monosyllables. Bella smiled and stitched. Deborah sat on a bench and dozed. Finally the best specimen of that bad creature, man, was got out of the house safely, and the ladies looked at each other as the door might who had been cloaked with a polar bear and escaped unharmed.

"He's gone, aunty," said the hypocrite.

"Thank goodness!" said sincere Precious. "I thought I should have fainted. Never let it happen again, Deborah. Remember I'm always engaged."

"But he seems a nice, well-spoken, good-behaved kind of a gentleman," said Deborah. "And a clergyman."

"So he does," said Precious. "But appearances are deceitful. I once knew a clergyman—"

"Yes, Miss."

"A Doctor of Divinity, Bella—"

"Yes, aunt."

"Ah! who—who—"

"Well?"

"Who kissed a young lady of his congregation in her father's parlor."

"Oh! aunt!"

"He afterward married her. But I never could look her at the face."

"Bless you no," said Deborah. "Now the best thing you can do is to have a cup of strong green tea and something cooling to keep you from getting up. Cleaver's wife has just fetched oysters in." Private signal to Bella.

"Has she? Oh, I so love oysters!" cried Bella, and ran to get dear George's last.

It was a long one, and in it George vowed to appear at the cottage when they least expected him and demand his betrothed.

That evening, at dusk, Miss Precious walked in the garden alone. She was thinking of a pair of romantic big eyes, of a soft voice and a softer hand which she had been surprised into allowing to shake hers.

"It's a pity men are so wicked!" said she, and sighed. Although she was near thirty she looked very pretty as she walked in the moonlight, forgetting to put on prim airs and graces and to stiffen herself. Her figure was much like Bessie Bella's, so much so that some one on the other side of the convent-like wall, with eyes upon a level with its upper stones, detected it was that young lady, whether this belief he clambered up, stood at the top, and whispered,

"My dearest look up, your best beloved is here; behold your George!"

And Precious, lifting her eyes, beheld a man on her wall, flung her hands in the air, and uttered a shriek like that of an enraged peacock.

The gentleman misunderstood his mistake, endeavored to retreat, stumbled and fell headlong among flower pots and boxes, and lay there quite motionless.

The shriek had brought Deborah to the house. Deborah, Bella, and Charity Pratt rushed to the scene, and found a gentleman in a sad plight, bloody and senseless, and Miss Precious half dead with terror.

Bella, recognizing dear George, fainted in good earnest. Deborah encouraged by numbers, ordered the prostrate youth,

"Get up, young man, and go your wickedness has been punished enough. Please go."

"He can't; he's dead," said Deborah.

"Oh, what a sudden judgment! You're sure he's dead?"

"Yes, Miss."

"Then take him into the house and call the doctor."

They laid him on the bed and medical aid came; the poor fellow had broken a leg.

"He'd get well. Oh yes, but he couldn't be moved."

Miss Precious could not murder a fellow-creature, and she acquiesced.

"He can't run off with the spoons until his leg is better," said Deborah.

"He isn't able to elope with any one," said Miss Precious; "and we should be quite unable the errand. What shall we find to nurse him?"

"Old Todds is competent, Miss," said Deborah.

"Yes. He said that the old person," said the lady.

And old Todds came. He of course dwelt in the house. The doctor came every day. The apothecary's boy brought the bill with medicines; and finally, when the young man came to his senses, he desired earnestly to see his betrothed.

"Our clergyman is his friend," said Precious. "He must have been misled then; surely his general conduct must be proper. Perhaps this is the first time he ever kissed a girl. I will make love to a lady. By all means send for Dr. Green."

Thus the nunnery was a nunnery no more. Two men under the roof. Three visiting ladies! What was the world coming to? Miss Precious dared not think. Bella was locked in her own room in the most decorous manner while her aunt was in the house, but when she was absent Deborah and Charity sympathized and abetted, and she read and talked maliciously to the young lying on his back with his handsome face so pale and his spirits so low, poor fellow!

Troubles always come together. That evening Miss Precious received information that legal affairs connected with her property, which was considerable, demanded her presence in New York, and left the establishment, which never before so much needed its Lady Superior. She returned after three days toward evening, no one expecting her. "I shall give them a pleasant surprise," she thought, and slipped in the kitchen-way. There a candle burned, and on one chair sat two people, Charity Pratt and the druggist's boy. He had his arm about her waist.

Miss Precious grasped the door-frame and shook from head to foot. "I'll go to Deborah," she said.

She can speak to that misguided girl better than I." She faltered forward. Deborah was in the back area scouring tea-kettles. Beside her stood old Todds, the nurse. They were talking.

"Since my old woman died," said Todds, "I hain't seen nobody sour like you—and the pies you does make."

"They ain't better than other folks," said Deborah, grimly cogsettish.

"They are," said Todds; and, to Miss Precious's horror, he followed up the compliment by asking for a kiss.

Miss Precious struggled with hysterics and first parlorward. Alas! a murmur of sweet voices. She peeped in. Through the window swept the fragrance of honeysuckle. Moonlight mingled with that of the shaded lamp. Bella leaned over an easy-chair in which reclined George Loveboy. This time Precious was petrified.

"Dearest Bella," said George.

"My own," said Bella.

"How happy we are!"

"Oh, so happy!"

"And we shall be together again? You know I must go. Your aunt won't have me here, Bella. I must tell her. Why are you afraid of her?"

"She's an aunt and good," said Miss Bella.

"Ah! you don't love me as I do you."

"George!"

"You don't. Would I let an aunt stand between us?"

"Oh, George, you know I've told you that nothing could change me. Why, if you had staid lame, and had had to walk on crutches all your life, it would have made no difference, though I fell in love with you for your walk, I'd love you lame."

"And I," said George, "would have almost been content had fate willed that I should be a cripple to have been so refished, to have reposed on so faithful a bosom."

"Oh, oh, oh!" from the doorway checked the speech. Those last awful words had well-nigh killed Miss Precious Lockwood. Hysterics supervened, and, with their raising, Gentleman was announced. The Rev. Peter Green.

"Show him in," said Precious. "I need counsel. Perhaps he may give me a hint the first time in her life she hailed the entrance of "a man."

Mr. Loveboy left the room as stealthily and hopeetly as he had entered. Bella followed him. Charity was in the pantry hiding her head, and Deborah returned to the cellar.

Alone in the room Lady Superior received the Rev. Peter Green. She faltered and blushed.

"You are, I presume, already aware of the fact that I am much disturbed in mind," she said.

"Yes, Madam. That is perceptible."

"You are my spiritual adviser, Sir. To you, though a man, I look for advice," and she shed a tear or two. "My own household has turned against me." And she told him all.

The Rev. Peter Green made light at her, and broke the truth gently.

"My dear Madam, you do not know that old Jonathan Todds and your faithful Deborah intend to unite their fortunes in the bands of holy wedlock next Saturday week."

"Know I! Oh the old, old sinners! Are they in their dotage?"

"Or, fair Charity Pratt, who seems a likely sort of girl, has promised to give her hand to Zeddock Salts on Thursday?"

"Oh, Peter Green! What do I hear?"

"The truth, Madam. Can you hear more?"

"I hope so."

"Then it is time that you should be informed that Miss Bella Bloom and Mr. George Lovelyn have been engaged a year. They have correspondence regularly. It was he in the garden and the garden wall and met with his accident. Don't give way, Madam—don't."

"You're very kind," said Miss Precious; "but is it awful! What would you advise?"

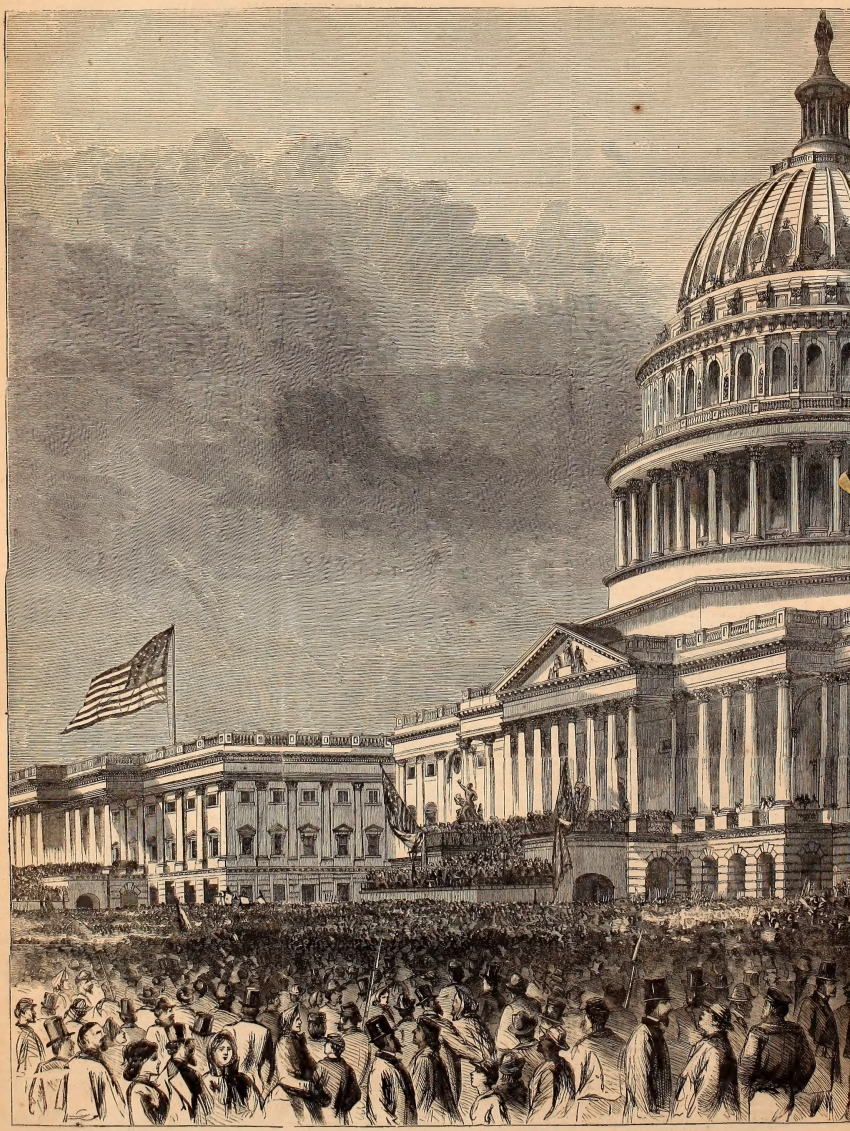
"I should advise Allow Todds and Deborah to marry next Sunday."

"Yes, Sir."

"And Charity and Zeddock on the day they have fixed. And I should sanction the betrothal of your niece and Mr. Lovelyn, and allow me to unite them at some appointed day before the altar."

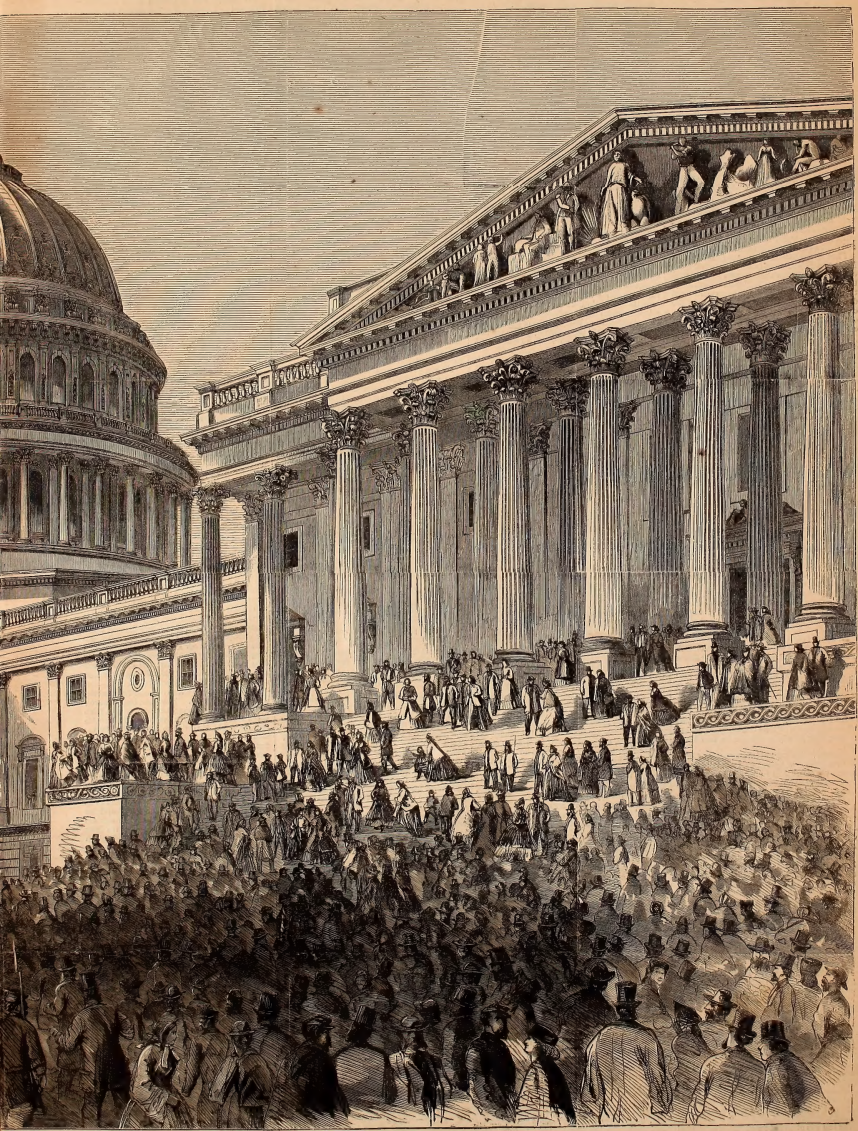
"My own niece!" said Miss Precious. "Oh! my own niece!"

"Do you so seriously object to weddings?" asked the pastor.



"N—no," said Precious. "It's this awful courting I dislike."

"I agree with you," said the pastor. "I have resolved, when I marry, to be one of the point at once. Miss Precious, the Parsonage needs a mistress. I know of no lady I admire and esteem as I do you. Will you make me happy? will you be my wife?"



Precious said nothing. Her cheeks burned; her lids drooped. He came a little closer. He made bigger eyes at her than ever. At last his lips approached and touched her cheek, but silence said nothing.

In such a case "speech is silver, but silence is gold."

Deborah was married on Sunday, being her fortieth birthday. Charity on Tuesday. Miss Bloom gave her hand to George Lovelyn in a month; and on the same day a brother clergyman united Precious and the Rev. Peter Green. And the Nunnery was broken up forever.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S REINAUGURATION AT THE CAPITOL, M

ARCH 4, 1865.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY GARDNER, WASHINGTON.—[SEE PAGE 164.]

A TROUBLED TENANCY.

THE strange story which I am about to relate embraces a short period in the close of October, 1862.

I, Henry Marston, solicitor, then aged 28 years, had just returned from a continental tour. Before leaving town I had arranged finally to quit the chambers which I had previously occupied there; on coming back, therefore, I was, for the time, a homeless man.

Under these circumstances I gladly availed myself of a kind offer made to me by an old friend, a brother of my own profession, to invited me to take my abode at his house, which was situated in a village twelve miles from the city. Here, he assured me, I was heartily welcome to remain until I could find new quarters in town. Although he and his family were comparative strangers to the place, lodging me to make myself comfortable, adding that he had instructed his servants to show me every attention.

Inclination, no less than necessity, led me to accept the invitation. Heathfield was my native village; and, although my relatives had long left the neighborhood, several friends of my boyhood still resided there. There was for me, moreover, another and a still stronger attraction to the place.

I had scarcely stepped upon the platform of the Heathfield Station when an old chum of mine discovered me, and, after a few minutes' conversation, begged me to come to a ball at his father's house that evening. It was the latter's twenty-first birthday, and there would be a large gathering of our common acquaintances. I must excuse the brevity of the notice, for he was determined not to let me off.

It was a brilliant entertainment, and I found it enjoyable. I was soon surrounded among the group of lady whom I most desired to see, and ere long Edith Arnold was by my side, evincing, as I hoped, by her manner a pleasure in my society similar to that which I was myself experiencing in her own. I secured her as my partner for several dances; and I fancied that on discovering how happy as when I claimed her, nor so sad as when I resigned her to another.

Encouraged by these tokens of her favor, I began to entertain the idea of making to her an important declaration, but such a measure as Edith could not, I felt confident, long remain unclaimed. If I would possess her, I must lose no time.

Again the opportunity came.

"There is," I remembered, "a tide in the affairs of men." Reflecting thus, I drew my partner into a conservatory which opened from a saloon adjoining the dancing-room.

We paced this conservatory for some time in company with many others, and I waited. The scene was likely to be popular, for it had been arranged for the occasion with much taste, and its general aspect was beautiful and elegant in the extreme. Variegated lamps shone like glittering gems above; while fountains flung up diamonds from beneath, amidst feathery fronds of tropical plants.

But gradually the promenaders thinned; and at length, although after what space of time I can not say, I found myself alone with Edith. I led her to a couch which had been placed at that end of the conservatory farthest from the drawing-room, and seated myself beside her.

Having proceeded so far, I confess I found it difficult to advance further, and, as encouraging silence convinced me that I was a bad hand at making an offer. When at last I opened my lips, it was only to experience, with painful vividness, the truth that

> Words, like Nature, half reveal
> And half conceal the soul within.

My faltering, roundabout observations seemed just rudely to sketch the outlines of my passion, and at the same time to obscure its finer lights and shadows.

Meanwhile Edith listened prettily. As I drew near to the climax of my address, I naturally turned to watch her face. And I might well be pardoned for seeking information and encouragement from such a source. Adequately to paint those eyes and cheeks, an artist would have needed to dip his pencil into pigments of the very ivory and of molten applecolor; and the fair forehead gleamed out amidst rippling hair like a pearl from an entourage of golden fretwork. The countenance altogether was indeed one of rare beauty.

The conservatory for the most part was lined with blinds, which had been drawn overnight and apparently enhanced the light within. Near us was a door (leading to the garden) which had not been thus veiled, but which was left exposed, and, it might be readily opened for ventilation. Thus, as I turned, the encurtained entrance became visible to me.

In an instant there appeared amidst the blackness a horrible apparition—a face, a wild unearthly face, surrounded with pale drapery, and glaring upon me with an expression malevolent and fiendish in the extreme.

Hardly believing my eyes, I started to my feet, exclaiming unconsciously:

"Angels and saints of grace defend us!"

"What in the world do you see?" cried Edith, rising in alarm.

"I cannot know indeed," I answered hurriedly, for by this time nothing unusual was in sight.

I was just about to explain as well as I could what I had witnessed, when Edith's better nature got by swept into the conservatory, and in accents of impatience told her daughter that they must leave immediately. My sweet girl was, therefore, hurried away not one before I could complete the story of my love, but before I could explain the strange cause of its interruption. With a wondering look and a hasty bow Edith followed her mother, and I was left alone.

The ball was at an end for me, now that she had departed. Grieved and excited at the unsatisfactory termination of our interview, I hastened from the house.

Upon retiring to my room I took the precaution of lighting a night-light before getting into bed, anticipating, amidst my mental disquietude, a wakeful night. But it happened that I soon fell asleep, and forgot for the time both my love for Edith and the cruel interruption which I had met with in declaring it.

I awoke with a start under the impression that I had been spoken to. The words, which I can hear to this day, seemed to abide with me after their actual sound had ceased. To the reader they will appear, perhaps, ridiculously pointless or absurd; to me, in the silent watches of that night, they at first seemed unspeakably awful. They were these:

"Vile usurper! How long will the avenging angel's hand be stayed? Vacate this domain—to which thou hast no shadow of a claim—save a few more days, and it shall have expired, or thy wicked life is forfeited."

Now, supposing that these words had been all—supposing that I had been called upon merely to account for the sound or fancied sound—I could easily have reasoned myself out of it, and simply gone there to clear up the ugly riddle. But as I did so the cause of my perplexity vanished. Standing upon the floor, instead of, as I arrived at, upon the conviction that I was the sole occupant of the room. I now entered upon a course of rational and logical examination, in the hope of eliciting from my confused impressions facts on which to found some plausible theory as to what had occurred.

Nor was I long in erecting such a theory. It struck me as probable that the servants, wishing from motives quite conceivable) to get rid of me, had been playing me a trick.

I need scarcely say that, so soon as I believed myself to be the victim of a practical joke, I felt the same angry. But I decided that the best way to take vengeance was to appear unconcerned, and simply to request, in the morning, that the trick might not be repeated. Accordingly I bottled up my wrath, got into bed, and contrived to sleep soundly till the morning light.

The footboy who waited upon me at breakfast—a pale-faced lad of seventeen—was naturally an object of my scrutiny, since I, of course, supposed that he must be in the plot from which I had suffered during the night. But he appeared to be a dunce; and, judging from his sly slits of eyes and stealthy movements, I could readily conceive him capable of any amount of mischievous cunning. But this estimate of his character presently came to be modified.

Before leaving for the city—where I was obliged to go early on account of a business appointment—I rang the breakfast-room bell, and requested that I might be summoned at once if I should inquire, by made their appearance, and against the whole party I proceeded to bring my charge. After unpacking my bells and other paraphernalia, I was supposed joke with far greater warmth than I had designed, I completed my harangue with these words: "I regret if my practices have caused trouble, but having received an invitation from the master of this house to stay, I am determined to do so. The foolish means which some or all of you have employed to displace me would succeed with no one but a child or an idiot. I trust, therefore, for your sakes, that these pranks may not be repeated. If they are, I shall report the whole matter to your master, and I doubt not he hearing will order you instantly for me dismiss every one of you from his service."

"I do believe the fellow's mad," exclaimed the lady, angrily, as she and her colleagues out of the room, slamming the door behind her.

Mad! The word at first made me angry; it then set me thinking.

What if, after all, I were under some insane hallucination? Apparitions as vivid as mine had often been the result of delirium tremens. Was the accusation of the servants seemed to give color to the idea that my brain was disordered. How unlikely was the charge had been true! Was it not like the words of a domestic had been those bombastic expressions supposed to me in the night! How slight and paltry altogether were the grounds upon which I had founded my suspicions!

At the very moment that these thoughts were revolving in my mind, I happened to take up a large volume which lay upon a table near me. It proved to be that quarterly periodical, "The Times," and now—"On Obscure Diseases of the Brain and Mind." I opened the work at page 269, and my eye immediately fell upon the words: "The perplexities of insane are often the first to yield." Upon reading the succeeding paragraphs a horrible doubt of my own sanity rushed suddenly upon my mind.

Had I been able to remain in solitude that day I verily believe I should have lost my reason. But I was obliged to go immediately; and a few hours of enforced attention to the details of a complicated legal question drew away my attention from myself, and assisted me to recover my mental equilibrium.

On returning in the evening, I was received by the servants with a curt suspicious manner which annoyed me, and which disinclined me to attempt any explanation. I therefore wrote an excited letter to Edith, and what I hoped was a judicious one to her father, and, designing that both should be delivered next day, I retired at an early hour to my haunted bedchamber.

II.

BEFORE leaving town, I had provided myself with a bottle of laudanum, judging that, since it was possible my last night's vision might have been the result of nervous excitement, a timely narcotic might prevent a recurrence of such annoyances. But I had not properly informed myself as to what quantity of the drug it would be suitable for me to take; I swallowed, therefore, what I now suspect was an inordinately large dose. I lighted a taper on the prévious night, and laid myself down, expecting to sleep soundly. But instead of sleep, the most extraordinary sensations seized me. My soul seemed wrapped in an atmosphere of delicious and ravishing happiness. Every thing painful and annoying was eliminated from my thoughts; and, although the perplexities of the last twenty-four hours were not forgotten, I could trace in none of them the slightest cause for distress or disquietude. Sweet memories of Edith floated through my soul; and even the apparitions of the previous night assumed the form of interesting phenomena, phenomena which I judged it a privilege to have witnessed, and a pleasure, moreover, to study. My intellect, too, was wondrously lucid. I recalled the most extraordinary affinities, and drew the subtlest logical distinctions with a clearness which astonished and delighted me beyond measure.

This lasted long. I knew that the night was advancing, but I had no wish for sleep. A condition more enjoyable or desirable than that in which I now found myself I could not have conceived.

While still experiencing these peculiar and intensely pleasurable sensations, I, for the third time, beheld the terrible object of my recent speculations. I felt not a particle of fear now had place in my mind. I sat up in bed, gazed at the apparition, and calmly reasoned respecting it. At length I addressed it as I had replied to me in language similar to that which it had employed on the previous night, reminding me that half the period of my probation had already expired. I complained of the harsh decree, argued my innocence, and challenged my prosecutor to substantiate the charge against my character upon which my cruel sentence had been founded. But the inscrutable being, without heeding my appeal, repeated with much the prophetic threat, and then seemed to vanish.

My happy feelings continued long after this vision, and I enjoyed my protracted illumination with perfect calmness and content. Not until daylight began to glimmer between the mullions of the window did drowsiness overpower me; but when sleep actually commenced it held me with such tremendous power that I lay in a death-like stupor till noon.

And now there fell upon my mind once more the painful suspicion that my reason was, indeed, deserting me. In spite of the opiate I had used, I had seen the accursed vision again. That was a terrible fact that could not be got over. I was as far off as ever from any solution of the mystery, and that dreadful one which now again suggested itself to my mind.

I dressed, went down, and in a sort of mechanical way folded, addressed, and dispatched my letters to Edith and her father. I found myself too unwell to go to town, and sank into a state of utter mournfulness and despondency.

So scarcely half an hour elapsed when the following note was placed in my hands:

"SIR,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated yesterday, addressed to my daughter's behalf, of a communication which you have addressed to her.

"In reply, I have to inform you that my daughter and myself are entirely agreed that your proposal is one which can not be entertained.

"I am, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,
"LAURENCE ARNOLD."

This cold, curt reply to my letters struck upon my heart like a knell. That in the world could be an explanation of its chilly tone and laconic style? To this question my suspicions supplied a ready answer.

The servants had done it. I had offended them, betraying at the same time the fact of my mysterious visions. They had told on their vengeance by reporting me in the village as a man subject to insane delusions. Perhaps they were right! At any rate I knew that every such reports would do about; how likely they were already to have reached the ears of Mr. Arnold and his family.

As my last hope was removed from the effects of the overdose my spirits revived. At evening I endeavored dispassionately to review all that had occurred, and to form some sensible and decisive line of action. I was deterred from searching the house from end to end only by the remembrance that the servants would certainly take such an act as fresh evidence of my madness: and many another attempt to baffle the solution of the enigma flitted through my brain.

The sudden recollection of the case of a certain English solicitor, who had been found insane by him, I remembered, in a vision somewhat similar to my own, once more depressed and unnerved me; and I was debating whether against this recurrence, when my attention was arrested by a knock at the front-door.

III

A FEW minutes afterward a card was brought to me. The gentleman whose name it bore had inquired for me at the door of the house; but, learning his absence, he asked to see any one who might be considered to represent him.

I started with surprise at the name which was familiar to me. Alfred Enderby was a young physician who, with his father, conducted a private lunatic asylum. He had formerly been an intimate friend of mine; but some time had elapsed since our last meeting.

I was annoyed and almost alarmed when I first realized who had arrived, thinking that some officious Heathfield busybody, having heard of my special visitations and strange manner, had summoned "mad doctor" to my aid. But upon reflection this seemed so unlikely, and further, as Enderby came into the room his surprise and delight at seeing me were so unmistakable, that I quickly laid aside my suspicions, and gave him a most hearty welcome!

He now inquired the cause of my sorry appearance. The question led me fully to narrate the circumstances which during the last day or two had been giving me so much uneasiness; and the relief which it afforded me to do so was great and immediate.

He listened with an interest which manifestly increased as I proceeded. The earnest attention, indeed, with which he heard the story, and the deep thought which it seemed to awaken in his mind, surprised me. I concluded my narration by saying: "So now, my dear fellow, do, if you can, enlighten me as to these strange visitations. At any rate, I hope you will not do as people here have done—as I myself have once or twice been inclined to do—pronounce me a madman."

"You are as sane as I am," was the reply.

"Well," I said, "it is a comfort to be told that by so experienced a judge as yourself."

"I think," said the young physician, "it is in my power to give you further assistance still; to clear up altogether the perplexity under which you have been laboring."

I opened my eyes incredulously.

"Yes," continued Enderby, "such is the fact indeed. Let me tell you first that your own story relieves me from a doubtful anxiety which it has been the object of my journey to dispel. In return for this good service I undertake, in making known to you that object, to deliver you from your own difficulty."

I drew my chair to the doctor's side, for he spoke in an undertone.

"You remember, probably," he began, "a family named Marsdale, who formerly resided, as I am told, in this very house?"

"Certainly," I answered; "in my boyhood the daughters were among my companions."

"About ten years since," my friend continued, "at a date later, I believe, than that at which you and your friends left the village, this family met with reverses of fortune. The ruin, in fact, was complete. They left the place, and a sale was held at this house. I will briefly explain the little circumstances, although with many of them you may already be familiar.

"The Marsdales felt the blow keenly. The father and mother both died within a year of the date of their misfortunes, and these successive sorrows affected the intellect of the eldest daughter, Catherine. She went to reside with some distant relatives, who, from the date of the parents' death, treated the orphans as their own daughters. Their kindness to poor Catherine was unbounded; and for a long time they endured the same caprices, and believed that time would rectify her derangement. At last, however, a dangerous outbreak convinced them that they could no longer pursue the course which their affection had dictated; and Catherine Merivale was placed under my father's care.

"Her madness now declared itself in a single strange delusion. She imagined that her family had been forcibly expelled from their old home—this very house—and that it was her mission and destiny to endure the vengeance of Heaven against the unjust and merciless intruders.

"During the last few months the poor lady's health had sensibly declined. She had become more calm than formerly; and my father and myself both hoped and believed that her cure would ultimately be effected. The restoration of her imposed were gradually slackened, and she appeared still further to benefit by increased freedom.

"I am now satisfied that the most accidental conduct was the result of that deep cunning which not unfrequently attends madness, and that it was intended to lead our suspicions astray, and facilitate escape. Three days ago the poor woman suddenly disappeared from the asylum; and her flight was accomplished in a manner which displayed the most remarkable ingenuity and forethought.

"Until to-day we were on a completely wrong scent in the right. This morning, however, while reflecting on the special nature of Miss Merivale's delusion, it struck me as highly probable that she might have fled to Heathfield. By the help of an intelligent detective officer I have verified my suspicions, and tracked the poor lunatic to this place. And now I have only to add that, from the description you give of your nightly visitations, I can not doubt in the least that is under my roof. The comparative emptiness of the house, and her thorough knowledge of the premises, have no doubt facilitated her concealment. We have had occasion for the deepest thankfulness to Providence that the intensity of her delusion—under which she regards herself as the avenging angel of the Most High—has led her to delay the deed of blood (which he says she would have perpetrated at last), and to enter by way of preface, pompous taunts and prophecies in token of her imagined divine commission."

On listening to this extraordinary narrative my feelings, as may be supposed, were those of mingled pity, horror, relief, and gratitude. All was now clear to me as day. The face that I had seen was, of a truth, the terrible countenance of the Catherine Merivale with whom I had played as a child; and those dim spectral words of the night-mare had been uttered by a maniac—imagining me (the luckless victim) to be the actual owner of the house, whom in vain she desired to seal or destroy.

But no time was to be lost in discovering and securing the dangerous inmate. Her capture was accomplished by the detective officer, who, under the instructions of my friend, personated with wonderful skill and coolness a second avenging angel, and drew the unhappy lunatic from her place of concealment by means of bombastic phraseology, in which she resumed at a subter-spirit was offered, and co-operation in the act of vengeance assured. Thus the madwoman's delusion was made to accomplish her capture.

Once secured she was treated with the tenderest consideration; and when she had been removed to a place of safety (a neighboring asylum) for the night my friend returned to me, and we examined together the rooms in which she had expatiated.

Since the strange reports concerning me had alone prompted that letter from Edith's father, the facts which confuted those reports restored me to my previous position in the prudent parent's estimation. Edith, moreover, took to her bed on my account, and so inclined her papa for an opening of negotiations. My love for the gentle girl enabled me to detect my opportunity, and to seize it with avidity. My comfortable private fortune and fair professional prospects at length told favorably upon the somewhat calculating old gentleman; so that when, having lost two more children, I returned to town, my "troubled tenancy" had yielded me two benefits, viz.: the subject for a story, and (under parental sanction) the promise of a wife.

WILI AND WILINIK.

WHEN the charming ballet Giselle was in full vogue, we were all very familiar with certain Sclavonic spirits called "Wilis," and were taught to believe that they were the ghosts of young ladies crossed in love, who had found in the tomb not an asylum, but a stimulus to the ill-humor natural under the circumstances, and displayed their hatred of the world in general by tearing to pieces every mortal man who came within their reach.

Very kind-hearted Wilis have been known to heal the wounds they have inflicted, and the result of the operation is a quality being called a "Wilinik." The Wilinik is an ordinary mortal, who, having been wounded and healed by a Wili, arrives from her a right, the possession of which guards him against all deceit, and secures him a progeny of brave sons and lovely daughters. Assuredly the root does not enjoy a sinecure. Let us look out for a Servian tale or two, in which the Wili plays a part.

There was a certain king who had two sons, one just, the other unjust. When he died, the unjust son said to the just one, "We can not agree; so take the horse and these three hundred pieces of gold, making together your share in our paternal inheritance, and I will keep the rest safe off." Whether this particular act was unjust or not we can not say, as we have not had an opportunity of looking over the deceased monarch's accounts; but we should all was not quite fair and shorebound, inasmuch as the unjust brother avowedly chose "Honesty as the worst policy" as the ruling maxim of his life. Knaves in general strive to conceal their idiosyncrasies, but "Wili" in his hypocrisy was your unjust man of Servia. He coolly and even ostentatiously said, "I am a rogue, not from any natural weakness, but because my deliberate conviction that roguery is superior to its opposite."

The righteous brother, whom, for brevity's sake, we will call "Justus," had not proceeded far, when he accidentally encountered the unrighteous one, whom we will call "Injustus," and who saluted him with one of the usual panegyrics of flattery.

"Well," said Justus, "I'll bet you a hundred gold pieces that, in spite of your advantages, you are not what wonder assertions, honesty is the best policy after all." "Done," said the other; and they then agreed to let the Lord One himself, disguised as a monk, and he, of course, was strongly of opinion that wrong is far better than right. Two other similar wagers, which he decided, conquered the rest of poor Justus's little fortune, and his horse went with it; but so firm was his conviction of the superiority of virtue, that he now offered to stake his eyes on the soundness of his views. Emboldened by his previous successes, Injustus, without further ado, or another word, put another arbiter, cut out both Justus's eyes, and then appealed to Justus himself whether the two were not the blindness and theft of self prove the worthlessness of right. The martyr to justice still affirmed, without intending a pun, that "he did love it," and instructed his vicarious brother to give him a vessel of water wherewith to moisten his lips and wash his wounds, and to place him where he first grew by a certain spring. Injustus, who, after all, was not without his good points, granted this very modest request, and poor Justus lay on the night-time he and alone by the spring, heard the Wilis come to bathe in the waters, and then heard one of them say:

> She's very fair, this king's poor daughter,
> To such a case has her nativity brought her;
> But if she only bathe in the water,
> She'd get very well,
> And I, too, I ween,
> And all who are deaf, or dumb, or blind,
> In these waters a cure may find.

The cock crew, the Wilis vanished, and Justus, creeping on all fours to the spring and washing his eyes with the water, found that the last part of the Wili's assertion was, at least, correct, for he saw as well as ever. Nor did he fail to make good use of his sight; for immediately he filled the empty magic stream, and, taking it to the daughter of the king referred to by the Wili, restored her to a condition of robust health. That the princess was given to him for a wife, with half the kingdom for her dowry, followed as a matter of course.

Though weak and not travel fast in those days, the great prosperity of Justus became known, in course of time, to his iniquitous brother, who at once shrewdly inferred that it must be a very fine thing to lose one's sight and sit under the fir-tree. So he cut his own eyes out, took the station formerly occupied by his brother, and presently, like him, heard the Wilis come to bathe:

> These are
> At all about
> Title fat, that some one overheard
> What I of these fine waters said,
> Her father, the royal head,
> Yes, cry'd word.
> We'll look around us, for I vow
> I think there's some one listning now, cried the Wili, whose information had proved so useful to Justus. And the search, which immediately began, terminated in the capture of the hapless listener, who was no sooner caught than he was torn into four pieces.

Once upon a time a certain man had a dream. He thought that a child, white as snow and with wings on its shoulders, stood before him and said:

"Climb up the highest mountain of which thou hast knowledge, and thou wilt find on the summit therea of a lofty fir-tree. Beneath this thou wilt perceive a jagged rock, out of which water is running like tears. Dig beneath the rock as many feet as it is high, and thou wilt come upon a round vessel with a golden cover, filled with Then thou hast removed the cover, eat and leave it, but the coins thou mayest bear away." Still, mind thou tellest no one of what thou hast done, or evil may befall thee."

This was pleasant, and apparently profitable, information, and the man had no sooner received it than he proceeded to carry it into execution. He left his child's description, and began to dig with all his might and main. When, however, he had struck the third blow with his pickaxe, he heard a voice as of a child, which seemed to proceed from beneath the ground, and imperatively commanded him to desist. So much was he shocked that he at once fell down and sank into a deep sleep, during which he saw again the child of his dream, who said, in a stern voice: "Why hast thou committed my labor without crossing thyself as a pious Christian? Had I not been by, a grievous ill would have befallen thee. Therefore, now, when thou arisest, cross thyself as is meet, and resume thy work in a good spirit."

Strange to say, when the man awoke, he found himself not on the spot where sleep had overtaken him, but in a valley surrounded by the most beautiful flowers. Nevertheless, he resumed his digging, having first crossed himself, in compliance with the child's command. Soon he struck a bowling up the earth a light as of sunbeams flashed into his eyes, and he perceived a dragon asleep on the vessel that contained the treasure. The dragon did he entreat the monster to depart, but the dragon, waking at the third summons, flatly refused to stir. "The treasure," said he, "is mine, because it was mine; but if thou wilt tell me how many streams spring from this rock I will leave the place, and thou mayest have it for as long as thou."

The required enumeration proved no easy job, and the man, after going from spring to spring, became so weary that he was obliged to rest against a tall tree out of pure exhaustion. While he was thus reposing he heard a woodpecker tapping and looking upward, saw a Wili and a Wilinik engaged in hot debate. The Wilinik wanted to know something about his wife, who, he complained, was ugly as loth to communicate, and at last the latter cried out: "As sure as there are seventy and seven springs in this mountain! Is that information to thy wife?" So saying, the Wili flew away, but the Wilinik, perceiving the man, told him he might now take the treasure without fear, which, noticing that the dragon had died, the man did.

The Wilis once manifested a remarkable creative talent. On a broiling summer's day they fashioned a young damsel out of some snow which they found at the bottom of a ravine, and, as soon as some of their work accomplished than the figure was animated by the wind, nurtured by the dew, fed with lovely flowers, and, finally, decked with the choicest flowers by the moonbeams.

This singular young lady will remind some readers of the antique Atalanta, issued a proclamation declaring that she would become the bride of the first youth who could outrun her in a foot-race. The first gentleman in the world, including the emperor's son, eagerly responded to the summons, and when the time for the race arrived, ready to start the damsel took her place in the midst of them, not on horseback, but standing on her feet, and thus spoke: "Yonder, against the winning-post, I have set up a golden apple. The first who takes it shall be my husband, but if I reach it before any of you, a sudden death will at once close your eyes. Think, therefore, what you are about."

The aspirants did think, and they thought it very unlikely that they could win a race against any competitors not even on horseback, for they were not aware that the young lady carried Wings on her shoulders. But they soon found that their thoughts had been too hasty, for when they were about half-way to the goal they were thrown into a fatiguing gasping ahead. Still they did not lose courage, but, clapping spurs to their steeds, overtook the girl, who was just stooping to pick up the bead and flung it to the ground. A forest immediately sprung up, in which the riders were lost, but by dint of perseverance they overcame even that difficulty, and making their way through the trees were again on the track of the nimble maiden, who had a long time comfortably expended into a foaming torrent and drowned the whole party, with the single exception of the emperor's son, whose horse swam safely to the water. Perceiving that the snow-maiden was again far ahead, he thrice invoked her, in the name of the Trinity, to proceed further. She stood still accordingly, and placing her on his horse, he swam with her to dry land, and proceeded with her to the capital, where a magnificent dinner. When, however, he had reached the highest summit she was gone.

An ambitious youth once made the singular vow that he would wed no one but a maiden of imperial race, and, as, with all his visionary prospects, he was of a thoroughly practical disposition, he went boldly up to the emperor and asked the hand of his daughter in marriage. Now the emperor, as it happened, was of a somewhat timid temperament, and though a soldier by trade, and a man of high lineage, he preferred to utter his refusal in a more circumlocutionary manner. He therefore said:

"I shall only be too happy to give you my daughter if—if—"

"Yes?" asked the youth.

"If in the course of, say a week, you will procure me—first, a white horse without speck that has never known bridle."

"Secondly?" inquired the youth.

"Secondly, a sorrel horse with a black head that has never been mounted. Thirdly, a black horse with a white head and white feet that has never been shod."

"Well," said the youth, "horses are to be got, though a week is rather a short time."

"Stop, I have not finished," proceeded the emperor. "Besides the three horses, you must bring as much gold as they all three can carry as a present to my empress. On these conditions, and no other, I grant you my daughter's hand."

The youth, having thanked the emperor much more heartily than he deserved, took his leave in no very cheerful mood; but fortunately the imperial maiden had overheard the conversation, and had, moreover, seen the petitioner, who appeared to her the handsomest man in the world. Therefore, on his departure, she sent a letter, which the young lady sent him by the hands of a confidential servant, and which commanded him to come to her secretly on the following morning if he desired a successful issue to his suit.

While the youth remained awake through the night, ruminating on his good fortune, the imitable, likewise awake, occupied herself in stealing from her father a magic knife which she gave to her lover when he came according to appointment, and they both vowed eternal love and fidelity. She then directed him to take a horse which belonged to her and to ride with all speed to the Wili's wood, where he would find a certain tricipital hill, and after that a smaller hill bright in a spark, with many of the most various colors grazing upon it. From these horses he was to choose three of the desired colors, and if he were observed and unwilling to be caught, he was to draw out the knife so that the sun might shine upon it, and thus light up all the meadow: when all these things would come to him of their own accord. The horses secured, he was to proceed to the middle of the meadow, where he would find a golden tent with a coat of lions, boughs of silver, and leaves of gold. From the roof, cut with the magic knife, a torrent of gold coin would burst, which would fully enable him to comply with the emperor's terms.

These minute directions were strictly followed, and the success of the adventurer was complete. Nay, so greatly was the king struck with admiration when he saw the horses arrive laden with the golden treasure, that he could not help asking the suitor what he required in the shape of dowry? "Give me the princess herself and the knife," said the gallant youth, "and I will ask no more." And the princess and the knife were given, and all parties were satisfied.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

WHAT A BEARD MAN CAN DO.—John Metcalf was born in Knaresborough in 1717, the son of poor working people. At about six years of age he caught the small-pox, and became totally blind. In these any one of us who could possibly have compassion for a child in such a condition. He had some advantages—a good bend, a good heart, and a good deal of health and power. Let us watch his career. In six months after the fever had left him he was able to find his way to and fro, and to act as his own little guide; at nine years old he could go on a message to any part of the town. He was remarkable as an expert climber, and mounted almost any tree with ease. His favorite feat was to climb to the top and ride on a gale. He kept a dog and coursed hare; in fact, he was the wonder of the town. He could swim, and more wonders the lives of three of his companions. He was a great diver. At cert ain times he would dive into deep water, and, to a bole of manufacturer's yarn. He played the fiddle beautifully, and frequently entertained the assemblies at the Queen's Head and the Green Dragon on Harrogate. One day, when riding to Harrogate on York, he overtook a gentleman who had lost his way. He brought the gentleman to the Queen's Head, and was invited to dine with him in a tankard of negus. On Metcalf leaving the room, "Gentlemen," said he, "I have offered to bet that my little man here drank a great deal of spirits since he came into the room." "Sir," said the judge so from the appearance of his eyes." "Level bless you, Sir, don't you have been blind?" "Blind! I never was blind in my life." "I mean, Sir, that he can not see: he is as blind as a beetle." "Well, Sir, I believe I really too much, but I'll bet him in." "Enter Metcalf." "My friend, are you really blind?" "No, Sir, I can see a little." "How many fingers I was six years old." "Had I known that, I would not have ventured with you to Harrogate or York for a hundred pounds." "And I, Sir," said Metcalf, "would not have had my way so much affected if you were not five feet two in height, and of great strength and robustness. He saved money, and, having thought the matter over, he answer his call by neighing. Marvelous stories are told of the effect of this neighing. It was a perfect neigh of the field, and to follow the hounds was his greatest delight. Upon one occasion, when Metcalf was engaged in coursing with them. On one occasion he rode his horse in a match for 100 guineas against a horse and rider for a mile, to be run three times round. Great odds were laid against him, but Metcalf, mounted on a three-legged mare, he directed himself by their sound, and the consequence was that he won the match. Metcalf set up as a livery-stable keeper, but soon gave up that trade and became a contractor. He bought hills for the coast, and sold it at Louis and other places. The next we hear of him he was a soldier! He served in Scotland during the Rebellion of 1745. One Mr. Thornton came to him and offered him a commission if he would undertake to raise him he was going to raise a company. He informed Metcalf that he had no money to pay for the recruiting, and that if the country were to fall into their hands he would be responsible for the whole public. Metcalf, who was a true-born Briton. He not only enlisted himself, but he got a number of his companions to enlist. In a few days raised the company and left for the wars, dressed in blue and buff, with a cocked hat and feather. Thornton's men actually performed nearly all the duties of a soldier; indeed, he was one of the most active officers during the hot marchings—was present in several engagements; and once was nearly surrounded by enemy, who succeeded in taking prisoners nearly half of his company. He captain Thornton's men, and, having collected his own men, and Metcalf undertook to turn spy, in order to open up communications with the rear. There is little doubt that success in the narrative of how he succeeded in penetrating into the enemy's camp, and how he was received; but he ultimately succeeded in clearing himself before a court-martial, and was honorably acquitted. Here he remained until the battle of Culloden put an end to the war. On Metcalf's discharge, Now the emperor, as it happened, was of a somewhat timid temperament, and though a soldier by trade, and a man of high lineage, he preferred to utter his refusal in a more circumlocutionary manner. He therefore said:

"I shall only be too happy to give you my daughter if—if—"

"Yes?" asked the youth.

"If in the course of, say a week, you will procure me—first, a white horse without speck that has never known bridle."

"Secondly?" inquired the youth.

"Secondly, a sorrel horse with a black head that has never been mounted. Thirdly, a black horse with a white head and white feet that has never been shod."

"Well," said the youth, "horses are to be got, though a week is rather a short time."

"Stop, I have not finished," proceeded the emperor. "Besides the three horses, you must bring as much gold as they all three can carry as a present to my empress. On these conditions, and no other, I grant you my daughter's hand."

The youth, having thanked the emperor much more heartily than he deserved, took his leave in no very cheerful mood; but fortunately the imperial maiden had overheard the conversation, and had, moreover, seen the petitioner, who appeared to her the handsomest man in the world. Therefore, on his departure, she sent a letter, which the young lady sent him by the hands of a confidential servant, and which commanded him to come to her secretly on the following morning if he desired a successful issue to his suit.

While the youth remained awake through the night, ruminating on his good fortune, the imitable, likewise awake, occupied herself in stealing from her father a magic knife which she gave to her lover when he came according to appointment, and they both vowed eternal love and fidelity. She then directed him to take a horse which belonged to her and to ride with all speed to the Wili's wood, where he would find a certain tricipital hill, and after that a smaller hill bright in a spark, with many of the most various colors grazing upon it. From these horses he was to choose three of the desired colors, and if he were observed and unwilling to be caught, he was to draw out the knife so that the sun might shine upon it, and thus light up all the meadow: when all these things would come to him of their own accord. The horses secured, he was to proceed to the middle of the meadow, where he would find a golden tent with a coat of lions, boughs of silver, and leaves of gold. From the roof, cut with the magic knife, a torrent of gold coin would burst, which would fully enable him to comply with the emperor's terms.

These minute directions were strictly followed, and the success of the adventurer was complete. Nay, so greatly was the king struck with admiration when he saw the horses arrive laden with the golden treasure, that he could not help asking the suitor what he required in the shape of dowry? "Give me the princess herself and the knife," said the gallant youth, "and I will ask no more." And the princess and the knife were given, and all parties were satisfied.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

WHAT A BEARD MAN CAN DO.—John Metcalf was born in Knaresborough in 1717, the son of poor working people. At about six years of age he caught the small-pox, and became totally blind. In these any one of us who could possibly have compassion for a child in such a condition. He had some advantages—a good bend, a good heart, and a good deal of health and power. Let us watch his career. In six months after the fever had left him he was able to find his way to and fro, and to act as his own little guide; at nine years old he could go on a message to any part of the town. He was remarkable as an expert climber, and mounted almost any tree with ease. His favorite feat was to climb to the top and ride on a gale. He kept a dog and coursed hare; in fact, he was the wonder of the town. He could swim, and more wonders the lives of three of his companions. He was a great diver. At cert ain times he would dive into deep water, and, to a bole of manufacturer's yarn. He played the fiddle beautifully, and frequently entertained the assemblies at the Queen's Head and the Green Dragon on Harrogate. One day, when riding to Harrogate on York, he overtook a gentleman who had lost his way. He brought the gentleman to the Queen's Head, and was invited to dine with him in a tankard of negus. On Metcalf leaving the room, "Gentlemen," said he, "I have offered to bet that my little man here drank a great deal of spirits since he came into the room." "Sir," said the judge so from the appearance of his eyes." "Level bless you, Sir, don't you have been blind?" "Blind! I never was blind in my life." "I mean, Sir, that he can not see: he is as blind as a beetle." "Well, Sir, I believe I really too much, but I'll bet him in." "Enter Metcalf." "My friend, are you really blind?" "No, Sir, I can see a little." "How many fingers I was six years old." "Had I known that, I would not have ventured with you to Harrogate or York for a hundred pounds." "And I, Sir," said Metcalf, "would not have had my way so much affected if you were not five feet two in height, and of great strength and robustness. He saved money, and, having thought the matter over, he answer his call by neighing. Marvelous stories are told of the effect of this neighing. It was a perfect neigh of the field, and to follow the hounds was his greatest delight. Upon one occasion, when Metcalf was engaged in coursing with them. On one occasion he rode his horse in a match for 100 guineas against a horse and rider for a mile, to be run three times round. Great odds were laid against him, but Metcalf, mounted on a three-legged mare, he directed himself by their sound, and the consequence was that he won the match. Metcalf set up as a livery-stable keeper, but soon gave up that trade and became a contractor. He bought hills for the coast, and sold it at Louis and other places. The next we hear of him he was a soldier! He served in Scotland during the Rebellion of 1745. One Mr. Thornton came to him and offered him a commission if he would undertake to raise him he was going to raise a company. He informed Metcalf that he had no money to pay for the recruiting, and that if the country were to fall into their hands he would be responsible for the whole public. Metcalf, who was a true-born Briton. He not only enlisted himself, but he got a number of his companions to enlist. In a few days raised the company and left for the wars, dressed in blue and buff, with a cocked hat and feather. Thornton's men actually performed nearly all the duties of a soldier; indeed, he was one of the most active officers during the hot marchings—was present in several engagements; and once was nearly surrounded by enemy, who succeeded in taking prisoners nearly half of his company. He captain Thornton's men, and, having collected his own men, and Metcalf undertook to turn spy, in order to open up communications with the rear. There is little doubt that success in the narrative of how he succeeded in penetrating into the enemy's camp, and how he was received; but he ultimately succeeded in clearing himself before a court-martial, and was honorably acquitted. Here he remained until the battle of Culloden put an end to the war. On Metcalf's discharge, Now the emperor, as it happened, was of a somewhat timid temperament, and though a soldier by trade, and a man of high lineage, he preferred to utter his refusal in a more circumlocutionary manner. He therefore said:

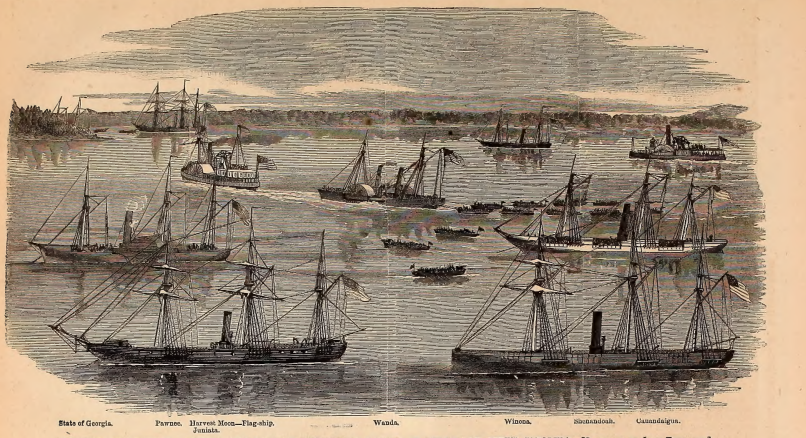
"I shall only be too happy to give you my daughter if—if—"

"Yes?" asked the youth.

"If in the course of, say a week, you will procure me—first, a white horse without speck that has never known bridle."

"Secondly?" inquired the youth.

"Secondly, a sorrel horse with a black head that has never been mounted. Thirdly, a black horse with a white head and white feet that has never been shod."



"Well," said the youth, "horses are to be got, though a week is rather a short time."

"Stop, I have not finished," proceeded the emperor. "Besides the three horses, you must bring as much gold as they all three can carry as a present to my empress. On these conditions, and no other, I grant you my daughter's hand."

The youth, having thanked the emperor much more heartily than he deserved, took his leave in no very cheerful mood; but fortunately the imperial maiden had overheard the conversation, and had, moreover, seen the petitioner, who appeared to her the handsomest man in the world. Therefore, on his departure, she sent a letter, which the young lady sent him by the hands of a confidential servant, and which commanded him to come to her secretly on the following morning if he desired a successful issue to his suit.

While the youth remained awake through the night, ruminating on his good fortune, the imitable, likewise awake, occupied herself in stealing from her father a magic knife which she gave to her lover when he came according to appointment, and they both vowed eternal love and fidelity. She then directed him to take a horse which belonged to her and to ride with all speed to the Wili's wood, where he would find a certain tricipital hill, and after that a smaller hill bright in a spark, with many of the most various colors grazing upon it. From these horses he was to choose three of the desired colors, and if he were observed and unwilling to be caught, he was to draw out the knife so that the sun might shine upon it, and thus light up all the meadow: when all these things would come to him of their own accord. The horses secured, he was to proceed to the middle of the meadow, where he would find a golden tent with a coat of lions, boughs of silver, and leaves of gold. From the roof, cut with the magic knife, a torrent of gold coin would burst, which would fully enable him to comply with the emperor's terms.

These minute directions were strictly followed, and the success of the adventurer was complete. Nay, so greatly was the king struck with admiration when he saw the horses arrive laden with the golden treasure, that he could not help asking the suitor what he required in the shape of dowry? "Give me the princess herself and the knife," said the gallant youth, "and I will ask no more." And the princess and the knife were given, and all parties were satisfied.

LANDING OF GENERAL POTTER'S AND ADMIRAL DAHLGREN'S TROOPS AT BULL'S BAY, SOUTH CAROLINA.—[SKETCHED BY JOHN EVERDING.]

A VISIT TO FORT SUMTER.

THERE is a thrilling dramatic effect in the repossession of Fort Sumter four years after its surrender to traitors. Every thing connected with the capture of Charleston has more or less of this dramatic interest. Here the rebellion had its birth, and after four years of a strife the most terrible as well as the most needless on record, after four years which have done very much toward exhausting the Confederate States, the city which was the first theatre of war, which first heard the rebel shout of victory, has fallen before the prowess of our national arms. We illustrate on page 164 a visit made by General GILLMORE and his staff, accompanied by some ladies, to Fort Sumter on the 21st of February, immediately after the evacuation of the fort. Captain BEARD, who appears in the sketch, first raised the Stars and Stripes over the captured work.

We give this week two other illustrations relating to Charleston. One of them, on this page, represents the landing of the Naval Brigade and 1500 troops in Bull's Bay, sixteen miles northeast of Charleston, under Admiral DAHLGREN and General POTTER. This movement was effected February 13, and, threatening the only line of retreat left to the rebels on the north side, hastened the evacuation of the city.

On page 165 we illustrate a very picturesque feature of our victory at Charleston. Our readers will remember that the first troops occupying the city were negroes under Colonel BENNETT. On the night of the 21st the Fifty-fifth Colored Massachusetts landed in the city and marched through the streets, singing the March of John Brown's Soul. If the war itself was a revolution of citizens against their Government, it has introduced also a revolution quite as profound in the relation hitherto existing between the negro and his master.

'GEN. EWELL'S HEAD-QUARTERS.

WE give on this page a view of the rebel General EWELL'S Head-Quarters, at the Widow CHAPIN'S house, on the Osborne turnpike, leading to Richmond. The view was obtained by going into our advanced rifle-pits on the hill in front of Fort Harrison. By using a glass the minutest details could be observed. Indeed our lines are very close at this point. In front there is a ditch, fraises, and abatis defending it. Then a low parapet, forming a portion of their long intrenched line, behind which the men live in their little tents, with clay and stick chimneys; and beyond these the open plain and the homestead of the family that owns the large tract of land on which Fort Harrison now stands.

Our force north of the James has been considerably depleted; but it is likely that the Army of the James will soon have an important part to play.

OUR RETURNED PRISONERS.

WE give on page 173 an illustration of the embarkation for home of exchanged Union prisoners at Aiken's Landing. The work of exchange is now going on as rapidly as possible. All our prisoners in Richmond and Danville have been returned, and arrangements are being made to receive those which still remain in North and South Carolina. On the 24th of February 1000 were received from Florence. The Georgia and Alabama prisoners will be delivered at Mobile, and those in the prisons west of the Mississippi at the mouth of the Red River. Even if the war should continue for many months to come, there will hereafter be none of the difficulties which have hitherto stood in the way of a prompt exchange of prisoners. If the South uses negroes, it is for her interest as much as for ours to secure to them every privilege accorded to white troops.

THE REBEL GENERAL EWELL'S HEAD-QUARTERS, FOUR MILES FROM CHARLESTON.—[SKETCHED BY CAPTAIN L. L. LANGDON.]

EMBARKATION OF EXCHANGED UNION PRISONERS AT AIKEN'S LANDING, FEBRUARY 21, 1865.—SKETCHED BY J. R. HAMILTON.—[SEE PAGE 172.]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Attention, Officers and Soldiers!

Genuine Gold Rings.

All the Army Cap Rings in 14 k. fine gold stamped and warranted at $3 and $5 each. Also 100 other rings of every size, plain, enameled, and with fancy stones from $2 to $10 each. Sent by mail. Circulars with full description of styles and prices, sent on receipt of stamp. Address,

E. F. BEACH, 13 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

BABBITTONIAN PENS.

Unsurpassed for beautiful writing. The EXTRA FINE PEN or Business Pen (not post-paid) @ 50 cents for 36 pens, or $1 50 per gross. The celebrated self-inscribing Babbittonian Pen, specially commended by the press as "the most beautiful and scientific of systems" price $1 50, together with 12 pens, for $2. Splendid inducements to Agents and Teachers.

Address BABBITT & WILT, 81 Park Row, New York.

Something new and handsome.—The Fairy Album. The neatest little article of the day. Every body should have one. Album holding 20 pictures, $1; 40 pictures, $1 25; 80 pictures, $1 50. Trade supplied. W. C. Wemyss, 615 Broadway, N. Y. Send for catalogue of toys and fancy goods.

FOR SOLDIERS.

Valises, Army Rings, Watches, Gold Pens and Army [illegible]. Send for Agent's Circular.

Cases, &c. [illegible] 711 & Co. 15 John Street, New York.

R. Ke[illegible] with in your own Hands.

Your Hea[illegible]s true. Half diseases to which we are exposed by letting the skin and system run down below the standard of health, are not due somewhat the to softer tissues below. It c[illegible] seat but upon the cool shocks of the season.

Nature, in the midst of nature, thereby [illegible]es when they vest faint and torpid, which is evidenced by the [illegible]ness of the skin, want of appetite if gone, strength, sluggish, and, [illegible]ach if weak, tone and vigor.

Your remedies there is no preparation so ab[illegible]olutely adapted to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Remember that it purges the stomach and bowels, and thus equalizes the circulation of the blood, and thus opens the pores and cuticle, and gentlemy which no physician a directions are given in the Almanac. Druggists and dealers everywhere sell it.

BATTERIES have proved to be of more use than ornament, and are being a very extensive business, and have on hand the largest stock that can be found in this city. Address Times, Fast Water, Mich., Oct. 31, 1864.——"Their stock is large, and they sell very cheap. Every one we have purchased from them just as represented. Their long continuance in business shows that they offer better inducements than any other house in the city."—Loyal American, Annapolis, Md., Dec. 31, 1864.——"Their watches are substantial to the eye, and those who have used them, to the last degree. They are all they are advertised to be."—Independent, Warsaw, Ill., Oct. 30, 1864.——"They are large dealers, and their stock is manufactured in the latest style and of pure materials."—Telegraph, Saugerties, N. Y., Oct. 31, 1864.——"All goods furnished are just what they are represented to be."—Times, Waterville, N. Y., Oct. 30, 1864.——"Most liberal dealers."—Journal of Commerce, Warsaw, N. Y., Oct. 18, 1864.——"Honorable and fair dealing men."—Chambersburg Valley Spirit, Chambersburg, Pa., Oct. 29, 1864.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION.

250,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, DIAMOND RINGS, &c.

TO BE GIVEN AWAY!

ONE MILLION DOLLARS!

ALL TO BE SOLD FOR $1 EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE! NOT TO BE PAID FOR UNTIL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO RECEIVE!

SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF ARTICLES.

ALL TO BE SOLD FOR $1 00 EACH.

250 Genuine Gold Hunting-Case Watches, at $150 to $250
250 Ladies' Gold and Enamelled-Case do. 35 " 70
500 Gentlemen's Hunting-Case Silver Watches. 20 " 30
200 Diamond Rings. 10 " 300
2,000 Gold Vest and Neck Chains. 5 " 15
3,000 Gold Oval Band Bracelets. 4 " 8
3,000 Chased Gold Bracelets. 4 " 8
5,000 Chatelaine Chains and Guard Chains. 5 " 20
5,000 Gentlemen's and Ladies' Pins. 2 " 6
5,000 Lava and Florentine Brooches. 4 " 6
5,000 Cameo, Jet, Lava, and Florentine Ear Drops. 4 " 8
5,000 Mosaic Jet, Lava, and Florentine Ear Drops. 4 " 8
7,500 Coral, Opal, and Emerald Ear Drops. 4 " 8
4,000 California Diamond and Garnet Pins. 2 " 6
5,000 Gold Fob and Vest Watch Keys. 2 50 " 5
4,000 Gold Lockets. 3 " 10
8,000 Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs and Sets. 2 " 6
5,000 Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc. 4 " 8
10,000 Silver Thimbles, Pencils, etc. 2 " 4
4,000 " Magic Spring. 3 " 10
500 Gold Toothpicks. 2 " 5
5,000 " Coin Gold Rings. 4 " 10
5,000 " Band Rings. 4 " 10
10,000 " Set and Signet Rings. 2 50 " 20
10,000 Ladies' Garnet Rings. 2 " 5
7,500 Sets Ladies' Jew[illegible]ry—Jet and Gold. 5 " 15
6,000 " [illegible]ons, Pearl, etc. 5 " 15
10,000 Gold Pens, Silver Cases, [illegible]a Holders and Pencils. 4 " 10
10,000 Gold Pens and Gold Mounted Holders. 6 " 8
5,000 Gold Vest and Fancy Chains. 5 " 10
5,000 Silver Goblets and Drinking Cups. 5 " 10
5,000 Silver Cups. 5 " 10
2,000 Silver Fruit and Cake Baskets. 20 " 50
Many other articles of JEWELRY & CO., 116 Broadway, New York, extensive MANUFACTURERS and IMPORTERS of all the leading and fashionable styles of GOLD and SILVER and JEWELRY, desiring to increase their business to an unlimited extent, have resolved upon a Great Gift Distribution, subject to the regulations following:

Certificates stating what article and in what number is placed in SEALED ENVELOPES, and well mixed. One of these certificates will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents.

ALL ARTICLES SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE!

On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you are going to have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any article in the list for one dollar, and NO DOLLAR SHALL in no case be sent out less than One Dollar's worth, as the profits on so small a sale would be too little

"Death and Destruction to British Invaders."

A truly splendid REVOLUTIONARY ROMANCE will be commenced in No. 79 of the

New York Weekly,

ready on Thursday, March 23, entitled

WILD NELL, THE SPY;

OR

The Foundlings of the Forrest:

A Romance of the American Revolution.

By Francis S. Smith,

Author of

"White Eagle, the Avenger," "Galoway the Gladiator," "Ironsides, Wilton's Negro, the Child of Charity," "The Sexton of Saxony," etc., etc.

This is unquestionably one of the greatest historical romances of modern times, and every body would do well to look out for it.

Specimen copies sent free.

THE NEW YORK WEEKLY is sold by all News Agents throughout the United States. The price is SIX CENTS, but to make sure, where agents have to pay extra freight or postage, a higher price is necessarily charged. Where there is a News Agent in the town, we desire our Readers to get the WEEKLY through him. We do not wish to mail the paper except in those places where there are no other means of getting it. When sent by mail, single copies, $5 per annum; four copies, $16, which is $3 99 a copy; eight copies, $30. The party who sends us $30 for a club of eight copies can have a club of nine by sending for a copy free. Postmasters and others who form clubs in the different towns, can afterward add single copies at $2 50 each. Subscribers will most confer a favor by an addition to the subscription, to pay the American postage. When a draft or check can conveniently be sent it will be preferred, as it will prevent the possibility of the loss of money by mail. The postage on the WEEKLY to all parts of the country is only twenty cents a year, or five cents a quarter, payable at the office where the paper is delivered.

Address

STREET & SMITH,
11 Frankfort Street,
New York.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS.

For Females generally the Brandreth Pills can not be too highly spoken of. They remove all obstructions, give energy and vitality to the too distressing headache unfortunately so prevalent with the sex; depression of spirits, dullness of sight, nervous affections, blotches, pimples, sallowness of skin, pain in the back and downward, will quickly bloom and a general sprightliness indicates the power and healthfulness of Brandreth's Pills.

Ladies at a distance should still find them unrivalled; they are the best medicine for mothers and children, and cure costiveness and worms.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. See upon it in BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING,
NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicines.

INVISIBLE BOOT-DRAWER AND BOOT-CARRIER.

I have deferred advertising this article to procure a new let. They are now ecru schinkled. It is very popular, and is highly commended by the Army and Navy Journal,

and others. My Boot-drawer is worn on the heel, and is a perfect safeguard against treading on the hem of the pantaloons. For sale in the principal shoe-stores. Sent free by mail for 40 cents; $3 40 per dozen.

E. F. WARNER, Box 718, New York P O.

SHEEP BREEDERS and WOOL GROWERS.—Send for the new Moore's RURAL NEW YORKER, the leading Agricultural, Literary, and Family Newspaper of America, which has a special Department of Sheep Husbandry edited by Mr. H. S. RANDALL, the former "The Practical Shepherd," &c. This is the great Rural and Family Weekly. Only $3 a year—less to clubs. The 13 numbers of this quarter (Jan. to April) sent on trial for only 50 cents.

Address D. D. T. MOORE, Rochester, N. Y.

☞ Ten for One Dollar! ☜

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF ALL

PROMINENT AND NOTED PERSONS,

LIVING AND DEAD,

ALSO THE

Major-Generals, the President & Cabinet,

AND ALL THE

Prominent Officers of the Army & Navy,

ACTORS, ACTRESSES,

Fancy and Miscellaneous Pictures, &c., &c.

☞ 10 for One Dollar, or 15 Cts. Single Picture. Sent free to any Address. Endless Stamp, and send for List of Albums and Card Photographs.

Send your orders to

G. G. EVANS,
Proprietor of Gift Book Enterprise,
610 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Penn.

Albums for the Million.

Wound one 16-Picture POCKET ALBUM by mail, post-paid, for SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS, and one 24-Picture ALBUM for $1.

JUST THE THING FOR SOLDIERS.

SAMUEL BOWLES & CO.,
ALBUM
Manufacturer,
Springfield, Mass.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Organic will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of an order. R. G. GRAHAM, No 109 Nassau Street, N. Y.

"HUMES PARLOR HAIR CURLER."

The "Improved" and all fashionable people use it. Price $1 00. Will last six months.

HUME & CO., Jersey City, N. J.

FARMS IN ILLINOIS.

900,000 ACRES

OF THE

BEST FARMING LANDS

FOR SALE BY THE

Illinois Central Railroad Company,

IN TRACTS TO SUIT PURCHASERS,

AT LOW PRICES.

The Illinois Central Railroad extends from Dunleith, in the north-western part of the State, to Cairo, in the extreme southern part, with a branch from Centralia, one hundred and thirteen miles north of Cairo, to Chicago, on the shore of Lake Michigan—altogether a length of 704 miles—and the land which is offered for sale is situated upon either side of the track, in no instance at a greater distance than fifteen miles.

Illinois.

The rapid development of Illinois, its steady increase in population and wealth, and its capacity to produce cheap food, are matters for wonder and admiration. The United States Commissioner of Agriculture estimates the amounts of the principal crops of 1861, for the whole country, as follows: Indian corn, 830,581,000 bushels; wheat, 160,695,823 bushels; oats, 176,600,064 bushels; of which the farms of Illinois yielded 168,356,123 bushels of Indian corn, 23,211,171 bushels of wheat, and 34,273,751 bushels of oats—in reality more than one-fourth of the corn, more than one-fifth of the wheat, and almost one-seventh of the oats produced in all the United States.

Grain—Stock Raising.

Pre-eminently the first in the list of grain-exporting States, Illinois is also the great cattle State of the Union. Its fertile prairies are well adapted by nature to the raising of cattle, sheep, horses and mules; and in the important interest of pork packing, it is far in advance of every other State. The seeding of these prairie lands to tame grasses for pasturage or hay, offers to farmers with capital the most profitable results. The hay crop of Illinois in 1864 is estimated at 2,316,725 tons, which is more than half a million tons larger than the crop of any other State, excepting only New York.

Cotton, Tobacco, Flax.

The cultivation of tobacco and cotton in southern Illinois has been largely stimulated by the high prices which have prevailed since the outbreak of the rebellion. The crop of tobacco in this State, for 1864, is set down at 18,907,722 lbs.; and while the returns from the cotton-growing counties are incomplete, they are yet sufficient to show a large increase in the product—the most careful calculation placing the increase at fifty per cent. Sorghum is now classed among the staples of Illinois. The making of sugar from the best is receiving some attention, and experiments upon a large scale will be made during the coming season. Hemp and flax are grown in almost every part of the State, and of a quality equal to the best European.

Fruit.

Almost all the fruits of the temperate latitudes are produced in Illinois. Peaches, pears, plums, strawberries, and a great variety of garden vegetables, are produced in great abundance in the central and southern districts of the State, and are supplied to Chicago, St. Louis and Cincinnati, the excellent railway facilities insuring a quick market in all these places.

Inducements to Settlers.

The attention of persons, whose limited means forbid the purchase of a homestead in the older States, is particularly invited to these lands. Within ten years the Illinois Central Railroad Company has sold 1,600,000 acres, to more than 20,000 actual settlers; and during the last year 284,422 acres—a larger aggregate of sales than in any one year since the opening of the road. The farms are sold in tracts of forty or eighty acres, suited to the settler with limited capital, or in larger tracts, as may be required by the capitalist and stock raiser. The soil is of unsurpassed fertility; the climate is healthy; taxes are low; churches and schools are becoming abundant throughout the length and breadth of the State; and communication with all the great markets is made easy through railroads, canals and rivers.

PRICES AND TERMS OF PAYMENT.

The price of lands varies from $5 to $15 and upwards per acre, and they are sold on short credit, or for cash. A deduction of ten per cent. from the credit price is made to those who purchase for cash.

EXAMPLE:

Forty acres at $10 per acre, on short credit: the principal one-quarter cash down—balance one, two and three years, at six per cent. interest, in advance, each year.

Cash Payment.	INTEREST.	PRINCIPAL.		INTEREST.	PRINCIPAL.
Payment in one year	$12 00	$100 00	Payment in two years	$6 00	$100 00
			Same years	6 00	100 00

The Same Land may be Purchased for $360 Cash.

Full information on all points, together with maps, showing the exact location of Lands, will be furnished on application, in person or by letter, to LAND COMMISSIONER, Illinois Central R. R. Co., Chicago, Illinois.

REMINGTON'S

ARMY AND NAVY

REVOLVER!

Approved by the Government.

Warranted not to say quicker than any one else. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion, N. Y.

PRICE $1 25.

THE SERGEANT'S ROLL BOOK FOR THE

COMPANY, DETAIL AND SQUAD.

A neat pocketbook, bound in a waterproof flap cover, with pencil, and calendars for 1863-5-6-7. Size, six cap, 61 by 4 inches. Containing blanks with printed dates for thirty-one days, and one hundred names for six months.

Sent free, on receipt of the price.

JAMES W. FORTUNE, Publisher
109 Centre St., New York.

"The West Indian Hair Curler."

Warranted to curl the most straight and stiff hair, on the first application, into short ringlets or waving motive curls. Sent to any address on receipt of $1 00. Address F. H. THOMAS & CO., Box 5051, New York Post-Office.

Dr. Poland's

WHITE PINE

COMPOUND.

THE GREAT AND POPULAR

REMEDY FOR

Colds, Coughs, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Croup, and Whooping-Cough.

Cures Gravel and all Kidney Diseases.

There have been many severe cases in Boston and vicinity cured by the WHITE PINE COMPOUND, which can be referred to, and hundreds of cases of Kidney complaints, cured entirely by taking the White Pine Compound, have been reported by Druggists.

Among all the popular medicines offered for sale, no one seems to have gained favor like the White Pine Compound. This medicine was first made as lately as the spring of 1856, and has nearly the sale of any individual one now offered, with an indorsement of the thread. A cure was effected by it. This induced others to apply for the same remedy, and every one using it received a great benefit. The article, however, went without a name till November, 1857, when it was called White Pine Compound. During that month it was advertised for the first time.

Some time in 1850 an individual, who purchased a bottle for a horse, was not only cured of the cough, but also of a severe kidney complaint of ten years' endurance. This being truly a discovery, the fact was mentioned to a skilful physician, who replied in substance that the bark of White Pine was one of the best diuretics known, provided its astringency could be counteracted. If the other articles entering into the Compound would effect this, a fortune was in the Medicine! The fortune has not yet been realized, but the hundreds of cures effected by the Compound, in the most aggravated cases of Kidney diseases, including Diabetes, prove it to be a wonderful Medicine for such ailments. A large number of physicians now employ it exclusively in their family.

But while the White Pine Compound is so useful in kidney inflammation, it is also a wonderful remedy in all throat and lung diseases. It so quickly and soothingly allays inflammation that hoarseness and soreness are removed as if by magic. Numerous cases have been reported to the proprietor where relief to every severe case has been experienced in one hour, and a cure effected in twenty-four hours.

There is a very natural reason for this. The bark and even the leaves of "needles," of White Pine, contain eminent medicinal qualities. The Indians employed the bark of White Pine in treating diseases long before the settlement of America by Europeans.

A wash of the bark, steeped in water, is exceedingly useful in reducing inflammation and cleansing old sores. In fact, the use of White Pine for medicinal purposes is old, and this, combined with the great reason why the White Pine Compound was so favorably received, is the first.

The past year has given a great opportunity to test the virtues of the White Pine Compound. It has been an unusual time for Colds and Coughs, and the peculiar characteristics of the White Pine Compound have been sold and used with the happiest effects. It stands before the Medicine that the people living where it is prepared are high in its praise.

TESTIMONIALS.

Letter from REV. L. C. STURTEVANT, Pastor of the Baptist Church, Gaffstown Centre, N. H.

DR. J. W. POLAND: My Dear Sir,—You have asked me what I think of your White Pine Compound. I never before put my paper to such use, but will say, that I think it a patent medicine. My father, a physician of the old school, early led me to entertain prejudices against patents, and I never shed nor bearing the stamp of that fraternity. But those weighty I have parted with by degrees, as I have carefully examined myself with the leading principles of Hydropathy, Homœopathy, Thomsonianism, Eclecticism, and other systems which have claimed public favor within the last twenty-five years; and I shall feel at liberty on this ground to speak my convictions. Then the sympathy which I feel for you in the many disappointments clinging so reluctantly the ministry nearly on account of ill health, has led me to watch with the deepest interest early years for this blessed work, and laboring to your utmost in other ways to proclaim the glorious Gospel, induces me as a matter of duty to comply with your request. In 1853 I became acquainted with Deacon Stephen Landman, of Maine, brother of the late George Dana Boardman, formerly missionary at Burmah. To him I owe the first time learned the wonderful medicinal qualities of white pine bark. He had a few years before been brought to the borders of the grave by what the best of physicians pronounced pulmonary consumption, and was given up to die, but was nevertheless entirely cured by a principles made from his own healthful pine. From what I saw, I became acquainted with your article, I have been prompted that I have employed your article and to undertake a cough preparation from white pine. As soon as my article was brought to the notice of brethren secured my attention; and I have not failed to acquaint myself with a sufficient amount of facts to produce a settled judgment as to its value. Some of my own family have used it with signal benefit. I believe it one of the best cough medicines ever prepared. Besides its value as a cough medicine, I have good reason to believe it to be all it claims as a remedy for kidney diseases and diabetes.

Yours truly, L. C. STURTEVANT.

Gaffstown Centre, N. H., Feb., 1863.

The Editor of the Manchester Weekly and Weekly Mirror, in a header of the Daily thus writes of the Compound:

The White Pine Compound is somewhat extensively used in our columns, and we are happy to learn that the demand for it is increasing beyond all previous expectations. It is the very best medicine for coughs and colds we know of, and no family that has once used it will ever be without it. We speak from our own knowledge; it is sure to kill a cold, and pleasant as it is sure. The proprietor intends to be sedulous, and it is singular that the White Pine Compound, made for coughs and colds, should prove to be the greatest remedy for kidney difficulties known. But so it is. We can vouch it, so many testimonials come to us from well-known men. Besides, the character of Dr. Poland is such that we know he will not countenance what is wrong. For years a Baptist Clergyman, studying medicine to find remedies for his ailments, with a delicate, consumptive look, standing with one foot upon the grave, he made the discovery which has cured himself and called out from hundreds of others the strongest testimonials possible. We have known Dr. Poland for years, and never knew a more conscientious, honest, upright man, and we can state that we believe whatever he says about his White Pine Compound.

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND,

GEORGE W. SWETT, M.D.,

Proprietor,

Will be manufactured in future at the

NEW ENGLAND BOTANIC DEPOT, 168 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON,

Under the supervision of

REV. J. W. POLAND, M.D.

DR. SWETT will attend to the business department, to whom all orders should be addressed. Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers in Medicine every where.

Price 75 Cents per Bottle.

ALEXANDER'S

IMPROVED U. S. MAGAZINE

PISTOL.

Warranted superior to any Pistol in use. Sent by express, with Powder Flask, Bullet Mould, Cleaning Rod, and Cartridges, for $5 00. Address

ALEXANDER BROTHERS,
Springfield, Mass.

Ich! Ich! Ich!

SCRATCH! SCRATCH! SCRATCH!

WHEATON'S OINTMENT

WILL CURE THE ITCH IN 48 HOURS.

Also cures SALT RHEUM, ULCERS, CHILBLAINS, and all ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN. Price 50 cents. For sale by all druggists.

By sending 60 cents to WEEKS & POTTER, Sole Agents, 170 Washington St., Boston, it will be forwarded by mail, free of postage, to any part of the United States.

Shults' Ongruent, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustache in 30 days, or money paid, for 50 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

HUMAN NATURE.

FEROCIOUS MISTRESS. "Cook, this is the third time you have sent up the joint raw this week, and your Master is much displeased! I must really entreat of you in future—to—" (Awful pause.)

COOK. "Ah, I see! You've been vexed in the parlor, and so you comes and wents it on me in the kitchen."

SEVEN-THIRTIES.

Robinson & Ogden,

BANKERS,

AND

U.S. LOAN AGENTS,

4 Broad St. and 694 Broadway,

New York.

Subscriptions received for any amount, and a constant supply of the notes on hand for immediate delivery.

ROBINSON & OGDEN, BANKERS.

FISK & HATCH,

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.

No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

The Model Pocket-Pistol of the Age.

SLOCUM'S Patent Side-Loading REVOLVER.

Length, 7½ Inches. Weight, 14 Ounces. Carries a No. 32 Metallic Cartridge.

Its advantages over all others are:

1st. It does not require percussion ammunition.

2d. It is perfectly safe while being loaded.

3d. It can be loaded in the dark, and quicker than any other pistol.

4th. It can be carried in the pocket, without danger, when loaded.

5th. It is sure fire, and possesses great strength.

FOR SALE BY THE TRADE GENERALLY.

HOWARD, SANGER & CO.,

195 and 197 Chambers Street, New York.

Descriptive Circulars furnished upon application.

POLLAK & SON, Meerschaum Manufacturers, 502 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $50 each.

ARTHUR'S HOME MAGAZINE.

TERMS.—$2 50 a year. 3 copies for $6. 4 copies for $10. For sale by news dealers every where. T. S. ARTHUR & CO., 323 Walnut Street, Philadelphia.

TICKS, SCAB, VERMIN.

SheepWash Tobacco

Should be u ed by all Farmers on their

SHEEP, ANIMALS, AND PLANTS.

For sale by JAS. F. LEVIN, Agent South Down Co., 23 Central Wharf, Boston.

For sale in New York by B. T. ALLEN & CO., 189, 191 Water St., and DUDLEY & STAFFORD, 99 Beekman St.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills—To cure the worst of Colds, take the Pills and rub the Ointment into the chest night and morning.

Soldiers Sailors. and Every body will receive by mail a Five-Column Lithographing Newspaper, FREE, by sending their address to Fidelia Army and Home Journal, 29 Ann Street, New York.

LAWRENCE, BALDWIN & CO.,

70 Wall Street, New York,

BANKERS and BROKERS,

DEALERS IN ALL KINDS OF

Government Securities.

PETROLEUM,

AND ALL OTHER KINDS OF

STOCKS, BONDS, &c.,

BOUGHT AND SOLD ON COMMISSION AT THE REGULAR BOARD, MINING, AND PETROLEUM BOARDS.

Interest Allowed on Deposits.

DEWITT C. LAWRENCE. CYRUS J. LAWRENCE.
SAMUEL BALDWIN, JR. WM. A. HAZARD.

VERMILYE & CO.,

No. 44 WALL STREET,

BANKERS,

And Dealers in all Classes of

GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,

479 Broadway, below Broome St.

Sing Song Chinese Porcelain;

ALSO FANCY FRENCH CHINA, GLASS, &c.

French Dinner Sets.

Calenberg & Vaupel's PIANO-FORTES,

99 and 101 Bleecker Street, 24 Block West of Broadway.

Warranted for Six Years.

"Electric" Self-adjusting enameled white, $1, $5, $7, and $9 per doz.; specimens, 50 cts., 75 cts., $1. Snow-white, linen-finished, illustr-ntched, $1 25. Suitable Tie, $1. Ladies' "illusion-embroidered" Steel Collars, $1 50; Cuffs, $1 20. Gents' steel Cuffs, $2. Mailed on receipt of price and "size." JEANERET, 78 Nassau St., N. Y. Box 285.

Vineland Lands. To all Wanting Farms.

Large and thriving settlement, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, producing large crops, which can now be sure proving. Ten, twenty, and fifty acre tracts, at from $25 to $35 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufactories and others. Churches, schools, and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post-Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.

From Engineer of Mines Shaws, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune: "It is one of the most extensive fruits tracts in an almost land position and suitable condition for pleasant farming that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.

Magnifying small objects 500 times. MAILED FREE EVERYWHERE for 50 CTS. or TWENTY-FIVE 1 CTS.

Address F. C. BOWEN, Box 720, Boston, Mass.

Great Imperial Watch.

See Cooley Brothers' Advertisement on page 174.

DYSPEPSIA AND FITS!

A SURE CURE for those distressing complaints is now made known in a "Treatise on Foreign and Native Herbal Preparations, published by Dr. O. Phelps Brown. The prescription was furnished him in early life by a providential means, that he can not conscientiously withhold it, and will send it free, as it has cured every body who has used it, never having failed in a single case. It is peculiarly sure in cases of Fits or of Dyspepsia, and all who desire may be found in any drug Dyspepsia, and all who desire may be found in any drug store. Sent free to all on the receipt of five cents to prepay postage. Address DR. O. PHELPS BROWN, No. 19 Grand Street, Jersey City, New Jersey.

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER.

This now celebrated Pistol is the most compact, powerful, and effective Pocket Revolver in the world. It carries the largest ball for size of the Pistol of any Revolver made. EXTREME LENGTH, 7 INCHES; WEIGHT, 14 OZ.; IN 6-SHOT, 25-100th BALL.

Its Advantages are:

1st. It is loaded with perfect ease and safety, without removing the cylinder for any part of it, at the fore end, and can be carried when loaded without the slightest danger.

2d. The cylinder never fouls; is made from solid steel, bored; and can not get out of repair, or clog, as cylinders made of many parts are liable to do.

3d. The cartridge is made on an improved plan; the fulminate is concentrated in one place, which insures sure fire: is METALLIC CENTRAL FIRE, AND WATER PROOF.

4th. In point blank model makes it the most desirable Pocket Revolver ever made.

FOR SALE BY THE TRADE GENERALLY.

GEO. A. HICKOUX, 54 Cliff Street, New York.

Certificates.

I have used the "National Revolver," and believe it to the best and most convenient revolver ever offered to the public. (Signed) JOHN S. FOLK,

Inspector of Metropolitan Police, N. Y.

I have thoroughly tested the new "National Revolver," and find it an effective weapon, of new fire and convenient size. At fifty yards, I think I could with this Pistol kill at every shot. I take pleasure in recommending it as a weapon in every way desirable. In company with Capt. Scott, Provost-Marshall, and other officers, I fired this pistol a large number of times, and not one cartridge failed to explode. (Signed,) JOHN CHARLESTON,

Chief of Police, Cairo, Ill.

We have one of the "National Revolvers" now in use, and pronounce it one of the most perfect things of the kind we ever saw. It is simple in construction, substantial, sure fire, and shoots with the force and accuracy of a rifle. Any one in want of a good and reliable weapon can not do better than procure a "National Revolver."

(Signed) T. VINCENT,

Editor and Proprietor "New Era."

We, the undersigned, having used and thoroughly tested the National Revolvers, have no hesitancy in saying that, for accuracy, force, and convenience, we think they are far superior to any other Revolver yet produced.

M. C. LOMMIS, with Lt.-G. and W. J. Averell.
GEO. KING, Chief of Police, Ogdensburg.
J. H. FAIRCHILD, Insurance Agent.

Gray's Patent Molded Collars

The only collars shaped to fit the neck with a perfect curve, free from angles or breaks. The turn-over style is the ONLY COLLAR MADE having the patented space for the cravat, rendering the vurbies next the neck perfectly smooth and free from those pockets which in all other turn-down collars so chafe and irritate the neck. EVERY COLLAR is stamped "GRAY'S PATENT MOLDED COLLAR." Sold by all retail dealers in men's furnishing goods. The trade supplied by

HATCH, JOHNSON & CO., 81 Devonshire St., Boston.

J. S. LOWRY & CO., 37 Warren St., New York; Van Deusen, Bushnor & Co., 49 Chestnut St., Phila.; Hodges & Bro., 73 Hanover St., Baltimore; Weil, Stephens & Co., 222 Pennsylvania Av., Wash'n; Leavitt & Berry, 107 Fifth and Vine Sts., Cincinnati; J. Von Borries & Co., 424 Main St., Louisville; A. Frankenthal & Bro., 6 So. Main St., St. Louis; Bradford Bros., Milwaukie; Wood, Wilkes & Co., 7 to 13 Tchoupitoulas St., N. O.

NOTICE TO THE TRADE.

The immense popularity of "Gray's Patent Molded Collar" has given rise to many imitations and infringements of my patents.

The public, and especially dealers in collars, are cautioned that all such violations of my rights will be strictly prosecuted. SOLOMON S. GRAY.

BOSTON, October 1, 1864.

WATCHES AND JEWELRY.

Splendid Chance to Make Money.

Great inducements to sell our 4-blade Gold TRUE PATENTS and Certificates in the great Gift Sale of Watches and Jewelry. A large profit. Send for circular with special circulars to agents how to obtain gold and silver Watches free, sent on receipt of 25 cts. G. S. HASKINS & CO., 86 Beekman St., N. Y.

MARCH, MAY, and JULY

COUPONS CASHED IN GOLD

BY

HENRY A. HEISER'S SONS,

DEALERS IN GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,

NO. 44 PINE STREET, NEW YORK.

United States 7 3-10 Treasury Notes ready for immediate delivery in sums to suit, AND ONE QUARTER OF ONE PER CENT. COMMISSION ALLOWED TO ALL PARTIES PURCHASING FOR ACCOUNT OF OTHERS.

Tenth National Bank.

240 Broadway, N. Y.

CAPITAL, 1,000,000 DOLLARS.

FISCAL AGENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

DIRECTORS.

J. T. SANGER, Formerly of Wm. H. Carv & Co.
E. L. FANCHER, Esq., No. 220 Broadway.
JOHN ELLIOTT, Messrs. Riggs & Co., Wall St. & Washington.
LEWIS EINSTEIN, Messrs. Einstein, Rosenfeld & Co.
JOHN FALCONER, Seamless Clothing M'g Co.
HENRY J. BAKER, Messrs. H. J. Baker & Brother.
ALBERT G. LEE, Messrs. Coffin, Lee & Co.
N. K. ROSENFELD, Messrs. Rosenfeld, Bros. & Co.
CHARLES G. BARRETT, Messrs. Randolph, Skidmore & Co.
EDWIN F. KNOWLTON, Messrs. Wm. Knowlton & Son.
JACOB H. DATES, Messrs. J. G. McMurray & Co.
D. L. ROSS, Messrs. Ross, Dompster & Co.

D. L. ROSS, Pres.

J. H. STOUT, Cashier.

BANKERS' AND DEALERS' ACCOUNTS SOLICITED.

BENJ. F. KENDALL,

BROKER IN

PETROLEUM STOCKS

No. 52 Wall Street, N. Y.

WARD'S PATENT FRENCH PRINTED PAPER COLLARS

387 B'WAY, N.Y. & ALL GENT'S FURNISHING STORES.

CARPET WARP,

FIRST AND SECOND QUALITY;

Wrapping Twine made of Paper.

Twines and Paper. H. A. HARVEY, 84 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

ARMY AND NAVY AGENCY.

Pensions, Bounties, Pay, Prize Money, together with all claims of the army and navy promptly procured. Correspondence promptly answered. L. BROWN & Co., 9 Park Pl., N. Y.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $10

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever, Cap, small size, white enameled dial, cut hands, "English Movements," and correct time-keeper, with an accurate "Miniature Calendar," indicating the "Day of the Week, Month, &c." in back case.

A single one sent free by mail to any address in a neat case, WITH A BEAUTIFUL VERY CHAIN, for only $10.

A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, with "Miniature Calendar," &c., specially adapted to the ARMY. Sent free by mail, to any address, for only $7.

English and American Levers from $25 up. Good Watches of all descriptions low.

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Sole Importers, 58 & 60 Ann Street, New York.

GROVER & BAKER'S

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Elastic Stitch

SEWING MACHINES,

495 Broadway, New York.

Printing-Presses for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 32x51. Price $2500.

Also one Adams Press. Bed 40, $1000.

Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. IX.—No. 430.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

THE TRIUMPH IN NEW YORK.

THE grand triumph in New York on the 6th of March, after a weak fashion, reminds the scholar of those splendid triumphs which frequently glorified the streets of Imperial Rome on the occasion of a great victory or series of victories. There were some important differences, however. Those triumphs were graced with the presence of the returning conqueror: but our GRANT and SHERMAN, after many important successes, are still in the field awaiting the consummation of the nation's triumph. The triumphs of ancient Rome were made glorious not alone by the trophies and spoils of war, but also, and mainly, by the spectacle of conquered generals borne as captives in the great procession: we displayed many trophies, but we are not at war with distant provinces, but, unhappily, with our own brothers, whom we prefer to meet on equal terms and as brothers still—not as the victor meets the vanquished. So far there is nothing unfavorable in the comparison. But we very much doubt if a Roman triumph was ever degraded by mercenary tradesmen, whose chief object in participating in the festival was the opportunity to advertise their wares.

In one respect—and that the most important of all—the gala-day in New York excelled all ancient triumphs. It was the people's festival. Our victories have all been gained in the interest of the people, and it was fitting that a million of hearts and faces should have responded to the demands of the occasion. The vast concourse of people thronging the streets and literally crowding every window and balcony along the long line of the procession, was the great feature of the day. It appears to us that the triumph was timely; it revived the patriotic pledges which New York city gave four years ago, that at whatever cost of blood or treasure the Union must be preserved; and it was a foretaste of the happier, because completer, triumph that can not be far distant.

HON. HUGH M'CULLOUGH, SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

HUGH M'CULLOUGH, appointed Secretary of the Treasury in place of WILLIAM PITT FESSENDEN, who resumes his seat in the Senate, is a native of Maine, though he has since 1833 resided in Indiana. Mr. M'CULLOUGH received his collegiate education at Bowdoin College, and then became a lawyer. In the spring of 1833 he settled at Fort Wayne, in Indiana, and two years afterward began his financial career as a banker. When the Indiana State bank was organized in 1855 he became its President, and remained in that position until May, 1863, when he was appointed Controller of the Currency at Washington. His politics had been those of the Whig party. His sentiments are in perfect accord with the Administration, and from the first indications that he has given of the policy which he intends to adopt as Treasurer we prognosticate for him a successful career. Upon the supposition of an early close of the war, Mr. M'CULLOUGH is probably the most competent man who could have been selected, even should the war be prolonged he possesses rare qualifications for the office.

HON. HUGH M'CULLOUGH, SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY GARDNER, WASHINGTON, D.C.]

THE DARK ICONOCLAST.

[When Charleston was occupied by our troops the bust of John C. Calhoun, in the office of the Mercury, was dashed to the ground and broken by a female slave.]

WHAT though a prophet had pronounced the word,
With solemn warnings, in the years* gone by,
Ere death had closed the grave Calhoun's stern eye,
While yet in Senate halls his voice was heard
Uplifted in defense of that great Wrong—
That accurst curse whose cruel gyves and yokes,
Inhuman brands and harsh inflicted strokes,
Have stained the honor of our land so long—
And had declared the time would soon come round
When one of that oppressed and servile race
Should lift his freedman's image from its place,
And dash it into fragments on the ground—
Who would have heeded had the words been spoken?
And yet to-day his sculptured bust lies broken.

THE MILITARY SITUATION.

IT was on the 18th of February that General SHERMAN took Columbia. BEAUREGARD, who had just left that point, placed his army so as to cover the approach to Charlotte, deeming that line of greater importance to the safety of Richmond. SHERMAN, while making a strong feint in BEAUREGARD'S front, moved his main column on Camden and Florence. Intelligence which is thought to be trust-worthy makes it evident that SHERMAN was, on the 1st of March, some miles west of Florence, at Cheraw, on the North Carolina border. In that case he is apparently aiming at Raleigh. There are columns co-operating with his advance in that direction—TERRY'S from Wilmington and BAUFORD'S from Newbern. Dispatches from General LEE to the rebel Secretary of War indicates that SCHOFIELD'S column, on the 8th, encountered the rebel General HOKE at Kinston, under General BRAGG, near Kinston. A battle was fought, in which SCHOFIELD was driven back, after having disputed the ground obstinately, with a loss of three guns and a portion of his skirmish line taken prisoners. Kinston is 20 miles east of Goldsborough. On the 9th the enemy attacked and was severely repulsed, leaving his dead and wounded on the field, and losing several hundred prisoners. HOKE attacked again on the 10th, and was so badly beaten that he was forced to withdraw to the north side of the Neuse. In connection with General SCHOFIELD'S command the illustration given on page 181 of that General's head-quarters at Wilmington, and of the lodge of his corps, will have great interest to our readers.

A dispatch received from General SHERMAN, dated Laurel Hill, North Carolina (20 miles northwest from Fayetteville), March 8, states that he had reached that point, and that all was going on finely.

SHERMAN'S march northward from Columbia has not been rapid, which is probably due to the state of the roads. The slower he moves and the more completely will he exhaust the country of food and forage absolutely indispensable to LEE'S army. The rebel journals have lately charged SHERMAN with having burned Columbia. Now, it is certainly true that the public property was burned, but if any thing else suffered it was by accident. This is proved by the fact that the houses of General HAMPTON and PRESTON are left standing. The Augusta Constitutionalist, a rebel organ, says: "If few, if any, private residences were entered. If any outrages were committed on ladies it is not known. The troops were under strict discipline and orders during their march.... They marched as if they had most perfect confidence in their expedition, instead of having been out for weeks."

The victory of SHERIDAN over EARLY'S command, in the VALLEY, has been continued except in the single fact of the capture of EARLY himself. Eight cannon were captured, and 1300 prisoners, which have been sent to Washington, the first division southward toward the James. The route taken by these separate columns may be traced on the map which is to be found on page 176. SHERIDAN, under General DEVEN, took a directly southern route to Staunton, destroying all which he could use, and bridges on the line of march, and along the RIVANNA River to Columbia. The other division proceeded on the railroad to Lynchburg, destroying it as far as to Amherst—a distance of over 60 miles. From Scottsville DEVEN'S division proceeded westward along the banks of the James, destroying every lock on the canal as far as to Duguidsville, 20 miles from Lynchburg. SHERIDAN takes his dispatch from Columbia as the point up to that date he had captured 14 guns. We give on page 185 an illustration of this new "ride" of PAUL REVERE across the creeks of the Shenandoah. He started from Winchester on the 27th of February.

In the Southwest Mobile is the prominent centre of interest. The rumors to the effect that that city was being evacuated were so far unfounded that, instead of evacuating, the rebels have, for weeks, been strengthening the position against a federal attack. The citizens have been summoned to arms, and a whole batch of rebel generals have been inciting them on to a gallant defense of the city. Among these is BEAUREGARD, who is ever present at that point of the CONFEDERACY which is slipping out of DAVIS'S hands. Like BRAGG, he has come to be recognized as a "signal of distress." There are two Federal corps, SMITH'S and GRANGER'S, operating against the city. These are under the command of General CANBY. PASCAGOULA is the proper base for operations against Mobile. It is not improbable, after all, that upon the approach of CANBY —who will, of course, hold every line of retreat—the garrison defending the city will follow the example of HARDEE at Savannah and Charleston, and march out, while there is an opportunity.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 1865.

THE LAST MASK GONE.

MR. HUNTER'S argument in the rebel Senate is unanswerable. It leaves the rebellion utterly without the shadow of pretense. We seceded from the Federal Government, he says, because it attempted to touch slavery; and now we propose to allow the Confederate Government to meddle with it. The arming and emancipation of the slaves, therefore, is, he contends, an abandonment of the contest. In other words—although MR. HUNTER did not put it in that form—we seceded to be slavery, and now we abolish slavery to save secession.

The argument of his speech upon the grounds of the rebellion is indeed unanswerable, but the tone of it is humiliating for any intelligent human being. To vote for the bill, he says, is to abandon the principle of the contest, and to make the losses of the war mere murders. It is natural to suppose, therefore, that MR. HUNTER will save his consistency and honor by resigning. Certainly the "honor" of a Virginian "gentleman" will not suffer him to be the tool and tool of traitors to a cause which he professes to regard as sacred. If the holy cause is to be abandoned, he will say, find some one else to do it. Not at all. This Virginian "gentleman" is "instructed" to betray his country, as he conceives, and he makes a very low and obeys.

This is the kind of person who, for thirty years past, has been lecturing this country upon "honor." This is a specimen of the "gentleman" bred in the school of JOHN C. CALHOUN.

The Richmond Enquirer, commenting upon the debate, says that slavery is dead in Virginia, but that Virginia did not mean to sell slavery, but for the great principle of self-government. Where, when, and how had that principle been assailed? The election of 1860 was exactly as constitutional, nor do we believe less so, as that of 1856. If the latter were in obedience to the principle of self-government, so was the former. Either the one election was legal under the usual system, or it has never been contravened. If it has never prevailed, why have its hot advocates postponed their defense of it so long? If it has never been endangered, why do they fight to protect it?

Or will it be urged that by self-government the Enquirer means State sovereignty? That will not help it. For two days before the same journal declared that State sovereignty had been the weakness of the cause, and was so defeated by its practice as it was pretty in theory.

We expose these contradictions and absurdities that the utter hollowness of every pretense of this unhappy war may be exhibited. The London Saturday Review, which has been from the first as unscrupulous as the Richmond papers, thus unscrupulously exposes the rebel Press in pleading the cause of the rebels, now declares, in their dire extremity:

> "The promoters of Secession were as blind as the last of the dynasties they overthrew. Instead of the method of homely moulding in the face of unexpected resistance, they have, to the utmost of their material power, made good by their valor and fortitude the miscalculations of their policy; and they have exhibited to the world a spectacle of revolutionary which forms the original protest of the present a grand and unique example of a great and heroic community to form an independent nation."

That is to say, the Saturday Review holds that any body of citizens may rise in bloody insurrection against their government without any reason whatever; and that is the inevitable logic of any vindication or defense of the rebellion. American statesmen and the best English have always held that, after long and hopeless oppression, when all legal methods of redress have obviously most continue to fail, then, after due deliberation and a solemn declaration before God and man of the terrible necessity forced upon them, the oppressed people have a right to rise by arms the acknowledged rights which laws neither defend nor promise to defend. This is the right of revolution according to the gravest and best of men.

On the other hand, that is body of citizens may, from fanciful and trivial grievances, plunge a whole nation into the horrors and sorrow of civil war for the sake of preserving the system of human slavery, is, according to the London Saturday Review, the logical assertion of the right of a great and heroic community to form an independent nation!"

To such writers as this those reduced who undertake gravely to defend the most causeless and infamous rebellion in history.

SHERMAN.

THE mystery of SHERMAN'S march was impressing. Yet the silence of the rebels was expressive. If they made eager haste to publish such stories as that of BRAGG'S victory and of WADE HAMPTON'S victory, did they not see that not to claim SHERMAN'S defeat was to concede his success? The winks and shrugs and hints of the Richmond journals were simply the grimaces of despair. "She knew that I knew that she knew," says the good lady in Cranford, and we know that the rebels know that we know that SHERMAN'S march is as yet unimpeded.

"It is the flying of a bird through the air," "it is a huge raid!" "the country closes up behind him;" "he is marching to his doom:" these and other things like them were all the rebel journals had to say. Did they really suppose that bluster in Richmond would stop SHERMAN in Carolina? Did they imagine that rallying and cheering or sneering and snuffing were valuable allies against such a man? "He has yet to prove himself a soldier," they cried. Would they not have consulted their own honor by addressing him as a man who could march from Atlantaonga to Richmond by the way of Atlanta, Savannah, and South and North Carolina, shaking off JOHNSTON at every step, might have some military talent?

War is uncertain. We constantly remember it and remind our readers of it. But if SHERMAN joins GRANT, will it be uncertain that he has done any thing? If Richmond is evacuated and DAVIS flies, will SHERMAN'S march still be "mere raid?" If this campaign shall end the substantial military effort of the rebellion, will GRANT still be only a butcher, and will SHERMAN yet have to prove himself a soldier?

When public opinion is reduced to frantic rhetoric it will soon spend its last breath.

DEATH ON THE RAIL.

THE universal railway slaughter which is now taking place in this country gives occasion for a striking illustration of the pusillanimity of the rebellion. There is no other civil war country in the world where such frightful daily massacres would be tolerated. But we content ourselves with a joke and a shrug, and a coroner's jury which "duly exonerates the employés on the train from all blame."

This is the verdict upon the recent wanton and awful destruction on the Camden and Amboy road. What are the facts? A train stops upon a curve. Another train comes thundering on and crashes into it with horrible destruction of life and limb. WILLIAM EARLEY, Coroner, and six gentlemen of the neighborhood, thereupon inform us that the accident resulted from the want of proper caution on the part of the switch-tender at Neshaminy Bridge in not stopping the Washington train according to the orders given by the conductor of the train, which it clock P.M. train from Philadelphia, believing, according to the evidence given, that there was a misunderstanding on the part of said switchman as to those orders, which, in their opinion, tend to mitigate the censure which otherwise would fall upon said switch-tender; and the jury fully exonerate the employés on the train from all blame.

If the switch-tender misunderstood simple orders the Company is directly responsible for the consequences of his blunder. But if the conductor gave them blunderingly he is the guilty agent. It is idle to talk of misunderstanding. The duty was imperative for understanding. The thing to be done was to stop the other train or to switch it off; and as the conductor is by position the higher officer, the conductor of the P.M. train from Philadelphia should be held responsible for not stopping the Washington train, and for the frightful results of not stopping it.

And so thoroughly subjected are the people of New Jersey by the great Camden and Amboy monopoly that they must not be surprised if such a verdict is rendered as a shield to the monopoly to shield that monopoly from public indignation. Every citizen of New Jersey, in a matter which concerns the Camden and Amboy Railroad, is liable to suspicion until the State emancipates itself from its control. How many influential newspapers in New Jersey dare to expose the acts of that monopoly? How many State law lawyers accept briefs against it? How many men in public life hope to rise in face of its tremendous power? Something of MR. WILLIAM EARLEY, Coroner, nor do we insinuate a suspicion of his perfect rectitude; but as he is a Jerseyman, living in the vicinity of the Camden and Amboy Railroad, and heads such a dainty verdict, it is impossible to help wondering whether the worthy MR. EARLEY has, or has had, or hopes to have, any advantageous relations with that Company.

We speak of the Camden and Amboy accident, but the air hums with disaster upon every side. Remember the story if LEGISLATURE were honest. In the State of New York, for instance, the Legislature should make every train stop at least five minutes every draw-bridge. It should compel the renewal of the rails at certain periods. It should have the roads constantly inspected by experts paid by the State. It should enforce a heavy fine from every Company for every accident which could not be satisfactorily proved beyond human control. By thus squeezing the Erie Railway Company in the State the Legislature would keep every railroad in good repair and save hundreds of lives.

But unless the people move by petition and besiege the Legislatures nothing will be done. Men and women will be slaughtered by scores, and after the indignation of the newspapers has expressed itself, we shall be comforted by the polite verdict that nobody was to blame, with a mild implication of censure upon the foolish brittleness of the public neck.

SHERMAN'S PEN.

On the 12th of last September General SHERMAN wrote to the Mayor of Atlanta: "War is cruelty and you can not refine it, and those who brought war on our country deserve all the curses and maledictions a people can pour out....... Once admit the Union, once more acknowledge the authority of the national Government, and instead of devoting your houses and streets and roads to the dread use of war, I and this army become at once your protectors and supporters, shielding you from danger let it come from what quarter it may..... You might as well appeal against the thunder-storm as against these terrible hardships of war."

YET WADE HAMPTON, one of the chief actors in bloody contest which he and his fellows forced upon their country, is frantic with rage because General SHERMAN, in the absence of civil authorities, forages upon the country in orders those who murder his foragers to be shot. WADE HAMPTON does not deny this military right of forage, but he says "there is a right older even than this, and one more inalienable, the right that every man has to defend his home and to protect those that are dependent upon him."

Look at it! WADE HAMPTON and his associates offer this nation an alternative. It must submit peaceably to destruction, or it must fight for its life. The nation will not fight. HAMPTON and Company light their matches and fire. They invite civil war. They begin civil war. And when civil war comes they cry for the throat they cry "thief," "murderer," "barbarian," "savage," and "wild beast." To all this the Boys freely from the pen of "YOURS, etc., WADE HAMPTON, Lieutenant-General," the letter of General SHERMAN contains the calm and complete reply. "Personally I regret the bitter feelings engendered by this war, which they were to be expected, and I simply allege that those who struck the first blow, and made war inevitable, ought not in fairness to reproach us for the natural consequences."

SHERIDAN.

"BOOT, saddle, to horse, and away!" So shouts PHILIP SHERIDAN cheerily as he swings into the saddle and rides forward with his bold and dashing troops. Presently his voice rings back again from far away: "I have had no opposition. Every body is bewildered by our movements. I have not seen a trace of rebel since I left." And again: "I can not speak in too high terms of Generals MERRITT, CUSTER, and DEVEN, and the officers and men of their commands. They have waded through mud and water during this continuous rain, and are all in fine spirits and health."

This is what is probably to be treated as "a mere raid" by the Richmond doctors. But if a mere raid can cut "the great feeder" of the rebel capital, if the re-engagements of Generals LEE in North Carolina prevent his attending to repairing the feeder, may not a mere raid be of rather vital importance? Hamlet was scutched only; but what kind of it. The campaign in which General GRANT opened upon the first of last May is proceeding. "I shall fight it out upon this line," he said, and he is keeping his word.

COWELL LENDING A HAND.

WE are afraid that even COWELL can not save the rebellion. COWELL is a correspondent of the London Examiner. COWELL hears something of a proposition reported to have been made in Richmond to arm the slaves as individuals and rebel forces in an invasion of Canada and Mexico; and COWELL hastens to remind the rebels of the fact that "the key of the whole original plan of avoiding the war! Ah! thinks COWELL, assisted by the London Times, if it could only be believed that the American Secretary of State is the author of this suggestion, another body might be induced to throw an alms in the hat of a needy rebellion!

But it is too late, said, even COWELL will hardly succeed. The United States, France, and England are certainly not cordial friends, but they do not wish to involve each other in war which does not concern them. That to have been bitterly hostile to England for hot haste in recognizing the rebels as belligerents, and maritime belligerents, is true. That we have been hostile to France because of the losses wrought by the rebel ships that sailed from her ports under her flag is very possible. But we do not wish to wrench the question to arbitration—she will not go to war about it.

That France has failed in respect for the Monroe doctrine, as generally understood, is apparent. That she chose the season of our distraction to accomplish her purpose is beyond question. But that the United States, emerging from the most severe war known to history, with a vast country to compose and a debt of three or four thousand millions of dollars to pay, would wish more drafts and more debts in order to restore Mexico to its traditional anarchy is not clear. Or that LOUIS NAPOLEON, to keep his balance in Mexico, would try to destroy that of the United States, just as it was righting itself, and thus invoke general war in Christendom, is less likely than that he will see such a course to be unnecessary. The United States, at the end of their present difficulties, may not wish to fight. But they will be certainly able to fight; and so sagacious an observer as LOUIS NAPOLEON will hardly fail to note so interesting and suggestive a fact.

It seems, therefore, as if COWELL would lose his pains. Foreign war is not at all likely unless provoked by us; and the union of national and rebel arms to provoke it is one of those shallow schemes which common-sense instinctively repudiates. That the war has proved the immense strength of our system and our formidable military power is plain; but it has not made us a military people. It has not tainted us with lust of dominion, and by exterminating slavery it has extirpated the cancer of "manifest destiny." A military force in the land, and a huge retain, because preparation discourages insurrection. Nor are we ever likely again to be so utterly stripped of defensive and offensive means as we were when the war burst upon us.

But still the restored Union will be moderation, firmness, and peace. The infinite swagger and bluster of a slavery-tempting people, which disgusted every decent nation in the world, will give place to a spirit of civilization and equity. The sentimentality and savagery, which had both inflated and degraded the country, will yield to the plain common-sense of universal justice and fair play. Exactly what ABRAHAM LINCOLN is contrasted with SEWELL, and WIGFALL, and DAVIS, and BENJAMIN, and TOOMBS, and FRANKLIN PIERCE, and BUCHANAN, and FERNANDO WOOD, and YANCEY, and PENDLETON, and SAULSBURY, and VALLANDIGHAM, just that will be the contrast of the spirit and policy of the United States after and before the war.

A TRAGICAL DELUSION.

THE tragical delusion of the madmen of Charleston four years ago, that they could overthrow a great nation as easily as they could fire upon a provision ship or upon a little Federal garrison, is vividly illustrated by the two following extracts. The first is from the Charleston Mercury of the 10th of January, 1861, and the second from a letter to the Tribune, written in Charleston on the 20th of February, 1865:

"The expulsion of the steamer Star of the West from the Charleston harbor yesterday morning was the occasion of the ball of the revolution.... We would not exchange or recall that ball for millions.... The blood which in either cannon has see this reverberated from Maine to Texas, through every hamlet of the North, and down along the great waters of the Southwest. An thought paper and treacherous ruffians may cry on the days of war, and traitorous politicians and their all in the Northern South Carolina will stand under her own palmetto-tree, untertified by the smiling of traitors or the sneers of the foe to be deceived or deterred by the wily machinations of the other. And if that rest es of blood be still lacking to the parchment of our freedom, and blood they shall have, blood they shall have, and blood enough to stamp it all in red. For, by the God of our fathers, the soil of South Carolina shall be free!"

So wrote men who were ready and eager to smother in blood a Government which they did not pretend had ever harmed them, and which they had absolutely controlled. Four years pass. One by one their hopes disappear. And now amid the desertion, according to Governor VANCE, of half their army, amidst the imprecations and cries of the Richmond journals that their leaders shall not flee, by the mere visit of SHERMAN'S thundering march Charleston falls without a blow, and the crazy city that ceaselessly defied a Government as strong as it is benign, is thus described:

"The wharves looked as if they had been deserted for half a century—broken down, dilapidated, grass and moss peeping up between the pavements, and every sign of active fleet of commerce trade incessantly. The warehouses near the river, in the centre as we enter them; the houses and the stores and the public buildings—with the ball that will hold our thanks in utter amazement. Every step we take increases our astonishment. No pen, no pencil, no brush can do justice to the scene. No imagination can conceive of the utter wreck, the universal ruin, the hopeless desolation. Ruin—ruin—ruin—above and below; on the right hand and the left—ruin, ruin, ruin, every where and always—staring at us from every quarter—ruin that seems to cut us from every shell-torn wall; glaring at us from every battered door and pillar and window; ruin that breath our feet on every sidewalk. Not Pompeii, not Herculaneum, not Thebes, nor the Nile, have ruin more complete, so saddening, so plaintively eloquent, for they speak to us of an age and ours, and long ago dead, with whose people and life and ideas we have no sympathy whatever. But here, on these shattered wreck of houses —built in our own style, many of them quite new in the architecture of our epoch—we read names familiar to us all; initials of trade and professional and commercial institutions, which every modern city reckons up by the hundred; and we feel that the dust, as silent as the grave of the Pharaohs, so deserted as the bazaar of the merchant princes of Old Tyre."

A PHOTOGRAPH FROM ANCIENT GREECE.

WE have already mentioned Professor TAYLOR LEWIS'S remarkable monograph, "State Rights, a Photograph from the Ruins of Ancient Greece," in which the most copious scholarship is brought in a most trenchant and picturesque style to illustrate the condition and the dangers of our condition. The pernicious folly of the doctrine of supreme State Rights, which is but another name for the right of secession, is shown in the history and fate of Greece, and shown not only with the inexorable logic of the philosophic historian, but with the pathos of which a scholar who, deeply versed in the literature and language of Greece, perceives the exceeding charm of Grecian civilization and its possible influence upon the course of history, an influence which was paralyzed and lost by the same false doctrine that now imperils the American Union and finally destroyed Greece.

The pamphlet, originally published last autumn, and one of the most interesting and significant which the war has produced, is now reissued by WARD, FARNSON, & Co., of Albany, enriched with three supplementary chapters on the Ideas of Nationality; of Sovereignty; and the Right of Revolution. The stringent common sense of these chapters is not less striking than their clear and conclusive reasoning. As a contribution to the solution of the vexed question of nationality, which will be debated until it is finally put to rest in the fundamental law, this pamphlet of Professor LEWIS will hold a distinguished place. It is plain that as the partial obscurity of the constitution upon the point of Slavery has compelled the people to make it clear as day, so its equally dangerous want of an explicit declaration of the national inviolability will be supplied by the same power. There can be no more important topic for the consideration of every citizen. There is no more valuable treatise upon it than the pamphlet of Professor LEWIS.

FOR THE SOLDIERS—A CARD.

WE publish the following card with pleasure, and remind our readers once more how easily they can please and help the soldiers:

MR. JOHN SAYLES, Agent of the United States Sanitary Commission, returns his thanks on behalf of the soldiers to those thirteen friends and patrons who have remembered us, in the way of books and papers sent to the Hospital Library at City Point. The editor and patron of Harper's Weekly his thanks are especially due. The help and comfort thus afforded to the soldier is second to none in importance in this war. Invoices of books have been received from the following gentlemen in the vicinity of Hanover also from young ladies in Lexington, Kentucky; and papers from an unknown friend in Indianapolis.

All reading matter intended for soldiers at this Point should be boxed up and marked as follows:

For BASE HOSPITAL, for Capt. or Dr. M'DONALD (or to JOHN SAYLES, Care of U. S. Sanitary Agent,

City Point, Va.

Contributors, in future, will please make known their name and address, that suitable acknowledgments may be returned.

SECOND CORPS HOSPITAL, March, 1865.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE SITUATION.

A GENERAL view of the military situation has been given on the preceding page. It appears that no small portion of the rebel army is retreating in the Valley of the City of Kinston, in Schofield's front. Sherman and Schofield are declared to command the line. The gain in Richmond will not be diminished, we may be sure, from the fact that all the rebel communications will be destroyed. It is effectually interrupted as it could possibly be if Lynchburg itself were to be our possession. If Sheridan crosses the James the Southside Railroad will suffer a similar fate. At the same time movements are reported in the Carolinas, ready to supply Lee's army by subscription. Every thing remains favorable for the complete success of Grant, Thomas and Sheridan.

There is no political news. The extra session of Congress, after electing its own organization, has adjourned.

FIVE DAYS NEWS FROM SHERMAN.

On the 14th a dispatch was received from General Sherman, dated Laurel Hill, North Carolina, March 8. He says: "We are well and in good spirits." [Sic.]

SHERIDAN AND SCHOFIELD.

On the 15th of March two dispatches were penned, one by Schofield, near Kinston, and the other by Sheridan, on the north bank of the James, at Columbia. We copy them dispatches below:

HEAD-QUARTERS, MIDDLE MILITARY DIVISION, Columbia, March 15, 1865.

Lieutenant-General U. S. Grant, Commanding Armies United States:

GENERAL,—In my last dispatch, dated Waynesborough, 27th ult., I informed you that I was about to cut the Virginia Division.

The main night this division was pushed across the Blue Ridge and entered Charlottesville at two P.M. the next day. The Mayor of the town and the leading inhabitants came out and delivered up the keys of the public buildings.

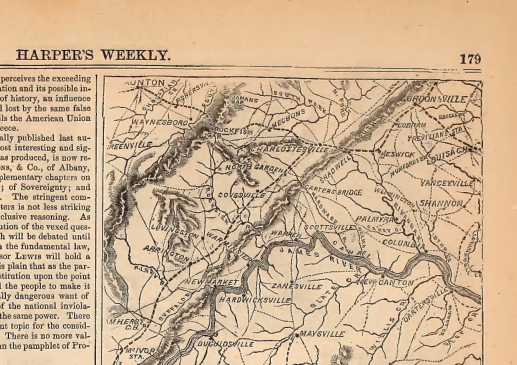
I had to remain at Charlottesville two days. This time was consumed in destroying the railroad, depots, stores of ammunition and pontoon trains.

The weather was beyond my speed description and the rain incessant.

The two divisions were during this time occupied in destroying the two large iron bridges—one over the Rivanna River, the other over the Rockfish—on the Central Railroad, and the railroad for a distance of eight miles in the direction of Lynchburg.

On the 6th of March I sent the first division, General Devin commanding, to Scottsville, on the James River, with directions to send out light parties through the country to destroy all manufactories, mills, bridges, &c. Scottsville, on the Rivanna River, the parties to join the division at Scottsville. The division was engaged during the day canal to Duguidsville, fifteen miles from Lynchburg, destroying every lock on the canal between that point and the canal. At Duguidsville we hoped to secure the bridge to let the men across the river, but were disappointed.

On account of the high water in this, however, we were foiled, as that the bridge and the ferry-boats at Duguidsville were burned by the enemy upon our approach. Meanwhile accompanied this division.



The third division started at the same time from Charlottesville, and proceeded down the Lynchburg Railroad to Amherst Court House, destroying every bridge on the road, and for many places miles of the road. The bridges on this road are numerous, and some of them five hundred feet in length. We have thus almost abandoned to this country for our men and animals. In fact the canal had been the only source of subsistence. At the South River the bank of the canal was cut, and at New Canton, on the same river, a dam across the canal was built and destroyed and the James River let into the canal, carrying away the locks above and filling up the bottom of the canal.

The dam across the James at this point was also partially destroyed.

I have had no opposition. Every body is bewildered by our movements. I have had no news of any kind since I left.

The latest Richmond paper was of the 9th, but contained nothing.

I omitted to mention that the bridges on the railroad from Seven Pines Depot, on the road to Richmond, to Charlottesville, were utterly destroyed; also all bridges for a distance of ten miles on the Gordonsville Railroad.

MAP ILLUSTRATING GENERAL SHERIDAN'S CAMPAIGN WEST OF RICHMOND.

The weather has been very bad indeed, raining hard every day, with the exception of four days, since we started. My wagons have been the ruin of the roads, destroyed them.

Up to the present time we have captured fourteen pieces of artillery—seven at Waynesborough and three at Charlottesville.

The party that I sent back from Waynesborough started with six pieces, but they were obliged to destroy two of the six for want of animals. The remaining eight pieces were thoroughly destroyed.

We have captured up to the present time twelve caissons loaded with artillery ammunition, besides medical stores.

I can not speak in too high terms of Generals Merritt, Custer, and Devin, and the officers and men of their commands. They have waded through mud and water during the most inclement rain, and are all in fine spirits and health.

Commissary Hall, of the Second Division, and Quartermaster Gordonville, while attempting to make his escape from our advance in this direction.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Major-General Commanding.

STAUNTON, March 17, 1865.

To Lieutenant-General Grant:

The enemy made a heavy attack upon our centre and left to-day, but was decisively repulsed, with heavy loss.

He dead and badly wounded were left upon the field.

We also took several hundred prisoners. Our loss is small.

General Custer is only twelve miles from here to-night, and will be up early in the morning.

We took possession of the town and Stoutt's corps. They say that two corps are here, and the rest of Johnston's army is coming.

J. M. SCHOFIELD, Major-General.

General Schofield, in a dispatch dated at Newbern, March 12, states that on the night of the 10th, near Southwest Creek, General Cox, with Jessen's 23rd division, routed the rebel rear guard across the Neuse at Kinston, and now holds the bridges and the river at that place.

RUMORED REVERSE TO KILPATRICK.

The following dispatch from General Lee, claiming that a victory was gained by Hampton over Kilpatrick on the 10th. The locality of the battle is not given:

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF NORTHERN VA., March 10, 1865.

Hon. John C. Breckinridge, Secretary of War:

General Hampton attacked General Kilpatrick at daylight this morning, and drove him from the camp, taking the guns, wagons, many horses, several hundred prisoners, and relieving a great number of our men who had been captured. The guns and wagons could not be brought off for want of horses. Many of the enemy were killed and wounded. Our loss is not heavy. Lieutenant-Colonel J. S. King was killed. Brigadier-General Rime, Colonels Kegan and Morrison, and Major Davis are wounded, and others, were wounded.

R. E. LEE, General.

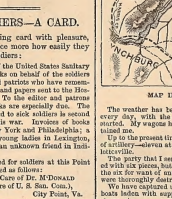
SOUTHERN SLAVE CONSCRIPTION.

The bill to arm slaves and place them in the ranks of the Confederate army passed the rebel Senate March 7 by a majority of two. Mr. Hunter voted for the bill, which has become a law, but he made a speech directly contrary to this vote. He said that to arm the slave was to abandon the principle which the war was ever undertaken. "Who is to swear, then," he asks, "for the hundreds of thousands of slaves who shall be armed? Who is to be true to answer for them before the bar of Heaven? Not those who had entered into contract upon principles to adhere to the principle, but those who had abandoned the principle. Not for all the gold in California would he put his name to such a measure as this, unless obliged to do it by compulsion. He was as be was five years ago, in his own convictions nothing could have extorted it from him. He hunter then stated the necessity of freeing the negroes if they were made soldiers. There was something in the whole plan head-head-head-able in it must be so, when they come out scarred from the conflict that they will be free."

The following is a copy of the bill.

A Bill to Increase the Military Forces of the Confederate States.—The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact that a sufficient force be raised by law to repel the invasion, maintain the rightful possession of the Confederate States, secure their independence, and preserve their institutions, the President be and is hereby authorized to ask for and accept the services of slaves for the service of such number of able-bodied negro men as he may deem necessary for employing in, and performing military services in whatever capacity he may direct.

Sec. 2. That such slaves shall be impressed to organize the said slaves into companies, battalions, regiments, brigades, divisions, and such other organizations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, and to be commanded by such officers as the President may appoint.



Sec. 3. That while employed in the service the said slaves shall receive the same rations, clothing, and compensation as are allowed to other troops in the same branch of the service.

Sec. 4. That if, under the previous section of this act, the President shall not be able to raise a sufficient number of troops to prosecute the war successfully and maintain the authority of the laws and the independence of the Confederate States, then he is hereby authorized to call on each State, which may be liable to conscription, for a quota of three hundred thousand troops in addition to those subject to military service under existing laws, or to many thereof as the President may deem necessary to be raised from such classes of the population, irrespective of color, in such States, as the proper authorities thereof may determine. Provided, that not more than twenty-five per cent. of the male slaves between the ages of eighteen and forty-five in any State shall be called for under the provisions of this act.

Sec. 5. That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize a change in the relation of any such slaves.

PRESENTATION OF A GOLD MEDAL TO LIEUT.-GENERAL GRANT.

On the 11th there was a review of the troops on Grant's left, which was graced with the presence of the Lieutenant-General—who had the wife of his Chief of Staff, General Rawlins. In the evening the General and his party returned to City Point, where, in the presence of a large number of officers and distinguished civilians, he was presented with the gold medal voted him by a joint resolution December 17, 1863. The medal was accompanied by a copy of the resolution engrossed on parchment. The accompanying engraving is from a daguerreotype taken by the President:

"LIEUTENANT-GENERAL GRANT,—In accordance with a joint resolution of Congress, approved December 17, 1863, I now have the honor of transmitting and presenting to you, in the name of the people of the United States of America, a copy of said resolution, engrossed on parchment, together with the gold medal therein ordered and directed.

"Please accept for yourself and all under your command the tender expressions of my gratitude for your great and transcendent services to the nation and the cause.

"Your obedient servant,

A. LINCOLN."

The General replied: "I accept the medal and joint resolution of Congress with which the President has accompanied you to deliver to me. I will do myself the honor at an early day to acknowledge the receipt of the letter of the President accompanying them, and to communicate in order to the officers and soldiers who served under my command, prior to the passage of the resolution, the thanks so generously tendered to them by the Congress of the United States."

The cost of the medal was $1,000. The Congressional resolution was beautifully engrossed, and encased in a silver tube.

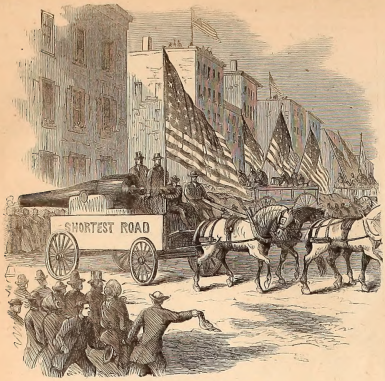
NEWS ITEMS.

A report from Newbern, N. C., says that the remaining Union prisoners at Salisbury, N. C., have been sent to the Union troops, whether of Sherman's or some other force is not stated.

New Orleans advices of the 7th inst. state that large bodies of troops were then being there for the victory of Mobile. General Bishop's expedition from Baton Rouge into the interior of Louisiana had returned to that city. Nine consists of three thousand cavalry and some artillery.

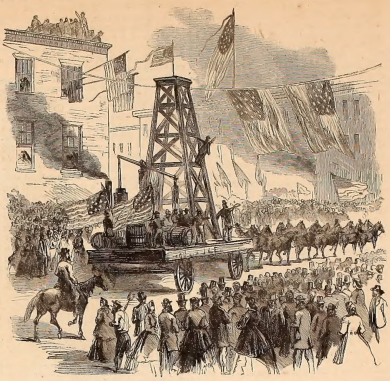
On the 11th the obsequies of Major-General Whiting, who died at Governor's Island of fever, were performed in the saloon on Fort Fisher, took place at Trinity Church. Before a large congregation. The Rev. Dr. Tuttle officiated, and the remains were subsequently interred at Greenwood Cemetery.

Governor VANCE, of North Carolina, makes an urgent appeal to the people to send in provisions, for there are four months to come, depend for food upon portions of Virginia and North Carolina. The Governor has donated half his stock of provisions to the rebel Government, placing the rest in the hands of agents to be sold. He also ordered from both Charleston and Savannah, with orders to randezvous at New Inlet.



A gentleman who left the Army of the Potomac on the 11th, and who had been with it through several days at the front, state that the Army is in most perfect condition. Large accessions are being made to it daily; and the color, cannon, drill, and discipline are complete; the parades and reviews are splendid, and viz the spirit is equal to any. The British Major-General who has been for a time the guest of General Meade. There are very few regular staff lines closely covered with Union troops. Our troops continue to be well fed, clothed, and cared for, as ever by Richmond. They are most abundantly fed and clothed.

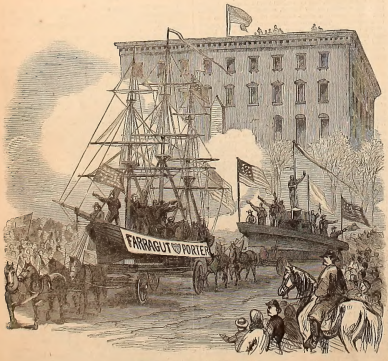
FOREIGN NEWS.



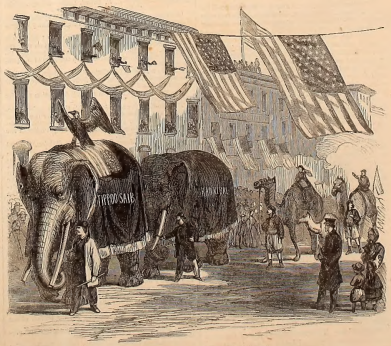
EUROPE.

LORD LYONS has resigned the office of British Minister to Washington. Sir Frederick Bruce, English Minister to China, has been appointed to succeed Lord Lyons.

Queen Isabella of Spain, it is reported, is about to sacrifice her private estate in aid of the National Treasury. The royal palaces and their contents, Santa Isabel, Aranjuez, the Escurial, and ten more, the Museum of Art, Industry, and Science, and some other property are to be offered for ever on the Crown; and when so much has been put aside for the civil list, the remainder is to be the fund of the patrimony, hereditary possessions, and other estates enjoyed by the Queen, are to be sold. The proceeds of the proceeds are to be paid into the TREASURY, and the remaining fourth to herself.



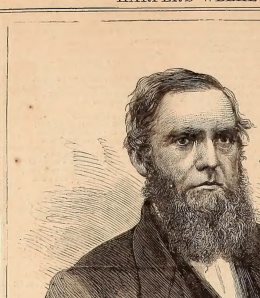
THE SHORTEST ROAD TO PEACE.



STRIKING OIL.

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

THE NAVAL DEMONSTRATION.



WINDING UP OF THE PROCESSION.

THE TRIUMPH IN NEW YORK—GLIMPSES OF THE GRAND PROCESSION.—[SEE FIRST PAGE.]

HON. JAMES HARLAN, SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

HON. JAMES HARLAN, who has just been appointed Secretary of the Interior, was born in Clark County, Illinois, August 20, 1820. He is now, therefore, nearly forty-five years old. At the age of twenty-five he graduated at the Indiana University, and devoted himself to the profession of law, in which he obtained a high position. Two years later he was Superintendent of Public Instruction in the State of Iowa, where he had taken up his residence. In 1853 he was chosen President of the Iowa Wesleyan University, which office he retained one year, when he was elected United States Senator. He was re-elected for the term ending in 1867, serving as Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. His past experience in the West, and his relation to the Committee on Public Lands, have well fitted Mr. HARLAN for the important duties of his new office.

HON. JAMES HARLAN, SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.]

CORRESPONDENCE.

WITH GEN. SHERMAN IN THE CAROLINAS.

NEAR BRANCHVILLE, Feb. 20, 1865.

I AM one of the "uncounted throng" who compose General Sherman's army; and the general purpose that brings us here, or takes us elsewhere, is as well known to you as to myself. Cadmus, perambulating the Oriental world in search of his sister, Europa; Japhet in search of a father; or Diogenes looking for an honest man, had no such task as ours. We are looking for a rebel army that we expect to find, burrowed or "ditched," somewhere in the Carolinas.

Nature's picture-gallery hereabouts is monotonous. No mountains, no valleys, no "cattle upon a thousand hills," or even one hill worthy of the name; no pretty villages thickly set, with beautiful women and happy children flitting about like butterflies—nothing of the sort. Silence and gloom, swamps and forests; a low, level country, inhabited mainly by negroes and alligators—the former migrating seaward, the latter dormant—are the general features of the region from whence I write.

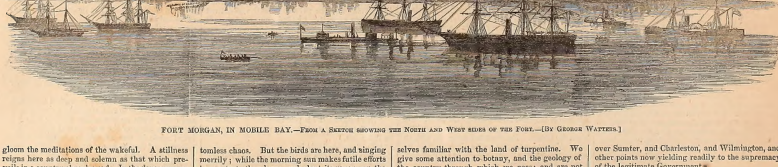
This forest is but an enormous growth of evergreens, beneath which day is always murky, and night gloomy and hideous. Among these vast fields of pine silence reigns supreme. Night, dark as Erebus within the cavernous woods, tinges with gloom the meditations of the wakeful. A stillness reigns here as deep and solemn as that which prevails in a country church-yard. In the dense swamp hard by the alligators have their lair, and at certain seasons of the year hold nocturnal revels. To get through this swamp our men and animals have to wallow in mud and water, compounded into a bottomless chaos. But the birds are here, and singing merrily; while the morning sun makes futile efforts to penetrate the gloom, and plant its rays upon the cold, damp earth.

Where and when we are to emerge from the wilderness of pines is problematical. We have left the land of cotton rearward, and are making ourselves familiar with the land of turpentine. We give some attention to botany, and the geology of the country through which we pass; and are not indifferent to the fascinations of natural history.

The negro is ever before us. We see him in all his gradations—from the unmixed specimen up to that which is nine parts white man to one of "Africa." It is interesting to note the gradual improvement in physiognomy as they progress upward. The mouth recules, the nose contracts laterally, the forehead advances and spreads out on either flank, the labial organs diminish in size and protuberance, the cuticle changes its hue, and the hair loses its propensity to be rooted at both ends, with numerous Gordian knots intervening.

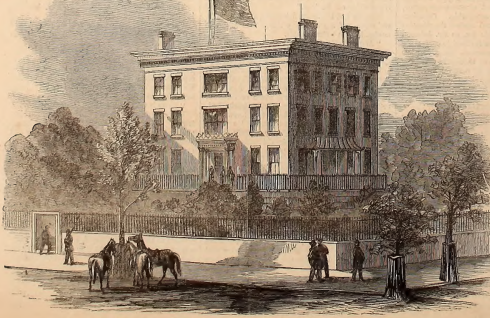
The negroes along our line of march display a great desire to see "Massa Sherman." On one occasion, during our Georgia campaign, General Sherman had chanced to make his head-quarters for the night at a plantation belonging to Howell Cobb, and the proprietor's "people" were extremely anxious to see the man whose name is such a terror to traitors.

An aged "specimen," bowed down with years and much stooping over the cotton plant, requested permission to behold the "man of war" of whom so much had been told in his hearing. His request being made known to the General, he was admitted. The military mastermind was seated astride a chair, smoking, when the patriarch was shown in and stood before him. "Africa" bowed very low, and, with dilapidated hat in quivering hand, stood mute with fear and wonder.



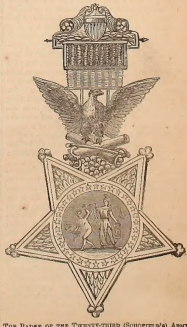
Growing bolder, he asked, "Are you Massa Sherman?" "I am General Sherman; do you want to see me?" was the reply. "Lord-a-massa! is it true that you is the man I hear so much about? I bress God I live to see your face! tank de Lord! tank de Lord! May I come up and look at you!" he asked. "Certainly," said the General; "take the candle and look at me as long as you choose."

Seizing the light in his trembling hand, the old man walked slowly around the General's chair, holding the candle frequently quite close to his face, and looking at him on all sides with intense interest. His curiosity gratified, he reluctantly departed, frequently ejaculating his thanks to the Lord that he had been permitted to see Massa Sherman face to face, and on the old plantation.



Absurd notions prevail among people of the South, claiming intelligence, as to the character and motives of leading men in our Government, whether in cabinet or field. On one occasion a man of prominence in Georgia propounded the following question to General Sherman: "General," said he, "what kind of a man is your President, Mr. Lincoln? Is he not a hard-hearted, tyrannical man, with very little sympathy or love for his race?" "By no means," said the General. "Mr. Lincoln is a tender-hearted man—very tender-hearted; so much so," said he, "that I dare not let him know I was coming down through Georgia, lest he should stop me, fearing that I might hurt somebody." And thus were set aside the erroneous views of one man at least as to the character of our amiable Chief Magistrate.

Doubtless, ere your readers have perused these desultory lines, this army, under its restless and successful leader, will have finished its immediate work, and assumed a temporary stability. Our campaign through South Carolina will have ended, its capital city will have felt the heavy hand of war, and the national colors will be floating in triumph over Sumter, and Charleston, and Wilmington, and other points now yielding readily to the supremacy of the legitimate Government.



South Carolina is just now in a transition state, and is about to become a proselyte to the true faith. Externally she has the appearance of being sick.

FORT MORGAN, IN MOBILE BAY.—[FROM A SKETCH SHOWING THE NORTH AND WEST SIDES OF THE FORT.—[BY GEORGE WATTERS.]

GENERAL SCHOFIELD'S HEAD-QUARTERS AT WILMINGTON.—[SKETCHED BY E. H. HALL.]

THE BADGE OF THE TWENTY-THIRD (SCHOFIELD'S) ARMY CORPS.—[SKETCHED BY E. H. HALL.]

Like other portions of the South her cotton and rice fields are overgrown with weeds, and her people are "out at home." An ominous silence pervades her forests and cultivated fields, and we who visit her in this her hour of trial tread lightly over her tainted soil. Her families, of royal blood and illustrious name, who have lived in lordly retirement, and whose sporadic dwellings are scattered over a great surface, at a solemn distance from each other, are fleeing coastward, or to the few remaining localities where rebellion dares to congregate.

"Is your master at home?" I inquired of an aged female servant, who appeared at the door of a fine mansion, embowered within a beautiful grove of live-oaks. "Yes, massa," said she. "Is your mistress within, or any of the family?" "No, massa." Why have they left such a charming home—such a picture of beauty?" said I, as my admiration rose contemplating the surrounding loveliness. "Spect they's afraid of you Yankees," said she; and therein I found my answer.

Occasionally we meet with a low hovel in some obscure place by the wayside, where Poverty and Ignorance have fraternized and set up a temple. These are the dwelling-places of the "poor whites" of the South—that abject, ignorant, and degraded white people it was ever my fortune to see.

It is from such homes as these the bulk of the rebel army is drawn, Without education, without hope of advancement, without ambition, or any of the higher attributes of manhood, the hapless beings, and brothers who have sprung from these hovels are the plaint tools of designing men, and are led to fight for reasons without a shadow of interest idea of the object for which their hands are raised against a beneficent Government. These are the people whom we are to take by the hand and lift up from the slough of ignorance and apathy, and place their feet on solid ground. They form by far the larger portion of the white population of these States.

A few Southern men, born to wealth and educational privileges, equivalent to themselves superiority to aught else that wears the human form. They claim to have been "Made by some other Deity than Nature,

That shapes man better," and grate loudly of the "Southern spirit," which they say can not be subdued, though it may be overcowered for a time. It is the spirit of the fox, not of the mouse; and I may venture to say that in crushing the spirit of the few we may elevate the spirit and character of the many.

The only true exception—those which awaken no regret—are those obtained over ignorance. Thus our efforts to put down rebellion may be crowned by a victory over those who have been misled, and destroy the Government, and a victory over the ignorance and degradation of a class bound down by the shrewd and selfish curse of slavery, is a victory for the poor white man who lives in contact with it.

H. H. W.

SECRETS.

WITH most persons the art of keeping a secret is at a low enough stage of development. With uncultivated, unrestrained people, a secret is often a burden intolerable to be borne, and this burden of secret be one to affect their fame, and even life. We believe half the confessions of gross crime are made, not to expiate, but simply because the criminal can not keep his secret; he wants a present gratification, and prefers to tell it all at once. Once it is told, he never cares for the punishment, but is easy about the crime. He has satisfied the want of his soul. Secrets, then, are not kept simply from a man's ordinary acceptance, any deep oppressive mystery; and "keeping secrets" means something quite different from the disinterested, high schemers, or the silence of moody conspirators or breakers of the law. Our relations to secrets are of two kinds. We keep our own or we keep those of others. Prudence and favoring circumstances may keep us clear of important secrets of our own, but there is always something to tell. It is wise to keep our own, and most people know something or other about their friends which they must not divulge. Now it is clearly a duty to keep our friends' secrets. It is wisdom to keep our own, but with the majority this is a hard duty. Some, indeed, seem physically incapacitated from observing it. We all know people who can only regard a secret as something to tell. Their organization is only engaged to retain it as a fit depositary; they regard it as an egg to be laid in some hidden safe place. And perhaps, if they could be induced to do one telling, they would never suffer so much from their fellows, for very few people can lock a thing that deeply interests and concerns their self-love up in their own breast, and see them the yearning to tell continues on them so long as the secret interests themselves. They have no place to put it in, so they give it to some one else. Their minds are thoroughfares through which they invite any one to pass. All their doors lie on the window, and our secret is only hung out with the rest. This mere babbling incontinence of a secret is a different thing from that love of power which tends to much the same result. To be fond of secrets leads, of course, to the manufacturing of them; it is to be fond, not only of hearing and telling, but of having them. Indeed the impulse to tell and to conceal are in this case kindred ones. People in this state of mind feel much one for the communication that is not enveloped in a mystery. Their notion of a pleasant conversation is of telling things that ought not to be told, or of which the less implies that they ought not to be told; their notion of a compliment is to impart something with the entreaty not to let it go further. Our first introduction to this form of confidence is at once flattering and embarrassing. Our honor and discretion are appealed to with a trust and engaging reliance of which it is anxious work to show ourselves worthy. No doubt gossip gains a great deal in excitement when thus imparted, but in time it becomes a harassment to a tender conscience, which can not for the life of it recall which was particular and which general information, and fears lest what was confided under oaths of secrecy should be let out. It is aware. But we come in time to the conclusion that the person who tells his secret from no necessity, but only to amuse himself at the time, can not thus throw the onus of keeping it on our shoulders. He has no right to expect from us more prudence than he has shown; while a further experience makes it apparent that our friend had only one notion of a téte-à-tête—an opportunity for telling a secret. A vast number of secrets are current in society in this short-lived species of circulation. Nor does it do to call it a secret no longer. It is a very fair secret, as the world goes, so long as it is not discussed between the first two who hear it—so long as the person mainly concerned does not know that it is known. This is the real standing of many religiously kept secrets.

Secrets themselves vary very much in their keeping power. There are secrets which there is no temptation to tell, from the almost total lack of certain popular qualities; there are others so universally interesting or curious, or so congenial to both tellers and hearers, that they have no chance of being kept. Nobody could have kept the secret of Midas's ears. A slave has the chance of keeping it not, but if he had waited, the monarch's wisest and most ancient councilors would have whispered it, not to the world, but to each other, under the excuse that it was an affair of state; and if these had got no hint of the wonder, the owner of the ears would have told it himself. In the case of these peculiarities that can not be borne alone. Even if the perruquier did his part to a miracle, the secret of a wig would scarcely keep itself. Wherever a prominent form of curiosity is stimulated, it always gains its end. Thus no matrimonial engagement is ever a secret, even though it is often the case that the principal parties try to keep it one. The secret that is kept best is what people don't care to hear; and even here the possessor has to be blab, from resentment at the neglect of his mystery.

There are two seasons of peril for an important secret—its birth and its maturity. Nobody is a grown old and so familiar that the mum's other thoughts have adapted themselves to it. To Quin-tus gives it a place in the scheme where a secret is of a nature to affect some person's life, most men would not remember beyond their own, and so common obligations to secrecy. After a lapse of time the substance of the secret will remain upon the mind, but how came by it will be forgotten. There are secrets, we know, that never pass the lips of the possessor. There are people with strength of character, or with so many secrets that habit enables them to live a long life and make no sign of a continually gnawing anxiety. At the best, this is anguge which we would not envy those who occupy the position. Something about a man is always sure for a mystery. It may be only his manner, if the secret has no guilt in it. Some of the most sad, caused by some personal fault, the mischief of wrongdoing is indefinitely aggravated by absolute secrecy silence. Husbands and wives have their secrets which they seem to have no temptation to tell, and which separate them from their confidence. Even those men whose life is one system of shams and false pretense. Nothing can look what it is to one of these men guarding some secret. His own mind becomes so fixed on the thought of preserving a secret which is life and death, that it comes at last to be himself against the world—the world unconscious and thing outside his own consciousness. A selfish secret is the worst of all. We read of conspirators and national assassins. We, also, read of the best secrets in the spirit of the salutory impostor, and with a patient vigilance which no temptation or surprise can betray. It is wise to keep secrets, and the most remorseless when their time comes. Many secrets are well kept because there is no form of words at hand to tell them. The whereof one can slip out too naturally is the easiest narrative, others are instances even in thought. The complicated ones and explanations they would involve. Secrets that are nice to tell have no chance against these. For their nonce secrets very fashionable and very dear heart die untold. The story is interesting, and, on some points, tempting to revive; but it would require too much and is not pleasant to set it attractively before the hearer.

The faithful keeper of a secret is not one who thinks of it always, but one who has it in his own nature, and, for certain purposes, can forget it. Secrets may be told; and with such, an innocent secret is safest.

If a man has a weighty secret, it is superfluous to say that he should not tell it to his friends. But if he is not equal to the burden, or if, on other grounds, a confidant is needed, it is not well to fix upon a person because he is a friend. He is the most likely of all to blurt out your secret, from mere ignorance of the art of talking. The silent man has nothing to care for, and so very frequently has but this is no guarantee when he finds himself in the novel position of having something which he would like to say and which he would like others to hear. People are not taciturn from discretion. A natural easy habit of talking is the best one for a secret. A good talker knows how to divert suspicion, and to give the conversation the direction he pleases. Persons naturally silent seldom know the right thing to say in an emergency. Neither must a secret ever be told to a person who would look down upon it. Full half the breaches of confidence are perpetrated in mere disdain. Thus husbands and wives betray each other's secrets. The wife tells what she imagines will be a fashionable one, as she does not realize its importance. The husband betrays his wife and her friends to his familiars, "on many contempt of women's petty mysteries. The only safe confidant—apart from high personal qualities—is one with some community of interest in the affair itself.

RECOLLECTION.

REMEMBER me when long, long years have fled,
When all this past appears a shadowy dream:
Let me not then be cheated by the stream
Of memory, unwept, forgotten, dead!

Remember me, if far in other lands
When you can look no longer on my face;
Do not forget me now or long ere change
In eloping other, perchance stronger, hands.

Remember me, if you should win their love,
Your life be blessed with a happy love;
Remember then my pa ns were once your bliss;
They will ease be now—blind, time will prove.

Remember me, if sickness rack your frame,
If none can cool you; feverish, aching brow;
Think I would soothe you, were I near, as now,
And lull you with deeds of your name.

Remember me when, smiling, you bestow
A sunny glance on other eyes that shine;
Remember, once their smiles were only mine,
And ponder, was it well to bid — go?

Remember me, if grim should come to shroud
Your life in the dark mystery of woe;
If so-called "friends" should pass you by, and lo!
You find yourself alone — all that word—

Remember me, and then oh throbbing heart
Come back and call me to my place of rest;
My old, old home of quiet—on your breast—
And having come, we two will never part.

WRECKED.

"IT is an awful night!" I said, shuddering all over, as I heard the roar of the surf, the hideous wailing of the wind, and the dash of the rain against the window. We lived on the Cape coast, in the prettiest village ever crafted on its silvery sands, and lulled in the closest sunshine—thrice blessed because of the fearful storms that darkened our horizon at times. My husband was out in the storm; he was the favorite physician in the village, because he was skillful, never pressed for his pay, and endured many nights and other hardships like a good-natured hero.

I could not go to rest this terrible night while my husband was out. He was always my Angus, though he was "the Doctor" to many others. I sat cowering over the fire, with my infant nestled in my lap and the cradle near piece of babyhood, wailing and longing for my husband. My heart was sinking with fear. I was sorry that he was a physician. He was not a farmer, a teacher, a clerk, a tradesman, or a mechanic, he might have been in his bed now, and so I vainly regretted that what might have been was not. Very foolish I was, like many others. At last I heard his steps, and the next door opened. I could hear him bless us, as it seemed, and with difficulty he shut the door. He came up stairs, and exclaimed, "Not in bed, Mattie? It is time—midnight. Lay that little bed away, and make haste after him. You should have been asleep two hours ago."

Angus spoke cheerfully, but there was a tremor in his voice, as if he were frightened, and did not wish me to know it. I locked up at his face. It looked pale, I fancied.

"What is it, Angus?" said I.

"What is it? why, the hardest storm that ever blew great guns from the sea!"

"But something troubles you, Angus. Is old Mrs. Pratt going to die?"

"No, not for these a hundred years old. Make haste, Mattie, and go to bed. Dick will wake and cry presently, and the storm is bad enough without his screaming."

I still looked into his pale face, and at that moment a dreadful sound struck my ear. Angus started to his feet.

"You heard it," said he.

It was the cannon fired by driving on the breakers, almost at our very doors; for we lived close to the sea, and on the most dangerous part of the coast.

"I see how it is. A ship of lightning just has come in," said Angus. "She was driving right on the rocks. Go to bed, Mattie, dear, and I will call Jenny, and go down to Higgins and Dort, and see if any thing can be done."

Higgins and Dort were fishermen, and had boats, and ropes, and all those many things that might be needed in such a time as this.

"Angus," said I, "don't ask me to go to bed. Let me stay with you. Poor creatures are in peril? Can I forget that you might be on board that ship?"

My husband looked at me. I was much nerved again put on his storm garments, and silently kissing me and the baby, he went out. Again the booming gun sounded. It was much nearer now, or else the roar of the storm was somewhat hushed. I warmed some milk for my baby, for I knew I was too much excited to nurse him. He would be hungry, and I fed him. He slept again, and I tried to look out into the pitchy darkness. I heard only the roar and dash of the storm. All is over with the ship, said I to myself. I waited for my husband, and for the morning, and longed to hear again the sound of the gun. I waited in vain for all. The morning seemed indefinitely postponed. It was early autumn, and the weather, though calm, would not be fatal to the poor sailors, on the cold often is on our terrible snow. Day dawned at last, and when it was quite light I examined the beach with my husband's spy-glass. After a time I made out the ship, wedged in among the rocks, and the waves rising like hills and mountains over and against her. Meanwhile my husband and others were on the shore. I should have been with them but for my baby.

A barrel was sent ashore with a line wedged in at the bung-hole; when this was secured, a heavier rope fastened to the line and drawn ashore by means of it. Such matters were drawn away from the breakers as much as possible, and firmly secured. One by one the men ventured upon this support. All came safely to the shore but the captain. He was the last to leave the ship, and by some means he lost, or never gained, the support of the hawser, and his lifeless body was thrown ashore at some distance from the point where the men were received. A young man, who had been the last to leave the ship before the captain, was passing to and fro on the beach in an agony of anxiety, when the body was thrown high upon the sand, almost at his feet. With a will ery he seized upon what had been a fine, a few minutes before, the animated master and preserver of those all. My husband was beside him. A fisherman brought a piece of sail, and they laid the body on it, and four men bore it to our house. The young man had given some directions to the sailors, and then followed the sad cortège. It was a miserable end of my suspense, but I was relieved. The rescued crew were sent on to Plymouth, after they had been provided with dry clothing and breakfast by the villagers, who supplied their wants with great kindness, and afterward gathered up their coffee and oranges, as they came ashore, with as much diligence as if they had been a bill of sale of the cargo.

A strange feeling thrilled through my heart as they brought the captain of the Atlas to our house. I did not feel as if a corpse were being borne over our threshold.

"Angus," said I, "he is not dead."

"He is dead, my dear," said my husband, solemnly, at the same time drawing me away from the body.

The men placed their burden gently on the floor, and then they lingered, as if loth to leave.

"His friends—and I can do all for him," said Angus, very thankfully; "and, Higgins, you and Dort must go and see if you can't save some of the cargo that will be driving ashore. They will call in upstairs or Arabs if it is appropriated, as the cargo of the Negress. Off you go!"

"Men don't consider it stealing to pick up a bag of coffee or a box of oranges on the sea-shore," said Higgins. "They would not call it stealing to offer a single orange out of a shop for their right hands."

"I know," said Angus; "but you must tell them that sometimes I have that cargo."

"We will see to it," said Dort, and then they all went away.

The young man had held his hand on the captain's heart, in the vain hope to discover warmth or motion.

"Angus," said I, "will you not put him in my bed? There is a fire in my room, and we must try to bring him to life; I am sure he is not dead."

Angus smiled pityingly at patience of my unreasonable particularity; but he made a very thorough examination of the body, but failed to discover any signs of life. Then he turned to me, and said,

"My dear, I will do every thing just as if I were sure that he was alive as I am, but he is dead."

He called John, and assisted by the young man, whose name was Wilson, they carried the captain up to my room, where they put all his clothes, and laid him in my bed. Two women came in. I gave my little Richard to one, and employed the other in preparing the breakfast; and then Angus left, with my husband and Mr. Wilson, to the endeavor to resuscitate the drowned man.

We heard the wind on pillows at the back of the bed, and let the legs and feet lie over the front side of the bed in a pail of warm water. I had flannel cloths on the chest and stomach, which were of hot water, or hot vinegar, or hot spirits, for I used all in turn, and Angus and Mr. Wilson and John rubbed with the opposite sides of the body. At last I felt sure the captain was alive, and I was impatient that I could not make Angus believe it too.

"My poor Mattie," said he, "the wish is father to the thought."

Mr. Wilson hardly spoke; he worked incessantly, never stopping to take any thing but some wine and water, when he was nearly fainting with exhaustion. Some days of the time he was rubbing the body; again he was inflating the lungs with the bellows; and then he was fomenting with the warm flannels and hot water. At the end of seven he sat down, and seemed despairing. He sat with his face buried in his hands, and then he rose, and flung himself on the bed beside the body. He clasped the cold form to his bosom, and exclaimed:

"Oh, my friend! how can I ever tell Annie and Lizzie that I have come to you from?"

Then he wept long and bitterly. My husband led him out of the room.

"It is all over, Mr. Wilson," said Angus. "Take a morsel of food, and go to bed; you are worn out; you will be ill next."

While they were gone out I examined, probably for the fiftieth time, the space over the heart. There was a scarcely perceptible motion, but a very perceptible. I ran down stairs to tell my husband. He was standing by Mr. Wilson, whose arms hung beside him as if they were dead.

"There is warmth about the heart," I cried.

Wilson sprang to his feet as if he had been electrified. My husband looked at me with a gentle reproach, as much as to say, "Your hope is false and foolish;" but he did not speak, and we went up stairs. He examined the heart with his hand and his ear, and then bade Mr. Wilson do the same, saying, "There is life!"

Hope seemed to have animated Wilson with a new life, but my husband would not allow him to do any thing.

"If you will take some toast and wine, then you may work again, Mr. Wilson," said Angus.

I brought the food, and the young man ate, and then they again began their labor of love. The warmth at the heart increased, and then there was a faint fluttering, and in an hour more we were rewarded by the first struggling breath of our patient.

I never saw such joy as that of the young man when he knew that his friend was alive. Soon he was breathing steadily. He was not as much bruised as we had supposed at first, and he seemed strangely well when he became conscious. He took a cup of hot wine and water, and said:

"Let me go to sleep, Wilson, and I will wake as good as new. All hands are safe, you say, and I can afford to turn in and sleep till to-morrow or next day."

He smiled a good-natured, happy smile, and went to sleep.

"Now, Mr. Wilson," said I, "can't you follow such a good example?"

He lay down on a couch in the room with his captain, and I went away to my baby, as happy as I could be. Why can not we be as happy when all our friends are alive and well, and saved from the endurance of sorrow, day after day, as when a stranger is rescued from death! How near and dear these strangers seemed to us, though we had known them not yet a day! We sent word to Higgins that the captain was alive, and he and Burt came up, and with a glory shook hands with us, seeming afraid to speak above their breath, lest they should awaken the sleepers. They spread the news, and the next morning a great many came to offer their congratulations.

The captain tried to rise early, but his head failed him.

"The more haste the worse speed," said he. "I meant to see home and wife to-day, but they will keep till to-morrow."

And he quietly laid his head back on his pillow.

"You are a poet of a man," said my husband. "I expected you would be down on your luck, and could, because you could not go home the day after you were drowned."

"I am very thankful for the chance of going home at all. All seemed so near, as if I were at my door when the storm struck us. But as I can't go to-day, the next best thing is to go to sleep."

We left him to the sleep he so much coveted, and went down to the parlor with Mr. Wilson, who had very little of the captain's patience—I suppose because he had not been drowned.

"You have been very kind, my friend," said he, "and before I leave you I wish to say a few words thing about myself. Three days ago I was going home with a heart full of hope. Now my hopes are gone, or indefinitely postponed: for I am happier than when I was hopeful. If I had been left to the terrible sorrow of going home with Captain Martell's body ahead of his living, dear wife, I think I should have known trouble.

"Two years ago I begged my mother to let me go to sea. She is a widow, and I am her only son. She was not willing that I should be a sailor, but finding that I could not be happy at home, she consented to consult Captain Martell about me, and take his advice. Of course he advised her to subscribe to fate, and took me on his ever to the first voyage was to China in the good ship Midas, that is beating herself to pieces out there on the rocks. We had a fine voyage, and came home laden with tea and silks. I was twenty years old when we reached home. I staid at the captain's house a day and night before I left for my own home, which is some distance from Plymouth. On this visit, at my captain's, I first saw his wife's sister, Annie Lawrence. I left my heart to the shore that day. She was a lady, and her father was wealthy, and she had many suitors. She was eighteen years old, and had not her heart against the sea.

"I will never marry a sailor, though he were captain of a golden ship," said Annie. "I would rather marry an apothecary, and live at the back of the shop, and smell assafœtida all the time."

Captain Martell laughed. "I remember," said he, "my wife said the same; but she got over her prejudices when she found that I could not be coaxed or driven."

"My mother had a good property, and she put half of it in my hands to make ventures in our ship, and for a year past I have been trading with Captain Martell to the West Indies, and adding to my capital very rapidly. Just before our last voyage I felt determined to have a last word with Annie across the sea. She knew very well that I loved her better than all the world, though I had never told her so.

"You may think it strange that I should tell you all this, but you seem just as if you were my brother and sister. The night before we sailed was a lovely summer evening, and Captain Martell and his wife, Annie and I were sitting in an arbor in the garden; for though the house is close to the town, they have a pretty garden. We were all very merry, probably because we were not sailing.

"Mrs. Martell seemed to know that I wished to speak to Annie, and she drew her husband away, and left us alone.

"'Annie,' said I, 'are you in earnest when you say you will never marry a man who goes to sea?'

"'I am,' said she.

"'You know, Annie,' said I, 'that I am now second mate of Captain Martell's ship, and that when I am twenty-one, which will be next month, I shall be first mate.'

"'Is that any thing to me?' said she, almost harshly.

"'Annie,' said I, 'I love you, and if you have any regard for me, it is something to you.'

"She buried her face in her handkerchief, and wept passionately, terribly.

"'Oh, Ralph,' she said, 'you don't know how miserable I am! I have every thing to make me happy, people say, but I am miserable about the sea. I was terrified about Captain Martell before I knew you, but since I came to be your friend—'

"'To love me, Annie,' said I; 'do say that.'

"'Well, ever since the first day I saw you, and thought of your going on the baleful, treacherous ocean, I have dreamed about you every week. I verily believe. And I have always dreamed that you were wrecked, cast away on some dreadful breakers, and always you and Captain Martell were drowned. I have seen your bruised and bleeding bodies on the rocks and sands, and beaten about among the breakers, full fifty times. Oh, why would love a sailor, if it were possible to avoid it? Oh, if you could escape from the sea! But you can not. Captain Martell is your Fate; he will never leave the sea, and you will never leave him; and the end will be as I have seen it in my dreadful dreams so many times. And then what will become of Lizzie and me?'

"Again she wept passionately.

"'But, Annie, will you marry me if I leave the sea?' I must go this voyage.'

"'You will never return alive,' said she; 'you and Captain Martell will be drowned. I saw you both last night, wrecked and cast ashore dead.'

"'Annie,' said I, 'if I return alive from this voyage will you marry me?'

"Her only reply was, that if we made the voyage we would both be drowned.

"I left her the next day in a great sorrow, and now I am going back to her penniless, for all my property was in the ship. How can I marry and be dependent on my wife?

"It is better than being wrecked and drowned besides," said Angus.

"Better, but it is not well," said Ralph Wilson.

In the afternoon Captain Martell was able to get up and be dressed. In the evening he came down stairs.

"I shall be as good as new to-morrow," said he. "I wonder if the people here will gather the pieces of my poor Midas; if they do, before I am gone for me big enough to make a cane. There is one comfort—we were insured, vessel and cargo."

"Insured!" exclaimed Ralph Wilson, "vessel and cargo?"

"Exactly. I should not have insured our cargo, but Annie begged me to do it; she said you would be ruined if we were wrecked, and that it would be hard for a young man to lose an independence just as he had gained it."

"Then she did not quite believe that I would be drowned," said Wilson, laughing.

The next day Captain Martell and Ralph Wilson went home. Some weeks after my husband received a letter from Mr. Wilson. I give an extract:

"I am married to my dearest Annie. Captain Martell said I was going into business, and he would give me the wholesale traders in coffee, tea, tropical fruits, etc. I thought Annie ought to give up the sea, and she promises me to give up dreaming.

"I wish you could have been at the wedding, but I have that lucky coral on which you bought, and would not set it home, so you did not get an invitation. Next summer we shall come to see you, and you must do the same. In the meanwhile, you will accept our love and the assurance of our deepest gratitude, without which we should have been no fee. You are four of the happiest people in the world, and you were the means of our happiness."

Besides this letter, Angus received many Christmas gifts from our friends; and from that time to this they have visited us every summer, and we have visited them every winter.

WHAT THE CYCLONE DID AT MASULIPATAM.

MAN has done something toward replenishing the earth, but shamefully little as yet toward subduing it. Where he has it pretty well under control, he is too apt to make it a hell upon earth for those who come after. Thus, for instance, in the south of France people have only just found out that our ancestors were right in cutting down all the woods, and so subject their posterity to destructive floods and torrents which come heavily. That's the way man too often deals with the earth where he can manage it—leaves it like an old cellar-playground in Vanity Fair, at best kept, some time or other, to know the law of storms so well as to foresee them, and so to be forearmed. We shall do much more than we have yet done to go so far the next twenty years at the present rate of discovery.

Nature's warning in the form of the late great cyclones in India. If the telegraph clerks at Kedgeree, by the Hooghly mouth, had sent on word to Calcutta the moment they saw the first waves of the European ships and hundreds of poor craft might have been saved. But it was not their business to keep anything of the kind in mind, and there was no one to calculate the path of the cyclone (as calculable, they say, as the path of a comet), and its nature returning in the form of a tornado inland. Again, at Masulipatam, some forty-five thousand people were living mostly on land below the waterline, not of the sea, but of a river. Here, any extraordinary tide must wash over, packed in mudhouses, to the ground. The brown cob-huts are palaces in the swell; no protection. The calamity came. One great wave rushed over the town on the night of last Ash Sunday—and more than seven out of ten thousand people were drowned, and a little heap of wet mud marked the position of four houses out of five. Seven days after the event, and before even the magistrates, the moonsiffs were indefatigable; the poor pecns (policemen), two-thirds of whom had perished, stood by the magistrates and kept society together; and the native regiment quartered near the place, which lost sixty rank and file and nearly their full complement of wives and children, is described as having "behaved admirably."

We can read enough about Calcutta in the papers; this calamity to Southern India has met with less noise; but the destruction is relatively more terrible; and our accounts are more from the spot, so that it will be our fault if they are not interesting.

The 31st of October was a bright, cool day, refreshing after the great heat and long drouth from which the district had been suffering. Next day, light misty rain set in, and by 9 P.M. the wind began to drive (writes one) I was strongly reminded of some of our damp, warm autumn days at home. To avoid evening dinner, for which I had no taste, I went to bed early, and was awakened by a sound like a heavy gun at 2 A.M. I looked at my watch, and found it was 2 A.M. the barometer fell rapidly, and the wind passed round by north to due east, blowing furiously. The magistrate and his assistant determined to sit up and "see it out;" but they had not sat long when, between nine and ten P.M., a native servant rushed in, crying in broken English, "Sea come over us—sea come over us!" "Nonsense," cried the Englishmen; "get along with you!" But they are persuaded to go to the veranda, and there, true enough, the water is already surging up to the godown (cotter verandah); several natives come up swimming; and the first act of the magistrate is to hail his two or three half-drowned creatures, and to set a lamp as a beacon to others. In this way ten or twelve are saved; and then the water gets into the house, the servants run for dear life, and block up the staircase; and the whole party, having first cut off, go into the upper room; natives praying, crying, and then sleeping. Englishmen getting into a sheltered corner, and then dozing off, too, their sheer exhaustion, to wake just before dawn and find themselves wet through, while the lightning is flashing over their heads, the roof having been torn off, fortunately in one piece, while they were asleep. What a scene of ruin and devastation! nearly three feet of water still over the low ground; corpses every where; men and bullocks washed into verandas, and lying about promiscuously (corpses and even gentleman's house); the town nowhere; here and there a burnt brick or thumb house standing (mostly roofless) amidst the waste. Not a tree spared, except those which (like some palms) yield to the blast. What is to be done is all but that wave spread so far that a lot of arrack casks were found six miles inland, and was so strong that it filled up one of the pits of a minor lock-gates and lashed it on a strongly-built house, crushing it like a nutshell. The sepoys' lines were swept down like cardhouses; the cattle were woefully shaken; the rice in store all damaged, so that every one had to be set to work to crush the husk off the paddy (rice on the bush), and so on. The people were fortunately, and one of the things most urgently called for from head-quarters was a supply of pestles and mortars, that all hands might be kept employed. Then the wells were all sanded up, or spoiled with salt-water; only one fit to drink from in the whole place. The Trooper was wrecked; all native records and part of the English ditto as were on the lower shelves destroyed; and among the laughable incidents, "the whole stock of stamps, official and postage, swept away;" a fresh supply "urgently requested." And then, "the necessity" my new and permanents was found, five days after, full a mile off." Sad stories of European suffering during that wild night: sailors' wives, in the fate of the little steamer at Mr. Scharey's Church Mission School for native girls—thirty-five drowned out of fifty. One poor lady, writing, says, "I shall only survive a day," and tells how she and hers "passed a night of terror, with three feet water in the highest rooms, huddled together on the house-board, wet (for the roof fell off), and the children choking all the time with whooping-cough." In every case Europeans and Christians have lost all their clothes and personal effects—no light loss, we can readily understand, for people have to subsist in official life. Every thing in India, too, is one hundred per cent. at least above its English price. Yet there is no sign of whining from any but the destitute. One of the finest gentlemen from up-country, where they had only wind—though that was bad enough, marking its track, writes a sad account of a Gentleman of a Collector's beveled crops, and cattle killed by falling trees or buildings—finds time to groan over "our vegetables which were perfectly ripe, as well, and are not just spoiled;" and "our custard-apples, which are stripped of their fruit and most of their leaves!" and "the fine Mango-tope," which he says "received some injury, we have not yet heard what." These lucky men are often accused by old Indians of a little want of the true creature-comfort, and surely the reverent writer of the above seems to justify the accusation. Here are we talk of cathedrages and custard-apples, while one-fifth of the people of the Kistna district are dead and four-fifths famishing, where the thirty-five thousand of Masulipatam who must starve but for the immediate government help. They get cooked rice now, and are paid for digging the dead, and have begun to use up the fallen trees for rebuilding their huts; so that, for the present, they manage to hold out. Everybody else is in debt, for the crops under the whole sea-board, soaked with brine, will never grow again.

Naturally by the first great wash was coolies to bury or burn the dead, to unstop the wells, etc. These were soon sent in by the different collectors of the country. The cholera preceded as terrible (one writer says he rowed up the river; "it was full of corpses"). Fortunately in winter, but the commissioner of Board to "take proper measures." Of course they sent tents, disinfectants, food, etc., freighting a steamer with them (literally at hand); quinine, too, to remit taxes, and relax "jungle conservancy laws." The collector, who had written for leave to spend thirty thousand rupees, and who apologizes for sending his rough draft, being fairly beat after five hours hard work in the open air, is empowered to do "whatever he may consider best for him." Immense power these civilians have. A young fellow not seven years from college is at once judge, sheriff and chancellor of the exchequer over a tract as large as Devon. It is an ugly name, "Collector," and often a very unlucky one; but not always, but they who answer to it have, on the whole, always nobly sustained the English character for uprightness, and self-restraint, and perfect incorruptibility.

It took twelve days to clear away the worst of the shells, and then the work of burying men and cattle. The immediate neighborhood could not help much; for the storm was felt full twenty miles inland. At Guddyr (or Gudiwar) the whole police force was killed: further off, in a navvies' village connected with the Kistna anicut works, not a house was left standing. A resident in Nursapur, going into Masulipatam to inquire after some friends, finds the village of Kottha Sivaby entirely swept away. Of a large choultry, where travelers had rested for years, nothing was left but two strong posts with their cross beam, by clinging to which the only two persons who escaped out of all the inhabitants were saved. A mango-tope of heavy thick walls of the choultry had been driven more than a hundred yards by the force of the water. A hundred trees were found broken across within half an acre; and where they were still standing further inland, the wood was hanging in them as nine feet from the ground. Cocoa-nut trees there are, as Enfield, marvelous escape; men swept along for miles, and then landed on trees, to which they were able to cling; human left standing because they were to leeward of some larger building which gave way. On the water, too, the rain was great. Boats, coasting and fishing, no grief in great numbers; of three ships that were in the harbor, two—an Arab and a French ship—broke their moorings, and drove ashore; the third, an English brig, rode out the gale.

The Masulipatam people are as helpless as the Lancashire mill-hands. Well, we mustn't become politics!; we have seen what a reviving storm can do along the same demands; enough to let us be thankful that there are no cyclones here; and that our sea-walls too are a tolerable protection against such "slight ebbs" as that of which Jean Angus spoke so sweetly; and which we suppose are due to a fit of sudden pain on the moon's part, or to the sea forgetting for a moment its "Thus far shalt thou go, and no further."

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

HOW TO LEARN TO SPEAK IRISH.—Put a three-cornered bit of the blackest peat you can find in your mouth, and it will moistened with whisky that has never seen "the ugly eye of a gauger." Our Hibernian readers will explain this among themselves.

WANTED.

A pair of spectacles to suit the eyes of potatoes.

The club with which an idea struck the poet.

A stick to measure narrow escapes.

The identical hook and line with which an angler caught a cold.

An umbrella used in the reign of tyrants.

ADVICE TO BACHELORS.—How to get rid of your surplus cash. Marry a small "widdy" with a large family.

SOMETHING THAT TICKLES THE "FANCY."—A trotting-match.

THE WORST ORGAN-GRINDER.—A hollow tooth that plays the deuce.

PLEASANT.—To fall in with a pretty girl at a skating frolic.

A YANKEE has invented a machine for grating people's feelings.

Why is a petroleum dealer like an epicure?—Because he lives on the fat of the land.

A one-legged miller is at once a miller and hopper.

Why is a superfluity like a retired waiter?—Because it's an extra.

"Are you fond of novels?" said Mrs. Jones. "Very," responded the interrogated gentleman, who wished to be thought by the lady's daughter a boy of the period. "Have you ever read," continued the inquisitive lady, "Thomas's Year?" "No, madam," said Jones, "I never read so many in all my life."

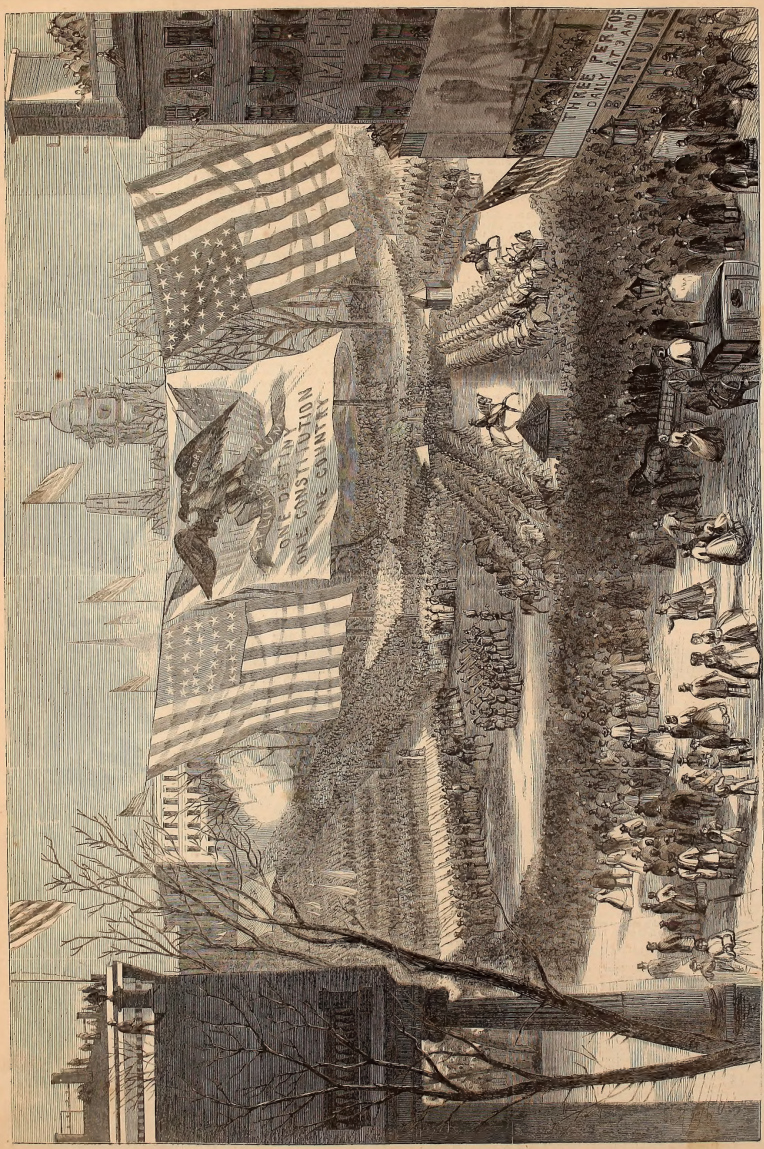
Why is friendship like an addiction to ardent spirits?—Because it conduces to hand-shaking.

OVERTITULATION.—A coroner's jury in Wales returned as a verdict that the deceased "died by the visitation of God," that "she died from congestion of the brain, caused by hydrophobia."

GRIEF.—A young lady being told that her lover was suddenly killed, exclaimed, "Oh, that splendid gold watch and ring! Will he have it? I may remember him and cherish his dear memory."

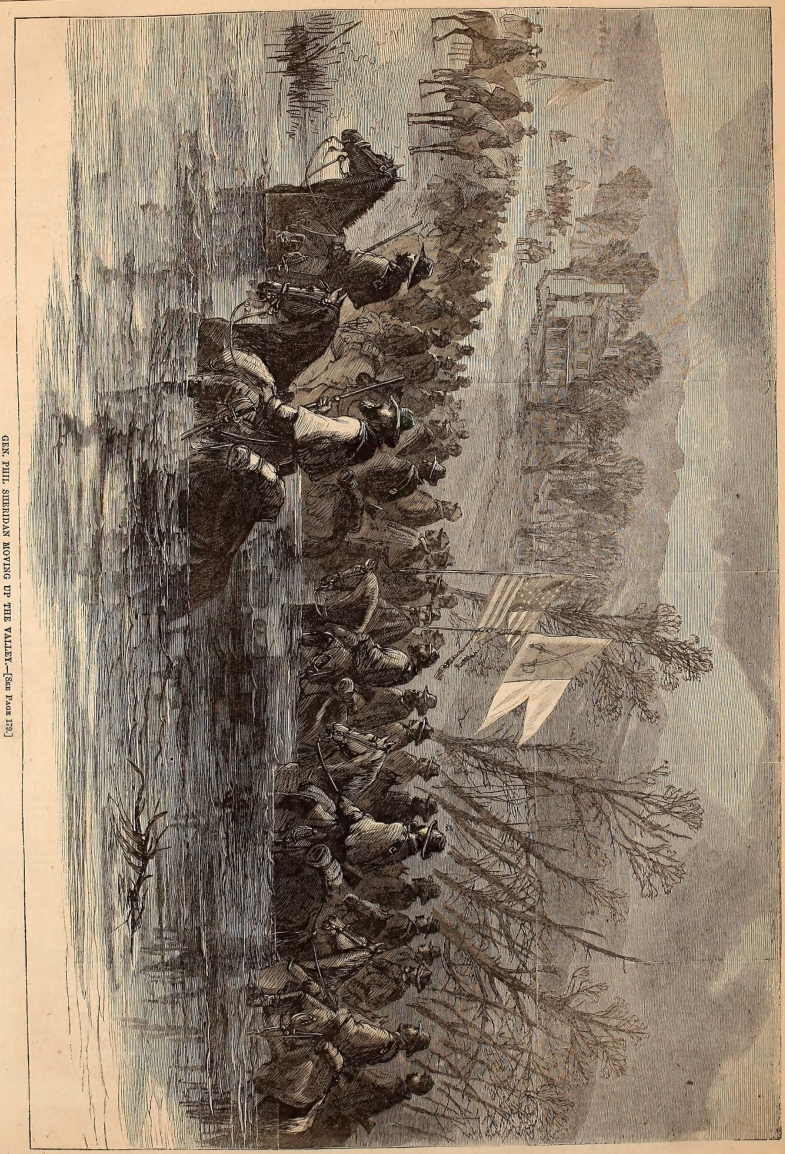
WANTED BY A BACHELOR JEWELER.—A wife with a neck of pearl, teeth of ivory, hair of jet, a golden hair, a silvery tongue, and a perfect jewel as a temper.

WIDOW PARTINGTON has recently paid a visit to the menagerie, and has written her experience for the benefit of whom it may concern: "You see, my dears (that's her way of writing), I've seen all the world in my time (husband), I never was in such a Noah's ark of a place before, and I'm thankful for the many mercies and blessings vouchsafed. That was the elephant, with his orful long proboscis, and that was the camel, a queer plan, but wisely ordered to him: and the jaguier, or South American tiger, a tricky animal; and the cockatoo, a new bird altogether, and the varnish; and the painter, that was continually brushing it up, and the rest of the animiles, and the which's behind enclosed at a school where they taught manners; and the hostrich, a queer bird indeed, for the hostrich feather to buy, but the price was reddiculus; and the four performing dogs, which I thought the cleverest of the cage tew. Oh, it was a remarkable expedition of the works of nature, and I'm glad I went, for I've seen sumthing perfectly that we are all frightfully and wonderfully made!"



Two gentlemen having a difference, one went to the other's door early in the morning and cried "Scoundrel!" upon it. The other called upon his neighbor, and was followed by a servant that his master was not at home, but if he had any thing to say he might leave it with him. "Why, then," said the gentleman, "tell your master that I only wished to return your master's visit, as he left his card at my door this morning."

DOGGOL.—"This hyar babe's got the small-pox; and I ain't posted up on patisics. We must approach this case by system, Sam Slocum. You give this Rile cure this draught. That'll send him into fits. Then send for me. I'm a steamer on fits."



Professional thieves are notoriously brave, hence the proverbial expression, "Thick as thieves."

Two clergymen were conversing together, when one remarked that he could not tell what he found so difficult to preach twice on a Sunday. "Well," said the other, "I always find, when I preach twice, I repeat myself."

It is always exceedingly pleasant to be generous, but very wearisome to pay debts.

THE TRIUMPH IN NEW YORK—THE PROCESSION PASSING AROUND THE SOUTH END OF THE PARK.—[See Page Page.]

GEN. PHIL SHERIDAN MOVING UP THE VALLEY.—[See Page 179.]

MARCH MUSINGS.

THE March wind blows across the sea,
And through the pine-trees o'er my head
Its voice is as the voices dead.
What are the words it speaks to me?

Hard to define: for as it sweeps
Through the thick branches on its way,
The echoes quickened by its sway
Are heard by me as one who sleeps.

Heard as the memories that wake
From their long rest when, in an hour
Least marked, we find a faded flower,
And straightway all the fetters break

That bound the past in silence. So
Floats back the soul upon that stream
Whose current passes as a dream,
Whose waters all so stilly flow.

The wild March wind smites on my face
With stinging strength; and yet the past
Rises so surely and so fast
That I scarce feel it for a space.

What says the March wind? Does it speak
Of its work done a year ago,
When eyes that erst so sweetly shone
With love's light darkened as the weak

Last sigh of life was swept away,
By the cold March blast which had been Charged with arctic chills all keen,
Sealing her doom ere break of day?

In vain, in vain the sunny South,
In vain the work of love and care,
Though love grew maddened with despair
To touch with life the rose-bud mouth.

IN THE UNTRODDEN WAYS.

My brother Willie and I were orphans. There was a family of us once—six children, boys and girls equally divided. We lived, with our parents, in an old house in the country, and had no neighbors. A desolate place every body thought it, and I suppose it was so, but I loved it from its being the only home I had ever known, and full of old associations. I'm afraid it was an unwholesome place. It was nestled down deep amidst trees and great wallowing meadows—splendid evergreens, and so shady in summer; but it is true that they did hold the damp dreadfully; from some of the wide doors we could look out over hazy meadows which we used to amuse ourselves when it was too wet to go out, by doing so, and plucking the leaves and blossoms. There was, too, from habitation to roof, was hidden by creepers, ivy, and honey-suckle, and roses, all growing so thick that in summer they were put perfectly into a great straggling sprays used to wave across them, and up above the line of the roof cornices. The walls in summer time rose and the woodbine were! clustering in long trailing masses about the walls, and hanging over the porch, and making shelter for dozens of sparrows' nests. There were, too, great bowery elms and ashes, and one huge walnut-tree almost leaned against the house, overhanging a part of it, built as a lodge; beautiful it looked; but in wet weather, and ours was a very wet part of the country, the perpetual drip, drip of it and the chimbers had a dreary sound; and in the autumn the leaves used to choke up the gutters, and make such floods through the ceilings. Almost all the rooms were stained by these overflows, and when I was a little child, and used to wake early, the shadowings of the sparrows in the grassery about the window often woke me at daylight—for when I was ill, which was not unfrequently the case, I used to lie in my little bed and count the rings and images in those stains. Things laid by for a while got mildewed and mouldy, and some of the rooms, the upstairs ones, the wallcloths peeled off the north, where the laurels and rhododendrons—and rhododendrons!—grew close against the walls. I was, I say, sadly dark and cold, and damp, as damp that the paper used to peel off the walls. The garden and lawn, too, were lovely shady places; but I suppose there may have been somewhat too much grown, for the flowers never throve there, and the grass was nearly always soppy, and the walks wet and moss-grown.

Whether this had any thing to do with it or not —sometimes I think it may have, though I don't see as if it were treason against the dear old place to say so—we certainly were not a healthy family, nor yet a long-lived one.

My father farmed his land himself; it gave him something to do, he said, and, indeed, if he had not had that, I don't think he would have had any thing. I suppose he could not have been called an energetic man; but he was a kind man as ever was, dear father, and never teased or talked much about him, but let things take their course. He did not make much of the farming, and he had enough to live upon comfortably, it did not so much signify. The land was wet and heavy, and wanted such a lot of draining, and the hedges and banks were so thick and high, they took up a deal of space and kept the air and sunshine off the fields. We did not know these things then in our part of the country, and it's only since I have lived where I do now that I've learned them. There was generally something the matter with the sheep or the cattle, or the potatoes got the disease, or the hay heated, or the rats got on board that they ate up half the corn, and the young ducks and chickens too. Farming—at all events it was so with us—is, I do think, a very unsatisfactory sort of thing; though I took great pleasure in it myself in those days, in the poultry-yard especially, and in rearing the calves, only they would die often.

However, as I have said, my dear father never took these things much to heart. So long as he could saunter about, seeing to things, and get a day's shooting now and again, and have his nap after dinner, all went smoothly with him.

My mother was just as easy-going as my father. A pretty, fair woman, I remember her, always delicate, and going about the house, or sitting on her sofa with a shawl; a sweet-looking creature, gentle and placid, but with a great distaste to trouble of any kind, or being put out of her way. S' ...om left the house, summer or winter, and yes...by year she got paler and more fragile. She died when the little cough I always remember her having, got worse, and used to disturb her at night. The few visitors we ever used to advise her seeing a doctor. But she always replied it was nothing, she would be better when the spring came, or the summer, or perhaps in the next season might be that we were coming. They told her they did not think the place agreed with her; it was so damp; but she only smiled, and said, quietly, "Do you think so?" and thought no more about it. We children, too, throve no better than the beasts on the farm; and yet I don't think there was any hereditary disease in the family; I never heard of any, at all events. But we grew up slight and weak, and were always having colds, coughs, and sore-throats, and croup. The quantity of mustard that was used in plasters was enough, and more than enough, to scare, I have served with all the pigs and oxen we ever reared.

Then there came a hard winter. Oh, did I remember it!

My sister Janey, sweet little blue-eyed thing, the image of mamma, got a terrible cough on it, and her chest, and the usual mustard plaster and current-jelly water did no good. She got worse and worse, never playing, never running with Willie, and at last mamma thought that maybe it would be better to send for a doctor. But when the doctor came it was too late. She had inflammation of the lungs, and died next day. The doctor said it was very unwise to let us go as we did all the year round, with bare arms and necks and legs, about in and out of the house. But we had always done so, and mamma thought that nonsense; it made children hardy, she said, so she never would be made. But Janey-boy Roger, the stoutest of us, was taken ill, much in the same way, and before the New Year he went too, and was laid beside Janey. Then mamma grew weaker and weaker, and coughed awfully, and could neither sleep nor eat. Ah me, ah me! it breaks my heart to think of that time.

In a word, she was in a consumption before any body in the house thought there was any thing serious on the matter. She languished, and kept dying and summer, and in the autumn she died. It took my father by surprise, just as all the rest had done before—sudden. He could not and would not believe he was to lose her. He did what I have since noticed many people do when they are about to be bereft of those they love too well to own they must learn to do without them. He took notice of no favorable symptoms, but only of those which were alarming one; he never would go back to remember how much weaker she was than she had been a few months ago. If he saw her sitting up to tea with any appetite, or seemed interested in any thing, she, he considered, showed a real improvement, while the sinking fits, the loss of appetite, the return to food and the sad weary listlessness, were mere accidental and passing states. He never recovered the shock of her death. He grew moody, and silent, broken-down man, and died two years later.

Within the next seven years Lena and Charlie followed, and then I was left alone. And I left alone in the old house, without a near relation, or, I may say, an intimate friend in the world.

You may guess if I loved Willie! He was two years younger than I was, and even while the others lived, we two had been drawn to be like twins to each other. Oh, he was my boy he was! with his soft eyes, and delicate skin, and fine hair, like a child's always. He was not a strong feeder, and used to grieve, and his hands white and transparent, like mamma's. I used to tremble all over if I heard him cough, and often I would creep under the bed-clothes, and make some horrible dream of his being ill, and going; like the rest. Sometimes I used to think to myself, maybe it would be better not to love him quite so much, at all events, it did not suit us. But where to go? How could we two, I, a girl of twenty, Willie but eighteen, leave this, our own place, to which we never been away from since we were born, and go out to seek a home in the wide, wide world? Still, I used to be up at Willie night after night, when he got even an attempt to see if a change might not save him?

One night, when we were sitting alone and silent over the fire—we seldom talked much, for, I suppose, we were both afraid to touch on any thing new or pleasant to talk about, and I was listening to that drip, drip, that I have said was so dreary—I ventured to open the subject. Willie was very feverish head, and put it against my cheek, and held it there, looking into the fire while I spoke.

"Willie, dear, how I love you!"

"It always rains, I think," he said.

"Well, I do believe it rains more here than in most other places. I'm afraid it must be much to be very healthy."

"Oh, there's no harm in rain, if it was only clearer."

"But sometimes I'm afraid there is harm in it, and in the damp. I do think it hasn't agreed with us all."

"Oh, it wasn't that! A place we've been used to all our lives can't agree with us. And if it did, where else could we go to?"

"There's the question. But I do think we ought to try to get a little change."

But Willie wouldn't hear of it then, so the matter dropped for the moment. Poor dear, he hated change or movement, or the sight of strangers, so that I could not find it in my heart to urge him. Besides, I had another reason, a foolish one, perhaps, but still it was so. We had determined together, when we were first left alone in the world, that we should never leave it, in all to each other. We would never marry, nor go out into society, nor be separated for one week, but live and die together.

Now, I thought, perhaps if I press it upon him, he may think I am speaking for myself; that it is I who want change, and another life, and other companionship than his.

And so the time went by, and I could see that my Willie's little strength and spirit were going with it, and in my own mind I resolved something should be done, and ere long what the thing should be.

Willie's godfather lived in Rockminster, which was about nine miles from us, and in a higher and better part of the country. He was a banker there, a kind man, and well to do, and was about the only person who had continued to remember much about us, and take any notice of us. It was not our own fault that more persons did not do so; for when we were left alone, many, even of those we hardly knew, came to us and offered their services, and asked us to their houses. But we were shy and sad, and unused to strangers, and shrunk from them. So these good people, seeing it was no use to wooed, let us alone. But Mr. Heath would not be put off so. He had known my dear father when they were both boys, and, as my position with regard to Willie made him feel that he had a duty and a right as respected him. Still, though he came to see us as often as he could, and was anxious that Willie should take some occupation that would draw him into a more active sphere of life, and bring him in contact with more people, he, in the face of Willie's constant objection to any change, by degrees left off urging it. For Willie, like his poor sweet people, was so determined when he took a resolution, and even I always approached any difficult subject with much caution and fear of opposition.

However, on this occasion I resolved to see what was to be done with Mr. Heath to get Willie into a new sphere. Willie was body and mind going, I thought into more healthy action. For it wore my life out to see him, day after day, doing nothing but hanging about the place, in and out, and out, weary, listless, and hopeless. Besides, too, he had taken to smoking a great deal more than was good for him. For Willie, like his great people, was determined when he took a resolution, and even I always approached any difficult subject with much caution and fear of opposition.

However, on this occasion I resolved to see what was to be done with Mr. Heath to get Willie into a new sphere. Willie was body and mind going, I thought into more healthy action. For it wore my life out to see him, day after day, doing nothing but hanging about the place, in and out, and out, weary, listless, and hopeless. Besides, too, he had taken to smoking a great deal more than was good for him. For Willie, like his great people, was determined when he took a resolution, and even I always approached any difficult subject with much caution and fear of opposition.

So I wrote to good Mr. Heath, laying before him all my cares, and desires, and perplexities, but request him to say nothing to Willie lest I had done so. It was the first secret I ever had from my darling boy, and it made me feel very guilty; but after myself in the village, and he, sitting in front of the door smoking, and occasionally throwing a stone at a passing sparrow, I went off to, I felt like a disguilty creature being found out.

Two days after Mr. Heath came over. Before he had been many minutes in the house he opened the business. He told Willie that he was in want of, not exactly a clerk in the bank, but a young man to help people do their writing for checks, &c. short, in whom he could have perfect confidence, to employ in copying letters and other light work. He offered very handsome salary, to begin. He could be a hundred a year; he should live with his own family, if he liked, and he pointed out all the advantages of the place, and the pleasure it at this new life in such glowing terms, that I could see Willie, for one, was shaken. "But the farm," he said, "and Miss Ellen—what's to be done?"

"Why, you'll let the farm and the house for a good sum. I know a man who would be extremely likely to take them. And, as for Miss Ellen, she would live in Rockminster, and you could, if you preferred it, live with her. What does Ellen say?"

Hitherto Bessie, listening with all her ears, had said nothing, knowing that it was better to let Mr. Heath have his say out, and be chimed in. Now, however, I, as if this was the first I had heard of it, said as calmly as I could, that I really thought the plan a very good one, and, considerations, apart, that for my part, could see no objection. However, Willie, half inclined, but fearing to commit himself, looked very perplexed, and Mr. Heath rode off, pretty well satisfied.

You may suppose all the pros and cons that followed, and what ended in my had to keep the former in view without appearing too anxious in the matter. However, the upshot of it all was that Willie consented to make a trial—a question on our account, namely, that Grimwold should still be our home. And so it was to be. Mr. Heath let us have the grounds, and he would ride or drive over to Rockminster and back every day. I saw much to object to in this plan, especially the isolated position, and the risks of bad weather. Still it was something gained, and as Willie had been used to occasional riding from childhood, and was not all the better for it, and that now the summer was set in, and the weather was not likely to cause much unpleasantness, I was glad to get my half-loaf and with as much contentment as I could.

And soon I saw good reason for contentment. Willie was very anxious, he seemed to be, to set about his day, what he had done, and who he had seen, and what passed. Heath and Willie talked for hours; and sometimes he used to be quite in spirits, and tell me funny things that made us both laugh as we had not laughed since we were children.

I found it very lonely, the long day, at first. But then I used to make myself as busy as I could about the house and in the garden, and contriving nice dinners for him, and then when the time drew near for his arrival, I made myself quite smart—he was so particular about my appearance—and I dressed and told me how the Miss Heaths wore theirs—and was ready at the gate to open it for him and welcome him home. And I found all the world pleasant the day.

Very kind the Heaths were; they often asked me to go and spend some days with them, and invited me to their parties, of which they gave a good many. I could not always refuse; but oh, I found it but weary work! I was so unused to strangers, and to dress, and somehow or other I always felt so much more lonely among a crowd than I did at home. Lonely, loving family, than in my own quiet old home, where the memories of those who were gone kept me far more company. I suppose my youth had died out of me when they died, and I was no longer able to take my place among the living. Not that at home I was unhappy, or even unchcerful; far from it, now that my precious boy was getting to what I wanted him to be.

So two years went by and Willie was made a man of. His figure, though still slight, was no longer of that excessive slenderness and suppleness. His face had brightened and lost its soft girliness; he worked actively; he took to cricket and foot-ball with the young men of the village, and played in the matches, for Mr. Heath was always ready to give him a holiday, especially for such purposes.

As time went on Willie got to enjoy his new life more and more; he became fond of society instead of hating and shrinking from it, as he used to do, and occasionally he staid a night at Rockminster for dinners ad dances. He was vexed, dear boy, that I cou...e not follow his example, and used to urge me to do so. But where was the use? It was no pleasure to me, and I felt it would be no credit to him for me to be there, lost in the solitude of my own sadness and loneliness made around me in the midst of strangers. Whereas, when he came home and told me all about it, I could thoroughly enjoy it all, and asked him an endless number about his partners and their looks and dresses, and the dances and the music and the supper, as if I had longed to be there myself.

He had often talked to me of his greatest friend in Rockminster, Walter Ray. Such a fine fellow, he said, so good-looking and bright and manly-mannered; such a shot, and such a rider, and such a first-rate cricketer, and such an any thing. I knew Walter Ray quite well from Willie's constant accounts of him, yet I was somewhat startled when one day Willie told me that he thought of coming, or bring his friend home with him to play at the cricket match that was to take place the day following.

"Oh, Willie," I said, "how can we entertain strangers?"

"Nonsense!" Willie replied. "Walter's no stranger to me, and therefore he mustn't be to you; and what does he want more than we have ourselves every day? I shall look after the cheeses coming, and he'll cheer you up, you old gooxy girl, as you haven't been for many a long day."

I laughed at him once more, and as soon as Willie was off I went to see about getting a room ready for him. Rooms enough there were, Heaven knows! all and more than we needed since the departure of those who had dwelt in them had been carried out. But I could not do to think of that now; so I chose the sunniest, and had a fire lit in it, for even though it was June it struck damp and chilly when I opened the door. Then I got my basket, brown with old age, aired, and the roses and honey-suckles peeped curiously in at the long unopened windows, as though they were surprised to see preparations for a body's coming to make the room alive again, and when I had put flowers on the mantle-piece, and arranged every thing in apple-pie order, I felt I took cheery enough. And then I had to go and see what we could do about having a nice dinner, and what I had decided on, and getting out all the silver candlesticks and tea-pot, and the beautiful old Worcester china breakfast-set, and the scarlet and gold dessert-service. Then I had to run to the village to see if I couldn't beg, borrow, or steal some strawberries and cherries to put into it, for none of these, hardly, were ripe yet.

And so the day passed away I didn't know how till I dressed, and about that time, after I had shown Eliza how to set out the table, to smooth the cloth and put on a clean muslin gown, before Willie and his friend should arrive.

They came laughing up the drive, just as I had gone into Mr. Ray's room to give a last look, and see that every thing was all ship-shape. My heart beat, and I felt so foolishly fluttered, that I dared not go down at once and meet the stranger in the hall. I only heard Willie's voice and laugh through the roses; his face was turned upward at that moment, looking at them, I fancy, and, though he could not have seen me, I felt sure he knew I had been caught in some guilty trick. But the glance, brief as it was, had had of his face, reassured me. Still I waited, till Willie's voice called to me from the foot of the stairs, brought me down to the presence of our guest.

I don't know how it was, but in half an hour I had quite forgotten that Walter Ray was a stranger, and was talking to him as cheerfully as I ever talked to any. Dinner passed delightfully; he was more amusing than any one I had ever met in my life, not that that is much to say. He had been all over the face of out-of-the-way places—South America, the shores of the Bosphorus, the Isles of Greece, and he instructed me how to steer to start for Australia, and, if he liked it, settle there.

It was Willie's custom, be it known, to take a nap after dinner.

Poor dear, his long ride home used to tire him just enough for this, and he would go off with a kiss of his child, as I was my work, talking to him. I had hoped he would keep awake to-night, it would be a kind attention to our guest to see him settling down in the arm-chair, and heard him flag in the talk, I fidgeted in my seat, and coughed and cleared my throat, in vain, his eyelids would droop and droop, and quite drop, and his head fall helplessly aside against the back of the chair. I coughed louder, and let fall a book, but his closed eyes just opened for a moment, and then closed again.

I glanced toward Mr. Ray; he was watching my manoeuvres with some amusement.

"Are forty winks tabooed in your house, Miss Bessie?" he asked, smiling.

"Oh no; I don't mind Willie's sleeping in general, but—"

I felt I was saying something stupid, and stopped.

"But you don't like him to betray the weakness to me? I'm afraid I've set him the example before you. Now, I pray you don't let him know how I do you pass your evenings? do you never find it hard to get through them, after the long, lonely day?"

"Oh no; I am used to this kind of life and no other, and I would not change if I could."

"And yet," he said, half to himself, half to me, "what a life it is to one of your age! I know what the force of habit is; how prisoners learn, after long years of confinement, to dread removal; how women can fit themselves into the niche that is made for them, however narrow it be. Yet such a life is not natural, till the years that have brought the stormier experiences of life to them have ended by bringing the desire for rest. It can't last for ever, you know," he continued, looking at me, "but I think it will. I don't see what is to change it."

He shook his head.

"When one of you marries, how then for the other?"

"We never mean to marry, either of us."

He smiled.

"You think so? Why not?"

"Oh, that we decided on when first we were left alone."

"I know you are in earnest. But you will see. If one of you kept such a vow even, it is impossible it should. Ah, how little you know of life!"

A sudden pang shot across me.

"You know something?" I said, glancing across at Willie. I need not mention his name, knowing such utterance always disturbs a sleeper.

"No, I give you my word. I only speak from what I have seen. Besides, he is but a boy! At twenty there is little chance of such a change. I am five years older, but I have no present prospect of becoming a Benedick. I must wait for my unknown Beatrice, till I have a home to offer her, and till I am quite sure she is the real Beatrice. I don't despise so far the confession, but most of us meet a good many Realities before we discover Juliet."

Whether I was moved to Willie by the instinct of a sleeper generally has of his being the subject of conversation, or what, I can't say; but at this point he woke, and he ran on the cricket-match till bedtime.

After that Walter came often; I need not pretend that I did not learn eno to see he came for me. And then rose in my heart a great struggle. This must not be; yet how to prevent it?

Inexperienced as I was in the ways of the world, I should hardly have understood how to signify, as some women can by a hundred little manners indications, without giving offense—to a lover I cared not for, that his pursuit was a vain one. How then assume an indifference I did not feel? How keep the boundary line I knew he would soon seek to overstep, when my heart rose up to welcome him over it?

Think what my life was, and what his coming made it! Think of the long, solitary days which whatever I did I was no more or less free to think of him. How his image became associated with every thing around me, every occupation, every pleasure, every thought! How it supplied a motive, and a reward for all I might do, and left me a world of thoughts and recollections, to turn over and fill and feed my heart with, so that I hardly missed him when he returned.

And all this was vain, life, hopeless, must be kept down and put away. But how? Ah, how?

One day, early in the afternoon, I was in the garden, and started to hear a horse's footfall on the gravel of the drive. Could Willie have come home thus soon for some unexpected reason? Visitors, especially on horseback, were so rare that I hardly thought of them, unless it might be Mr. Heath. So I turned down my sleeves, took off my gardening gloves, and came forward to the house by the hedge. It was Walter Ray, alone. Oh, what should I do? What should I say? for I knew, seeing him thus, what he had come for.

Whether he saw me, or knew by some sound that I was there, I can't tell; but he stopped his horse, and taking it and his gride swagwhich was what I was tempted to do, he called me by my name. So I had to come forward to the gate close by, and meet him.

"Are you angry with me?" he began, when he had dismounted and taken my hand; for I was so flushed and trembled so, and could not speak intelligibly, that I had turned from him, to hide my confusion.

"Forgive me if I have thus come upon you by surprise. I had meant to speak to you alone, and when I come with Willie it is almost impossible. Let me go and put my horse up in the stable, and come and speak to you two—may I?"

Had I dared to follow my impulse I should have said, "Go, I am not to listen to you; you are not to speak." But, make my task of forgetting you possible—if it be possible still—try me not above my strength."

But I assented, something, as in a minute more he was again beside me, and had drawn me, I know not how, by the mere force of his will, into one of the shadowy dark walks. I remember nothing, though I hardly heard them at the time, how the blackbirds screamed and scolded as we entered it.

"I am going to Australia in two months," he said. Then he waited for me to speak, but I was still dumb.

"Do you remember, I wonder, something I said to you, the first time I ever saw you, about Beatrice?"

"Yes, I remember."

"You do?" he said, sniffing, as if pleased and encouraged. "I should tell you, then, that I have found the real Beatrice? that I have come to ask her if she will take Benedick, with all his imperfections on his head?"

I struggled for a word, but instead came a passion of tears, so violent that he stood pained and startled.

"No, no!" I sobbed; "it can not be! it must not be! Don't talk to me of this; leave me. Oh, you can do for me to leave me!"

"Bessie, darling! why is this? What have I said to pain or grieve you? tell me!"

"I can not tell you. I am not angry; it is not your fault. But you must leave me; indeed you must."

And I turned from him, and walked slowly in the direction of home. I was furious with myself, so furious that I fear I was almost rough to him. I remained looking after me some moments in utter bewilderment; then he suddenly joined me.

"Bessie," he said, taking both my hands, as that I could not advance, "I can not leave you without further explanation. You did not lead me to expect this, and you give me no reason for it. Tell me only you refuse to listen to me. You owe me this."

"I can know the reason," I sobbed. "You know I told you from the first I never meant to leave Willie."

"But Willie will leave you; I tell you he will. Oh, Bessie, if you care for me, if this is your only reason for refusing me, don't—I beseech you—don't sacrifice yourself to this wild, romantic duty! Listen! I have taken you, perhaps, by surprise. I will go to Australia alone if you will say that if I can leave you in a year you will marry me; say two years if you prefer it. Will you say so, Bessie?"

"I can not! I can not!"

"This is your last word?"

"Yes."

"Then good-by. I will trouble you no more." He threw my hands till the pain made me wince, and was gone.

I never told Willie what had passed, or even of his visit. It was impossible to me to speak of it; and oh, the anguish of trying to keep calm and cheerful, and to appear interested in what Willie was telling me of the Rockminster news, and of the grand public ball that was to be given there. Ah me! I no more thought of that ball than I could calmly one long, vain, empty yearning for what could never be.

Two months Walter Ray sailed for Victoria. He wrote me a line first. Was the last word I had spoken to him final? I could but say yes, and the chance never gave him to say more. I had to listen calmly and make something like excuses for him when Willie told me how he had come, and gone, and how he had left a gift with us before he went, and how Walter had constantly refused him on some pretext or another, even for Willie's things, a present of the imaginary unfriendliness.

A year went by. I was now much alone, for Willie not only had his studies, but many of his wiser gayeties might be going on there, but his friends often asked him to go with them on shooting and fishing excursions, which lasted some days off, and how could he refuse, poor dear? I was only too glad he should amuse himself. I felt I was, in my way, the cause of his seeming so dull and quiet now, and he was always so happy to come home, and so full of all he had done and seen, that he was less likely to notice the change in me.

One bleak autumn evening we were sitting by the fire together. As I could not bear to turn over a book, but this made me the habit of reading aloud, a proceeding which always had the effect of advancing his sleeping-hour considerably.

But this night, when I took the book, he said, with a half-averted face, "Not to-night, Bess; I want to talk to you."

I laid the volume aside and sat down on a low chair by him, looking up expectantly.

"It is something hard to begin, so I took his hand, stroking it down softly.

"Well, dearie?"

"Well, I can't be cleared his throat, but his voice was still husky. "Bessie, what would you say if I told you I was going to be married?"

"What I did say then? I only know that the first thought that came into my head was not about Walter. It was this: So he has been carrying on this affair, and I never knew! Oh, how base it was settled—without giving me the slightest confidence. Not a hint that his fancy even had turned to one of the girls we met! one of the many girls he had carelessly mentioned as his partners at dances!

But he seemed, now that he had brought himself to speak, to perceive but little the effect of his communication, and told me the whole story right through.

Her name was Charlotte Turner; she was nineteen, very pretty, of course, or Willie would not rode better than any girl he ever saw, and was "so jolly." He believed she had a little money, too, but did not know, or even care. Oh, how should love her!

I felt much more, God forgive me! as if Walter had just died.

"But you'll never leave me, dear old girl," he said. "Whoever comes, I can't see you left alone. You and Charlotte must get on as beautifully; you'll be such company for each other all day while I'm away. Though, indeed, I shouldn't like to go on Mr. Heath's after he's found some one to take my place. I shall come home and take up the farm again."

I can't bear to think of it or talk of it. I know I should not like Charlotte, and, though I tried, I couldn't. She came to see me, and affectionately looked on me as a dull, dowdy sort of old maid, though, after all, I wasn't yet four-and-twenty. I had to be very lovely I am sure, when I dare say I was; I had nothing to make me otherwise.

The wedding was over, and the honey-moon, and I made the old place as bright as I could to receive them. There were great fires in all the rooms, and the new furniture was arranged, and the best fruit picked through, indeed, we had hard work to make them stick on account of the damp; and what I used in coals and fire-wood during that month I'm not prepared to say.

However, the house, I'm sure, did look fit for the reception of a bride, and I thought Charlotte must be pleased with it.

They arrived just as the day was closing in, and, as luck would have it, it was a wet day, and the drip, drip was audible enough even indoors.

"Oh, what a state the drive is in!" were the first words I heard as Charlotte got out of the carriage. "And how you are shut in with trees! Why, you can't see the sun at noonday here, I'm certain! Low, how dreary!"

This was encouraging! However, I said, "Never mind; come in, come in; it's cheery enough inside."

She came in, but she didn't seem to think so. Every thing was "so old!" "so queer!" "so antique!" Nothing was "so pretty!" I cried myself to sleep that night. It was the first after her arrival I did so, but by no means the last.

My head I got on telling all the petty mortifications I endured, the small stings, the smarts without end she inflicted on me? I soon saw she had resolved, from the first, to make the place uncomfortable—to drive me out by pin-pricks that should never draw blood, but that should sting and rankle.

I stood it as long as I could for Willie's sake. But the day came when I saw she had made Willie understand that we could not get on together." It was my fault, of course. I don't blame my boy—I never did; he was an infant in her hands, and she never let him forget it, even for an instant.

Well, I have lived here all alone for the last two years. I have got used to it and reconciled to it in the garden. I wonder? If I had but known! And me!

INTERESTING ITEMS.

A MONSTER IN A DILEMMA.—It is well known to all who have read the Life of Edward Irving that his prayers were sometimes lengthy. The circumstance complained, when he came to preach the dedication sermon at his new church in London. The following extract from an eye-witness has reached this paper before the time for the sermon. The following is the exact truth, and nothing more but it should be read a minister into trouble: For a considerable time he had been in the habit of preaching at a certain hour on Sunday, prayer-meeting was open to any who chose to attend it. The hour on the above-named eve six in the morning. Many Dissenting ministers whose duties in their respective chapels commence at that hour, and who, on the Sabbath-day, were imbued, by their anxiety to see and hear him preach, with more than an early prayer-meeting, on the occasion the Rev. Mr.——, a popular Dissenting minister, in Hackney, commenced his duties in the pulpit, a spacious edifice, so the clock struck six in the morning. After a psalm had been sung and a brief exposition of his duties he began to dress the Throne of Grace. The party having done so very lengthy, the congregation, which had joined in the Songs of David, was sung, when Mr. Irving himself attempted to pray. The well-regulated gentleman continued in the exercise for about fifteen minutes without the slightest sign of a pause, when the clock struck seven. Perceiving the latter being at the time connected with a theological institution, he thought it would be correct precisely at seven to be now within twenty-five minutes of the time; and so, without a pause, he began to wind up his prayer, a specimen of an hour of the most rapid cab-driving to carry him to the conclusion. At the end of the first hour he found his house at the time, sprang upon him, and placing one of his large paws on the reverend gentleman's head, the reverend gentleman down to a crouching position, with his head against the door. The sacrifice, fortunately, did not bleed or in any way hurt Mr.——, but kept him in the position and meditated upon the propriety of making a meal of him. Having concluded his devotions, one of his servants, on opening the door, extricated him from the exceedingly awkward and unpleasant predicament in which he was placed.

SOMETHING LIKE AN APPETITE.—The Patria of Naples states that there is at present in the Hospital of Incurables in that city a man who is suffering from a singular species of disease. She every day eats at least five pounds of meat, about 70 eggs, two dozen of bread, and, of course including a good quantity of macaroni. This man is a native of Sicily, and time was he was in feeling as well as in velvet and satin clothes. Now he is in rags. Sometimes he goes about all go threadbare, and fall into rents as the months pass on, and what can be more natural than that he should in summer flowers. In the youth and heyday of our life our moral character is not much thick will—the pliable pudding, and we scout as sacilegs the idea that we shall ever be corrupted by money. But as we grow older, it is possible that we, burning fary bit with poetry and zeal, should over come the temptation and resist temptation, that our philanthropic design for regenerating mankind would be frustrated by the power of the dollar. Assuming that our poetic flights into the regions of the beautiful and the true should end in the lowest sea of the sordid and the expedient.

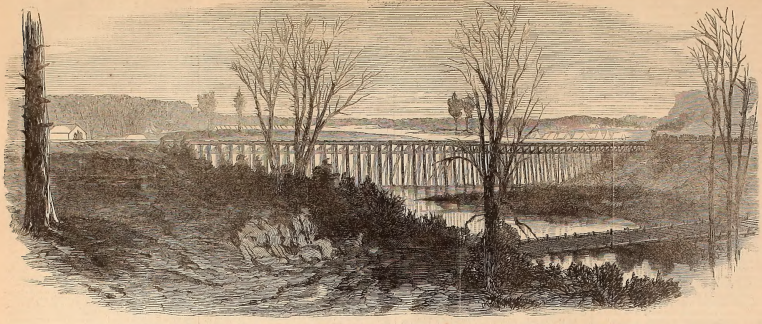
WOMEN IN ARMENIA.—Until marriage, the Armenian girls go about very little in the streets, and, when out, adjust as much freedom as they could do in European countries, walking, love-making, and other things being carried on in as more civilized lands. But once married, and all is changed. From that moment she buries herself, and never speaks to any one except her husband, and then only in private. After the ceremony, she goes to the house of her mother-in-law first, and after the lapse of certain period, to that of her husband's relations-in-law and to those of her sisters. She is always veiled, even in her own house; she never speaks to any one except her husband, or never leaves the house. Her finery, jewelry, and ornaments are all given to her by her husband, and, as a rule, the very best solution is as complete as that of the Turkish women. Her time, other than that occupied in the duties of the household, is spent in working for her husband, and in the handiwork of the Turkish wife, who, moreover, has to attend to her husband's every want, and to show him every possible attention and deign to bestow on her. As the Armenian husband can only talk in her own house how her breath, the sense of her male relatives may hear what she says. From this the consequences which usually result from the retardance of so many women in one house, incessant quarrelling, is quite avoided.

THE SECRETS OF THE DEEP.—What has become of the innumerable human bones and scales of fishes, that for all the years gone by, have died in the broad Atlantic? Have they been devoured by the monsters of the deep, or swallowed up by the waves? Where the gravel beeps left by the Deluge? Where have been deposited the sands down from the Polar Seas? Where, also, the substances drifted across by the Gulf Stream and other currents that traverse the ocean? Nothing—not one solitary indication of all these, but in their place a fine, impalpable, tenacious mud, every where extending, and made up of little particles of carbonate of lime, secreted by countless myriads of animalcules, the food perhaps of whales and fisher of the surface, but more probably the sole inhabitants of these great depths which other animals more highly organized would in vain attempt to penetrate. Truly may we say that the secrets of the great deep are mysterious and grand—and that the search of them amply repays the toil of investigation.

HEALTH AND STUDY.—If, by guiding knowledge, we destroy our health, we labor for a thing that will be useless to our hands and to others. By harassing our bodies through with a design to render ourselves more useful, we deprive ourselves of the ability to accomplish any thing like the good which we might have done with a manner talent. Health is a blessing sufficient for its having dwelled on the strength to improve it to that pitch which men of stronger constitutions could not get on together." It is much service, and our neighbors of all that help which, in a state of health, with moderate knowledge, we might have been able to perform. He that sinks his vessel by overloading it with wealth will not only himself and precious stones, will give his owner but an ill account of his voyage.

SUPERSTITION OF INFERIOR THINGS.—It is a great comfort to the majority of mankind to reflect that inferior things are under their superior. If a sloth a palace or a castle gains the magnificent he loses the magic. And to an average mind there is the real enjoyment in the song than in the magnificent. You look at the magnificent for a little while, and then you are done with it. The expressions of admiration; with the song you are content to remember day by day. You can not choose that the unfair friend a sum twenty feet high. You could not sit down by the sweeping Swedes and count the number in a gallery two hundred feet long. I know a man who has a picture worth a great deal of money, because it is said Providence to give him for his own a very plain church. He has not a more impressive thing in the universe, and made upon the east end of that edifice, at the cost of not a twenty-pound note. Here is a man who has the wherewithal in greatly elevating the character of the entire town. He has the wherewithal of real luxury and yet he could get out of this little thing! Yes, more than many a man who has not a tithe of his means. Why? Because a little more than he himself would have got out of that if it had been given to him. A man, in the Rockminster parish, Walter Scott, devised and erected a little rustic gateway at the entrance of a wood on the road to Rockminster with his wife, with a lantern, and surveyed it with great satisfaction. Every week of each year on the Sunday he derived from that small matter was at least as keen a delight as the owner of a picture gallery, or of a great estate. And the man of simple and moderate taste, and of small means, derives a large share of velvety green sward by warm evergreens, and fragrant in early summer with the sweet briar that clambers over it. He has made a graveled path, not so long as a quarter-deck, and enjoys the full benefit of it. Perhaps he may enjoy it more in six miles in circumference, which is so big that one can not see the end of it, than the possessor of a mile and a half. There can be no doubt that very diligent cultivation bestowed upon a most unpromising piece of ground will draw forth from it a most unusual crop of vegetables. So will prolonged study from an uninteresting subject of study will draw forth from an indescribable amount of enjoyment. Study, of course, is not pleasant to all men. For, in fact, most people must put up with literature, though it be cold and dry, as they must with a dinner of herbs. There is a very serious, a peculiarly squid young about little verses and few things in the world are more dismally things want.

ONLY A CHILD.—In the afternoon I strolled into the burial-ground, and, seeing a little child at play there, I went with it, and some future day, I may probably have a nearer acquaintance—here I am, but let me not anticipate—with—we occupied with his usual noisy glee—slightly to the right of the path, and a few things a peculiarly squid young about little verses and few things in the world are more dismally things want.



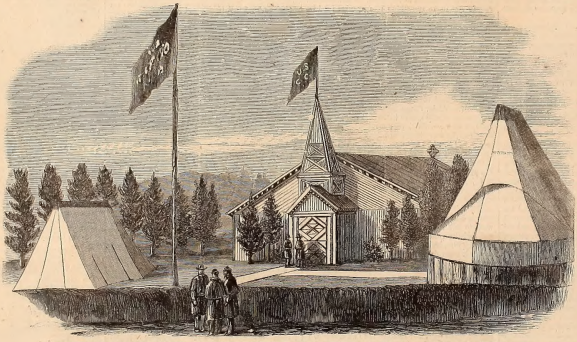
Only a Child.—In the afternoon I strolled into the burial-ground, and, seeing a little child at play there, I went with it, and some future day, I may probably have a nearer acquaintance—here I am, but let me not anticipate—with—we occupied with his usual noisy glee—slightly to the right of the path, and a few things a peculiarly squid young about little verses and few things in the world are more dismally things want.

"Oh, only a child," was his careless reply, as he resumed his play.

"Only a child!" thought I, as I turned away. "Only a child!" Ah, reader, you, who are so constantly after these three small words, you little know how significant they are. You have not heard the deeply pathetic tone and import. You have never, evening after evening, bending down the little mangled head to your knee, and watched the darling's slumber as its little velvety hand dropped upon your knee. You have never received the first look of waking spiritual life; have not gazed upon that cherub face, and seemed even in its features a mother's love in that glance. You have never shed a widow's tear in the anguish of your heart, though, as yet, does not know its loss. Your heart, bowed down and inconsolable, has not felt itself crushed by the iron sound of that feeble voice. You have never waged a fatal strife with death, and have braved the pangs of its fell denial, that your little darling might wait for nothing. You have never, for hours on end, been sad even in the lonesome prairie found a rich recompense for all that you have undergone in the past, and from which, as the sun burnt the hope has never sprung up that that young ara would, at the end of the journey, be the star of their declining years, and that at least one eye will beam kindly upon you, let the world frown as it will. You have never formed plans in which that child was the hero, the angel of your dreams. You have never, when you have been one, and one alone, on earth to love and have been loved, and have been deceived, and have been left in utter darling, when the clear eye became dim, and the little heart ceased to beat, and the cold, white hand lay known with what untiring patience she had watched and tended that darling, and how, in the cold, clammy, lifeless hand upon the beating heart, of grief-stricken, heart-broken feelings of unbridged agony of that hour.

You have never known the wretchedness and void of a mother's heart when, after all hope has departed, she has stood over the little child's dead body, and felt as, his man sat was vain, and the little sufferer breathed its last sigh, the last bond between it and earth was forever broken.

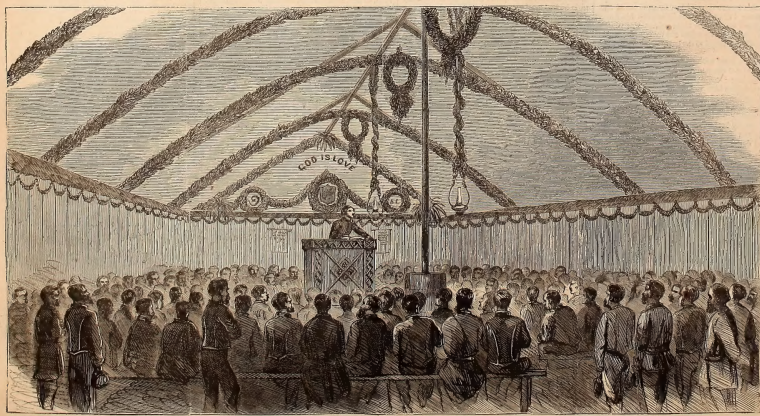
You have never taken the last farewell kiss in this earth of that child's cold forehead, as the coffin-lid closed over it, and that agony was over standing by the fresh-turned earth, and that agony was over standing by the fresh-turned earth, and that agony was over standing by the fresh-turned earth



BRIDGE ON THE MILITARY RAILROAD FROM CITY POINT TO HATCHER'S RUN.—[SKETCHED BY A. W. WARREN.]

BEFORE PETERSBURG.

Two weeks ago we gave some illustrations of the Field-hospital of the Ninth Corps. The same artist now contributes sketches of the CHAPEL OF THE CHRISTIAN COMMISSION connected with that corps. We can only remark, as of the previous sketches, that they display the exquisite taste of our heroic soldiers.



We also engrave on this page a view of a BRIDGE OF GENERAL GRANT'S MILITARY RAILROAD, between Humphreys's and Griffin's stations, on the extension recently constructed to connect the lines at Hatcher's Run with those on the right. This view conveys a very faithful idea of the country southwest of Petersburg.

CHAPEL OF THE CHRISTIAN COMMISSION, NINTH CORPS—EXTERIOR.—[SKETCHED BY ANDREW MCCALLUM.]

CARDINAL WISEMAN.

HIS Eminence NICHOLAS WISEMAN, D.D., Cardinal Priest of the ancient Church of St. Pudentiana at Rome, one of the most eminent Catholic prelates of modern times, was the scion of a highly respectable Irish family, apparently a branch of the old Essex line, of which the present Sir WM. SALTONSTALL WISEMAN, Bart., is the male representative. Cardinal WISEMAN was the son of JAMES WISEMAN, Esq., of Waterford, of the firm of Wiseman Brothers, merchants of note and high standing at Seville, in Spain. He was born at Seville on August 2, 1802. He was sent from Spain, at an early age, to school at Waterford. Thence, when about seven years old, he went to St. Cuthbert's Catholic College, Ushaw, near Durham, of which the celebrated Dr. LINGARD was the Vice-Principal. In the autumn of 1850 the British public were startled by the announcement of the re-establishment of the Catholic Hierarchy in England. On the 29th of September, 1850, the Papal brief was issued; and in a Consistory held on the 30th of the same month, Dr. WISEMAN was made a Cardinal and Archbishop of Westminster.

CHAPEL OF THE CHRISTIAN COMMISSION, NINTH CORPS—INTERIOR.—[SKETCHED BY ANDREW MCCALLUM.]

The new Cardinal forwarded the Papal brief to England, accompanying it with the famous pastoral from himself, dated from the Flaminian Gate, no prelate but the Pope, as Bishop of Rome, having a right to date letters or pastorals from the Eternal City itself. In addition to the archbishopric of Westminster, twelve other sees were marked out. A perfect whirlwind of indignation burst forth from the Protestant population of England at this "Papal aggression," ending in the passing of the Ecclesiastical Titles Assumption Act. The Cardinal was enthroned on December 6, 1850, in St. George's Church, Southwark. He then lost no time in endeavoring to throw oil on the troubled waters, by the publication of "An Appeal to the Reason and Good Feeling of the English People on the Subject of the Catholic Hierarchy." He continued in the peaceable exercise of his ecclesiastical functions, and often wrote or lectured upon matters of taste and science. His lectures on art especially, and his work, the "Recollections of the Four Last Popes," attained considerable popularity. The Cardinal was a poet and also a dramatic writer. His Eminence was not only a thorough master of English, but also an admirable linguist with regard to Italian, French, Spanish, and most other Continental and many Oriental languages. He died, after a lingering and painful illness, on the 15th February, at his town house in Portman Square.

THE LATE CARDINAL WISEMAN.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MARCH.

EVERY thing in Paris is subject to the caprices of fashion, even to the colors selected for the attire of the different seasons; and if the chivalric sentiments of the present day required each faithful knight to wear the colors of his lady, the changes would be frequent, if not irksome. Just now the black and white predominate, for all gala and public dress, to such an extent that almost every lady's colors are those usually worn by every gentleman; and there might be some difficulty in recognizing these, but that the old custom of wearing "her color" has been relinquished.

The order of the day is simplicity united with good taste, a union productive of the best results even in these days of dressy ostentation, when, in spite of the gaudiness inherent in many of the articles worn, a certain degree of elegance is obtainable in their disposition and arrangement. Even with such a costume as that depicted in the third figure in our engraving of the Paris Fashions for March, a stamp of elegance may be acquired by the manner of the wearer, although we only reproduce it in the illustration as coming within the ordinary scope of our observation.

For indoor wear, the Zouave vest, in cashmere or in velvet, with the trimmings special thereto, are still in considerable favor in Paris. Skirts are made on purpose to be worn with these vests, as well as with the braided canezous, in foulard or in cashmere.

We may here note that satins are quite à la mode again, even for ball costume, the turquoise blue, pale rose, and pearl gray colors being preferred. The gray especially, either in crepe or satin, has been particularly remarked at the recent bals de la Cour.

The taste for fur trimmings in rolls or narrow bands on pardessus has turned to account the merits of the sable tufts. They are particularly charming on black velvet vestments, no matter of what form. Where the sable trimming might be found too expensive, strips of martin fur may be employed with advantage.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Fig. 1. Evening Dress.—Light gray moire antique robe, provided with a pascrementerie ornament fringed with light beads, so placed on the dress as to simulate a tunic. The bere dress has the front of the skirt, of the same material as the dress, are edged with two rows of beads. The corsage is ornamented in a similar style. Gray velvet bonnet of Fenelon; a velvet band passing across the middle attaches the bere of the fanchon.

Fig. 2. Ball Dress.—White silk robe, ornamented with rolls of satin surmounting a flounce composed of upright satin rolls between two rows of white satin plaiting. Over the robe is a tunic forming a sort of train, and surrounded with a flounce of plaits and bouillonnes very similar to the ornamentation of the lower part of the dress. The corsage is round, and the berths is trimmed to match the other portions of this ball toilet. Pearl necklace, and bead-dress of marguerites.

Fig. 3. Walking Dress.—Light brown silk robe, trimmed round the skirt with two wide bands of black velvet edged with small balls and surmounting a plaited flounce. The corsage-habit, or coat-corsage, is also trimmed with velvet bands and passementerie round the edges of the back-turned tails. Green crape bonnet, without bavolet, but ornamented behind with a profusion of magenta velvet ribbons.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MARCH, 1865.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

It was my Mother's Voice.

Oh, mother dear! I had a dream,
So sad and yet so bright,
When, wounded on the battle-plain,
I lay at dead of night.

A gentle strain fell on my ear,
That made my heart rejoice,
So soft and sweet it seemed to me
It was my mother's voice.

Song and chorus 35c., mailed, free of postage. Just before the Battle, Dear Nancy Lovers (music), Sunlight within my Heart, Soldier's Happy Return, Mazourka, each 30c., mailed, free of postage. FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery.

MERWIN & BRAY FIRE-ARMS CO.'S
Belt and Pocket Size Cartridge Revolvers.

This size weighs 22 oz., carries a ball 42-100 calibre charge and can be used with either fixed or loose ammunition. The Pocket size weighs 11 oz., uses a ball 30-100 calibre (same as Colt's 4 and 5 inch).

These Pistols are loaded and discharged with only four motions—a degree of perfection never yet reached in any other arm. They must be loaded and discharged at the thirty seconds. These arms have been adopted exclusively for the U. S. Revenue Service. Testimonials of their efficiency we daily received from the Army and Navy. Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers generally.

Address circular to MERWIN & BRAY,
No. 562 Broadway, New York.

P. S. IMPORTANT.—These Rifles can be used with either fixed or loose ammunition.

ARCANA WATCH.
An Elegant Novelty in Watches.

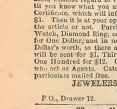
The case of this watch are an entirely new invention, composed of a rich, different metals combined, engraved and planished, producing an exact imitation of 18-carat gold, and, in fact, the whole watch will appear to the eye the same as beautiful and durable as solid gold, and are offered at one-tenth the cost. The case is moulded on solid gold, with pencil and shield for name, with patent push, sight and spring bow, to wear with a chain of Enchased Gold Hunting Levers, and are really handsome and desirable, and not an imitation of gold as to wear and durability. The movement is manufactured by the well-known St. Jimer Watch Company of Europe, are jewelled in 7 holes, having engraved pallets, fancy carved bridges, adjusting regulator, and gold balance, with compensated rim, jewelled action, with line dial, and skeleton hands, and is warranted a good timekeeper. These watches are made in different sizes, the smallest being for ladies, and are all hunting cases. A sea of air will be sent by mail or express for $18. A single one sent in an elegant morocco case for $20. We will readily sell for them from first sight. We are the sole agents for this watch in the United States, and none are genuine which do not bear our trade mark.

Address DEVAUGH & CO., Importers,
19 Maiden Lane, New York.

Capital Stock, $1,500,000, divided into 300,000 shares, at par value of $5 per share, remaining $3 per share. A limited number only of shares remaining $3 per Share, without any further call or assessment to the present holders. PRESIDENT, J. S. CLARK, New York.

Lands and thirteen wells on Oil Creek, Upper Run, Cherry Tree Run, Walnut Bank, Allegheny River, opposite Horse Creek, Sugar Creek, Elk Creek, &c., embracing 20 different properties.

Ten new wells being bored down 200 to 500 feet, with splendid prospects of immense yields of oil.



Books will shortly close, there being only a small number of shares remaining. Prospectus, maps, and full information at WISHART & CO.'S PETROLEUM EXCHANGE, No. 11 Broadway, New York.

Great Closing Sale!!
$650,000 WORTH of Watches, Chains, and Fine Jewelry, all to be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be sold after, so let us know what you are to get. Send 20 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you have to get. Then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any Set of Jewelry on our list for 20 cents; and in no case can they get less than the value of their money, as there are no blanks. Six Certificates will be sent for 100, three for $1, Thirty-five for $5. One Hundred for $12. Great inducements offered those who act as Agents. Call or send for full lists and particulars mailed free. Address
JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,
285 River Street, Troy, N. Y.
P. O., Drawer 12.

Howard's "Improved" SWEAT-PROOF Soldier's Money-Belt.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by enclosing $2 by or $2 60, according to the quality desired. Improved English knee Money Belt, for officers and sailors, $1 50 and $2. Large discount to dealers. HOWARD BELT CO., 436 Broadway, N. Y.

O'DOR! O'DOR!

Will force a beautiful set of whiskers or mustache on the smoothest face from five to eight weeks, without stain or injury to the skin, or hair on bald head in eight weeks (CARD NO MEDICINE). I receive recommendations almost every day from persons that have used it and found it genuine. Testimonials of thousands. I will send Dr. Briggs's Golden O'Dor by mail, sealed and post paid, for $2 (Warranted). Send orders to DR. C. BRIGGS,
Drawer 6963, Chicago Ill.

J. H. Winslow & Co.
THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED
TO SECURE GOOD JEWELRY AT LOW PRICES
100,000
WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELRY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENT'S PINS, SILVER TOILET STUDS, ETC.,
Worth $500,000,
To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for, until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars; also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.
J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

GREAT PRIZE DISTRIBUTION
OF THE
New York Gift Association,
599 Broadway, New York.

	No.	EACH.
12 Elegant Rose'd Pianos, worth from $250 to $500	00
25 Melodeons, Rosewood Cases	15 00 to 225	00
100 Silver Lever Watches	15 00 to 45	00
150 Silver Revolving Patent Cylinders	15 00 to 45	00
200 Gold and Silver Hunting Cased Watches	25 00 to 75	00
350 Sets of Silver Tea and Table Spoons	15 00 to 50	00
500 Gold Hunting Cased Watches, Patented	75 00 to 150	00
1000 Diamond Rings, Cluster and Single Stone	40 00 to 200	00
200 Gold Watches	40 00 to 100	00
300 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00 to 100	00
350 Silver Watches	25 00 to 50	00

Diamond Pins, Diamond Rings, Gold Bracelets, Coral, Florentine Mosaic, Jet, Opera Glasses, Gold Pencils, Gold Pens with Gold and Silver Extension Holders, Sleeve Buttons, Sets of Studs, Jewel Chains, Vest Chains, Fine and Chased Gold Rings, Gold Thimbles, Lockets, Silver Pencils, and FINE JEWELRY of every description, of the best make and latest styles.
Worth $500,000!

MANNER OF DISTRIBUTION.

CERTIFICATES bearing each article and its VALUE, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES, which upon receipt will mixed. One of these Envelopes, containing the Certificate or Order for some article worth at least one dollar, will be sent, by delivered at our office, or sent by mail to any address, without regard to choice, on receipt of 25 Cents. On receiving the Certificate the purchaser will see what article it draws, and will then have the privilege of paying to the HUNTSON DOLLARS, and can then send One Dollar, and receive the article named, or can choose any other one article on our list of the same value.

☞ NO BLANKS.—Every purchaser gets value.

Parties dealing with us may depend on having prompt returns, and the articles drawn will be immediately sent to any address by return mail or express. Entire satisfaction guaranteed in all cases. Certificates for 25, Thirteen for $2. AGENTS WANTED. Send a Stamp for a Circular. All letters should be addressed,
T. BENTON & CO., Box 5567 Post-Office, N. Y.

MONROE & GARDINER,
Manufacturers of
Artificial Raw-hide Limbs.
For Lightness, Strength, and Durability they are unequaled. Office 663 Broadway, N. Y.
Our Legs can be adjusted when the stump is very short; in fact, any length.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Cosmetic will force them to grow heavily in a month (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of order. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 109 Nassau Street, N. Y.

The Brazilian Hair Curler.
One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair into wavy ringlets for many months. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of $1 00. Address
S. S. STEARNS, Colton, N. Y.

The Chinese Hair-Curler.
One application of which will keep the straightest hair curled for three months. Put up in handsome boxes, and sent post-paid upon receipt of the price, $1 00. Address
J. S. MASON, Jr., Boston, Mass.

NEW YORK AND LIVERPOOL PETROLEUM COMPANY.
ORGANIZED UNDER THE MINING AND MANUFACTURING LAWS OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.
CAPITAL - - $1,000,000
IN 100,000 SHARES AT $10 PER SHARE.
NOT LIABLE TO ASSESSMENT.
GOVERNMENT BONDS AND SECURITIES TAKEN IN PAYMENT FOR STOCK.

OFFICES: No. 24 Empire Building, 71 Broadway, N.Y.—POST-OFFICE ADDRESS: Box 5368, N. Y.

OFFICERS: Hon. DANIEL S. DICKINSON, President; WILLIAM T. PHELPS, Vice-President; ROBERT BARRETT, Secretary; H. J. BUTLER, Mining Superintendent, Titusville, Pa.; ATLANTIC BANK, 142 Broadway, N. Y., Treasury.

The Wells of this Company are now producing Oil.

Payment for stock may be made in drafts, registered notes, or government bond and securities, which bonds and securities will be taken at their market values. Remittances may be addressed to the Company, P. O. Box 5368, New York City, or to "Atlantic Bank, Treasury of the New York and Liverpool Petroleum Company, 142 Broadway, New York City." Prospectus sent by mail address as application. A full and clear account of the operations of this

Most Successful Petroleum Company.

For a full description of property see HARPER'S WEEKLY, March 4, Page 148.

GENIUS of Pathologic Song! descend:
Oh, help thou me, my very humble friend,
To sing a song! and may my strain reach wider
Than others' who have sung Pineapple Cider!

No longer now need the poor laborer dread
(Whose children look to him for daily bread)
Sickness in any form, which doth prevent
The poor from earning bread or paying rent;
For 'gainst all sickness this is a prevention:
PINEAPPLE CIDER is no false pretention.

No longer now with cupping, blistering, bleeding,
Nor Senna's purging will be the proceeding
Of curing the diseases, for every native
With hath that Colonel, Jalap, and Starvation
Can be cured with, and that all they need
To keep in health, or get from sickness freed
Is the Pineapple Cider, more and slight:
To take a little makes one feel all right.

Of being sick, then, to avoid the ill,
Or paying an enormous doctor's bill,
PURCHASE at once a bottle, and do try it:
It costs but little; every one can buy it;
And be designed for all, both young and old.
By druggists, grocers, merchants, it is sold.
They are supplied by MR. E. T. BARRETT,
He's the Sole Agent; all from him can get it.
To its great worth, all who have used it yet,
And long may TALBOT, its discoverer, live!

Prices:

THREE DOLLARS PER BOTTLE (FULL QUART).
TWO DOLLARS " (FULL PINT).
ONE DOLLAR " (FULL HALF-PINT).

One quart bottle, two pint bottles, or four half-pint bottles sent free by express on receipt of price.
For Sale Everywhere.
E. T. BARRETT, SOLE AGENT,
64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, and 74 Washington St., Boston.

ENVELOPES AND NOTE PAPER.
Envelopes by single thousand and note paper by the ream at wholesale prices, and by mail, post paid, on receipt of the price.
1000 Buff letter envelopes, extra thick $4 00
500 white note envelopes, double thick 2 50
One ream paper thick note paper 2 50
One box (250) new style Magenta envelope 2 00
Nothing supplied but what we sell to write us for samples and prices
G. S. HASKINS & CO., Stationers and Envelope Manufacturers, 36 Beekman Street, N. Y.

REMINGTON'S

Approved by the Government.
Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.
E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion, N. Y.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF MRS. GEN. TOM THUMB AND BABY.
Price 25 Cents, Each.
Send orders to Box 5410 Post-Office, New York.

BARD & BROTHER'S (Established 1849)
GOLD PENS,
PEN AND PENCIL CASES. Also Manufacturer of BARD & WILSON'S PATENT ANGULAR NIB GOLD PENS. JAS. D. BARD, Ag't, No. 23 Maiden Lane, N. Y. Repointing, 50 cents. Send for a Circular.

Old Eyes Made New.
A pamphlet directing how to speedily restore sight and give spectacles, without the aid of doctor or medicine. Sent by mail, free, on receipt of 10 cents. Address
E. B. FOOTE, M.D.
1130 Broadway, New York.

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST.—Now is the time to subscribe for MOORE'S RURAL NEW YORKER, the best and largest Agricultural, Horticultural, Literary, and Family Weekly on the Continent. Its illustrations, or either of its dozen distinct departments, is worth the $3 asked per year. The 13 Numbers of this quarter (Jan. to April) sent, on trial, for only 50 cents. Address
D. D. T. MOORE, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Ten for One Dollar!
CARD PHOTOGRAPHS
OF ALL
PROMINENT AND NOTED PERSONS,
LIVING AND DEAD.
ALL THE
Major-Generals, the President & Cabinet,
AND ALL THE
Prominent Officers of the Army & Navy,
ACTORS, ACTRESSES,
Fancy and Miscellaneous Pictures, &c., &c.
☞ 10 for One Dollar, or 15 Cts. Single Pictures. Sent free to any address. Postage Stamps, and send for List of Albums and Card Photographs.
Send your orders to
G. G. EVANS,
Proprietor of Gift Book Enterprise,
619 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Penn.

Printing-Presses for Sale.
One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, 7-col. Bed. Price $3000.
Also one Adams Press, 32x46, $2000.
Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

NEW AND HANDSOME.
THE FAIRY ALBUM. Adorned with 50 pictures, $1; 40 pictures, $1 25; 80 pictures, $1 50. Trade supplied. W. C. WEBYES, 60 Broadway, New York.
Send for mammoth catalogue of books and pictures.

Wonderful! Strange! Full instructions by which any person can master the art of Ventriloquism in a few hours. Book and press sent by mail, post-paid, for 25 cents. Address M. A. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

DR. GLOVER'S LEVER TRUSS retains and cures rupture when all others fail. It gives perfect ease and comfort. Sold by BANDAGISTS, druggists, crutches, &c. No. 4 ANN STREET. Established 30 years.

EMPLOYMENT FOR ALL.—Agents wanted in every place to sell new articles. From $5 to $20 can be earned every day. Send for circular. Address GEO. ESTEN HAMLIN, Morristown, New York. P. O. Box 5079.

Whiskers! Mustaches!!—The celebrated HIMALAYA COMPOUND is warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Mustache in from 20 to 40 days without article, which does no injury to the skin. Sent, post paid, for $1. Address Dr. B. HANSEN, 129 Nassau St., New York.

SHULTS' CURLIQUE. For curling the Hair. Price 50 cents. Sent sealed and post-paid. Address
C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

PORTABLE PRINTING OFFICES
For Merchants, Druggists, Hospitals, small Job Printers, &c. Hideal MANIFOLD PRESS. Price $8, $15, and $20. New York Specimen Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., Six Cents.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS
At Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, should be sent by EXPRESS, and addressed to No. 65 Broadway. Sellers charged low rates.

Weston's Metallic Artificial Legs.—Lightest, cheapest, most durable, and most natural ever invented. Price $175 to $200. Send for circular.
J. W. WESTON, 401 Broadway, N. Y.

FREE READING!
Soldiers, Sailors, Marines, Everybody—send us your address. Will, in return, send you a highly interesting paper, replete with good, miscellaneous reading matter. Send Gratis.
CHAS. E. MACKEY, 61 Nassau St., N. Y.

AGENTS, COME and EXAMINE
An Invention urgently needed by every body, or samples will be sent by mail for 25 cents. Address Box 5569 N. Y.
R. L. WOLCOTT, No. 179 Chatham Square, N. Y.

Look! Look! Look! My Golden Compound will force the Beard to grow on the smoothest face in 30 days. Satisfaction given, or money refunded. Price 50 cents, or three for $1. Address FRANKLIN, Calhoun, Ill.

$1. WHISKERS. $1.
For One Dollar I will send, sealed and post-paid, the "Grecian Compound," highly perfumed, which I warrant to force a heavy growth of whiskers or mustache in five weeks, or upon bald heads in eight weeks, without stain or injury to the skin. Satisfaction given, or money refunded. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address E. L. SCHOLL, 6 Ann Street, New York.

"How 'tis Done." Whiskers in 6 w'k's. Gambling exposed. Fortune-telling. Ventriloquism, &c. 100 great secrets. Free for 3c. stamp. Address Box 6 Co., Fulton, N. Y.

Soldiers send stamp for our mammoth catalogue. Address HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

$2000 A YEAR. Agents wanted to buy one with $15 to sell our STENCIL TOOLS.—30 samples sent free. Circulars, Address, Corbin, Cornell and Treasurer of these Rules indorse the circular. Scattering applications. Address the AMERICAN STENCIL TOOL WORKS, Springfield, Vt.

Shults' Onguent warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent, post-paid, for 50 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

Itch! Itch! Itch!
SCRATCH! SCRATCH! SCRATCH!
WHEATON'S OINTMENT
WILL CURE THE ITCH IN 48 HOURS.
Also cures SALT RHEUM, ULCERS, CHILBLAINS, and all ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN. Price 50 cents. For sale by all Druggists.
By sending 6 cents to WEEKS & POTTER, Sole Agents, 170 Washington St., Boston, it will be forwarded by mail, free of postage, to any part of the United States.

PLAYING CARDS.
The American Card Company's
New Union Playing Cards,
National Emblems.
They are the prettiest card made, and suit the popular idea. The suits are EAGLES, SHIELDS, STARS, and FLAGS. COLONEL in place of King, GODDESS OF LIBERTY for Queen, and MAGE for Jack.
All the games can be played as readily as with cards bearing foreign emblems. Each pack is put up in an elegant card-case, and then in dozen boxes for the trade.
In order that all dealers may have an opportunity to sell these cards, a sample box of twelve packs will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of Five Dollars. Address
AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
No. 14 Chambers Street, New York.

AMERICAN GOLD PEN CO'S
CELEBRATED GOLD PENS.

Imperial Gold Pens, with silver-skeny or silver-plated extension cases.

No. 2 Pens and Holders, per Dozen.....			$11 00
" 4	"	"	12 00
" 5	"	"	14 00
" 6	"	"	16 00
" 7	"	"	20 00

These Pens are all stamped "Imperial Pen," and are well-shaped and fine writing gold pens, with iridium points. They are sold only by the dozen, and for soldiers and others speculating they will be found superior to any in market.

WARRANTED GOLD PENS, 1st Quality, in Silver or Gold-Plated Ebony Desk-Holders and Cases:

For $2 50, No. 2 Pen; for $3 50, No. 4 Pen; for $3 50, No. 5 Pen; for $4 00, No. 6 Pen; for $5 50, No. 7 Pen; for $8 75, No. 8 Pen.

Address AMERICAN GOLD PEN COMPANY,
No. 200 Broadway, New York.

The Latest Novelty from PARIS.

THE LADIES—who have so generally adopted the tasty and comfortable style of

LOOPING THE DRESS

will appreciate the convenience and elegance of this little article. It is in the form of a kid ring, with spread wings.

As simple as an ordinary pin, it needs only to be seen to become a popular article. And it is in Paris, the Metropolis of Modes.

In sets of 3 or 12, HEAVILY SILVER-PLATED, for $2 and $3. Sent to any address on receipt of the price.

BERENDSOHN BROTHERS,
Jewelers, Importers, Etc., New York.

DEALERS IN HOUSE-FURNISHING GOODS, HARDWARE, AND FANCY GOODS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

OUR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE will be mailed free on application. Prompt attention and a liberal discount to the trade. Address BERENDSOHN BROS., 193 Beekman St., N.Y.

Have you an Affection of the Heart?

Are your energies suddenly prostrated? Does costiveness trouble you? Have you a cold, heavy feeling on one side of your head? Have you a pain in your side and at the pit of your stomach, through to your back? Do you feel unequal to your daily avocations? Are you depressed by anxious fears, feeling as if some great calamity were going to befall you? Is your appetite poor? Do your daily cjections intermixed with food as taken into the stomach? are they of a clay-like color? If all or any of these symptoms exist you, have recourse at once to DR. BETHE'S PILLS. They will not deceive you, but will restore you to perfect health, and the full enjoyment of all your faculties.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. See upon it B. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING,
294 CANAL STREET, NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicines.

Officers' and Soldiers' Specialty.
Something New and Fine.

On the receipt of either $3 or $5 I will send a genuine 18-carat Gold Ring for either Division or Corps in the Army. (Send the size.) Also for $1 50 I will send a solid Silver Badge (Pin) with appropriate device for Division or Corps in the Army. AGENTS wanted in every Regiment and Hospital, and on board every Steamer, to whom especial inducements are offered. Send for wholesale Illustrated Circular.

B. T. HAYWARD,
208 Broadway, New York.

EMPLOYMENT

At your own homes. Thousands can realize $100 weekly. No utensils required except those found in every household; profits large; no humbug; demand steady for it in the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of two stamps for return postage.

C. MUNRO BROWN, No. 74 Bleecker St., N. Y.

"The West Indian Hair Curler."

WARRANTED to be the most straight and effective curler in the first application, into short ringlets or waving moustache. Sent to any address on receipt of $1 00. Address

P. H. HENDERTON & CO.,
Box 6251, New York Post-Office.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials
501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

LARGEST AND BEST ASSORTMENT OF STEREOSCOPIC MATERIALS, on the Manufacturers for the following:

STEREOSCOPES AND STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS,
Of those we have an immense assortment, including War Scenes, American and Foreign Views, Groups, Statuary, Copies of Celebrated Paintings, &c., &c., including Stereoscopes, for public or private exhibition. Our Catalogue will be sent to any address on receipt of 25cents.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS,
We were the first to introduce them in the United States, and we manufacture more than 50 styles, in every variety of binding, from the cheapest to the most elegant. Our ALBUMS have the reputation of containing the best boards and sheets of any in the trade. They will be sent by mail, FREE, on receipt of price.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUM FOR CARD PICTURES.
CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.

We have a large assortment of Photographic Card Pictures, different subjects to which additions are continually being made. Portraits of Eminent Americans, etc., etc., also:

Actresses, Opera Singers, Ballet Dancers, 200 Different Subjects.
200 Brig.-Generals, 200 Other Officers, 150 Divines.
100 Poets, 100 Authors, 100 Statesmen, 100 Actors,
100 Actresses, 192 Nudes,
2,000 Copies of Works of Art.

Including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statues, etc. Catalogues sent on receipt of Stamp.

Any of the above sent by mail, FREE, on receipt of price. Send on the amount of BALANCE, and we will pay postage.

Photographers and others ordering goods C. O. D. will please remit twenty cents, the amount of the return fee required.

☞ The prices and quality of our goods cannot fail to satisfy.

Soldiers' Pocket Albums for 10 Pictures, 75 cents.

Attention, Company!

Clark's Onguent, a powerful stimulant. Each pocket warranted to produce a full set of whiskers or moustaches in six weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Onguent, and finding it not as represented, by informing us of the fact, can have their money returned them at any time within 3 months from the date of purchase. Sent by mail, post-paid, to any address, on receipt of the money.

A. G. CLARK,
Address P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

Important Announcement.

GREAT SALE of
WATCHES, CHAINS, DIAMOND RINGS, &C.
One Million Dollars' Worth!
TO BE DISPOSED OF AT
ONE DOLLAR EACH!
Without regard to value!! Not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive!!!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES!
All to be sold at One Dollar Each!!

500 Mens Hunting-case Watches.....	$75 to $150
250 " with Bells and Cuttlefish	100 " 200
500 Silver Tweezle and Guard Watches	40 " 50
300 Chasing Dishes.....	10 " 100
1000 Sets Pitchers of the finest.....	10 " 50
2000 " Syrup Cups with Salvers.....	10 " 50
3000 " Goblets and Drinking Cups	5 " 8
3000 " Castors.....	15 " 50
5000 " Gold, Card and Cake Baskets	10 " 50
5000 Dozen Silver Tea Spoons, per dozen	10 " 50
10,000 " Table Spoons and Forks, per dozen.....	20 " 40
2500 Gents' Gold Hunting-Case Watches	50 " 100
250 Ladies' Gold and Enameled-Case do.	35 " 70
250 Gents' Hunting-case Silver Watches	30 " 100
200 Diamond Rings.....	50 " 100
5,000 Gold Vest and Neck Chains.....	3 " 8
5,000 Gold Oval Bead Bracelets.....	3 " 6
5,000 Jet and Coral Bracelets.....	2 " 4
5,000 Chatelaine Chains and Guard Chains	5 " 10
5,000 Diamond and Gold Breastpins.....	3 " 10
5,000 Coral, Opal, and Emerald Brooches....	5 " 8
5,000 Mosaic, Jet, Lava, and Gold Bracelets, Drops.....	4 " 6
5,000 Coral, Opal, and Enamelled Ear Drops..	2 " 4
4,000 California Diamond Breast-Pins.....	2 50 " 10
4,000 Gold Hunting-case Vest Watch Keys....	2 " 4
4,000 Fob and Vest Ribbon Pendants.....	2 " 4
4,000 Sets of Studs, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, and Shirt Pins.....	2 " 4
3,000 Gold Thimbles, Crosses, etc.....	2 " 4
3,000 Gold Lockets, Pencils, etc.....	3 " 6
10,000 Miniature Lockets.....	2 50 " 10
1,000 " Magic Spring.....	10 " 15
3,000 Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, etc.....	2 " 4
5,000 Gold Bracelets, Lockets and Links	5 " 10
5,000 Chased Gold Rings.....	3 " 11
5,000 Solitaire and Signet Rings.....	2 50 " 10
10,000 California Diamond Rings.....	2 " 5
5,000 Gold Pens, Pencils, Holders and Gold Pens.....	3 " 6
4,000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Cameo, Pearl, Onyx, and other stones.....	3 " 15
10,000 Gold Pens, Silver Extension-Holders and Pencils.....	4 " 10
10,000 Gold Pens and Gold-Mounted Holders	6 " 10
10,000 Gold Pens and Gold Pencils.....	5 " 15
5,000 Ladies' Gilt and Jet Buckles.....	3 " 15
5,000 Ladies' Gilt and Jet Chatelaine and Belt	5 " 15

ARRANDALE & CO., Manufacturers' Agents, No. 167 Broadway, New York, announce that they have for sale a lot of goods will be sold for One Dollar Each.

In the consummation of the arrangement of trade in the manufacturing districts of England, through the war having cut off the supply of Jewelry, Watches, and Fancy Goods, Jewelry, originally intended for the English market, has been secured by us, and will be offered for sale at ONE DOLLAR EACH.

Under the circumstances ARRANDALE & CO., acting as Agents for the principal European Manufacturers, have resolved upon a Grand Sale, and therefore announce the following regulations:

Certificates of various articles are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and, when ordered, are taken out without choice, and forwarded by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the certificate you will know what article you will get. You will then send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any Set of Jewelry on our list for ONE DOLLAR.

Send 25 cents for Certificate.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for forwarding the certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be enclosed when the Certificate is sent. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; one hundred for $15.

Agents.—We want agents in every regiment, and in every town and county, to whom those acting as such will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, when the remittance amounts to One Dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, with cash or postage stamps.

ARRANDALE & CO.,
No. 167 Broadway, New York.

What the "Press" say of us.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION.—A rare opportunity is offered for obtaining watches, chains, diamond rings, silverware, &c., by Messrs. ARRANDALE & CO., No. 167 Broadway. They have an immense stock of articles, varying in value, and all are to be sold at one dollar each. The distribution is very fairly done—you agree to take a certificate, which is then sealed, enclosed in an envelope, and are not required to pay your dollar unless you are satisfied with the article. Any article mentioned in the list may, at that amount, and may be $20 or $100. An excellent mode this of investing a dollar.—Evening Mail, New York, April 19, 1865.

Messrs. Arrandale & Co. have long been personally known to us, and we believe them to be every way worthy of public confidence.—Saturday Evening Mail, Boston, June 11, 1864.

We have inspected at the offices of Arrandale & Co.'s Agency for European Manufacturing Jewelry, a large assortment of valuable articles of Jewelry of the newest patterns. We also noticed a large quantity of silver plate, and understand that all of the above mentioned splendid articles are to be disposed of on a novel principle, giving great advantage to buyers for cash.—Evening Post, July 15, 1864.

Messrs. Arrandale & Co. have long been personally known to us, and we believe them to be every way worthy of public confidence.—Saturday Evening Mail, Boston, June 11, 1864.

We have inspected at the offices of Arrandale & Co.'s Agency for European Manufacturing Jewelry, a large assortment of valuable articles of Jewelry of the newest patterns. We also noticed a large quantity of silver plate, and understand that all of the above mentioned splendid articles are to be disposed of on a novel principle, giving great advantage to buyers for cash.—Evening Post, July 15, 1864.

ARRANDALE & CO., Manufacturers' Agents, No. 167 Broadway, New York, announce that they have for sale a lot of goods will be sold for One Dollar Each.

In the consummation of the arrangement of trade in the manufacturing districts of England, through the war having cut off the supply of Jewelry, Watches, and Fancy Goods, Jewelry, originally intended for the English market, has been secured by us, and will be offered for sale at ONE DOLLAR EACH.

Under the circumstances ARRANDALE & CO., acting as Agents for the principal European Manufacturers, have resolved upon a Grand Sale, and therefore announce the following regulations:

Certificates of various articles are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and, when ordered, are taken out without choice, and forwarded by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the certificate you will know what article you will get. You will then send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any Set of Jewelry on our list for ONE DOLLAR.

Send 25 cents for Certificate.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for forwarding the certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be enclosed when the Certificate is sent. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; one hundred for $15.

Agents.—We want agents in every regiment, and in every town and county, to whom those acting as such will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, when the remittance amounts to One Dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, with cash or postage stamps.

ARRANDALE & CO.,
No. 167 Broadway, New York.

Dr. Poland's
WHITE PINE
COMPOUND.
THE GREAT AND POPULAR
REMEDY FOR
Colds, Coughs, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Whooping-Cough.

Cures Gravel and all Kidney Diseases.

There have been many severe cases in Boston and vicinity during the WHITE PINE COMPOUND, which can be referred to, and hundreds of cases of Kidney complaints, some cases in which it has failed, the White Pine Compound, have been reported by Druggists.

Among all the popular remedies offered for sale, no one seems to have gained favor like the White Pine Compound. The medicine is pleasant to take as lasting the spring of time, and then merely for one individual who was effected with the first stitches of the throat, was entirely relieved by it. This induced others to apply for the same remedy, and every one of them received a great benefit. The article, however, went without a name till November following, when it was called White Pine Compound. During that month it was advertised for the first time.

A man came to the Medical Office, who purchased a bottle for a hard cough, was not only cured of the cough, but also of a severe kidney complaint of ten years' endurance. This being truly a discovery, the fact was mentioned to a publish gentleman, who replied in substance that the Sale of White Pine was one of the best discretive known, provided his astringent properties could be retained by it. Other articles entering into the Compound would effect this, a change was made in the article. The fortune has yet to be been reached; but the hundreds of cures effected by the Compound, in the most aggravated forms of Kidney diseases, including Diabetes, prove it to be a wonderful Medicine for such complaints. A large number of physicians now employ it or recommend it for such use.

But what the WHITE PINE Compound is so useful in kidney inflammation, it is also a wonderful curative in all throat and lung affections. It is quickly and certainly relieves all those affections that harassers and accrues are received as if by magic. Many cases have been reported to the originator where relief in very severe cases has been surprisingly quick, and a cure effected in a very few days.

There is a very natural reason for this. The bark, and even the leaves or "needles," of White Pine, contain eminent medicinal properties. The Indians employed the bark of White Pine to treating diseases long before the settlement of America by the whites.

A wash of the bark, steeped in water, is exceedingly useful in relaxing inflammation and cleansing old sores. In fine, the virtues of White Pine Bark are known every where, and the Proprietor has one principle way the White Pine Compound was so favorably received at the first.

The past year has given a great opportunity to test the virtues of the White Pine Compound. It has been an unusual time for Colds and Coughs, and very large quantities of the White Pine Compound have been sold and used with the happiest effects. It speaks well for the Medicine that the people living where it is prepared are high in its praise.

TESTIMONIALS.

A very large number of the most distinguishable have already been received from Physicians, Clergymen, Apothecaries, and others, all testifying in entirely unison to the most flattering terms of the White Pine Compound.

Dr. Nichols, Boston, Mass., writes:

"I find the White Pine Compound to be very efficacious not only in relieving pulmonic affections, but also those in affections of the kidneys, debility of the stomach, and other kindred complaints."

Rev. J. K. Chase, of Rumney, N. H., writes:

"I have used the White Pine Compound and found it an invaluable remedy. I can truly say that I regard it as the best medicine for coughs, colds, and sore throat I ever just taken the Compound for a cold, and it works charmingly."

Hon. P. H. Sweetser, of South Reading, writes:

"Having found the astringent and other valuable medicinal properties of the White Pine, I was prepared, on entering upon the preparation of a White Pine Compound, to give the medicine a trial. It has been used by members of my family with success in the most severe colds, and in some cases of serious kidney difficulties with excellent results. I am sure that many others will receive similar benefit from the Compound. We intend to keep it always on hand.

From JAMES J. HOYT,
Druggist, Boston, N. H., Sept. 1863.

DR. POLAND.—In the fall of 1857 I took a very violent cold, which brought on a very severe cough, pain in the side and lungs, and headache. I was also very badly afflicted with that troublesome disease—the Kidney complaint. For the latter I have paid I know not how many; troubled with my throat and lungs, choking up and raising an immense quantity of phlegm, and coughing blood; I felt that my time here must be short unless I could get relief. I was induced to try your White Pine Cough Compound, though my faith in it was small. After taking two bottles, my cough was relieved, I had taken two bottles, my cough was better, the kidney trouble also, and I continued to take it until I had taken six bottles, when I was entirely free from all pain, and am feeling like a well man.

Many others of my family is indebted to you for consumption, my father, mother, and two sisters having died of it.

From STEPHEN BARTLETT,
Bradford, N. H., July, 1859.

DR. POLAND.—I had been afflicted with Kidney Complaints for a long time, and had used a good deal of ten years' standing, which caused me to spit blood quite frequently. By use of your recommended I would get relief, but not health again. But two bottles of your White Pine Compound has done more for me than all the Kidney Complaints. I would also state that a lady, a neighbor of ours, was also cured of a severe cough that she was not only long enough to have her bed made, and we all thought she would die with consumption. Your medicine is the medicine of your Compound, and it cured her. She is just as well now as ever she was.

The White Pine Compound, advertised at length in our columns, is not only as to its name inviting, but is a highly approved medicine. Dr. Poland, the inventor, has the confidence of many who know him—a confidence which he enjoyed while living in Connecticut, and now here as the minister. His experience as a sufferer led him to make experiments which resulted in his medical discovery.—Boston Watchman and Reflector.

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND,
GEORGE W. SWETT, M.D.,
Proprietor,

Will be manufactured in future at the
NEW ENGLAND BOTANIC MEDICAL DEPOT, 106 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

Under the supervision of
REV. J. W. P. POLAND, M.D.

DR. SWETT will attend to the business department, to whom all orders should be addressed.

Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers in Medicine everywhere.

Price 75 Cents per Bottle.

"Death and Destruction to Rebellion!"

A truly splendid REVOLUTIONARY ROMANCE will be commenced in No. 39 of the

New York Weekly,

ready on Thursday, March 23, entitled

WILD NELL, THE SPY;
OR
The Foundlings of the Forest:
A Romance of the American Revolution.
By Francis S. Smith,
Author of
"White Eagle, the Avenger," "Ivon Calenne the Gladiator," "Eveleen Wilson," "Meggie, the Child of Charity," "The Sexton of Tarzay," etc., etc.

This is unquestionably one of the finest historical romances of modern times, and every body would do well to look out for it.

Specimen copies sent free.

The New York Weekly is sold by all News Agents throughout the United States. Terms, Single in Six Cents, but in some cases, where Agents have to pay extra freight or postage, a slight advance is necessarily charged. When there is a New Agent in a town, no other one desires to supply it, but all work through him. We do not wish to be the agent of any one, but desire to have but one in a place, and to control it. When sent by mail, single copies, four months, 25 cents; one year, $1; which is $2 00 a copy; eight copies, $10. The party who sends us $20 for a club of eight copies can mail each at one time to himself to a copy free. Postmasters and others who get up clubs, in their respective towns, are forwarded and their profits at $2 00. Canada subscribers must send twenty cents in addition to the subscription, to pay the prepayment postage. When a draft or check can conveniently be sent it is the best way, but it will be quickly and certainly by the loss of money by mail. The postage on the WEEKLY to any part of the country is only twenty cents a year, or five cents a quarter, payable at the office where the paper is delivered.

Address
STREET & SMITH,
11 Frankfort Street,
New York.

$8 OFFICER'S $10 WATCH.

Our whole stock of imported Watches, being of rich and novel designs, are now offered at reduced prices. Single Watches at Wholesale Rates.

Also, Gold Watches in Fine Gold Plated Double Cases for Ladies' Wear, Engraved and Engine Turned Designs, Richly Enameled, Jewelled Movements, adjusted Regulator, Spring Hands, and Fine Enameled White Dials, at wholesale prices in running order, with Key, Dial, or screw-bottom Cases, Guaranteed Time Keepers, and Solid SPECIMEN GOLD LOCKET, to match, with Double Gold Chain, Solid Gold Case for Ladies' Wear, Sent safely to any part of the army or country for only $10. Also, Fine Gold Plated Watches, Open Face, Plain Pattern, in HEAVY DOUBLE CASES, Small Size, same as the above, with Key, Dial, etc., complete, with a pair of Chain, Engraved Double Case Locket, etc. Sent by mail to any part of the country, guaranteed, only $8.

The Imperial Watch,

Containing a Rare and Wonderful Combination of Movements, Richly Engraved and Jewelled, and attached to its machinery a beautiful and correct working THERMOMETER, accurately adjusted Explorer's Compass in miniature, rusk in Dial, and a Reliable Calendar, indicating day of the month, week, and month, forming the Watch a perfect SCHOOL, HEAD, AND TIME INDICATOR. The Case is of solid gold, and this watch, which is situated in Finely Polished DOUBLE HUNTING, Magic Spring 18 LINE Cases (the only size now in use), and Fancy Fluid Spring cases of Solid Gold Compound, Richly Engraved Top and Bottom, with Paper Dial, and Fancy Fluid Spring, Genuine English Improved Jeweled Action, M. J. Tobias' Movements, Polished Case, Warranted Time Cloth, Regulator, Independent Actions, Fine White Dials, Polished Steel Cut Hands, and is a Perfect Timekeeper of $100 watch, and used by the ROYAL ENGINEERS and Officers of the BRITISH ARMY, at Home and Abroad. Sent by mail, Sensitive unless bearing our private trade-mark. Size for gentlemen, full complete, by mail, to any part of the country, $30.

CAVELY BROTHERS, Sole Importers.
102 NASSAU St., N.Y. Established 1855.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE
FOR MARCH, 1865.

Important to Subscribers.

Subscribers to the MAGAZINE and WEEKLY will find upon the wrapper of each publication the month of Account. The figures on the direction-label following the name, thus: "Mar. 65," indicate that the Subscription EXPIRES, as noted on our books. Every Subscriber may thus determine whether he has received the proper credit for his remittance, and also when to renew his Subscription. The Postage on Harper's Periodicals to all parts of the United States is now prepaid by the Publishers, so that persons who receive their publications by mail will thus avoid receiving duplicates, or missing any Number. The Postage on Harper's Monthly and Harper's Weekly is twenty cents each per annum.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $4 00

An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each, or Six for $20 00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $7 00.

The Publishers will accept a limited number of first-class Advertisements for their Magazine, at the following low rates: one page, $50; half page, $30; quarter page, $15; eighth, $8; whole page, $250. The circulation of HARPER'S MAGAZINE is known to be larger than that of any other publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Circulation nearly 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year 4 00
One Copy for Three Months 1 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00. Postpaid invariably in advance.

THE BOUND VOLUME OF HARPER'S WEEKLY for the YEAR 1864, with over 1000 Illustrations. 830 pages, 4to, substantially bound in Cloth. Price $7 00.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—One Dollar per line for inside, and Two Dollars per line for outside Advertisements each insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

AUNT ISABEL. "BEATRIX, will you have some Bread and Butter?"
BEATRIX. "NO!"
AUNT ISABEL. "Is that the way to answer? No what?"
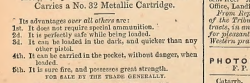
BEATRIX. "No Bread and Butter!"

SEVEN-THIRTIES.
Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND
U.S. LOAN AGENTS,
4 Broad St. and 694 Broadway,
New York.

Subscriptions received for any amount, and a constant supply of the notes on hand for immediate delivery.
ROBINSON & OGDEN, BANKERS.

FISK & HATCH,
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
No. 38 Wall Street, New York.



The Model Pocket-Pistol of the Age.

SLOCUM'S Patent Side-Loading REVOLVER.
Length, 7½ Inches. Weight, 14 Ounces.
Carries a No. 32 Metallic Cartridge.

Its advantages over all others are:
1st. Its great superior special ammunition.
2d. It is perfectly safe while being loaded.
3d. It can be loaded in the dark, and quicker than any other pistol.
4th. It can be carried in the pocket, without danger, when loaded.
5th. It is sure fire, and possesses great strength.
FOR SALE BY THE TRADE GENERALLY.

HOWARD, SANGER & CO.,
108 and 107 Chambers Street, New York.
Descriptive Circulars furnished upon application.

POLLAK & SON, Meerschaum Manufacturers, 697 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail, at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $80 each.

Soldiers Sailors and Every body will receive by mail a Pictorial Interesting Newspaper, FREE, by sending their address to Editors Army and Home Journal, 40 Ann Street, New York.

ARTHUR'S HOME MAGAZINE.
TERMS.—$2.50 a year. 3 copies for $6. 6 copies for $10. For sale by news dealers every where. T. S. ARTHUR & CO., 323 Walnut Street, Philadelphia.

TICKS, SCAB, VERMIN.

Should be used by all Farmers on their
SHEEP, ANIMALS, AND PLANTS.
For sale by JAS. F. LEVIN, Agent South Down Co., 25 Central Wharf, Boston.
For sale in New York by B. H. ALLEN & CO., 189, 191 Water St., and DUDLEY & STAFFORD, 69 Beekman St.

Calenberg & Vaupel's
PIANO-FORTES,
99 and 101 Bleecker Street, 64 Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

NEW BOOKS
Published by
HARPER & BROTHERS, N.Y.

AN ELEGANT LIBRARY EDITION OF VANITY FAIR. Vanity Fair: a Novel without a Hero. By WM. MAKEPEACE THACKERAY. With Illustrations by the Author, and a Portrait on Steel, engraved by Halpin after Lawrence's Picture. A new and elegant Library Edition, in 2 Volumes, Post 8vo, cut and uncut paper, Cloth, $7.00. Load Bearing.

ANTHOROGRAPHY, Contemporaneous, or, of Literary Handwriting. Published by the Son, CHARLES SCRIBNER. With 3 Steel Portraits and Numerous Engravings on Wood. Complete in two vols. 12mo, Cloth, $9.00.

CHRISTIAN'S MISTAKE. A Novel. By MISS MULOCK. Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

HOOKER'S MINERALOGY AND GEOLOGY. Science for the School and Family. Part III. Mineralogy and Geology. By WORTHINGTON HOOKER, M.D., Professor of Medicine in Yale College. Author of "The Child's Book of Nature." Illustrated by nearly 500 Engravings. 12mo, Half Roan, $1.50.

HARPER & BROTHERS will send any of the above works by Mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States.

WELL-TRIED REMEDIES.
RUSSELL'S ITCH OINTMENT ..... 25 Cts.
An immediate and certain cure.
It is also a sure remedy for sunburn on horses. $0 Cts.
RUSSELL'S SALT RHEUM OINTMENT ..... 50 Cts.
It is unequalled.
RUSSELL'S PILE OINTMENT ..... $1.00.
Cures after all other remedies have failed.
These ointments are certain, safe, and reliable specifics. Thousands have certified, and are still certifying.
For sale by DEMAS BARNES & CO., New York; GEO. C. GOODWIN & CO., Boston; and all retail druggists.

CARPET WARP,
FIRST AND SECOND QUALITY.
Wrapping Twine made of Paper.
Twines and Paper. H. A. DIMON & SON, 74 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

VERMILYE & CO.,
No. 44 WALL STREET,
BANKERS,
And Dealers in all Classes of
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,
479 Broadway, below Broome St.,
Sing Song Chinese Porcelain
ALSO PARIS FRENCH CHINA, GLASS, &c.
French Dinner Sets.

Vineland Lands. To all Wanting Farms.
Large and thriving settlement, sold and located on memo, 36 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, producing huge crops, which can now be seen growing. Tea, twenty, and fifty acre tracts, at from $5 to $25 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufactories and others. Churches, schools, and good society. It is now the most prosperous place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is a surprise to all. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.
From Report of Solon Robinson, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune: "It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position and table condition for pleasant farming that we know of this side of the Western prairies.

EXCELSIOR
PHOTOGRAPH ESTABLISHMENT,
F. P. WHITE, 81 Fulton St., New York.

Catarrh, Rheumatism, Sick Headache,
Neuralgia, Pneumonitis, Nursing Sore Throat,
Hoarseness, Asthma, Three Health Items,
Resting, Air & Health, In March No. 6[th] of Pains, Bullets, Bells, Bells Complete,
Apples, Vice of Youth, $11 Yearly, New York,
Thirst Pie, Diet for Sick, 12 Urban Scenes,
Catarrh and Effects, April No., by Prof. Dunlap.

SOLDIERS' CERTIFICATES,
Beautifully printed in Five colors, FREE. Every soldier should have one. Price 60 cents each, sent by mail. Three different varieties for $1. Agents wanted. GATES & GAMBLE, 141 Walnut Street, Cincinnati.

GET THE BEST

Containing one-fifth or one-fourth more matter than any former edition.
From new electrotype plates and the Riverside Press.
IN ONE VOL. OF 1840 ROYAL QUARTO PAGES.
Unquestionably the best English Dictionary.
"GET THE LATEST." "GET THE BEST."
"GET WEBSTER'S."
Published by G. & C. MERRIAM, Springfield, Mass.
SOLD BY ALL BOOKSELLERS.

LAWRENCE, BALDWIN & CO.,
70 Wall Street, New York,
BANKERS and BROKERS,
DEALERS IN ALL KINDS OF
Government Securities.
PETROLEUM,
AND ALL OTHER KINDS OF
STOCKS, BONDS, &c.,
BOUGHT AND SOLD ON COMMISSION AT THE REGULAR STOCK, MINING, AND PETROLEUM BOARDS.
Interest Allowed on Deposits.
DEWITT C. LAWRENCE. JOHN J. LAWRENCE.
SIMEON BALDWIN, JR. WM. A. HALSTED.

"Unequal" Self-adjusting concealed white, $2, $6, $7, and $9 per doz.; specimens, 50c., 75c., $1. Snow-white, linen-finished, illuminated, $1.25. Robinson's Nick-Tie, $1. Ladies' "illusion-embroidered" Steel Collars, $1 50; Cuffs, $1.75. Gents' set Cuffs, $2. Mailed on receipt of price and "size." JEANERET, 79 Nassau St., N.Y. Box 3786.

Great Sale
OF
WATCHES AND JEWELRY,
Worth over $1,000,000,
Consisting of Gold and Silver Watches, Chains, Bracelets, Sets of Jewelry, Rings, Lockets, Gold Pens, &c., &c.,
All to be sold for One Dollar each!!
WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE! NOT TO BE PAID FOR UNTIL YOU KNOW WHAT ARE TO RECEIVE!
Certificates of the various articles are first put into envelopes, mixed, and sealed, and when ordered are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, then giving all a fair chance. Each article is the excellence you will see what you have, and then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Any one remitting money thus obtain a Gold Watch or any set of Jewelry on sent for the Gift Certificate.
Five Certificates will be sent for $1, sixteen for $2. We will send one Certificate as a sample of 25 cents. Send for Circular and Terms to Agents, which we want everywhere, and offer liberal inducements.
A. H. ROWEN & CO., 95 Beekman St., N.Y.

"I do not see how an officer or soldier can have a complete outfit without it."—HORACE GREELEY.

For sale by all Fancy Goods Houses and Sutlers.
Price $2 50, cost free of postage.
L. D. BROOKS, MANUFACTURER, Salem, Mass.

GREENBACKS FOR ALL!—A series of $100 GIFT PRIZE PUZZLES are now in course of publication in HERALDS OF MOVEMENT, for correct solutions to each of which $100 in greenbacks is offered. See present Number of this great weekly Magazine, full of Fun, and every thing to amuse you. Splendid Puzzle Department, with puzzles, enigmas, riddles, conundrums, &c., and a FREE PUZZLE every month. Don't fail to secure this splendid publication; it is the best of the kind ever issued, to say nothing of the valuable cash prizes in the Puzzle Department. All you have to complain about the puzzles is, they are paid in money, and the names and addresses of the winners published in the succeeding Number, so that any one can write or apply to them. Letters of acknowledgement from winners of prizes will be cheerfully shown on application. A prize of $50 will be paid for the best puzzle; we present Numbers. Specimen Free for 3 cents only; $1 35 a year. Get it of Newsdealers, if there are any in your town. All Newsdealers and Booksellers have it, or will procure it for you. Write quickly, giving number you desire to fill, and address
J. C. HAZLETON & CO., Publishers,
No. 109 Nassau Street, New York.

ARMY AND NAVY AGENCY.
Pensions, Bounties, Pay, Prize Money, together with all claims of whatever kind promptly procured. All corresponde promptly answered. L. Brown & Co, 2 Park Pl'ce, N.Y.

$7 ARMY $10
WATCH.
A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH. Double Case, Lever, Cap, small size, white enameled dial, cut hands, "English Movements," and correct time-keeper, with an accurate "Miniature Calendar," indicating the "Day of the Week, Month, &c." in bold case.
A single one sent free by mail to any address in a neat box, with Guarantee, on receipt of $7 in cash.
A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, with "Miniature Calendar," &c., regularly sold for $10, sent by mail, by mail, to any address, for only $10
Watches of all descriptions low.
Address CHAS. OTIS NORTON & CO., Sole Importers, 28 & 30 Ann Street, New York.

STAMMERING
Cured by Bates' Patent Appliances. For descriptive pamphlet, &c., address H. C. L. BATES, 377 W. 23d St., N.Y.

Great Imperial Watch.
See Catoly Brothers' Advertisement on page 191.

THE AMERICAN MISCELLANY,
A new and elegant weekly paper, published by J. H. BINGHAM & CO., containing sixteen royal octavo pages of choice reading, will be a collection of the best romances, sketches, history, biography, adventures, travel, poetry, essays, wit and humor, enigmas and puzzles, together with a great variety of condensed miscellaneous pieces to suit all classes and tastes. Single copies Six Cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Ready Saturday, March 25th.

WARD'S PATENT
FRENCH PRINTED
PAPER COLLARS
387 B'WAY, NY. & ALL
GENTS FURNISHING STORES

Officers, Soldiers, and Citizens!
All the Army Corps Rings in 16-carat gold stamped and warranted; at $3 and $5 each. Also 100 other styles of every size, plain, enameled, and fancy, at from $2 to $50 each. Sent by mail. Send stamp for Circular.
ADDRESS E. P. BEACH, 19 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

TONY BUTLER. A Novel. 8vo, Cloth, $1 50; Paper, $1 00. Just published by HARPER & BROTHERS, N. Y.

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER.

This new celebrated Pistol is the most compact, powerful, and effective Pocket Revolver in the world. It carries the largest ball for the size of the Pistol of any Revolver made. EXTREME LENGTH, 7 INCHES; WEIGHT, 14 OZ.; IN 32 SHOT, 32-INCH BALL.

Its Advantages are:

1st. It is loaded with perfect ease and safety, without removing the cylinder or any part of it, at the front end, and can be discharged without the slightest danger.
2d. The cylinder never fouls; is made from solid steel bored; and can not get out of repair, or clog, as cylinders with loose parts will do.
3d. The strength is made on an improved plan; the fulminate is concentrated in one place, which insures sure fire; the ball is conical, and, in fact, the most effective ball ever made. The most desirable model makes it the most desirable Pocket Revolver made.
FOR SALE BY THE TRADE GENERALLY.
GEO. A. HICKOCK, 54 Cliff Street, New York.

Certificates.
I have used the "National Revolver," and believe it to the best and most convenient revolver ever offered to the public. (Signed) JOHN S. FOLK,
Inspector of Metropolitan Police, N. Y.

I have thoroughly tested the new "National Revolver," and find it an effective weapon, of sure fire and convenient size. And if I were, I think I could with the Pistol kill at every shot. I take pleasure in recommending it as a weapon in every way desirable. In company with Capt. Scott, Provost-Marshall, and other officers, I fired this pistol a large number of times, and not one cartridge failed to explode. (Signed.) JOHN CHARLESTON,
Chief of Police, Natchez, Miss.

We have one of the "National Revolvers" now in use, and pronounce it one of the most perfect things of the kind we have seen. It is simple, durable, convenient, effective, sure fire, and shoots with the force and accuracy of a rifle. Any one in want of a good and reliable weapon can do no better than procure a "National Revolver."
(Signed) J. V. N. TALMAGE,
Editor and Proprietor "New Era."

We, the undersigned, have tested and thoroughly tested the National Revolvers, have no hesitancy in saying that, for accuracy, force, and convenience, we think they are far superior to any other Revolver yet produced.
M. C. LOGHLIN, with J. G. and W. J. Averell.
GEO. KING, Chief of Police, Ogdensburg.
J. H. PARKER, Lieutenant-Colonel.

Ask any Newsdealer for a copy of Dawley's New War Novels. If he has not got them, tell him to send for them.
No. 1. MOSBY, THE GUERILLA.
No. 2. PAULINE, THE FEMALE SPY.
No. 3. SEMMES, THE PIRATE.
No. 4. KILLBUCK, THE INDIAN SCOUT.
No. 5. OSCEOLA, THE DENON REFUGEE.
Illustrated covers. Price 25 cents each. Postage free. 25c. A great discount to the trade by the 100 or 1000. Also DAWLEY'S TENPENNY NOVELS.
No. 1. The Two Rivals. By Dr. Darkness Dick. No. 2. The Freebooter's Prize. No. 4. Speaking-Rifle, the Indian-Slayer. No. 5. Ned Hazel, the Boy Miner. No. 6. The Dead Boxer. Best Bride. No. 7. Gerard, the Lion-Killer. No. 8. The Two Pirate Boys. Illustrated covers. Price 10c. Postage free. Also with imprint of dealer in paint-pots. T. B. DAWLEY, Publisher, 12 Park Row, New York.

UNCLAIMED MONEY.—30,000 PERSONS WANTED TO CLAIM MONEY, ESTATES, &c., which have been advertised since 1794. Fee in advance. Send for Registry. $2. Genealogies traced. All letters must be prepaid. GUN & CO., Unclaimed Money and Property Registry, No. 17 Charlotte Street, London (W.C.), England.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.
Magnifying small objects 500 times. Sent free by express for 50 CENTS, or THREE FOR $1 00.
Address C. BOWEN, Box 198, Boston, Mass.

Philadelphia Photographic Company,
730 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, manufacture a large variety of card photographs for trade. Send for catalogue.

"Cast all thy cares on God: That anchor holds."

ENOCH ARDEN, the poem from which the above quotation is taken, is given complete in a neat pamphlet, containing three fine drawings by DARLEY and Portrait and Sketch of the Author. Price only 25 cents.
For sale by all booksellers, or sent post-paid on receipt of price by the publishers.
TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston, Mass.

$150 A MONTH made by DISCLOSED SOLDIERS and others with STENCIL TOOLS. Don't fail to send for our free catalogue, containing full particulars. Address S. M. SPENCER, Brattleboro, Vt.

The Novelty Microscope, for examining Living Insects, Seed, Flowers, Cloth, Paper, Bank Bills, &c., is mailed, pre-paid, for $3 00, by HENRY CRAIG, 193 Canal Street, New York. Discount to Dealers.

Heard in Words, the World of Spirits and Hell, from Things Seen and Heard," by DANIEL SWEDENBORG, is mailed, pre-paid, for $1 25, by REV. J. F. STUART, Cooper Institute, New York.

N. Y. PIANO-FORTE
COMPANY.
Grand and Square Pianos, superior to all others,
No. 204 Hudson Street, New York.

BENJ. F. KENDALL,
BROKER IN
PETROLEUM STOCKS,
No. 52 Wall Street, N. Y.

Ask your Father
To subscribe for the charming New Magazine called

Our Young Folks
and have it sent to your address. It is specially devoted to the amusement and instruction of Boys and Girls, and is filled with interesting Stories, Sketches, and Poems, by the best authors, and illustrated with Fine Engravings. Terms, $2 00 per year; to clubs much less. Send 20 cents, for a specimen number, to TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston, Mass.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. IX.—No. 431.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 1, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

THE BATTLES IN PROSPECT.

SHERMAN has promenaded Georgia and South Carolina. The rebels have retired before him from Augusta, from Savannah, from Charleston, from Georgetown, from Wilmington and Kinston, concentrating as they have fallen back. The days of long marches are over, and the days of sharp conflict are already begun. The elements have been hurtling and combining, and now comes the storm. When SHERMAN'S columns were five hundred miles distant from where they are marshaled to-day the prospect was so vague and shadowy that the vain boasting and confidence of Richmond editors did not seem the farce which to-day it seems. The match was a long way from the powder which it is now about to explode. Panic knows no law, but it is not therefore always unreasonable. It is not wonderful that, with two grand armies—like those of GRANT and SHERMAN—between the Cape Fear and the James, and already in co-operation, and with SHERIDAN rough-riding at his leisure about the Confederate capital, destroying three months' supplies in as many days, and cutting off both the line of retreat westward and of a possible march northward, DAVIS sends a frantic, clamorous message to the rebel Congress, betraying his sensitiveness of the peril at hand, and calling for men and provisions, which he knows are inaccessible, and for the suspension of the law of habeas corpus, which he knows will do him no good. It is not remarkable that those in Richmond who happen at such a time to have gold are reluctant to let it go, nor that the people generally have given themselves up a prey to their apprehensions.

A series of decisive battles can not long be delayed. LEE will probably precipitate these battles himself. To stand on the defensive is to invite defeat. He must take the initiative, and trust to strategy for the result. His most promising scheme would be to rapidly and stealthily reinforce JOHNSTON very heavily, and then falling upon SHERMAN endeavor to repeat the success gained on the first day of the battle of Shiloh. He would strive to do this before SHERMAN'S arrangements for a base are permanently established. But it must be remembered that SHERMAN has fought but little on his long march, and has plenty of ammunition to carry on a great battle. He will soon be firmly established on the line of the Neuse with an army equal to any which by any possible combination can be brought against him.

If, however, LEE and JOHNSTON decline attack, they will yet be forced to an engagement by the necessities of hunger. Standing still or retreating their communications are at our mercy; and in a battle they must fight at a disadvantage against men equal in courage and determination, and superior in strength and discipline to themselves. Were it not for those rebels who have already lost all, and who therefore listen only to the suggestions of pride or despair, we might hope that now at length reason would resume her sway and prompt to loyal submission.

GENERAL SHERMAN'S ENTRY INTO COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA, FEBRUARY 17, 1865.

THE SONG OF KILPATRICK'S TROOPERS.

Up from the ground at break of day,
When the bugle's note is heard,
From the cold, hard ground, where all night we lay,
To rise with the waking bird.
Right merrily our sabres ring
As we scour along on our steeds;
Oh, true and trict are the hearts of those Whom the brave Kilpatrick leads!

Away, away, o'er the plain we go,
Away on our steeds so fleet!
Ah, well the foeman's path we know
By the print of the foeman's feet!
So on we ride with our sabres ring
A merrily sounding tune,
By field and river and wooded steep
To the halt when the comes with noon.

And then in the forest's welcome shade,
'Neath the pine-trees dark and high,
We rest till the burning heat is past
From the Southern noonday sky.
Then up and away o'er the rolling plain,
Away on our gallant steeds!
What foe is there whom we would not dare
When the brave Kilpatrick leads?

Of Northern steel our good blades are,
Our carbines are true of aim;
The Southern rebel horn with dread
The sound of our leader's name.
Oh, wild is the life we troopers live,
But a merrier none may know,
To scour the plain on our gallant steeds
In search of the traitorous foe!

And when on the battle-field we meet,
And loud on the echoing air
The bugles sound, and quick in the sun
Our blades gleam bright and bare,
Away we go at the one word charge,
With a cheer, at the flying foe,
While the bullets sing, and our scabbards ring,
And the bugles loudly blow!

Oh, long shall the tale of our deeds be told
When this cruel war shall cease,
On winter even, by the glowing hearth,
When the land shall be blessed with peace
And long shall live in the hearts of all
Our valiant leader's fame,
And our children lisp with their infant lips
The brave Kilpatrick's name.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, APRIL 1, 1865.

PARTIES AT THE SOUTH.

FROM the glimpses opened by SHERMAN, and furnished also by the rebel journals, and the message of JEFFERSON DAVIS, it is not difficult to understand the condition of public sentiment at the South. There is the original fire-eating war-party, of which DAVIS is the gloomy chief. To this belong the mass of the women and the aristocracy of the plantations. The young men of this party are in the army, and the army is controlled by the Richmond cabal. The adherents of this party retire before our advance. They discard their town-houses for the interior, grimly hoping that accumulating disaster may drive every body to their own desperation. Then there is the small party of original Unionists, of whom MR. PETTIGRU was a chief. They have been utterly overpowered, and in the ruder districts remorselessly slaughtered for their fidelity. Besides these there are the Unionists of whom MR. AIKEN is a representative; those whose sympathies are entirely Southern but who through accession a dangerous minority. Beyond these is the great party of those who acquiesce in the situation whatever it may be; who submit quietly to the rule of the rebellion, and with equal passivity to that of the Government.

In addition to these there are the slaves, who are much the largest party of all. They are the most faithful of the whole population of the Southern States. Despite their ignorance, and the cruel falsehoods of the rebel chiefs, they know perfectly well that the Yankees are their friends. Notwithstanding the criminal blunders of Generals HALLECK and MCCLELLAN, a sure instinct leads the slaves true to us. The best information for our armies and fleets comes from them. Escaping Union soldiers, whether in Louisiana, Georgia, Carolina, or Virginia, make straight for the negro quarters. There they are fed, cheered, and guided. One officer, making his way through the heart of the rebel region to our lines, traveled two hundred miles without seeing a white man. He went by night and was passed along to freedom by friendly black hands. The slaves have been the chief tax upon the rebel fortifications. They speak freely of it; but they have one answer when asked what they will do if they are armed by the rebels. They will shoot them. The slave-masters are not ignorant of this, and therefore they are opposed to arming them. It is the same knowledge which made LEE's Adjutant-General declare that the opinions of the soldier would not impair his military efficiency, if only discipline were severe enough. In other words, this wisecre thinks that a man will fight just as well for his slavery as his liberty if he is only drilled sufficiently.

In all our meditations upon reconstruction we must constantly remember these various groups. The fire-eaters and those who have been conspicuous in rebellion will always retain a certain hate of the Union and Government. But they will be the smallest element of the population, and constantly dwindle by exile as they have been destroyed by the war. They will be the most dangerous political allies, because they will constantly compromise any party with which they may act. The Alien Unionists and the acquiescers will be disposed to co-operate with their old political friends as the North. But the true Union men of the South, of whom JOHNSON and the Blairs and Brownlow are the noblest representatives, will accept with all their hearts the new conditions of the country, and become the active power in the Southern reconstruction, as the fire-eaters were in the Southern rebellion. With these must be counted the late slaves, the great laboring population. They will be enfranchised, we have little doubt. By the sagacity of the new party in the Southern States as a permanent security against reaction. When that is done, there will be no more "natural antipathy" to the African than to the Asian, or to the European. The rebels have discovered that a colored man is as good as any other if he will only fight for them. We will find that he is no worse than others if he will only vote with us.

The work of reconstruction will be done by those who are in earnest, both at the North and South. And as the vast cloud of ignorance which has overshadowed the whole South scatters and lifts, and the people are enabled to see their country and understand their Government, they will have touched the bottom of the slough in which slavery and State sovereignty had plunged them.

A LITTLE EFFORT.

THE little effort of the rebel chiefs in Richmond, in concert with their sympathizing organs in New York, to make it appear that the Government is averse to peace, is amusing and natural, but not plausible.

DAVIS and the Copperheads know perfectly well that under no circumstances will the Government of the United States treat with any agent of the rebels, civil or military, as the representative of a nation or of a legitimate separate government. If DAVIS or LEE, or any rebel soldier or civilian, has more to say than that the rebellion is a failure, he can have peace by submitting to the authority of his lawful Government. There has never been any other condition, and there never will be. If General LEE should write to General GRANT that he wishes to cease his resistance to the laws, and acknowledge the national authority, no doubt they would at once accept his surrender. But when LEE writes a letter, as he did on the 2d of March, speaking of armngements and negotiations, General GRANT properly replies that he is a soldier, and that his business is suppression of the rebellion by force of arms.

DAVIS and the New York friends lose their pains. The case is clear. The "negotiation" policy has been fully exposed. It was the attempt of DAVIS to get the Northern people to gain the chance of saying that the Government were resolved upon reducing him and his fellow-citizens of "the Confederacy" to submission, and to give his Northern allies the opportunity of denouncing the Government as barring the door to peace. Oh no! The Government holds it open. It says to DAVIS: Submit to the authority of the laws, it says, and you shall have peace. Until you do submit you shall not.

DAVIS ASKS TO BE DICTATOR.

IN the doomed city of Richmond JEFFERSON DAVIS still plays the part of chief. He has sent another message to the remains of the rebel Congress. He says in it that "our country is in danger," and that the "capital is in greater danger than it has been at any time during the war." He then proceeds to ask the Congress to completo by law the military despotism over which he presides.

We must have money, he says. The mint must be paid. It should be paid in coin. The proper officers report that the accumulations of the mint will supply the army for the remainder of the year. Pass a law to make the coin available. Let no seize the gold for the army.

The impressment law is found to be tedious and uncertain in its operation. Sometimes owners of property refuse to part with it. Let the supplies be estimated at their value in coin. Give the obligation of the Government to pay in coin when it can. Then pass a law to let me impress provisions for the army.

Congress, he adds, has been very foolishly in not increasing taxation. It has also been very dilatory in passing the act to raise negro troops. Besides this "a law of a few lines repealing all class exemptions" would enable me to put every man into the field, and to have the papers edited by my tools and all the civil service performed by my own creatures.

We need a new militia law, says DAVIS, which shall override that of the States. One Governor informs me that he has not the power to call out the militia in one county for service in another. Such State rights are folly.

I wish also, he continues, to have the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus suspended. If this is ever to be done, now is the time. Suppend it at once. He concludes by saying that General ORD told General LONGSTREET that there might be a chance of settling "the present unhappy difficulties" by an informal conference between General GRANT and General LEE; and then goes on like Colonel Sellech General LEE proposed such a conference, General GRANT replied that he had no authority to act. It remains only then, says DAVIS, to commend our sacred cause to God and our own valor. Pass the laws I recommend; then go home and encourage the people.

That the rebel Congress would put all the military power and food of their section at the disposition of JEFFERSON DAVIS—that they would allow him the absolute control of every person, either to put into the army or into prison at his pleasure—and thus by law make him what he asks to be, absolute Dictator, was hardly to be anticipated. They have declined to do any thing he asks, and have gone home.

His message will be an authorized cry of despair to DAVIS's foreign supporters. How JOHN SUELL will chuckle that, while DAVIS has had all the bitterness and anxiety and struggle, he has performed his part of the rebellion in Paris, in a country ensconced in airy apartments, tranquilly trundling on pleasant afternoons in the Bois de Boulogne, gambling a little in the Bourse occasionally, with his money quite secure from his friend DAVIS's tax-gatherers, and his precious person safe from a very doubtful habeas corpus. History will record that SUELL was the shrewdest rebel of them all.

THE HEALTH OF NEW YORK.

A NEW YORKER contemplates his city with complacency. He moves among the busy streets down town, passes up Broadway, and looks with pride upon the long ranges of stately houses that line Fifth Avenue and Madison Square. It is a very beautiful city, he says to himself, with satisfaction; and if the population is not so large as that of some European cities, it is at least nearly a million of people, who are remarkably comfortable.

That is certainly a just inference from the parts of the city of which he have spoken. But if in the complacency the observer will hear a few facts about the parts and people of the city that he has not seen in Wall Street, Broadway, or the Fifth Avenue, he will walk a little less proudly and speak more humbly.

Of this population, then, 78,000 live in damp, dark, dreary cellars, often under water, always in the foul neighborhood of sinks, overcrowded, and reeking with filth and mortal disease. There is never sound health in them, and the constant sickness-rate ranges from 75 to 90 per cent.

Of this population 500,000 live in tenant-houses. These buildings are of two classes—front and rear. Between them is the well-hole, as it is called, for the sinks and cesspools, from which the disgusting odor constantly penetrates every recess of the buildings with sickness and death. In every hideous form of misery and vice, hunger, murder, lust, and despair, are found in every corner. There is nothing that strikes human nature repulsive or inhuman that is not available that does not abound in these tenant-houses.

It has been estimated by careful investigators that 17 in 1000 die annually in these dens of infection. This may be taken as the necessary death-rate under the most favorable conditions of life. But the City Inspector's records in the city of New York show that for the 11 years preceding 1860, excepting 1854, the year of the cholera, the death-rate was never below 33 in 1000; the average was 33 in 1000, or nearly twice the necessary rate; and twice it exceeded 40 in 1000. So if we take the lowest rate, that of 28 in 1000, New York annually lost by preventable deaths 11 in 1000 of her population, or more than 7000 yearly, making for the whole period 77,000 preventable deaths. Now need we make our consciences with the reflection that we are no worse off than other great cities; for, while during the ten years from 1850 to 1860 London lost exclusively 165, the death-rate of New York was 33 in 1000, that of London was 22, and that of Philadelphia only 20. Yet year after year the City Inspector of New York solemnly returns that New York is one of the healthiest cities in the world, and smug New Yorkers take his word for it!

But if we look a little closer we find that the terrible death-rate is in the tenant-house region. The Seventeenth Ward has the natural rate of 17 in 1000, but in the Fourth and Sixth wards the death-rate is 40 in 1000. Of course, such a still closer glance it appears that, while the average rate in the Sixth Ward is about 40, the mortality of the large tenant-houses is as high as 60 or 70 in 1000.

"The evidence," says Dr. STEPHEN SMITH, in his remarks before the Joint Committee of the Senate and Assembly, from which we take these facts, "proves that at least half a million of its population [the city of New York] are literally submerged in filth, and half-stifled in an atmosphere charged with all the elements of death.....It is a city without any sanitary government."

It is here that the work of reform must begin. Moral, intellectual, political progress is impossible until a wise sanitary system is secure. Starving, sick, vicious, despairing men, who live in noisome dens in which human souls die, will neither think, act, vote, nor pray rightly. So long as their physical degradation continues so long their souls will be imbruted. While half of the population of the city lies in filth and breathe poison so long the taxes will steadily increase, so long the city will continue to be burdened with ferocious classes who endanger its peace and prosperity, so long the politics of the State will be a contest between the ignorance and vice of the city and the intelligence and well-being of the country; and so long every infamous public crime, whether it be slavery, filibustering, riotous resistance to the laws, or open rebellion, will find its vigorous supporters among the squalid and vicious population of this city. Appeals to the passions, ignorance, and prejudice of this class are the entire political stock in trade of men like FERNANDO WOOD. Purify the stews of New York, and you annihilate such public enemies at once.

The labor of any citizens' association, addressed directly to political reform in this city, is best before it begins. Lay the axe at the root. Spend your money to make it penal to live underground. Begin by giving every body a decent and fresh air. Remember that half had a cellar population of 20,000, and a special ordinance, which forbade living below the street, lifted the great mass into better houses and elevated the morality of the city. Compel the landlords of the tenant-houses to keep them in good repair, to ventilate them thoroughly, to fill them with pure water, to purify the sinks, to remove garbage, and enforce cleanliness among the tenants. When once we have given these poor people a chance of life they will wish to live decently. As their physical condition improves all other improvement becomes possible. But one thing is certain, so long as filth and disease and a death-rate of 60 or 70 in 1000 are the portion of half of the population, so long corruption and imbecility will be our governors.

DAVIS AND LEE.

JEFFERSON DAVIS is evidently no longer the chief personage in the rebellion. As President and constitutional Commander-in-Chief he has the superiority of position, but among rebels whose sole hope is the army, the actual commander, when beloved and trusted as LEE is, is the true master. Doubtless at a word of LEE's DAVIS would fall from power unpitied, and LEE be saluted Dictator with universal consent and enthusiasm.

The reason is plain. JEFFERSON DAVIS is an old politician, and a cold, hard, unsentimental man. His person has excited every and ancient dislikes, and with the evident failure of the rebellion which he has conducted, all opposition becomes more bitter and hatred and contempt. No new man in his place but must have aroused immense hostility, while an old political leader brought with him the full budget of a lifetime of odd to those he daily kindled. Nor is there any thing in DAVIS's character or manner to relieve, in failure, the jealousy, suspicion, and antipathy which, even if successful, he could not have escaped.

The sunshine of success would have gilded the defects of LEE. But in the dark hour of so prolonged and terrible a struggle as this has been—when the earlier lights of victory are going out in utter gloom—when the whole part of their terrible accomplied and paralyzed, and the general apathy and despair of the population foretell their certain failure—the rebels who still hold out must cling with entire faith and devotion to a soldier who has shared all the personal dangers of their enterprise, who had no political antecedents, who was the object of their sympathies, prayers, and tears, and who seems to them at once a great captain, and a mild, unselfish, patriotic gentleman. All the faults of detail in the administration, all the minor misfortunes and the general disaster, are mercilessly thrown upon the evil and executive head of affairs, while the soldier who might have been fully associated with the popular favorite and military hero. That his heart was not at first with the rebellion; that he is not a secessionist by nature; that he has no signal ability, are considerations of no moment in presence of his apparent modesty and fidelity. The rebels respect only to their military chief. While he remains all is not lost. The very doubt whether they could persuade him to seize supreme power is probably to their rebel minds his highest merit.

Indeed, while DAVIS is to the rebels very much what JAMES MACDONALD was to the Jacobites in England, LEE has all the chivalric charm of Prince CHARLES THE PRETENDER. The romantic devotion which few royalists could feel to the saturnine bigot they could cherish with enthusiasm for the graceful gentleman with no past and—alas! for them—with no future. Thus the fiery TOOMBS, whose guilt in this great crime is black, has a thousand political and personal reasons for which he could never have of LEE.

But if, by any chance, the fate of the rebellion should be left to Lee, he would contemplate the situation as a soldier and not as a fire-eating braggart. Confronted by irresistible combinations and overpowering force he would hardly chatter about the last ditch, but would surrender to save useless suffering. Even should he do otherwise, if the rebel army retreat to the mountains, the apathy of the sea-board and interior population will gradually succumb to the necessity of the case. Men must live: and to live they must work. As industry cannot prosper under a war census, those who have accepted failure may retain a romantic sympathy with those who still contend; but it will be only romance, like the feeling and the toasts of comfortable London Jacobites to the Pretender skirmishing in the Scotch Highlands. The end of the rebellion will be practical. There will be no day when "peace is declared." The embers will long smoulder after the flames are extinguished. But even those who welcomed the fire, when they have rebuilt their houses and begun to plant again, will not wish it to be kindled anew.

TRADE WITH REBELS.

The order of General Grant prohibiting all commercial transactions with the rebels is an act of the plainest common sense. Nothing certainly could well be more absurd for a General in earnest than to suffer Sherman and Sheridan to destroy property and resources in Virginia and Carolina, while he supplied the enemy with money in Louisiana or Georgia. It is a subject upon which faithful Union men have differed. It has been the opinion of some that for every million of dollars the rebels received in exchange for cotton, the Union cause gained five millions of advantage. But a million to the rebels is more valuable than twenty millions to us; and even if it were theoretically probable that those who received the greenbacks would hoard them or invest them beyond the country in the rebellion, it was still practically true that we could never be sure of such a disposition, and that we know how unsparing the rebel army is in impressment.

Nor is the necessary demoralization of such a course to be overlooked. Surely it was a ludicrous illustration of Yankee enterprise to furbish the world to supply rebels against the Government with food and arms, in order that we might monopolize the profits of such a trade. Nothing should we be glad to see more than the rebels know that we had supplied the means to procure the arms with which the enemy was to destroy them? The most shameful and humiliating event in the whole war was the Red River expedition. Is there any body in the country so dull as not to know that it was a trading and not a military expedition?

General Grant is willing and able to fight the enemy, but not to feed him and furnish him with arms and ammunition. The expedition to Fredericksburg and the seizure and destruction of the tobacco was as legitimate a military operation as the battle of Chancellorville. But in the latter case the rebels won a victory; in the former we prevented their winning one. And General Banks declares that the misrepresentations of a censor in Louisiana are daily originally from traders, whose transactions he would not tolerate. The deadly injury that this trade has already done, by the aid it has rendered to the rebellion, is undeniable, and General Grant adds to his claims to national gratitude by peremptorily stopping it.

A DANIEL COME TO JUDGMENT.

On the 11th of March, 1861, the Constitution of "the Confederate States of America" was adopted at Montgomery. It began by setting forth the doctrine of State sovereignty as the foundation of the Confederacy. "We, the people of the Confederate States, each State acting in its sovereign and independent character," etc., etc. Here was a deliberate renunciation of the principle of national union of which our Government is the first example in history. It was a recurrence to that modified union, that ghost of nationality, that hopeless shift of divided sovereignty against which the old Confederation and the universal experience of mankind protested. But supreme State sovereignty the rebel chiefs would have, and they would begin to build their fire upon the back of the whale. "That is no island," cried history; "we have tried it, and it is only a whale." "Pooh!" retorted the gallant gentlemen, "do you pretend to teach us who have had Calhoun for our master?" And they made the fire hotter and hotter. Suddenly the whale dived, and they are left wallowing.

They have learned by their own experience what they refused to learn from that of the world, that fire burns, that when each State acts in its sovereign and independent character there is no nation, and the league is just as strong as the weakest State, and no stronger.

This is the unpleasant but unhesitating confession made by the Richmond Enquirer, the chief rebel paper, just four years after the solemn proclamation of the absurdity at Montgomery: "Has not State sovereignty been the weakness of the cause? If, during the life-and-death struggle, with the compress of a common danger to bind and hold together these States, this principle of State sovereignty was continually obtruding itself, delaying and preventing the legislation necessary to the successful conduct of war, impairing that authority intrusted with the general welfare, and impeding the execution of laws necessary and proper to the success of the cause, is it to be supposed that, when peace returns, this principle of State sovereignty will permit the Confederacy to exist one year?..... The conduct of certain States, in opposition to the laws passed for the organization of the army and the preservation of discipline, has caused many to question whether their long-defended doctrine of State sovereignty, and to come to the conclusion that, while in theory it is beautiful and true, in practice it is utterly defective."

This was exactly what Washington and Hamilton said eighty years ago, and the American people, believing them, utterly and forever renounced the insane theory of State sovereignty, and established National sovereignty. If our fathers had not been a great deal wiser than their reverent children at the South, this Government could never have made the rebellion which would have conquered any other Government in the world. We have proved the inestimable value and the enduring strength of union. The rebels have illustrated the weakness and folly of federation. State sovereignty is nearly as dead as slavery.

JOHN McLENAN.

The name of John McLenan, who recently died at the age of thirty-nine, was familiar to all lovers of American humorous and characteristic illustration, and especially to readers of Harper's Weekly, in which many of the most amusing and satiric cuts were from his pencil. With great facility of force and a shrewd vein of comedy, Mr. McLenan united a sincere love of his art and a generous ambition to excel. Many of his illustrations in "Vanity Fair," "Punch," and "Judy" were full of character and spirit, that of Count Fosco, especially, accurately reproducing the intention of Wilkie Collins's wonderful study. In "Sam Dale" and "Fisher's River Sketches," and it is in the multitude of such works that his name will be pleasantly remembered.

AN ERROR CORRECTED.

The London Review, in a recent notice of Artemus Ward's book, gravely remarks: "At the present time his lectures are the rage." And William Cullen Bryant, the poet, writes of him in the New York Evening Post: "Artemus has a style of his own, which no lecturer has yet followed. He says so many funny things that the audience sometimes let a "gosh" [joke] slip by unnoticed, and then Artemus will pause for another to burst in downcast expression, till a sudden guffaw tells him that somebody has seen the point." This is a mode of authorship entirely unknown to the many new to us. We do not know how it may be in London, but in this country an entire journal is not written by one hand. It may be unknown to the London Review to know that Mr. Bryant does not write all the advertisements, nor compose the whole of the political and social and literary and scientific reviews, nor all reports of lectures, speeches, and sermons, which appear in the Evening Post. We presume that many of the faithful readers of the Tribune in the rural districts suppose that the caustic criticisms upon literature which appear in the columns of that journal are written by Mr. Greeley. The ground of the supposition is that the Tribune is "Greeley's paper." But even the most British and rural friends who cherish this idea, that every leading journal has a full and well-appointed "staff" of writers, and Mr. Bryant and Mr. Greeley are all in "letters from the people" which appear in the Post, nor Mr. Greeley the novels of Charles Reade and Trollope, which have been published in the Weekly Tribune.

JULIUS CÆSAR.

The London papers are full of Louis Napoleon's "History of Julius Cæsar." Under the present circumstances, will be one of the most notable books of the time. The Harpers have bought the early sheets, and it is now printing. Meanwhile the press, and will be issued immediately in a handsome form. The English notices treat the work as a significant political manifesto. It is in fact, as the preface already published here shows, a defense of imperialism by an Imperialist. Cæsarism is identified with the Napoleonic idea, and the Napoleonic idea is that might is right. The historical value of the book is undoubtedly great, for it has unquestionably had the scrutiny and approval of the most accomplished scholars in France. Even the Emperor could not dare to be an historian in any other form. The English notices treat the work as a significant political manifesto. It is in fact, as the preface already published here shows, a defense of imperialism by an Imperialist. Cæsarism is identified with the Napoleonic idea, and the Napoleonic idea is that might is right. The historical value of the book is undoubtedly great, for it has unquestionably had the scrutiny and approval of the most accomplished scholars in France. Even the Emperor could not dare to be an historian in any other form. The work has had in the preparation all the advantages that unlimited expense could secure, and is issued with corresponding pomp of typography.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

REPORT OF SECRETARY STANTON.

Secretary Stanton has at length submitted his report. He has been waiting, he says, for the Lieutenant-General's report, which has not been received for the simple reason that that officer has too much work to do to make reports. We make the following extract:

"The military events of the past year have been officially published by this Department from time to time as they transpired, and are fully known in every branch of this Government and throughout the civilized world. They constitute a series of successful marches, sieges, and battles, attesting the endurance and courage of the soldiers of the United States, and the gallantry and military skill of their commanders, unrivaled in the history of nations.

"The campaign of the Army of the Potomac, and the operations on the James River, the Appomattox, and around Richmond and Petersburg; the masterly operations of our army in Georgia, resulting in the capture of Atlanta, Savannah, and other important military posts in that State; the reduction of Fort Fisher and the harbor of Mobile; the hard-fought battles at Franklin and around Nashville, resulting in the total defeat of the rebel army; the successes of brilliant victories won by the Army of the Cumberland; the successful storming of Fort Fisher; the capture of Wilmington, Columbia, and Charleston, and other important events, have all contributing to the triumph of the Union cause and the suppression of the rebellion. The military power destroyed and the organizing in the report of the Lieutenant-General.

"Over two hundred guns captured from the rebels have been received, properly labeled, and deposited for safe-keeping.

"The work of preparing official reports of battles, etc., for printing, in accordance with the resolution of Congress of May 19, 1864, is progressing as rapidly as possible, and all officers from whom such reports are due have been called upon for them.

"Ordnance supplies furnished to the military service during the fiscal year include 1141 pieces of ordnance, 1,030,000 small-arms and cutlasses, 650,000 small-arms, 802,044 sets of accoutrements and harness, 1,913,793 projectiles for cannon, 1,749,000 pounds of fixed and loaded, 464,540 rounds of artillery ammunition, 250,067 sets of horse equipments, 12,061,000 cartridges for small-arms, 7,544,044 pounds of gunpowder. These supplies were in addition to large quantities of parts provided for repairs in the field.

"The Commissary-General of Subsistence reports that the supplies of subsistence stores have been mostly purchased in the markets of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Cincinnati, Louisville, Chicago, and St. Louis. But certain articles are furnished by contract of short duration at most convenient places, and driven from the places of purchase to the front. All the stores were purchased by advertising, accepting the lowest bids offered for suitable articles as such proposals. Attempts have in some cases been made by individuals and associations to monopolize and control the prices of articles required by the Subsistence Bureau, thereby creating much difficulty.

"The number of troops in the service, and also whole some food, and large numbers of prisoners and suffering Union refugees have been furnished with subsistence. Generally the contractors and others have faithfully complied with their contracts, and no difficulty exists in this branch of the service, with but few exceptions, have performed their duties with fidelity and zeal, and to the satisfaction of the Department.

"The clothing for the year ending June 30, 1864, fully authorized and required by the service, and no monthly accounts have been examined and referred to the Treasury Department.

"The mobility of the armies has increased. The opinion, lately and generally held, that in the earlier history of the rebellion, that an army could not be maintained except by transportation on railroads, has been entirely and fully refuted by such marches those of General Sherman from Chattanooga, Georgia, to the sea, back to Pittsburg, from Memphis to Knoxville, and back to Decatur, at a time when railroads were not in operation; that of General Burnside from Cincinnati and Louisville, through Southeastern Kentucky to Knoxville; that of Lieutenant-General Grant from Washington to Petersburg, and the march of General Sheridan from Atlanta toward the coast."

THE BATTLE OF KINSTON.

On the 25th of February General Palmer, in command of the district of Newbern, North Carolina, with orders from General Schofield for an advance on Kinston, North Carolina, leaving a force in the Neuse, about 10 miles below Goldsborough. Between Kinston and Newbern the road crosses Southwest Creek, a narrow and deep stream. The enemy was supposed to make a stubborn defense at Kinston, and for that purpose had thrown a strong force across Southwest Creek from Lee's army to that point. This force is estimated at 5,000 men. General Cox arrived on the 8th and took command of the Federal column advancing from Newbern.

The next day was occupied in skirmishing, chiefly with cavalry, in which the enemy were constantly driven back. Cox's advance line, and taking over a thousand prisoners. On the 10th Colonels Comstock and Beardsley—formerly Massachusetts. Three guns also were captured. This occupied Kinston and Wyse Fork Station. Lee's force on the rebels attacked and were repulsed with heavy loss. Meanwhile the enemy had begun to fall back on the 10th, and Kinston was abandoned, the enemy falling back on Goldsborough. On the 14th Cox's force in front of Kinston was nearly equal. General Schofield occupied Kinston on the 15th.

NEWS ITEMS.

General Sheridan, on the successive raid up the Valley and along the James, not being able to cross that river, destroyed the railroad and canal boats north of Richmond, and at last accounts had nearly succeeded in joining General Grant on the left by way of Bor. White House.

The rebel Congress, on the 18th inst., among its very last acts, passed a bill empowering Jeff. Davis to call to arms the gold in the banks for the purchase of supplies. Missouri. By this means the State of Virginia will be still put into Davis's hands about two millions of gold. equivalent to one month's duty military raised of currency.

The rebel Congress also passed the act suspending the writ of habeas corpus, the Senate having reconsidered its previous action, by which the bill was defeated. This, nearly all of Jeff Davis's requirements, as set forth in his late Message, have been accomplished.

An important general order from General Pope is published, which is the first step toward giving practical effect to the views of his recent letter to the Governor of Missouri. By this order it seems as unfortunately that is received from Governor Fletcher of the re-establishment of the courts and the election of officers in county districts, the pronunciences exercise of martial law there shall cease; Provost Marshals will have immediately released from all duties except those strictly military.

On the 16th Mr. Dudley, the accredited French Minister at Washington, and M. Dano Minister at Mexico. The Fall River Steamboat Line is conformity with public opinion in France, the Emperor Napoleon will leave Mexico to be dealer to the people as Prince Regent have returned.

A new ministry has been formed in Portugal, with the Duke de Sesia as President of the Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs, and the Marquis de Ss Da Bandeira as Minister of War.

HUMORS OF THE DAY

ONE FOR THE EMPEROR.

(Overtaken upon the Champs Elysées, Paris, Act I. Scene 2.

"Who is it in the Press?"—Julius Cæsar.

The American Flag Re-quartered.—Whether the South be ever restored, as a component part of the Union, it is clear that the Negro will. When the Stars shine again, the Stripes will have disappeared.

An eloquent "reverend" gentleman, who says eccentric things in his sermons, recently pleaded out to his "auditors" that "the Lord had graciously made people extraordinary fools and worldly, forgetting religion, and he therefore concluded by a prayer that his audience might never become respectable.

The Gas Companies' Lawyer.—Coke.

Collecting the Rents.—A Roman Catholic clergyman residing near Limerick has the benevolent fancy of carrying out Gospel precept and thread with him, and either gutting the tattered to sew up their clothes, or in cases of obstinacy with all himself.

The Gown of Manhood—His wife's.

A Historical Parallel.—Some people object to parallel when the Imperial author of the Life of Julius evidently intends to draw between ingenious and subject. The likeness will be more clearly seen, if the name be written—as it should be.—"Seizer."

On the word parliament.

"The lords word comes only from parler, to speak,
As best etymologists trace;
We pay the price for a parle, and nothing is wanter;
Too often the truth of the case."

A Thought in the Dark.—What an aggravating reason it is to assert your most pressing creditor driving a pair of dun ponies.

Heroic Retirement (by Louis Napoleon).—"Caesar and Henry very much alike: 'quitting Henry IV.'"

The difference between the married and divorced is exceedingly slight, consisting merely of the exchange of a couple of letters, the married being united, and the divorced united.

Waits of Rebs.—Marriage contracts.

A Dramatic Question.—Why is a short-hand writer like a husband of Imogen?—Because he's a-symbolic (symbolizing).

An art auction at Cork, recently, a lady and gentleman, who were so placed that they could not see each other, kept up the bidding for an article after all the other competitors had given it. What was his surprise when the gentleman stopped her with exclamation against his wife!

Model for a Painter.—A man of color.

What Religion is a Mute?—He is a Sadducee (sad-you-see).

How to Keep on Good Terms with Creditors.—Pay them.

Post-office Query.—How many letters would a fellow have to put into the post before he may be said to have "got in a mess?"

"Dennis, my boy," said an English schoolmaster to his Hibernian pupil, "I fear I shall make nothing of you." "Yis, yer honor," answered Pat, "I'm afeard I will." "And the quick-witted lad, "isn't it myself that's always being after telling you that same for th' last two years, and the newspapers that 'no Irish need apply,' at all, at all?"

Outlandish.—An old bachelor being asked by a poet young lady to give a friend account for the application of the term belle to handsome young ladies, promptly replied that it was owing to the goodly proportion of brass in their composition.

"William, what part of speech is the word 'egg?'" "Why, sir, I don't know." "Don't know?" "Can't say, sir," said the quick-witted lad, "isn't it myself that's always being after telling you that same for th' last two years, and the newspapers that 'no Irish need apply,' at all, at all?"

LOVE.

Love is a comical thing,
And yet it sometimes stirs;
Thrill make a man whistle and sing
When he ought to be saying his prayers.

Love is a comical thing,
The rose of all evil, I'm told;
Gray hairs it will frequently bring
Prematurely, before we are old.

Love is a comical thing,
It induces a fellow to spoon;
And oft it will worry us when
We have can't get one cadence in tune.

Love is a comical thing,
And it comes on one all unawares;
From the lodging we take to the king
All rest and repose it impairs.

Love is a comical thing,
And is frequently said in a knot,
That I glibly, carelessly sing,
If I marry just I'll be shot.

Art Anecdote.—One of those intimates whose secure footing allows them to mention the foibles of friends, remarks to our Gay Cynic that Mr. Church shuns observation. "No," said the prosperous painter, "I'm like Napoleon the Great. I've little really cash in my pocket, but I can draw for thousands."

What is Matrimony?—A long engagement in which the parties have to wait for the mastery—the woman being generally the ring-leader.

Motto for Banting.—Eat it Fast!

A Rent in the Clouds.—Two dollars per week for lodgings in a top-garret with a sky-light.

Swift Disposition.—The rapidity with which fresh eggs go a-begging.

A Chronatic Conundrum.—What is the color of a scream?—Yell-ow, of course!

Dear Stalkers.—Those ladies who still come out in the Spring.

An elderly maiden, meeting a newly-married man, who had once been her servant, carrying home a cradle, exclaimed, "Why, John, you are carrying home a cradle!" "No, madam," replied John, "this be only the fruit-basket."

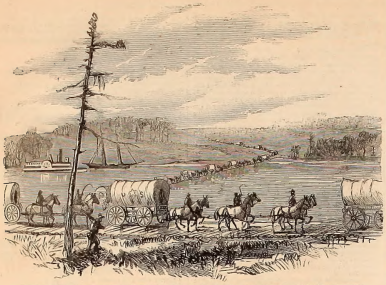
Lay on.—A retired actor, with a fondness for poultry, was asked why he named a favorite hen "Macduff?" He replied that it was because she would have to "lay on."

What tune would a person whistle who had been stealing milk? "Robin Adair," eh? (Robbin' a dairy!!!)

Lucky Infantry Movement.—Agitating a cradle with a baby in it. This kind of movement is principally practiced in the early hours of morning.

"The Gentleness of the Long Rebe."—Baby-boy, before they are shortened.

The public lecturer who dwelt upon a topic has changed his residence.



Wanted for chemical purposes—a lady "dissolved in tears."

The climax of human indifference has arrived when a man does not care how the stock.

A bird that always taxes the stem—The weather-cock.

An Irishman's Telescope.—A gentleman remarked one day to an Irishman that the science of optics was now brought to such perfection that by the aid of a telescope, which he had just purchased, he could discern objects at an incredible distance. "My dear fellow," replied the Irishman, "I have one at my house in the County. We'll find what will be a match for it; I brought the council of Embassy by so near to my view that I could hear the white waistcoats singing 'God save the King.'"

"Heaven bless the trees, they fill us; bless
With little bees and honey!
They're such a help to any wood our socks,
But—don't they spend the money?"

FOURTEENTH AND TWENTIETH CORPS CROSSING THE SAVANNAH AT SISTER'S FERRY.

THE TWENTIETH CORPS ENTERING BLACKVILLE, SOUTH CAROLINA.

SHERMAN'S MARCH THROUGH THE CAROLINAS.

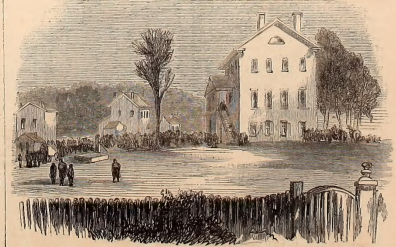
Our readers will remember that at New-Years we filled our illustrated pages with sketches by Mr. THEODORE R. DAVIS, of General SHERMAN'S march through Georgia. Three months have scarcely passed since then, and we now fill our sheet with another series of sketches by the same artist, illustrating General SHERMAN'S march through the Carolinas.

The orders for the march remained the same as in the march from Atlanta. As before, HOWARD had the right wing and SLOCUM the left. The army consisted of four corps—the Fifteenth, General LOGAN; Seventeenth, General BLAIR; Fourteenth, General DAVIS; Twentieth, General WILLIAMS: these were accompanied by KILPATRICK'S division of cavalry.

The right wing, consisting of BLAIR'S and LOGAN'S corps, left Savannah for Beaufort January 16. Four days afterward SLOCUM, with WILLIAMS'S and DAVIS'S corps, started up the Savannah. On the 4th of February HOWARD'S column crossed the Savannah at Sister's Ferry. This column had been delayed by mud and rain and crossed the river with great difficulty. The corduroy roads near the river were almost afloat from the height of the water. In the mean time HOWARD had passed through M'Phersonville, which was burned, and was moving across the Salkehatchie in the face of the enemy. This was effected by troops of General BLAIR'S command; and the following extract from a letter written by HOWARD to BLAIR the next day shows the importance of the movements referred to. He says:

"YOUR FIRST DIVISION, under Major-General MOWER, with almost incredible celerity, cleared Whippy Swamp, seven burned bridges, and the road filled with felled trees; made a successful reconnaissance to BAXTER'S Bridge, forcing the enemy to destroy it, and to defend the causeway; then, aided by the Ninth Illinois mounted infantry, drove back the enemy, reached River's bridges so quickly as to arrest and effectually prevent their destruction. The same division, under the same indomitable leadership, in one day made two infantry roadways through the swamp, a mile and a half in extent, demonstrated strongly on the enemy's fortified front, completely turned his position, and planted itself firmly on the eastern shore of this indescribably ugly Salkehatchie. All this was done in the face of canister, shells, and a sharp, obstinate musketry fire from behind works. Your Fourth Division, under Brevet Major-General GILES A. SMITH, also crossed this wide and troublesome swamp, walking in water above the knee, skirmished successfully with the enemy, and cut off all reinforcements from below, which might have hindered General MOWER'S success."

The movements of the right wing were now very rapid; two positions—Bamburg and Midway—were gained on the Augusta and Charleston Railroad. The rebels had not properly improved their best line of defense, which was the Salkehatchie. The cavalry had already gained Blackville, on the railroad west of Branchville, and was soon followed by the Twentieth Corps. Thus, it will be seen, the left wing was rapidly coming up into position. Several miles of the road west of Branchville were destroyed. This completely isolated Augusta.



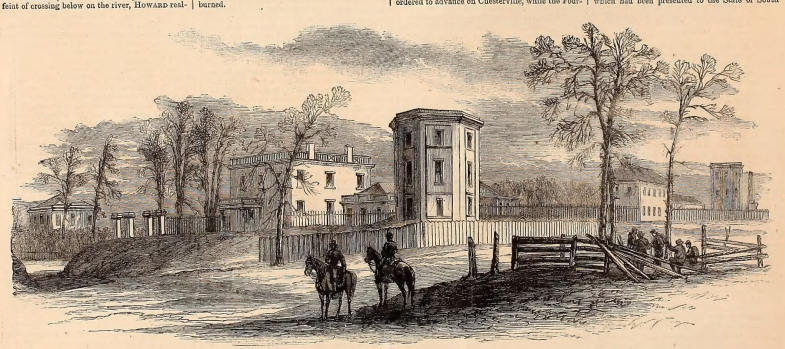
HANGING ROCK, SOUTH CAROLINA.

OLD GOLD MINE NEAR CLIBURNE'S STORE, SOUTH CAROLINA.

THE FOURTEENTH CORPS CROSSING THE CATAWBA AT ROCKY HILL, SOUTH CAROLINA.

THE TWENTIETH CORPS ENTERING CHESTERFIELD, MARCH 3, 1865.

WINNSBOROUGH, SOUTH CAROLINA.



GENERAL MOWER FIRING THE BLAKELY GUN ACROSS THE PEDEE.

By the 14th of February both wings were across the North Edisto, Orangeburg had been occupied, the rebels flanked out of Branchville, and SHERMAN'S right wing had made fifteen miles on the road to Columbia. On the afternoon of the next day the rebel fortifications on the north bank of the Congaree, and covering the approach to Columbia, were carried by the Fifteenth Corps. Making a feint of crossing below on the river, HOWARD reallbeauty. Our artist has given a view of this building as it appeared at sunset February 18. It was spared from the general conflagration which, on the night of the 17th, destroyed nearly the whole city. The order of architecture followed is the Corinthian. The capitals of the columns are delicately carved in marble. A great deal of this carved work, stored in sheds about the Capitol, was burned.

No. 1. Lieutenant John Holdman, 129th Illinois, Nov. 13.
" 2. L. D. Fairfield, 80th Ohio, Nov. 8.
" 3. Capt. David Hombury, 6th Ind. Battery, Nov. 22.
" 4. C. K. Ekings, 2d N. Y.
" 5. Lieutenant A. C. Spafford, 21st Ohio, Oct. 14.
" 6. James E. Wenrick, 19th Pa. Cavalry.
" 7. John Jackson, 4th Ind. Cav., Nov. 21.

From Columbia SHERMAN pushed straight northward, as if moving on Charlotte. KILPATRICK was ordered to advance on Chesterville, while the Fourteenth Corps followed in his rear, destroying the railroad on the way. The other three corps joined the Fourteenth at Winnsborough. The Fourteenth, with KILPATRICK, still pushed northward, while the other three corps moved more to the eastward, toward Cheraw. On the 25th of February the Fourteenth Corps began the difficult crossing of the Catawba River at Rocky Hill. It was not till March 1 that this corps was able to move on to Hanging Rock, of which our artist has given a picturesque sketch. Gold Mine, a few miles farther eastward, also affords a characteristic picture. The Twentieth Corps entered Chesterfield March 2.

The next day the whole army was across Lynch's Creek, with the advance already at Cheraw, on the Great Pedee. As the rebels fled across the river Major-General MOWER sent after them a few shells from a Blakely gun which he had captured, and which had been presented to the State of South

UNITED STATES ARSENAL AT FAYETTEVILLE, SOUTH CAROLINA.

ly crossed at Saluda Factory. The factory was burned on the 17th. At 3 o'clock, on the morning of the 17th, Columbia was surrendered. We give on our first page a sketch illustrating General SHERMAN'S entry into this city—the capital of South Carolina. The railroads for twenty miles about the city were thoroughly destroyed, and the public property burned. On pages 200 and 201 we give several sketches of Columbia. The State Capitol, which is not finished, has great architectural

The great fire destroyed several hundred buildings, and deprived many poor families of their homes. SHERMAN tried hard to check the destruction, but without avail. On the 19th 20,000 bales of cotton were burned.

Across the river from Columbia is Camp Sorghum, where our prisoners were kept. Our artist has numbered the graves, and we give below the names to correspond. These men were nearly all murdered by the rebels.

Carolina by her citizens residing abroad. Twenty-five pieces of artillery were taken at Cheraw, besides eighteen tons of powder and several thousand bales of cotton. On the 11th of March the entire army entered Fayetteville, where communication was established with Wilmington by means of the Cape Fear River. During the march 83 cannon were captured, and 4000 prisoners. Over 15,000 refugees were received; hundreds of miles of railroad and vast quantities of cotton were destroyed.

CAMP SORGHUM, OPPOSITE COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA.

SALUDA FACTORY, NEAR COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENTS.

THEY gathered by the quiet homes
Where white stones overlean
The spreads whence no footstep comes
That once has passed between,
And raised a monument to keep
A soldier's memory green.

The grass had not been touched by spade
Where its slant shadow lay,
The soldier's resting-place was made
On red chill clay,
And yet with bowed, uncovered heads
They kneeled around to pray.

Thus did they consecrate the place
To memory of that one.
One? Why was there a vacant space
Left ominous on the stone?
They turned to each their sorrowful face
Who dared to look thereon.

That little town its willing score
Of patriots had sent,
And there was room for nineteen more
Names on the monument.
They only said, "They will be done,"
And went their way content.

The graver came another day
And cut a name beneath,
And on the stone next morning lay
Another grey wreath;
And pale forgét-me-nots were there
That sweeten even'death.

So let the soldiers' monument
In every grave-yard stand—
Although their buried forms be blent
With distant sea or sand—
To keep their memory for aye
Within a grateful land.

THE BURGLARY AT THE MEADOWS.

THE household at the Meadows—a lonely place, every where surrounded with low salt marshes, the mansion itself standing on a knoll and approached by a causeway of a mile in length, so handsomely shaded with elms as to be worthy of the dignified appellation of an avenue—the household at the Meadows was one night rudely disturbed from its slumbers by an alarm of burglary. One of the children, waking from some unseen-pie dream or other, heard a most singular sound; and creeping to the bedside of Katy Small, their nurse, a little white phantom before her, paused last into a terrified wakefulness. But after her first glance she, too, detected the stifled sound, and, seizing the matter at once, grasped a blanket round her and to the door of her mistress's sleeping-room, in such a shaking fright that she could not command her voice, nor had she not feared being overheard by the thieves. "Oh, ma'am! Oh, Mr. Grey!" was what slid through the keyhole, accompanied by a flutter of timid taps, till Mr. Grey began to dream of a moth battering about the window-pane saddenly endowed with voice and calling him by name, and till at his hurried, half-awake uprisal, as she made bold to turn the handle of the door, Katy turned and fled. Then Mr. Grey clearly heard the sound, and thrusting himself into part of his clothes, stepped out on the soft carpet of the upper hall and listened.

This sound, to which all under the roof were now aroused, was a soft, slow, gridding, sliding one, as if with their delicate and muffled instruments the burglars were sawing the bolt of the great lock upon the front-door. Now and then some slight scraping of the tool took place; now and then there was a step upon the low, sunken stone; now and then the handle of the lock rang at a faint touch; now and then all gave way to something like a singular whispering.

It was well known that much valuable plate was always in use at the Meadows, for it was a hospitable place, with a round of guests and dinner-parties and suppers, and at to-night of all nights in the year, there was no one at home but the family; and, owing to some whim of the ancient architect and owners, the apartments of the household were of a majority of the servants were in a separate building. Katy knew, however, was a host in himself, and he desired no help, unless there was a one disabled in the combat that seemed imminent, in which event Katy Small was prepared to be a hamber-maids would open the other door for the adherents to come to the rescue of his wife and children. But if the burglars were not alone—if their adherents themselves? The thought was like a cold chill. Yet—no; the singular whispers, which seemed to be those of some foreign tongue, dispelled such an idea; moreover, their fidelity and attachment to himself, the most indulgent and considerate of employers, were proverbial.

Meantime the work was progressing. While he listened there sprung at any moment burst open and he be found defenceless. Defenceless he was, for was at that moment, for though a master of the noble Western pile, lets would be of small service against the mace or mallet of a house-breaker, and all his guns were down in the shallow closet on the other side of the front-door, so that it would be almost impossible for him to reach them without being seen. Finally, however, with one hand upon the railing of the balister, he noiselessly slipped down, possessed himself in the dark of his best rifle and of sufficient ammunition for a siege, and returned half-way up the staircase, where, seating himself, he coolly made his preparations—made them somewhat slowly, as he could scarcely see his hand before him, loading the rifle with a charge of small-shot, determined, the moment the door gave way, to pepper the malice roundly with a ball for every bone in their bodies.

During this work, Katy Small, with the trembling help of one of the chamber-maids, had dressed the children even to their hats and water-proofs, and had furthermore tied the blankets and coverlets together in a long knotted rope, as a possible means of exit from the back should the robbers succeed in entering at the front. The other chambermaid had taken the occasion as an opportunity for exhibiting her accomplishments, and had fallen from one fainting-fit into another faster than Mrs. Grey could bring her out of them. Mrs. Grey herself, a woman of Southern birth, was no more acquainted with fear than her husband was, and she had raised her head from her pillow full of fight. As she saw him sitting at the mid-way, bickering with his rifle, she was fired with impatience, she longed to have him go down, fling open the door, and there meet at the assailants as such a valley as would put them to terrible rout and confusion; there was to be indiscriminate slaughter on the grass outside the door, after which the household servants were to be taken into shelter, the house turned into a hospital, and themselves nursed back to health and virtue by the inhabitants. But this was not the way to do it, sitting waiting for them, instead of dashing down, taking the war into Africa and converting the attack into defence. It seemed almost craven to Mrs. Grey, this calm delay. If she had only ever learned how to handle a gun herself she would pass him and teach him a lesson, woman as she was; but as the case stood, such conduct on her part might result in her death, the only hand over herself of all the parties concerned, and add to the general disturbance disastrously. So she left the chamber-maid to her fainting, and stood at the head of the stairs a white shadow herself, urging her husband, another shadow, to descend and engage the villains, even though he should die and imagine her voice above the slow and interrupted grinding and grating on the panel as she spurred him on.

But what Mr. Grey feared the hall to the gun-closet he had given his attention to the door, you may be sure, in passing. And there, dimly to be detected in the darkness of the hall, lay, unknown might, he was perfectly sure that he saw through the place—plus sidelight the darker outline of a pair of legs, the legs of the man who had come at work to quickly, so skillfully, upon the lock; then he heard steps upon the turf and the other man lifted him again the same. If, then, he could thus see two of the plunderers, there could scarcely be more than half a dozen of them in all, and for one man to go down and meet a whole band of such desperate creatures was mere bravado. Moreover, by remaining where he was, he had the vantage of a cage of a garrison, and as they secured entrance could pop them over, one after another, like so many plump partridges.

There was never any lost outside stir, by day or night, to be heard at the Meadows; there was no thing but the flap of an eagle's wing, and the wash of the mowers' scythes, the warble of the bobolink, in the morning, the scream of a night-hawk, the hoot of insects in the swamps; consequently there was a picture that always make assonance with the scene around them, and leave the silence more pronounced. Mr. Grey had not heard these sounds for a long while sitting on the stair; no other noise in all the region round could be detected but the grating upon the door, this tap upon the lock, this step upon the turf, this strange rough whisper—it made the resolution of the gun-room all the more kind of awe; he knew that have wrapped the knoll itself, that all below and around it was waist-deep in soft and white vapor, and was aware that in which cry or murmur would at any distance fall equally dull and dead; there were not even enough star-beams divided into the haze about the house to be discern his assailants plainly when they should have flung open the door and confronted him. To obviate this difficulty Mrs. Grey, who was not to be left in the tallous spirit, waited with match and wick behind him, ready at the appointed moment to blaze away in her part. The moment for which they were anticipated from the fierce scratch she was to give with that hideous sound of bare fingers upon the work, much more than equaled all that her husband looked forward to from his trusty rifle. To a person of Mr. Grey's temperament, and one easily to be awakened from sleep, there would have been something delicious in watching this slow, soundless lapse of a summer night; the gradual transition from twilight and desolation, the suspense, the penduventure, gradually made the delay intolerable. And through all the time there was something else. Now and then, intermittent sawing, that tap upon the handle of the lock, that scratch of the panel, those steps about the turf, that whisper, and all the while the succulent grass that grew all round the low doorsame and close up to the threshold. Why they were so long about the business was more than Mr. Grey could conjecture.

"Well, well," said Mrs. Grey, her patience worn out, "there is no use in my sitting here with a match and a moderator"—which last, though it was the name of the lamp, was also a familiar phrase for a sly bit at her husband. "Those doughty knights of the latch-key will effect an entrance at this rate by the time we are all grandmothers. Stand from town. I will leave you to watch them carefully till then; and, for my part, I shall go to bed!" And she was about to carry out her threat, when, look at the little huddled group of frightened children fallen half asleep between Katy Small and the chamber-maids.

This, at last, was more than Mr. Grey could bear, or else his over-anxious wife misjudged him; he rose for the fray, let her have it! He sprung down the stairway, grasping his rifle surely; Mrs. Grey blazed away with her lamp and followed him; he drew back the bolts, flung open the door, and there, standing across the low, narrow stone, was a great dun ox, placidly feeding on the rich, sweet, juicy grass that grew so rankly there, the nibble of his teeth, and the swish of his tail as he brushed away the settling night-fly making, indeed, whispering sound, and his brass-tipped horn tapping now upon the lock of the door, now upon the panel, now scratching on the side-post—a mild, contented creature that stared round, large-eyed, at the sudden splendor that streamed over him from the open doorway, whisked his tail, tossed up his heels, and pat down his head, wheeled about, and darted off into the shadow.

"Ah, how did you dare," said a young acquaintance, to whom Mrs. Grey was laughingly relating the occurrence next day at dinner, "to urge Mr. Grey to go down and meet them? It makes me shiver! I should have thought every valuable in the house and set them out on tables directly before the front-door that they might take our money and leave our lives."

"Precisely!" said Mr. Grey, proudly. "That is the difference between you and a Southern woman, my little friend!"

"If you mean," retorted the little friend, indignantly, "that I should have my husband's safety more than my jewels and silver—it certainly is the difference!"

"Ah, I try you mercy!" pleaded Mr. Grey, repentantly. "Latitude hardly alters human nature, I confess. At the equator or at the poles equally we wrankind are all kin! Shall us—it is in their power to be la chaque sauise au chandelle!"

THE VAMPIRE'S WHIST.

I HAVE always been considered a safe player, and I was generally managed to economize my losses, to penses at the whist-table. I never played high, nor was my game dashing; moderate stakes and prudent play carried me through through many a combat. The chief secret of my success was that I never lost my head. I was my match with the first arrangement, and never needed look on them again. My eyes were on the table; I never had to ask who played such a card; I never once seemed vacillated in the plan of my campaign. If you can read my character from this account of my play, I have proceed to tell my story without further preface.

I was going to spend a winter in Florence. I had good introductions and plenty of letters of credit; I was told I should find plenty of whist and players worthy of my steel. The night before I left London—the last game I played was with my old friend and partner, Jack Mackenzie—as I rose from the table Jack took me aside, and said, "Don't mention my name to Tremlett, if you meet him."

"Tremlett?" I asked.

"Have you never heard of Tremlett? You will not be long in Florence without making his acquaintance, and he'll give you a hard fight; yes, Jack, Master Dave! He is the best whist-player in Florence, and if he could come to London he would be the best whist-player here. Don't you have anything to do with him off the table; he'll give you work enough on it."

I started next morning for the Continent, my passport clear of Jack's name, and my ticket for the name, Henry James Solly. I scarcely stopped in Paris, for winter was coming on quickly, and Paris is locked in the embrace of cold. All my friends advised not to go by sea, for the weather was very unsettled; and when I got to Genoa, and saw the vessels lashed to their moorings and swinging at the long swell, and heard the wind howling over the bay, I was glad I had profited by the advice. I had secured a place in the Courier from Genoa to Pisa; my fellow-passenger in the interior was a young Frenchman, with whom I struck up a speedy acquaintance. The spare seat by the side of the Courier was occupied by a short stout gentleman, whose face I never once caught sight of, but whose harsh voice disturbed me frequently through the night. Alighting at Pisa I resolved to stop the night, took my luggage to the hotel, where I was joined by my fellow-passenger, and devoted the afternoon to the cathedral.

It was late in the evening when I strolled away from the quiet group of medieval buildings, and lost myself in the less-frequented parts of the town. The cold stillness of the streets every where was in contrast to my musings, and rested my mind after the bustle of travel, and the constant change of busy figures in which I had grown so habituated. As the day fell I wandered into an out-of-the-way café, to rest myself and observe the people.

Only one other group occupied the café. It consisted of six or eight decently-dressed, and yet not prepossessing, Italians gathered round a short stout gentleman with bushy whiskers and a hard face, who was relating his adventures. His face was strange to me, but something in his voice struck me as familiar to my dreams. Those harsh, jarring tones, where and when had I heard them? Perhaps I should recognize the face closely, for I looked uneasily and watched me out of the corners of his eyes, dropped his voice, wandered in its narrative, and at last ceased to speak. The attention of the comrades was turned to me by the strangeness of the conduct; I regarded me as suspicious, and to lull their suspicions I took out a letter I had found at Turin from Jack Mackenzie, and began to read. In my suspicious state of mind I did not remember I had named his narrative in the same loud tones as before, which, spite of my interest in the letter, haunted me still and distracted my thoughts. I looked up again, and directly I did so the whole party sprung on their legs. The gentleman in the middle came up to me and asked the reason of my abrupt leaving. He spoke in Italian, and though I was not sufficiently versed in that language to follow his rapid speaking with ease, I was so familiar with it as to carry on a conversation. Of course I disclaimed all idea of offending him; but he was not so easily satisfied.

"You traveled with me from Genoa," he replied; "you follow me into a retired neighborhood, into an unfrequented café; you watch me; then you take a letter from your pocket and watch me while you read it. What have you about me in it?"

"If the letter was not in English I should offer it for your satisfaction."

"I read English," he said, and snatched the letter from me, just glanced at the signature, and threw it in my face with the words, "You're a liar and a spy!"

Twilight was growing deeper all the while, but we went out at once behind the walls to a secluded field. Two of the group alone were with us; they placed us at a short distance, measured the paces, and put the pistols in our hands. We fired at the signal; his ball whistled within an inch of my ear; he clapped his hand to his cheek, and the two seconds ran up to him.

"It is only a scratch," he said; "give us the other pair!"

The two seconds, who had shrugged their shoulders at seeing me unwounded, obeyed him. We fired again; again the ball whistled past me, but he fell heavily and without moving. His two friends ran up to him, and one said to me in English, "Fly! we are not assassins!"

I caught one glimpse of his face, and I was too stupefied to fly. I walked with a composure which would have disarmed suspicion through the nearest gate, asked my way to the hotel as calmly as though I was not stunned into confusion, and sat down at the window, gazing out like one under chloroform. My trance was broken by the voices of chanting priests and the murmur of a curious crowd; through the street swept past an array of white robes bearing torches, surrounding a body, and anxious eager faces behind, gathering mystery.

"Who is it?" asked a by-stander.

"The man whose body was found outside the gate."

"Shot, you say? How long had he been dead?"

"They don't know; but he was alive at ten, sir."

My letters of introduction procured me instant admission to the club when I got to Florence. There was not much going on; the most eager players were shooting in the Maremma, or not yet returned from their summer rambles. I had a few dinners with those that were left, and after one early one fair player, an ancient Florentine Englishman, named Austin. He told me about Tremlett, with whom he has had a fierce battle in the morning at the whist-table, and he promised to introduce me and get up a game as soon as the renowned player came back from shooting.

One afternoon, when I came into the club from a stroll in the sun along the Arno, there seemed to be more than usual stir in the small room of idlers. As Englishman just returned from the Maremma was retailing some unusually successful news to his acquaintances. As I sat at one of the tables listening, Austin came up and told me this was Tremlett. I had expected to see a man from his had a fine face with strong lines, and a good development of forehead, though hardly intellectual. The calculation, the steel-trap memory, were not in the game in the faces of the other players, had given that thoughtful appearance; something indescribable told me the power was not purely mental. His whiskers were probably dyed, to add youth to his face, yet the firmness of the lines about his mouth resisted all attempts at concealment. He watched him with considerable admiration, not unmixed with a slight feeling of repugnance. I felt sure that he was virtually an outlaw from England, that he had been turned out of the clubs of Paris, that his name was not used with those of honorable and guardians who had thoughtless young men to care for? Yet, if it were so, where was my danger? He might beat me at whist, but he would only tesch me to play better. I neither feared being enticed into too high play, nor meeting him on other fields of action. My heart almost beat at the prospect of a good fight with the cards; I felt a glow in my blood which I had not felt for thirty years.

As soon as the knot of English had broken up, Austin went to the here of a hundred flights and said, "Tremlett, I want to introduce you to a whist-player who has heard a great deal of your prowess and wishes to encounter you."

"I shall be only too happy," answered Tremlett; and on being introduced he proposed an immediate game—I was quite prepared to dispose of my time, and should hardly find a fourth at present."

We sat down. The first few games passed over quickly; Tremlett was too much used to consummate either of the prospects of amusement afforded by the coming winter, or of things thirty and twenty-five years old in England, to have his whole game was his boundary, he never breathed a whisper of that time.

We were about equally matched; if he had any strength in reserve he never showed it. He played a first-rate game, but I felt myself tolerably secure. He began with a confidence which I felt was myself; but the real fight throughout was between him and me; Austin played curiously and without speaking for he was a bad player. He never went and won. When it chose to Austin's turn, he would have gladly excused himself as not being equal to a fight against two such brilliant players. Tremlett begged him to continue, for he wished to try our games as a partner. But Austin refused. Just then a celebrated theoretical whist-player, who never played himself, put so often stood behind and watched that he had a perfect right to the game, entered the room, and he consented to help Austin against us.

Twilight was now creeping on gradually, and we were all silent as chessmen. I had arranged my cards quickly and waited for Tremlett to play. I saw he deliberated I looked up at him, and it then struck me that I had seen his face before.

I was confronted by the same harsh, jarring lines about his mouth, which were drawn up and puckered into thoughtfulness; he must have an embarrassing hand. He looked up at me, but not playing with dummy! For I had a most peculiar hand, one which no partner could suspect, but which would make a fortune if shown on the table. The thought had scarcely crossed my mind when Tremlett, who had been holding his right hand over the upper part of his face, withdrew it, and slapped down the very identical card which was the keystone of my game.

I looked over it with astonishment, and I detected an alteration in his face. His hand had slightly brushed off his whiskers from their usual curl, and just under his eyes I saw a scarcely-healed across the cheek-bone. How well he had concealed it!

Tremlett's lead prospered as I expected it to prosper. He led through dummy with perfect impunity, and it was the same if Austin finessed or played high. But every time Trehlett led, it was as if he saw every card in my hand; and each time I looked up I caught the same haunting expression of face which had struck me the moment we were partners. As far as I could think without neglecting my game, I tried to recall the face of which his reminded me. It must have been the set of the cheek-bone; where had I seen any one with a scar on his cheek-bone? And yet, when I thought over it again, I remembered that I had only noticed the scar after he had played his first card; the resemblance had struck me while I waited for his lead. What was it then? Oh, I have it! the youthfulness of his dyed whiskers bringing out the hard old look of the lines about his mouth when he was thinking. Yet there was something more haunting.

I had neglected my game during this last moment of thought, and I was recalled by my partner.

"Your play, Mr. Solly!" he said, in a strange harsh voice, so different from the pleasant tone of the beginning of our game. It only wanted that to bear out the resemblance; the voice was now entirely in keeping with the face. "Your play, Mr. Browning ;twilight it grew upon me like something ghostly; the knowledge of the cards I held in command of the game, the rending my thoughts, coupled with the ghastly look of his fresh whiskers and his hard face, seemed to paralyze me. At times I was on the verge of making fatal mistakes; but each time it seemed that Tremlett looked at me reproachfully, and his look appeared to say that I should play. We won the first game with ease, but we lost the second. Tremlett said, "I like your play better as antagonist than as partner, Mr. Solly. You made a mistake."

"I own I made one," I replied. "It is the last. My eyes are rather weak, and I can't see any longer."

Tremlett called for cards, and the waiter lighted while the new ones were dealt round. As soon as the light came full on his face I fell back in my chair with horror. I now recognized the face now; it was the man I had killed at Pau!

We won the next game, but it was all Tremlett's play. I, in fact, had by my cards to play into his. I sat watching him without thinking of the game, and my hand moved as if by the exercise of his will to the right card when it came to my turn. It was getting ghastly pale; the lines of his face had assumed a rigidity really fearful, and his whiskers fell from the vapid curl into a stiff and horrible appearance. He scarcely spoke now; when he did, it was in monosyllables, with a grating, rasping voice; and there was a fierce gleam in his eye which remained immovable. I sat opposite to him as if mesmerized.

We changed places and partners now; and I took advantage of the change to walk to the other end of the room for a breath of air, and to wipe my cold hands. I could not breathe freely with his cold glassy eyes glaring at me from over his cards, with his sharp voice, like a galvanized corpse's, uttering my looks in every direction. It was against my rule to drink any thing stronger than lemonade while I played at whist; but I could not face this game without acquired strength, and I took off three glasses of brandy, one after the other, without a pause between them.

Tremlett took dummy now, and I was on his right. I felt easier, having Austin facing me, the man he evidently had stirred his resentment. I never struck me that the power of knowing my cards, which Tremlett had shown when he was my partner, could continue to him now that he was my opponent in open incident. I kept my eyes riveted to the dummy hand; I refused to look at or mind them only on my partner, or on dummy's cards. The third game it was my deal; and when I took up my cards I felt certain at once that my last doubt if ever before I held such cards; I shuffled them hastily over while I thought out my plan, and then I cautioned one little fact to my partner. If Tremlett held a peculiar hand—if he led a certain card, and persisted in that suit, I was ruined. But I had no grounds for supposing that he held such a hand, or that if he had it, he would play it in such a way. I felt safe.

What was it induced me to look up in his face? Fatality, I suppose. He had kept us waiting rather longer than usual, and I forgot my resolve of avoiding the sight of him. It is the strongest impulse of a whist-player to look impatiently at any one who keeps you waiting for his call, and I glanced up at Tremlett. He was looking at me curiously, with a cool, collected sneer on his lips, and a stronger resemblance than ever to the dead stony face I had last seen between the two seconds as I turned away from the field of my duel. As my eyes caught his he quickly cast down the cards in his hand, and, with the same look directed at me, placed it softly on the table. It was the fatal card I had feared. I dropped my cards on the table, face upward, and fell back in my chair.

"Game!" screeched Tremlett, in his most grating tones.

Austin looked at me with the dreadful forced composure of an injured partner, and said, "Allow me to observe, Mr. Solly, that if you had the worst cards ever dealt I had the game in my own hand; I had three honors, and you turned up the fourth."

I could only point to the card Tremlett had led; I was speechless. Austin shrugged his shoulders, and was rising from the table.

"You won't play any more, Austin?" asked the victor. "Nor you, Mr. Solly?"

With great difficulty I forced out a few words. "I am not quite well to-night. You will give me my revenge another time?"

"Ay, that I will. When shall we say? Let us see—to-day is Friday?"

God help me! it was the day week we had fought.

"To-day is Friday," he repeated. "I must go down to Pau to-morrow morning, and I don't be back for some days. Shall we say to-day week?"

I met Austin the next afternoon down the Arno. He was cold at first; but I apologized for having made a mistake in my calculation, and accounted for it by a certain feeling of indisposition. He had received a letter that morning from a London friend, speaking of my play in the highest terms, and he was flattered by an apology from one of the best whist-players in Full Mall. He took my arm, and we walked together along the casine.

"Tremlett started off to Pau early this morning," began Austin. "He played goffe at the club till after five, and left the train at half past five. He's after no good now, I expect; but when a man once gets launched in those intrigues he can't stop. I'll be glad for him if he don't get caught on one of these days."

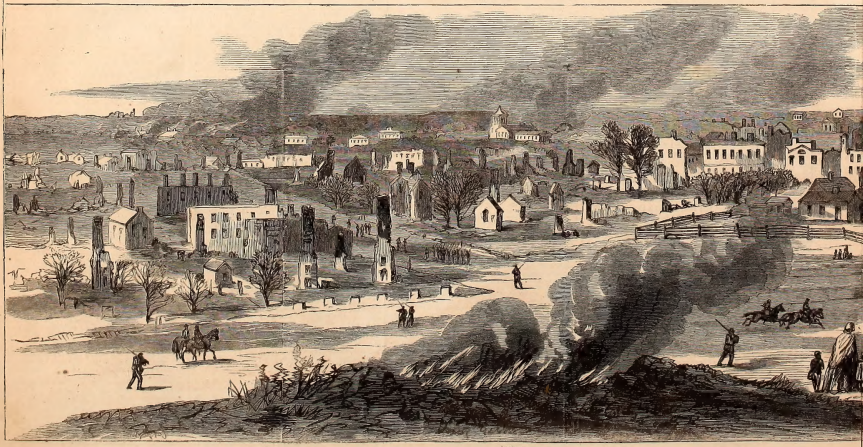
"I heard something about him in England from a friend of mine."

"Yes, I expect more is known about him in England than is known on the Continent. If some of his associates, who don't speak out loud, act in whispers, it would be all up with his reputation, even in Florence. A Scotchman I know ran him pretty hard once, and was the only man I ever heard mention of another state, who claimed him."

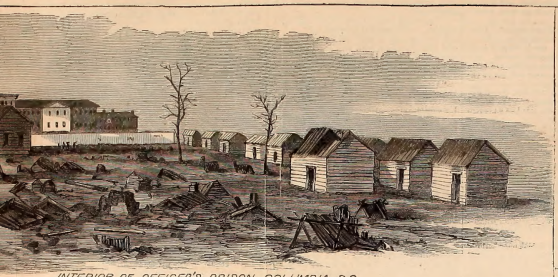
"Who was the Scotchman? not Jack Mackenzie, surely," I asked.

"Who else but Jack Mackenzie? Don't you mention his name to Tremlett; he's down on him. Jack would not fight a man who had been turned out of London and Paris, or else Tremlett is a dead shot."

The next Friday I went to the club to keep my engagement. I was sure something had happened as soon as I came in. The room was very noisy for a time, and I could see that every one was discussing some event. Presently a waiter came to me, and told me that I was wanted in the next room by a gentleman

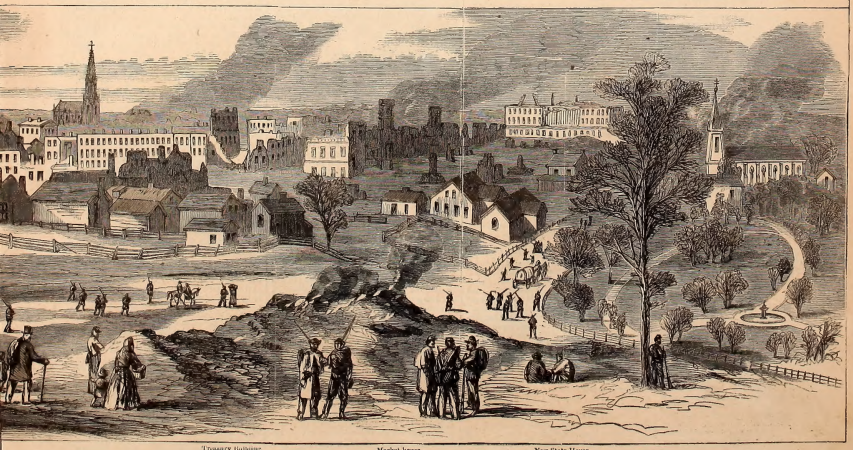


GEN^L SHERMAN RECEIVING "THE MARCH TO THE SEA"



RUINS OF COLUMBIA FROM THE FRONT OF THE CAPITOL LOOKING NORTH.

SCENES IN COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLI



INTERIOR OF OFFICER'S PRISON, COLUMBIA, S.C.

ESCAPED PRISONERS AIDING UNION CITIZENS.

STATE CAPITOL, COLUMBIA, S.C. FEB. 18, 1865.

A, THE MORNING AFTER THE FIRE.

LAST WORDS.

ARE have they told you all? Ah yes, I see
At last you know it—know that I must die.
Don't tremble so; but come and sit by me,
And hold my hand, and be as calm as I.
Bend nearer, for my voice is faint and low;
And I would tell you something ere I go.

I've known a long time now that in that heart,
Whose every beat was music to my ear,
I've held the second place. Nay, do not start;
I would but tell you—not reproach you, dear.
You loved her first; and though with all your will
You strove to conquer it, you love her still.

'Twas hard to bear—to know that she whose whim
Had blighted all the sunshine of your life,
Could claim a second fealty from and your every dim
Even with a word: could not, though your wife.
I struggled hard to win your love; but no!
I could not win it; yet I loved you so.

The hope that lighted up my path so long
Has flickered and died out. I could not live
Without your love; but you did me no wrong—
I could not give what you had not to give.
Nay, weep not! I am happy now I see
You'll love my memory better far than me.

The strife has been so long, the way so drear,
I feared my patience and my trust in God
Would fail me; but now I see the end so near,
'Tis easier far to bow beneath the rod.
The night is sweet, and yet to morn is night:
Thank God for taking me! Dear love, good-by!

THE BROUGHTONS.

SHE might be a little too young for him, perhaps; but if she was, that was the only fault between them—and that was a fault which every mother said, putting back her flaxen ringlets with a coquettish air—would mend itself every day, as her own dear husband could tell her, sometimes over thirty did not in general complain of the overyouthfulness of their wives; she always found that week—with that undefined expression of the mathematicians, her poor dear husband was so fond of using?—by inverse ratio, or something like that.

"Look after her, my mother than the doctor," muttered the pew-opener, pretending to be looking at the prayer-book, and not at the bride.

And as for Mrs. Broughton, the mother was one of those fair, ringleted, brisk, little women who are only in middle age at sixty, and who positively refuse to be old at eighty—well dressed, coquettish, with very white teeth and very blue eyes, a little closed at the corners, as if the edges had been badly cut and bungled. The bungling—eyes that were afflicted with an occasional squint, and more apt to look at things out of those badly-cut corners than straight in front—but as blue as two turquoise beads and as sharp as a bird's; a lively little woman, who never paid a bill, and was never out of sleep, but always full of resources and clever shifts, and who could by no means be put out of countenance nor moved from her self-possession; a quaint-mannered little woman, full of smiles and endearing epithets, and very cordial pressure of her somewhat silvery hand; a wise and really little woman, who wore silken surcoats over her inner coat of mail, and tinged the tips of her fingers so skillfully you never saw she had iron claws at the end of them hooked like a vulture's beak.

No two people could be more unlike than the mother and daughter. Young Broughton was one of those girls who look full of a really formidable amount of character. She was tall, and what people call well developed, indeed, her figure was the envy of a woman of five-and-twenty rather than of a girl scarcely nineteen. Her hair was of the darkest shade possible next to black, but lifted out of absolute blackness by the shy scattering of brown-gold threads through it, and the quite full gold of the ends and downy undergrowth. To look at her casually you would say she was full of strength; but when you came to examine her closely you would see that what you mistook for solid masonry was mere painted scaffolding, and that the marble statue in the niche was only but a bit of bright-colored wax, which any one with ten working fingers could mould to their will. Those straight black brows of hers that looked as harsh and were as soft and silken, were indicative of neither will nor decision, nor even of strong perceptions; those dark eyes with the dash of red through the brown, and over a soft suffusion over them like embryonic tears not perfected, those only humidity and pulpiness, and with no fire in them for all their size and radiance; the red lips, a little swollen, were like twin roses, full and loose and richly redolent of youth and love, but without the harder core of the rose; in a word, she was nothing but a great, soft, beautiful child masquerading as a full-grown fall of tenderness and love and sweet obedience and self-sacrifice, but with will and individuality as yet only in the germ. Her mother was not quite the kind of person to allow even a strong nature to develop side by side with herself. Such boundless power of compression, then, had not those curved iron fingers of hers had in the manipulation of such a plastic creature as this!

Of Gertrude Broughton a few words will be enough. A tall, handsome, military-looking man; exact to the extreme of precision; grave to almost gloom, but tender withal in the strong way that goes with an iron will in the centre of him surrounded by wide outworks of lofty kindness and secure tolerance; scrupulous in money matters and rigidly truthful. A strong, self-centred man, able to walk alone without the recognized social supports, he was yet proud, as such men are, of the merits and possessions of his wife; proud of her as she stood there carved out of the purest marble, and silently defying the world to find a flaw any where. This was the group, then, that set out on the great highway of life together, without a cloud in the sky as yet.

"A person wants to speak to you, ma'am."

"Who is it, Annie?" said Mrs. Broughton.

"I don't know, ma'am, I'm sure; he's not been here before, and he asked for you."

"Go and see what he wants, then; and if he's a gentleman, show him up," said the little woman, briskly.

That Gordon is not at home, mamma," interposed Laura, in her soft, low, deprecating voice.

"Well, and what then? Surely the man won't eat us up alive, child?" laughed her mother.

"But if he wants money or any thing?" again urged Laura, with a pretty uppermost with her as expectation with her mother.

"Leave that to me," replied Mrs. Broughton, arranging her cool forehead over the bow of bright blue ribbon, worn at the side like a matronly kind of snood.

"The very person I want to leave it to," said a thick oily voice, and a swarthy man, almost like a man of color he was so dark, shabby, and vulgar, but yet out of the "low" classes," as they say called, pushed the servant aside and entered the room.

Mrs. Broughton gave one little cry—only one; and for a moment became green, not white. "Sam!" she then said, in a low voice. "You villain!"

"Well! that's an affectionate greeting, at all events!"

"What would you have better? What business have you here at all?"

"That I call cool! I should think more business than any one else," said Sam's dark face grew darker with the sullen look that came into it.

"But so suddenly—so unexpectedly!" said Mrs. Broughton, drawing herself into matronly facility, and falling into the old cheery manner quite naturally—but squinting.

"Which should have made the pleasure of my visit all the greater," sneered the man, "if you had been a dutiful—"

"If I had been an affectionate sister!" laughed Mrs. Broughton, shrilly. "Well! and so it should, of course."

Sam looked at her for a moment and whistled.

"Oh! that is the game, is it?" he said, and planted his right bride upon his hip. "Then I've come at last."

"And who have we here? My niece?" he asked.

"Yes, your niece, Sam, your poor brother's child and my sweet daughter," said Mrs. Broughton, with what was meant to be a tender touch upon her daughter's sleek head.

"Ah, well, it's a credit to him," said Sam, examining her much as if she had been a horse or a dog. "Come here and kiss me, my dear."

"Go and kiss your uncle, my child," began Laura, " repeated Mrs. Broughton, in a caressing tone. Laura hesitated.

"Do as you are bid, child," said her mother in a low voice, harshly.

And Laura went.

"Well, did I do you a great deal of harm, my dear?" said the man, after he had kissed her, holding her still in his arms and looking at her with a strange expression.

"No," blushed Laura, and stammered and tried to free herself from him.

"But you didn't like it, eh?" said the vindictive expression that seemed the only one really natural to him came into his face for the second time in this short interview.

Laura was silent; her mother gave her a sharp, deadening look, and her cheek burned heavily; and the young wife felt instinctively that a web was weaving round her, of which she could foresee neither the outlet nor the end.

"Of course you know what I have come for, Louisa?" then said Sam, turning to Mrs. Broughton, and running his fingers through his short, curled, crisp hair.

She tossed her head and made her flaxen ringlets dance. "The old story, I suppose!" But though she tried to speak with jaunty unconcern the intense shrillness of her voice betrayed her, and her squint became painful to witness.

"Exactly so," said Sam.

Mrs. Broughton looked at her daughter out of the corner of her eye. "I have no money," she then said, emphatically.

"No?" Sam looked incredulous and insolent. "Yet you are living with a fine house and a fine appearance—all sham, eh?"

"It is not mine," said Mrs. Broughton. "I am as poor as I ever was, and poorer. If you want any thing you must ask Laura there."

"Fact! Seems strange, too! I should have thought that my pretty niece would have taken better care of her mother than that."

"It is not what it may have been said's," said Laura, scarlet to her very neck.

"I should think not! that was much the same thing," observed Sam.

"It ought to be," returned Mrs. Broughton, with the air of a dictatress.

"But it is not," said Laura, a little faintly; "and, considering that I have nothing of my own, ought not to be so treated."

"Oh! Gordon is very generous, that I will say for him," said Mrs. Broughton, twisting her bracelet, "and doesn't mind how much he gives to the bills."

"He always looks at them and checks my money," Laura answered. Then, with a burst—"And I could not give it away without his permission!"

Sam and Mrs. Broughton looked at each other.

"Oh yes you could, dear!" said her mother, gently, "if you were driven to it."

"I could give all I had of my own," said Laura, "but I can not give away what is Gordon's."

"Nonsense! you can make it up again—I will give it you again, if that is all. Laura, you must. It is not often that I beg of you any thing, but I do beg of you now! Will you not do your own poor mother a favor, Lulla? Your mother who has always loved you so fondly? Will you not—for her sake, mind—help your dear father's brother from starvation?"

"I would if it were my own," again said Laura, troubled. "But would it be honorable?"

"Am I no judge of right and wrong, my dear?" said Mrs. Broughton, with touching humility of voice. "If I see no harm in it your self I and I to be taught truth and honor by my own child, Lal?"

"Yes, mamma, I know—I didn't mean that—" began Laura.

"Oh, you did, dear!" and the mother wiped her very blue eyes and made the eyelids red. "And you have been very much altered to me since you married; and I'm sure I love you still the same, and would be all to you a mother could be!"

"Oh, mamma! don't say that!" Laura threw her arms round her neck and sobbed.

"I should be sorry to be the cause of any trouble to," then said Sam, coming forward: "so let me go. I have other resource," with a desperate cast of his hard black eyes upward, and a clenching of his hard hand against his breast, and a setting of his teeth, and the hard sucking in of the breath through them—"only one: the poison or the knife! What matters?" muttered he. "Who will miss me? a good-for-nothing vagabond like me—let him go!"

Mrs. Broughton gave a faint kind of howl and squirmed out of the arms of her eyes. Laura sobbed piteously. "I will tell Gordon all, and I am sure he will not mind," she then said, and drew in her pretty arms, and her whole Russia leather purse, which Gordon had given her specially for the housekeeping funds—and gave him ten dollars.

"God bless you, mother Sam!" said the mother, kissing her.

"God bless you, my angel!" said the uncle, kissing her too; and Laura's tender heart glowed, and her soft brown eyes rained over with love and happiness.

In the midst of which came Gordon's well-known military knock at the door, and sobered Sam and his elder like a dash of cold water dashed into their faces.

"Go away! go away, you wretch!" said Mrs. Broughton, with sudden savageness, shuffling him out of the room. "Go away, murder you if ever I play me this trick again," she whispered, as she pushed him through the doorway.

"Why was Laura not with Gordon, striding into the room with his usual long commanding step slightly quickened.

"Oh, it was only—" began Laura.

"The laundress man," interposed Mrs. Broughton, briskly. "Fancy a man-washerwoman, how absurd!—who came to say with a pitiful tale of distress, and your good wife here lent him five dollars. That's a touch of nature, is it not, Gordon, and you will have to take care of that in her, but I felt sure you would not be angry; so I did not check her this time. And you remember, Laura, dear, I told he would not be! and then, you know, it is only lent, and will be made up by degrees in the washing, so no harm is done, I'm sure? You dear old fellow!" and Mrs. Broughton kissed her tall son-in-law's chin, which was all she could reach up to. "I quite love you when you declines I do!"

"Oh, mamma! mamma! what have you done?" cried poor Laura, when Gordon left the room. She was almost convulsed at what she had done, for her mother had never dropped the mask to her before.

"What else was there to do, simpleton? Tell that proud husband of yours that you have a vagabond uncle whose mere acquaintanceship would disgrace him in the eyes of the near 1?" said Mrs. Broughton, with strange savageness of manner, the velvet under her paw for the claws out.

"But why did you never tell me about this uncle before, mamma?—and why did you not tell Gordon the truth when he married me?" cried Laura, with growing energy.

"Because, my dear, I have ears of only the ordinary length, and am quite so absurd as not to seem to think me," answered Mrs. Broughton, quite her old charming self again. She never kept her passion for long. "Tell your pay, she used to say, and self-control was not difficult to her. "I was too good a chance to throw away on a Quixotic sentiment of that kind."

"If I had only known it!" exclaimed the girl, bursting into tears.

"Ah yes, I see you had; but then, you see, you didn't, Lal, and I never meant you should; and, what is more, you never would, if your good-for-nothing uncle had not so wickedly trusted me down."

"I will tell Gordon all honestly this very night, and then he can do as he likes about living with me any longer," said Laura, with fresh weeping. "It is only right that he should know."

"And if you do, young lady," said Mrs. Broughton, clutching her arm with all the force of her small bony hand, "I will never, so help me, but I will kill myself. Mind that, Laura! and you know I never make vague threats, or say what I don't mean. And if you tell Gordon all that has passed you, and very likely divorce you, and then you will go about the world without a home or a character, and with a ruined husband and a murdered mother on your conscience."

And poor, simple Laura believed her, and did not tell her husband.

When the week's accounts came to be overlooked, for Gordon chose to see into all this kind of thing for himself, wishing to train his young wife into exactness and care, there was the deficit of ten dollars staring him in the face. Laura had been too honest to write down five as "Loan to the laundress man," according to her mother's suggestion. If, overborne by fear, she had consented passively to this deception in chiefest part for her mother's sake, she could not bring herself to do so actively. Her partnership with sin should at least be only negative, she said to herself; as if sin can ever be merely negative!

"Can you explain to this?" said Gordon, reckoning: "where's the ten dollars, Lulla?"

"I don't know, Gordon," stammered Laura.

"Five dollars, remember, for the washer-woman's man," chimed in Mrs. Broughton from the sofa, where she was making a scarlet smoking-cap for her son-in-law.

"Oh yes? well then that leaves five. Now, little one, the five?"

Laura trembled, but did not speak; she only fumbled in her pocket, and dived into her purse, looking into the little divisions for postage stamps and receipt stamps, and all manner of queer corners, with a kind of instinctive hypocrisy, poor little soul! more to gain time than any thing else.

"Why, you naughty child, do you mean to say you have actually been losing a whole five-dollar bill?" said Mrs. Broughton, getting up from the sofa and coming to them.

"I know nothing about it," cried Laura, and burst into tears.

"Gone!" said her mother, and slipped her hand as if in play, but taking care to slap it pretty hard when she was about it.

Gordon looked at his young wife with a long steady look. "Put the books away, Laura," he then said, a little gloomily, and sighed, and sat all the evening after with his chin in his hand, looking into the fire and weaving unpleasant fancies from the flames.

A cloud had come over Laura. Her husband could not define either its shape or its origin, he was only conscious of its existence. Instead of being the loving, confidential creature of former days, she had become gloomy and almost morose, with a sullen manner, half angry, half terrified, toward her mother, and a shrinking withdrawal from himself, inexpressibly painful to witness. She would sit for hours reading another working nor reading; simply staring out of the window in a vague abstraction, or looking into the fire, with the tears dropping silently from her eyes. She only spoke when she was spoken to, and then she started as if awakened out of a sleep, and as often as not answered with the air of one half in her own world-gathering, as her mother said they were. She refused to keep house, too, any longer, alleging her inability to keep her accounts correctly right, and refusing Gordon's offers to help her through; and as her mother was always at hand, and was a first-rate manager, Gordon turned over the military chest and the commissariat to her, until such time as Laura should recover her right mind, which he firmly believed she had lost. He did not gain much by the change. For he found that Mrs. Broughton's lovely face and lovely person could always be added up to rather more than Laura's girlish sprawls and blotches had done; and that the housekeeping had risen with a bound on an average of fifteen a week. And yet with no better or richer mode of living as the visible cause. But what could he do? "Bide a little from day to day," and it was very unfortunate indeed that we, Laura and I, chose that dear day when you say it was so cheap down in Catherine Street, the day before, or I forget which now. And as for brooms and brushes, no, dear boy, they don't burn their fingers—wood—you are so funny, Gordon! or boil the bristles into soup; they are a little extravagant in them, I confess, but then, you see, such a beautiful broom does have its consequence, and how delightfully clean! How, every there are the items set down correctly, one by one, and if I put a certain point set to me where we save, I am sure we will; won't we, Laura love?"

But Gordon couldn't point out the specially offending items—and if he did, there were the very things, you dear stupid old thing, that were absolutely indispensable—might as well do without bread or butter or tea—that were singularly cheap, or singularly small in quantity—just the very thing of all not to be interfered with, and that couldn't be cut down, or altered in any way. So Gordon gave up contesting the point; and not being suspicious, however rigid, accepted the rise in his household expenses as a regretful and inevitable, however mysterious.

He cared more about Laura's strange state of mind and uncomfortable behavior; but here, too, Mrs. Broughton came to his aid as his better angel, and smiled away, and laughed away, and cried, and twinkled her two turquoise beads, and said: "Don't notice her, my dear boy, she'll be better presently; and worry, worry, double soul!" which Gordon sagely gravely tender to her for days after, so considerate and gentle, that Laura's heart nearly broke; though her manner toward him was more constrained than ever, and her shrinking from him more apparent.

"When will all this end?" she cried, half aloud, as she threw herself on her bed after her beckside, in a passion of despair and unavailing remorse. When shall I escape from this, and be no longer a thief in my husband's house—no longer live a life of robbery and deception? Oh, if I could only die! if God would only let me die!" In this tragic vein live long, and Laura's initiation into the solemn terror of sin, however much it agonized her, blanched no shining, hair nor caused an impress on her smooth rich face. It saddened her soul but did not corrode her body; and well for her, though she in her girlish impulsiveness thought it ill, that the worm lived her, and grace and opportunity for reparation.

It was a terrible night—one of the most terrible of its kind—which almost a human passion in its fury, and more than human despair. The wind raved and howled through the streets, and through the chimneys, with no amount of drapery could keep it from stealing into the room like the ghostly wail broken bone from the dead; while the rain beat against the window-panes, and tore down on the pavement which it lashed and spurned like a liquid whip, making the gaslight reflection all dance and quiver and spout up in jets of light, as it plowed the wet already lying; and, mingled with the rain, was a cold and ghastly sleet and the stinging blows of hail, all knotted and twined together in a triple cord of winter wrath.

"What a night for Gordon!" said the mother, glancing at her daughter out of the corners of her eyes. Laura shivered for sympathy, and not for cold. "I never will what a night for all poor houseless wretches!" continued Mrs. Broughton, a little confessedly as to her tabulation. "What a night, indeed! not fit to turn a dog into!"

"No," said Laura, by way of saying something. And then there was silence again, as there always was now between the mother and daughter. And the wind howled more fiercely than before, and the rain beat more heavily against the windows, and the cruel bitterness of the evening deepened, till it seemed almost like the face of God withdrawn from the world.

A knock came to the door. It was not Gordon's knock, but a louder and clumsier knock, quite as imperative but not so refined; for even door-knockers can be representatives of states, and give utterance to insolence, of anger, or eagerness, or timidity, as eloquently as words. Laura and her mother both knew too well whose knock it was: the one turned scarlet and trembled, the other a light shade of cream and frowned, but there was no sign of a coming contest in either; only of fear and anger in the one, and of craft and anger in the other.

"Mr. Roderick," said Annie, opening the door sullenly. "Roderick, indeed!" she repeated, when she went down stairs to cook; "and I wonder who? Roderick, and as like to our young missis as pork's like to pig. I have eyes, I have!" which, indeed, Miss Annie, every one has not.

It was a strange contrast to that luxuriously furnished room, with its two brightly-dressed, elegantly-appointed ladies, that a visitor as now ushered in. Shade of the fire and under the shine of the gas, Haggard, dirty, wet to the skin, insolent with the insolence of a social and moral ruin that has never been built up again, the hunted look of a wild animal in his bloodshot eyes, and the desperation of a criminal prepared for the worst, yet prepared also to fight to the last, in his close-pressed mouth—he looked what he was, emphatically a dangerous man, throwing off his hat and stake.

"I have come here again, Louisa, you see," he said, abruptly, "in spite of your warning."

"Yes, I see," returned Mrs. Broughton, quietly "and a pretty pleasant night you have chosen."

"It suits me," he said, with a little laugh.

"Does it? I can imagine it," said Mrs. Broughton, in the same quiet, well-behaved way.

"Have you anything to say to your cousin, Laura?" then said the man, speaking harshly, and scowling at Laura.

"Nothing in the way of welcome," burst out Laura, not in her usual manner of shy timidity, but with a passion—a breaking down of accustomed restraint—that more than any thing else could have done what a terrible effect her late experience was working in her.

Her mother trod her foot. "Our dear pet is not quite well to-night," she said, in a voice that was meant to be warning. "You must not be angry with her."

"I have rather too much to think of, just at present, to trouble myself with little girlish impertinence," said Sam. But his dark and angry look did not quite suit the scornful carelessness of his words. "It is only a matter of a little money," he added.

"You have no business here at all," Laura went on to say, excitedly. "It is not our house, but Gordon's; and not our money, but his. You have no right to come about us as you do, following us in the streets, and making mamma give you money every week, which then she has to tell Gordon about, and pretend she has spent in the house. If it were not for her sake I would tell my husband every thing at once, and let him know the whole truth."

"I advise you not," said Sam, speaking very slowly and deliberately; "unless you are tired of him, or unless you're weary of his rent bill; for I swear to you this, as true as there's a God in heaven, I would at his throat if he dared to lay a finger on me."

"A God in heaven," said Mrs. Broughton. "I know that!"

"My husband could defend himself," cried Laura, scornfully; but she turned very pale as she spoke, and it was evident that her own thoughts frightened her, however brave her words.

"Could he?" sneered Sam. "I am glad you think so. I'll tell you not to try it, then. I can be good-natured, you see, sometimes, and I advise not just for your own sake, you know."

"And are we never to get rid of this horrible life?" exclaimed Laura, clasping her hands before her eyes.

"All in good time, my dear," said the man, brutally. "Perhaps sooner than you expect." And he looked at Mrs. Broughton, watching him out of the badly-cut corner with eyes that were more snake-like than human. "At all events you are not going to get rid of me just yet. Give me something to eat."

"Mamma!" appealed Laura.

She sighed and shrugged her shoulders. "What can I say, my dear? He is hungry," she said. "Perhaps," she then whispered, "if you treat him kindly and give him what he wants, he will go before your husband comes back, else I would not answer for the consequences if they meet. I do not command, Laura, my dear; I only advise. He is very wet, and hungry, and chilled, and wretched, poor fellow, and I can not help pitying him. Suppose you tell Annie to bring up the tea and then we will try to get rid of him quietly."

"I will do anything to do with it at all," said Laura. "I can not bear the whole thing any longer, and I will not help in it one way or another." And she got up from her chair to leave the room. Her mother would have prevented her.

"Let her be," said the man. "Let her go. It is best as it is. Poor little wench," he said, in almost a softened voice, when she had flung herself out of the room, "it is hard lines for her, say what you like! Now then, Louisa, I want you but first of all give me something to eat—and drink."

"They're attending of him now down in the dining-room!" cried Annie, when she came down with the order for the rapparee-way, tumblers, and hot water. "My! when master comes to know!"

"Mizes 'll hetch it," said the cook, philosophically. The cook had a husband of her own, and knew what it was for a wife to catch it pretty liberally.

Warmth and food and brandy, while they mended Sam's dilapidated body, seemed not to do much good to his soul. As he drank deeper, and the sense of physical well-being grew stronger, he became more sinful and unmanageable, unassailable by all Mrs. Broughton's cunning resources or wiles or caresses, and sullenly determined to stay there where he was, let what would be the consequence. Lying back in one of the arm-chairs, which his soiled and dripping clothes had soaked and spoiled forever, his feet fixed (he had no stockings) stretched out on the rug, while his muddy boots were drying, soles uppermost, inside the bright steel fender, his third tumbler of whisky-and-water in his hand—the third and the stiffest of all the stiff three—the conjoyments to be had from money swallowed up every thing else, and he was happy. Which is so much needed, and ultimate self-preservation. A kind of deadened stupidity came over him, a sleep of the intelligence, which made him forget every thing but the mere sensual pleasure of the moment. Mrs. Broughton was in despair. She could manage any situation requiring tact, and facile lying, and craftygeneralship, and quick-fingered moral scamperership; but between a half-drunken animal and a high-toned gentleman—she put her hands up to her head, with the feeling that it would be crushed in the collision. She dared not let sleep, and snored heavily. Then the little woman busied herself. She put out the gas, lighted an extra lamp, and locked up her desk back to her son she took care to mix the grog herself; and so this tea passed off, and Gordon made no remark.

Still the man never stirred, and the gilt-less rain still the same wild sobs and moans in the air, like the souls of the lost come back to the scene of their sins and their punishment, the same sense of danger hanging round the night, and of evil threatening the future. Laura could not sleep for those ghastly noises and their terror, tired as she was, was feverish and disturbed, and restless like herself.

"What is that?" he cried suddenly, starting up and looking round him, wide awake and frightened too. It was a small grating noise, such as might be made by a file, and sounded like the filing of a bolt. It sounded like the filing of the bolt in the dining-room, as well as they could judge. Presently it ceased, and then they heard a movement in the room open, and a soft and stealthy foot creeping up the stairs.

"Some one is in the house!" cried Gordon, dashing on his clothes, and flung open the bedroom door—flung it open face to face with a swarthy, shabby, ill-conditioned man, who leaped across the passage with bare feet, and holding a dark lantern in his hand.

A muttered oath on the one side, but nothing more, and a struggle on the other, and then the two men sprang together in a grapple that seemed for life or death. A long and silent and deadly struggle: Laura and her wild shriek before she fainted lost in the wilder noises of the night: a struggle that meant more than the mere physical mastery of the combatants, but was the symptom of spirits and the fight of fate with will: a struggle that might be for life or triumphant power, and destroy the very life of the household forever. That long, fierce, silent struggle!—only the sound of the men's breathing, hard and fast, and the slipping of their feet on the floor, and the heavy bruising of the flesh as blows were struck and met by blows against the sound of a falling body strikingbreaking the terrible anguish of the night. But for once fortune went over to the other side; and after a long and terrible struggle Gordon had the man down on the ground, and was kneeling over him with his hand on his throat.

Then the two quick and lightly-stepping feet, and Mrs. Broughton, fully dressed, slid round to Gordon's side, and whispered something in his ear. Gordon looked round and then whispered—never, to the last day of her life. That was a secret which her husband was to shout with him always, unknown and unshared; the splash of mud which he kept covered up forever from both wife and children. Whispered: and the man him improper back as with a sudden faintness—his grasp on the man's throat relaxing, and his pressure loosening. Taking advantage of the momentary weakness, Sam slipped away from under him, and, rushing down the stairs, went out, a detected criminal, bareheaded, bleeding, and barefooted, into the cruel fury of the night.

Two years after there died in Sing Sing a prisoner convicted of murder. His name, under the name of Roderick, who used to talk mysteriously at times, when his brain was a little affected, of a ring, an inheritance, and especially of his daughter, "one of the finest young women in the country," though nobody gave much heed to his boasts. He died, however, no matter of that, b-lieved in them. But when news of his death—sent by a penniless acquaintance of peculiar—came to a certain Mrs. Lascelles, then acting as lady housekeeper to a widower of independent means in the country, had a fit of tears of joy; almost then the only tears she had ever been known to shed; and ever after might have been observed—had any one known of the circumstance—and cured to connect events together—to dress with even more than her ordinary care and taste; and to be more than ever pleasant to her employer's children.

"You are not afraid of me now, Laura?" Gordon said this two years after that memorable winter night, when, strangely, it was just two years, when they were both sitting by a gracious little bed done up as a nursery-bower, by the depths of which a fire, flashed with warmth and sleep, lay like a rosebud among the lace and down.

"No," said Laura, and hid her face in his arm; but she lifted it up directly after, and looked at him tenderly, if bashfully, in the eyes. "Never again, Gordon!—never again consenting to the smallest act of deception toward you!—never again more afraid of truth than of sin!"

"No, and I am sure as I love you, my wife! Where love is real there must of necessity be trust. What is that word—one of the truest of all the true words written there, 'Perfect love casteth out fear?' And our love now made perfect," and he looked at the tiny face in the bassinet-bed, "must cast out fear and distrust forever."

"Forever! dearest Gordon," said Laura, and put her arm round him, and clung to his breast. And an Angel of God wandering through the homes of men to bless the loving, blessed them that night with a blessing that never departed or faded away.

SHADOW OF DEATH.

On Mona's desolate shore, in a cavern by the sea, there dwelt long ages ago the last of the Druids. Across lone waters he came to know long had lived there alone; some said it was for a hundred years, and others that it was for a time far beyond the age of man; and that the Druid was no other than Merlin himself, who had seen Arthur die, and had dwelt in the halls of Caerleon, and worshipped in yet greater fane in the sun-temple of Stonehenge. Men and women traveled far to visit the solitary cavern where the Druid dwelt, and to ask him to reveal to them the mysteries of life and death; and kings came to consult him regarding war and the policy of states, and priests asked him concerning eternal things, and to all of them the Druid made response, and his words were wise and good, and were treasured in many souls.

Now it came to pass one morning in the later autumn, when the air was still and shrouded, and the sere leaves were slowly descending from the trees, and the salt green sea cast its tribute of wrack and shells at the door of the Druid's cave, that there came up together from different lands seven royal vassals, and they all entered into the cavern to entreat the seer to answer their questions and give them counsel. And behold the Druid sat on a stone in the depths of the cave, and the red fire-light shone on his white raiment, and his hair and beard were white as snow, and his eyes were like dark and sad sweet, and none who looked on him felt any more fear. And the seven suppliants drew near and saluted him reverently; and he bowed his head to them, and they should speak, and each of them in turn spoke; and this was what they said:

"O Druid! I am a queen of far-off islands, and my king, who loved me well, loves me no more, nor remembers me at all, and I am alone with him my father's crown, and loved him with my whole heart. What must I do to awaken his love?"

And the second suppliant spoke and said:

"O Druid! I am a knight and I loved a lady who once gave me her troth; and I have borne for her in my hand a banner with a bloody field, and I have brought her back glory and fame; yet she loves me no more. What must I do to awaken her love?"

And the third suppliant spake and said:

"O Druid! I am a rich man, and I loved my brother, and divided with him my lands and gold; but he loves me no more. What must I do to awaken his love?"

And the fourth suppliant spake and said:

"O Druid! I am a bard, and I loved not one man only, but the good and the fair all. I poured out my soul in song; but they loved me not, nor responded to my words. What must I do to awaken their love?"

And the fifth suppliant spake and said:

"O Druid! I am a seeker of knowledge, and I love my race, and have imparted to it all the truths I have read in the stars and gathered from the ends of the earth; but they love me not, nor regard my lessons. What must I do to awaken their love?"

And the sixth suppliant spake and said:

"O Druid! I am not great, nor wise, nor rich, nor beautiful; I am but a poor maiden, and I love not only the good and learned, but also the weak and ignorant, and I give them my heart all my time; and all my life; but they love me not, and, because they love me not, I can not serve them as I would, and I am sad. What must I do to win their love?"

And the seventh suppliant spake and said:

"O Druid! I am a mother, and I love my only son; and I have no crown, or heritage, or art, or wisdom, to give him; but I gave him what was more precious than them all—a mother's love. Yet he loves me not. What must I do to awaken his love?"

Then the seven suppliants stood silent, and the Druid sat still for a little space. And the night had fallen while they spake, and the fire had burned low, and the ashes of the Druid's feet were red.

And it came to pass, as they waited patiently, that the depth of the cavern seemed to become light, as if a glorious moon were filling it. And, as they gazed at the mist, behold! as if reclining on clouds, lay a form as of a beautiful youth, more beautiful than any of the children of men, and he was all in shade. And the Druid spake to the suppliants and said: "Behold now, and see how Love sheepeth; and how happy are his slumbers! and who is it that shall awaken him?" And lo! there came through the mist a train of beautiful women, and they were pursued by the couch of Love, and strove to wake him with kisses and with tears. And some tried to awaken him through their eyes and ears; and others were seen to wring their hands and kneel at his feet in agony; and others brought him crowns, and sceptres, and gold, and gems, and stars of honor, and wreaths of fame, and they cried with exceeding bitter cries, "O Love, awake! awake!" But Love slumbered on, and he heeded not, and his eyes was unbroken alike by their kisses, or gifts, or tears.

Then there came forth from the mist another band, pale and dark, and dressed in the secrets of the grave; and it passed slowly nearer and nearer to the couch, till its shadow fell like the shadow of a cloud over Love as he slept.

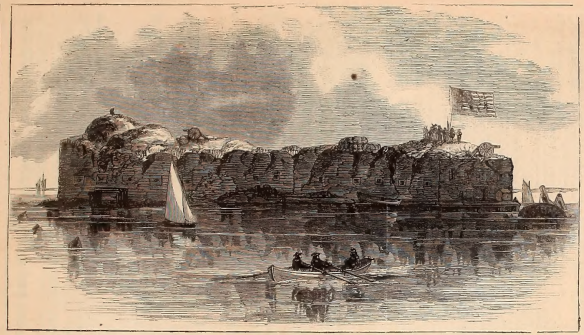
Then Love sprang up with a wild and terrible cry, and held forth his arms for those to return who had striven to waken him so long, but who now were passed away beyond his reach forever. And the Druid turned mournfully to the suppliants and said: "Only this solace have I for your aching hearts, SLEEPING LOVE WILL WAKEN WHEN EVER HIM FALLS THE SHADOW OF DEATH!"

GENERAL KILPATRICK RECAPTURING HIS HEAD-QUARTERS, MARCH 10, 1865.

GENERAL KILPATRICK'S OPERATIONS.

IT was at Aiken, a few miles northeast of Augusta, that KILPATRICK fought his first battle. Here the Second Brigade under General ATKINS encountered WHEELER'S command. Falling back so as to receive the support of the other brigades, ATKINS awaited the attack of the enemy, which was repulsed.

There was no other engagement until March 10, when KILPATRICK came into collision with WADE HAMPTON'S command. KILPATRICK was pushing forward in order to reach Fayetteville before HARDEE, and strike him in the flank, or, failing in this, to intercept HAMPTON, who was following in HARDEE'S rear. HARDEE made better time than KILPATRICK, moving out from Coleman's Grove just as the latter entered it. KILPATRICK'S cavalry was not all up, two of the brigades being behind on account of the bad roads. In this situation KILPATRICK was attacked by three divisions of rebel cavalry. He was obliged to abandon his head-quarters and two pieces of artillery until he could bring his command together. But HAMPTON did not keep the ground long. KILPATRICK soon returned, and, leading his men on in a furious charge, swept the field and regained his camps and artillery. His loss was not over a hundred, while the enemy left upon the field seventy-six killed, and his wounded must have numbered several hundred.



We illustrate this battle on this page. We also give two sketches showing SHERMAN'S foragers, or "bummers," as the soldiers call them, setting out from and returning to camp. These foragers not only collected provisions, but also acted as flankers and advance skirmishers.

FORAGERS "STARTING OUT" IN THE MORNING.

FORAGERS RETURNING TO CAMP AT NIGHT.

FORT SUMTER—SIDE TOWARD CHARLESTON.—[Sketched by Stanley Fox.]

NEGRO RECRUITS AT CHARLESTON.

LONG DOCK AT HILTON HEAD—LANDING OF RECRUITS FROM CHARLESTON.—[Sketched by Stanley Fox.]

Do not waste your Money buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOLD PENS, which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the Best in the WORLD.

Avoid the shameless Upstarts, whose lack of brains compels them to attempt IMITATION, even to the advertisement. If you want the full value of your money, call on A. MORTON, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

TO SMOKERS!

STYLE, NEATNESS, COMFORT, ECONOMY.

PATENT IMPROVED

RIDGEWOOD SMOKING-CASE:

ARCHER & PANCOAST,

Nos. 9, 11, 13, 15, and 17 Mercer Street, New York.

Sole Agents for the Case and Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco.

EXPLANATION.

A—Pipe Case.
B—Tobacco Pouch.
C—Pipe.
D—Tape Step.
E—Valve Rod.
G—Matches.
H—Pipe Lighter.
I—Valve Rod.
K—Tobacco.

Hold the case (Fig. 2) in your left hand, to load your Pipe, withdraw and close the valve (D) once or twice, press the thumb on the catch (A) and open the case, withdraw the pipe stem (D) and adjust it to (C), draw the pipe in your mouth, ignite a match on the top of the Safety-Lighter, close the case with the forefinger of the left hand (Fig. 3), and light your pipe.

No. 1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	6.
$2 00,	$3 00,	$4 50,	$4 50,	$5 00,	$6 00.

The last two are heavily plated and engraved. Single cases sent by mail or express free upon receipt of price and 25 cents extra. Terms, Cash! Liberal discount to dealers.

FROM THE ARMY.

"It is the most complete apparatus I have ever seen."
A. E. BURNSIDE, Major-General.

"I find pleasure in the neatness and practical arrangement of your new invention."
F. SHERI, Major-General.

"I believe your ingenious and beautiful little invention will prove most useful to every officer and soldier who can stand smoke as well as fire."
Gen. THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER.

"Every soldier in the patriot cause ought to have one of the cases. If I were rich enough every man and officer of the 69rd O. V. (God bless them all!) should have one of them."
Col. CHARLES ANDERSON,
Lieut.-Governor of Ohio.

1 GOLD
2 PENS
3 AND
CASES.

Read these Prices of a few of our Styles:

A fine Gold Pen, with Ebony or Silver-plated Extension Holder.....$1 00
Size No. 2.....1 25
Size No. 3.....1 50
A 14-Carat Pen in Solid Silver, or Ebony Extension Holder, Size No. 2.....2 75
Size No. 3.....3 00
A 14-Carat Pen in Gold-plated Telescopic Case.....3 50
A 14-Carat Pen in Solid Silver Holder, Size No. 2.....3 50
Size No. 3.....4 00

And other styles equally cheap. A liberal Discount on large orders. Send for a Circular. R. KEITH & CO., 13 John Street, New York. All goods sent free by mail.

DWIGHT'S JOURNAL OF MUSIC.

Published weekly, each number containing 16 pages, including FOUR PAGES OF SUPERIOR MUSIC. MUSICAL ESSAYS, CRITICISMS, REVIEWS, REPORTS OF CONCERTS, a General Summary of MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE, and CORRESPONDENCE from all parts of the United States and Europe. Terms, $2 a year. Specimen copies sent free on application. Published by OLIVER DITSON, Boston.

BEAUTIFUL FALSE MUSTACHES, 50 cents and $1. WHISKERS, 50 cents and $1. Sent post-paid. Send stamp for circular. Address C. W. PHILLO, Brooklyn, N.Y.

MERWIN & BRAY FIRE-ARMS CO.'S
Belt and Pocket Size Cartridge Revolvers.

The lady size weighs only 12 ounces, carries a ball 42-100 calibre (larger than Colt's Pocket), and can be used with either fixed or loose ammunition. The Pocket size weighs 20 oz., and carries a ball 36-100 calibre (same as Colt's and 44 inch).

These Pistols are loaded and discharged with only four motions—a degree of perfection never attained by any revolving arms. A full round may be loaded and discharged in thirty seconds. These arms have been adopted and purchased by the U. S. Revenue Service. Testimonials of their efficiency and value received from the highest sources, and also from civilians. Printed circulars (with illustrated cuts, testimonials, &c.) sent free to all who write.

MERWIN & BRAY are also sole proprietors of the Ballard Breech-Loading Rifle and Carbine—Military arms need no comment. Their high character for efficiency and sporting purposes is so well established that the public only wish to know where they may be purchased. These Guns are used by Captains Crawford and Fish on the Overland Expedition to the Pacific, under contract of the U. S. Government. The General Government and the State of Kentucky have about Twenty Thousand (20,000) now in active field service, of which the highest testimonials are received.

Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers generally.

MERWIN & BRAY,
Address orders to No. 162 Broadway, New York.

P.S.—IMPORTANT.—These Rifles can be used with either fixed or loose ammunition.

"DEATH AND DESTRUCTION TO THE BRITISH INVADERS!"

The hag a wild and hideous thing—
The youth a patriot brave—
She only thought of dire revenge—
He would his country save.
The goddess shrieked within her breast
Was mirthless, black-browed hate—
He only sighed to win a bride,
And on his country great.
"Ruth Roy shall never be thy bride,
Dick Champ, ever mark me well!
Out! out! foul witch!" the patriot cried,
"Till win her yet, Will Hall!"

NOW READY

in the columns of

THE NEW YORK WEEKLY,

universally acknowledged to be the most attractive Story and Sketch Paper in the world, a romance of great power and transcendent beauty, entitled

WILD NELL, THE SPY;

OR,

THE FOUNDLINGS OF THE FOREST.

A Romance of the Revolutionary War, from the pen of the world-renowned romancer,

Francis S. Smith,

Author of "White Eagle, the Avenger," "Galeaus the Gladiator," "The Sexton of Saxony," "Beube, the Ranger," "Arnel Kein," "Maggie, the Child of Charity," "Lillian, the Wanderer," "Evelleen Wilson," etc., etc.

This is, beyond question, one of the greatest historical romances of modern times; and it possesses the merit of being highly instructive as well as intensely interesting. The main incidents of the story are strictly historical, and these incidents are thoroughly interwoven in a manner to form of the whole one of the most absorbing romances ever given to the world. There is many a person who will not vote through the day details of history; but when there is no person of either sex who will fail to become fairly absorbed while reading this extraordinary work. The author, in fact, takes those who are averse to dry details, and makes them acquainted with the history of the Revolution in spite of themselves, and in a way, too, which renders the facts impossible. It is not every body who has this great gift of weaving exciting romance out of dry details, for a great gift it is, and one exclusively to a world of good when given, as it has been, to every American man, woman, and child should at least be familiar with that era of the history of his own country which has been very properly termed "the times that tried men's souls."

In perusing WILD NELL, the reader, unconsciously to himself, becomes so interested in the characters introduced as to almost consider himself one of them. There is a graphic charm about the style in which the story is written which carries every reader captive, and he passes through the deeds of daring, hair-breadth escapes, acts of heroism, and touching love scenes, with such lively interest that he or she were actually moving among the actors in the group.

And the most prominent characters of the Revolution are introduced in WILD NELL from the Old-like Washington himself down to the famous Sergeant Champ, who escaped the capture of the infamous Arnold after the escape of the latter. The particulars of the execution of the patriot spy, Captain Nathan Hale, of Connecticut, are also given, and in fact almost every prominent incident which occurred in our great struggle for freedom.

The popularity of the author of WILD NELL will, we know, add tens of thousands to our readers; but apart from this, every body should read the story for the good it will do them.

THE NEW YORK WEEKLY is sold by all News Agents throughout the United States. The price is SIX CENTS, but in some cases, where Agents have to pay extra freight or postage, a higher price is necessarily charged. When there is a News Agent in the town, we desire our friends to get the WEEKLY through him. We do not wish to avoid the paper except to places where there is no other means of getting it. When sent by mail, single copies, $3 per annum; four copies, $12, when all to the party who sends us $20 for a club of eight copies (all sent at one time) will be entitled to a copy free. Postmasters and others who get up clubs, in order to receive their extra copies, will please send for a specimen number. Subscribers must send every cents in addition to the subscription, to pay the American postage. When a draft or check can conveniently be sent it will be preferred, as it will be less liable to accident by mail. Address all communications relating to the WEEKLY to all parts of the country in only twenty cents a year, or five cents a quarter, payable at the office where the paper is delivered.

Address

STREET & SMITH,
11 Frankfort Street, New York.

Capital Stock, $1,500,000, divided into 300,000 shares, at par value of $5 per share. Subscription price for a limited number of shares, remaining in the treasury, at present cash offer or assessment on the Shareholders. PRESIDENT, R. L. CABLE, New York.

Lands and thirty wells on Oil Creek, Cherry Run, Cherry Tree Run, Walnut Bend, Allegheny River, opposite Shack Run, Sugar Run, and Tarr Farm, embracing 26 different properties.

Wells now being bored down 300 to 500 feet, with splendid prospects of immense yields of oil.

Stocks will surely rise. Only a few days will equal number of shares remaining. Prospectus, maps, and every information in regard to the PETROLEUM REGION, at the Company, No. 71 Broadway, New York.

Whiskers! Mustaches!—The celebrated HIM-ALAYA COMPOUND is warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in two weeks. An English patent article, which does the thing to the life. Sent post-paid, for $1. Address Dr. H. DE FORREST, Troy, New York.

DR. DE FORREST'S
WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Onguent will force them to grow on the smoothest face or hairless head, on a shaved chin or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of an order. Address, DR. F. G. GRAHAM, No. 169 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Great Closing Sale!!

$650,000 WORTH of Watches, Chains, and Fine Jewelry, to be sold for ONE DOLLAR EACH, without reserve, each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you see what you are to get. Only 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1. There is no humbug connected with this sale. Read the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond ring, or any kind of Jewelry on our list for One Dollar, and in no case can they get less than a Dollar's worth, as these are the conditions. No Certificate will be sent for $1. Thirteen for $3, Thirty-five for $5, One Hundred for $15. Great inducements are offered those who act as Agents. Catalogues containing full lists and particulars mailed free. Address

JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,
238 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

O'DOR! O'DOR!

DR. BRIGGS'S

GOLDEN O'DOR

Will force a beautiful set of whiskers or mustache on the smoothest face from five to eight weeks, without stain or injury to the skin, or hair on bald head in eight weeks (can be steamed). I receive recommendation most every day from persons that have used it and found it genuine. Testimonials of thousands. I will send Briggs' Golden O'Dor, by mail, sealed and safe, $1 (5 Warranted). Send orders to

DR. C. BRIGGS,
Drawer 6269, Chicago, Ill.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELRY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELRY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENT'S PINS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000,

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1 and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars; also terms to agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
286 Broadway, New York.

"INDISPENSABLE." No Correspondent, Gentleman, or Lady, Public Speaker, Teacher, nor Man of Business should be without the New Hand-Book. How TO WRITE: HOW TO TALK: HOW TO BEHAVE, and HOW TO DO BUSINESS. A handy volume of 600 pages, for ready reference. Sent by first post for $2.25. Agents wanted. Please address FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York.

BARD & BROTHER'S (Established 1849)

GOLD PENS,

PEN AND PENCIL CASES. Also Manufacturer of BARD & WILSON'S PATENT ANGULAR NIB GOLD PENS. J. & D. BARD, Agt's, No. 32 Maiden Lane, N. Y. Repointing, 50 cents. Send for a Circular.

Itch! Itch! Itch!

SCRATCH! SCRATCH! SCRATCH!

WILSON'S "ITCH ENDED"

WILL CURE THE ITCH IN 48 hours.

Also cures SALT RHEUM, ULCERS, CHILBLAINS, and all ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN. Price 50 cents. For sale by all Druggists.

By sending 60 cents to WEEKS & POTTER, Sole Agents, 170 Washington St., Boston, it will be forwarded by mail, free of postage, to any part of the United States.

Albums for the Million.

We have a Splendid Picture POCKET ALBUM, by mail, post-paid, for Seventy-five Cents, and our 24-Picture ALBUM for $1.

JUST THE THING FOR SOLDIERS.

SAMUEL NORTON & CO.'S ALBUM MANUFACTORY, Springfield, Mass.

Printing-Presses for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Self-Inking, Fine Size Press.

Also one Adams Press, 26x30, $1000.

Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

Wonderful Stamp! Full instructions by which any person can transfer the use of a newspaper for a few hours. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Sent by mail for 50 cts. Address M. A. JAGGERS, Lisbon, O.

Gold Pens! Gold Pens!! Cheap!!!

One A No. 1 Gold Pen, one Silver-Plated Holder, one Package of Ink Powder, by mail, for 50 cents. Address M. M. CO., Albany, N. Y. Drawer 16.

$10 A DAY MADE CLEAR by any person anywhere. Best chance in the world. No space to explain. Every body should know it. Don't fail to send stamp for circulars containing full particulars. Address J. W. STEPHENS, 329 Broadway, New York.

UPHAM'S PIMPLE BANISHER

Removes Pimples on the Face. PRICE 50 CENTS. It also softens the skin and beautifies the complexion. No toilet is complete without it. Prepared only by C. UPHAM, Chemist. Sold by druggists. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE JAPANESE HAIR STAIN

Colors Hair, Whiskers, and Mustaches a beautiful black or brown. It consists of only one preparation. Color produced in one hour or less. Sold by druggists. Mailed to any address, for 75 cents, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

PORTABLE

PRINTING OFFICES

For Merchants, Druggists, Hospitals, small Job Printers, &c., &c. Send for Circular. ADAMS PRESS CO., 98 New York. Specimen Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., 50c Cents.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Ballou, Washington, and Broadway, connected by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 60 Broadway. Buffalo Express Office.

Weston's Metallic Artificial Legs—Light, efficient, cheapest, most durable, and most natural ever invented. Price $150 and upwards. Send for circular.
J. W. WESTON, 491 Broadway, N. Y.

AGENTS, COME and EXAMINE

An invention urgently needed by every body, or samples sent free by mail for 50 cts. which retails for quickly. Address E. L. WOLCOTT, No. 170 Chatham Square, N. Y.

Look! Look! Look! My Golden Compound will turn the hair from any color to a beautiful brown in 24 days. Satisfaction given, or money refunded. Price 50 cents, or three for $1. Sent by mail, post-paid, anywhere. Address "Hair to Dye." Whiskers in 6 wks. Gumbling exposed. Fortune-telling. Ventriloquism, &c. 100 great secrets. Free for 3c. Address Drawer 16, Lisbon, O.

NEW BOOKS,

PUBLISHED BY HARPER & BROTHERS.

AN ELEGANT LIBRARY EDITION OF VANITY FAIR. Vanity Fair: a Novel without a Hero. By W. M. THACKERAY. With numerous Illustrations by the Author, and a Portrait on Steel, engraved by Holl, from a Picture by Samuel Laurence. An elegant Library Edition, in Three Volumes, Post 8vo, on Tinted Paper. Cloth, $3.

CHRISTIAN'S MISTAKE. A Novel. By MISS MULOCH, Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." 12mo, Cloth, $1 50.

TONY BUTLER. A Novel. 8vo, Cloth, $1 50; Paper, $1 00.

UNCLE SILAS. A Story of Bartram-Haugh. By J. S. LE FANU, Author of "Wylder's Hand," "The House by the Church-yard," &c. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

☞ Any of the above works sent by mail, postage-free, on receipt of price.

$8 OFFICER'S $10

One whole stock of Imported Watches, being of rich and novel designs, are now offered at reduced prices. Single Watches at Wholesale rates.

An Elegant Watch in Fine Gold Plated Double Cases, Richly Engraved, Turned Centre, Curved Bevelled Bridges, English Model Lever, Jewelled Movements, Imported Stem Letter, Spring Bolt, Spade Hands, in running order, with Key. Dial, a complete article in every respect. Sent by Express, C.O.D., subject to examination, on receipt of $10. Sold everywhere else at $20. Also, a Solid Gold Locket, to match, with and a handsome Chain, for Ten Additional Dollars. Send Double Cases, Box, and Chain, by express or country for only $10. Buy at the first hand, and save the profits of the middle men.

A NEAT SILVER WATCH, especially adapted for army use, in Double Cases, Small Size, same as the size, in Turned Centre, Key, Case, complete, and Guard Chain, Only $5 by express or country for only $6.

The Imperial Watch,

Containing a Rare and Wonderful Combination of Movements, the whole forming a timekeeper with its cases unrivalled in its machinery a beautiful and correct working Timepiece, an accurately adjusted Mercurial Compass in miniature, rank in Dial, and a Reliable Calendar, indicating days of month, week, etc., in Cases, rendered by this Watch a perfect STEM, HEAD, and TIME INDICATOR. The beautiful machinery of this valuable Watch is inserted in Finely Finished DOUBLE HUNTING, Magic Spring 19 Lids, Open Face under each being of fine 18 Carat Gold, Same cases of Solid Gold Composition, Richly Engraved Top and Bottom, with Fancy Centre, and Fancy Dial, Same as the Genuine English Jewelled Imported Article, M. J. Tobin Superintends. Finished Self-acting Gilt Dial, Jewelled Lever, Independent Actions, Fine White Dials, Polished Steel Cut Hands, and an Exact Imitation in Appearance, Weight, and Work by the ROYAL KNGINEERS and Officers of the Revenue Army, to the most standard time-keeper. Some cannot tell from hearing our private trade-mark. Price per single one, all complete, by mail, to any part of the world, only $20.

CATELY BROTHERS, Sole Importers,
No. 5 Nassau St., N. Y. Established 1825.

AMERICAN GOLD PEN CO.'S
CELEBRATED GOLD PENS.

Imperial Gold Pens, with three-or-shower-pliant-pointed extension cases.

No. 2 Pens and Holders, per Dozen..... $11 00
" 3 " " " 12 00
" 4 " " " 14 00
" 5 " " " 17 00
" 6 " " " 20 00

These Pens are all stamped "Imperial Pen," and are of well-finished and fine writing gold pens, with gold ambrotypes, &c. Sent out by the Company, to whom soldiers and others specializing they will be found superior to any in market.

WARRANTED GOLD PENS, 1st Quality, in Silver or Gold Mounted Holders, Gold-Holders and Pencils.

For $2 25, No. 8 Pen: for $2 50, No. 4 Pen: for $3 50, No. 5 Pen: for $4 00, No. 6 Pen: No. 1 Pen, for $6 75, No. 8 Pen. Address

AMERICAN GOLD PEN COMPANY,
No. 209 Broadway, New York.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
Manufacturers and Photographic Materials
NEW YORK AND LONDON.
501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

In addition to our main business of PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, we manufacture the following articles:

STEREOSCOPES & STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS,
Adapted to the Parlor, Library, Field, Study, Travelling, and the American and Foreign Offices and Legations.
Also, Developing Stereoscopes, for public of private exhibition. Our Galleries will be sold to any extent on receipt of Stamp.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS,
Of every Style for Introducing Cartes de Visite, Stereoscopic Views, and to manufacture instruments requisite in great variety, ranging in price from 50 cents to $50 each. Our Albums have the reputation of being superior in beauty and durability to any others. Sold by booksellers, by mail, FREE, on receipt of price.

5,000 FINE ALBUM PHOTOGRAPHS,
Of Celebrated Persons, Actresses, Statuary, &c.

Our Catalogue of Stereoscopic Views will be sent free to applicants to which additions are continually being made; of Foreign and National Scenery, etc., etc., viz.:

100 Magic Scenes, 100 Lieut.-Colonels, 100 Statuettes,
100 Rural Scenes, 100 Generals, 100 Groups,
100 Architectural Views, 100 Officers, 1,000 Portraits,
48 Artists, 100 Ships, 50 Pictorial Women,
2,000 Copies of Works of Art.

Including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statuary, &c., &c., in the Public Galleries of Europe. An average of one Thousand Persons view our Stereoscopic Views daily. Sales on the receipt of $1.00, and sent by mail, free.

Catalogues and orders entering goods C.O.D. will please accept or certify they are part of the amount with their orders.

☞ The above facility of our goods enables us to offer to Soldiers' Pocket Albums for 18 Pictures, 75 cents.

PLAYING CARDS.

The American Card Company's
New Playing Cards,
National Emblems.

They are the prettiest card made, and suit the popular idea. They are Union, Eagle, Shield, Stripes, Liberty, Concord, in place of King, Goddess or Liberty for Queen, and Major for Knave.

All the games can be played as readily as with cards bearing foreign emblems. Each pack is put up in a fine card-case, and then in dozen boxes for the trade.

In order that dealers may have a fair opportunity to sell these cards, a sample box of twelve packs will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of Fifty Dollars.

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
No. 54 Chambers Street, New York.

SOMETHING NEW for the ARMY.

Genuine Enamelled Gold Cerps Rings.

I will send, on receipt of $3, a 16-carat Gold Ring for either Division or Corps in the Army, and for $5 I will send one also, same style. This is the only Ring made for officers or Soldiers. Send the size of the finger.) Also, I will send, on receipt of $1, a Solid Gold Silver Badge (Gilt Silver), appropriate for either Corps or Division, for Officers or Soldiers; Pioneers, Corps, and Corps Departments of the Army, with your name, regiment, and number handsomely engraved thereon; and for $3 I will send a Solid Gold Monnie Pin. Agents wanted every where. Send for descriptive illustrated circular.

B. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler,
No. 119 Nassau St., N. Y.

Brandreth's Pills.

No medicine in the world can be at all compared to them in this, that they may be taken at any time, night or day, before or after or with dinner or supper. When the eyes are yellow, when the head aches, when the stomach or the bowels are out of order, one single dose of four or five pills will benefit beyond the power of words to describe.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. See upon it B. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING,
NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicines.

Dr. Poland's
WHITE PINE
COMPOUND
THE GREAT AND POPULAR
REMEDY FOR
Colds, Coughs, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Croup, and Whooping-Cough.

Cures Great and all Kidney Diseases.

There have been many severe cases in Boston and vicinity cured by the WHITE PINE COMPOUND, which can be referred to, and hundreds of cases of Kidney complaint, Chronic Sore Throat, and Lung that White Pine Compound have been reported by Druggists.

Among all the popular preparations offered for sale, no one seems to have gained favor like the White Pine Compound. The medicine has been made public for the last year of 1864, and then merely for one individual who was affected with an inflammation of the throat, and was effected by it. This induced others to apply for the same remedy, and the result was the same, a great benefit. The medicine, however, went without a name till November following, when it was called White Pine Compound. During that month it was advertised for the first time.

Since that time to 1866 an immense sum was purchased a bottle for a hard cough, was not only cured of the cough, but also of a severe kidney complaint of years' experience. This being truly a discovery, the fact was mentioned to a few friends, and soon began to spread, and from the birth of White Pine was one of the best disorders known, provided its extravagant advertisement. If the other articles entering into the Compound would effect this, it was found in the White Pine. Many have not yet been reached; but the hundreds of cures effected by the Compound, in the short period since of Kidney Diseases including Diabetes, prove it to be a wonderful Medicine, and one that will be a great benefit to all physicians now employ it or recommend it for such use.

But while the White Pine Compound is so useful in kidney inflammation, it is also a wonderful curative in Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Sore Throat and all severe Lung Diseases. Many of these cases have been cured by the White Pine Compound was so favorably received at the first.

The past year has given a great opportunity to test the virtues of the White Pine Compound, and has been an unusual time for Colds and Coughs, and very large quantities of the White Pine Compound have been sold and used with the happiest effects. It speaks well for the Medicine that the people living where it is prepared so high in its praise.

TESTIMONIALS.

A very large number of Physicians and Chemists have already been received from Physicians, Clergymen, Apothecaries, and indeed from all classes, and from all parts, of the most flattering terms of the White Pine Compound.

Dr. Nathaniel A. Rutherford, of Boston, says:

"I find the White Pine Compound to be very effectious not only in curing Coughs, Colds, and Consumption, but also in affections of the Kidneys, debility of the stomach, and other kindred organs."

Rev. J. K. Chase, of Romney, N. H., writes:

"I have for a long time used the White Pine Compound as an invaluable remedy. I can truly say that I regard it as a very valuable medicine for Coughs and Colds, and can just taken the Compound for a cold, and it works charmingly."

Hon. P. H. Sweetser, of South Reading, writes:

"I have used and recommended the White Pine medicinal properties of the White Pine, I was prepared, on seeing an advertisement of it, to give it a fair investigation, to give the medicine a trial. It has been used by members of my family with very beneficial results, and has proved in some cases of serious kidney difficulties with excellent results. Many others in this vicinity have also derived much benefit from the Compound. We intend to keep it always on hand.

From JAMES J. HOYT.

Dated at Boston, Mass., M. H., Sept. 1860.

DR. POLAND.—In the fall of 1857 I took a very violent cold, which settled on my lungs, and I had a fever in one and lungs, and raising blood. I was also very badly affected in the kidneys, and passed blood from the bladder. I applied for the three years past I have been very much troubled with my kidneys and bladder, and was raising an immense slight, with a bad cough after raising blood; I felt that my time here must be short unless I soon got relief. The spring I was induced to try your White Pine Compound. I purchased a bottle, and from the use my astonishment, before I had taken two bottles, my cough was lessened, my kidneys were also much relieved, and without choking up and raising so much. I have taken nearly three bottles, and am better than I have been for

I would add, that my father's family is inclined to consumption, my father, mother, and sister having died of it.

From STEPHEN BARTLETT.

BRADFORD, N. H., July, 1860.

DR. POLAND.—I had been afflicted with Kidney Complaint for a long time, and had a cough of ten years' standing, which caused me to spit blood quite frequently. No one of my acquaintance thought I would get my health again. But two bottles of your White Pine Compound have cured me of my Kidney and Lung Complaints. I would also state that a lady, a neighbor of mine, had been afflicted with a cough for years, so up only long enough to have her bed made, and we all thought she would die with consumption. She took one bottle of your White Pine Compound, and it cured her. She is just as well now as ever she was.

The White Pine Compound, advertised at length in our columns, is not only as to its name inviting, but is highly approved among the people. It is, indeed, a favorite, and the confidence of many who know him—confidence which is not to be withheld from a physician of his skill and distinguished eminence. His experience as a sufferer led him to make experiments which resulted in his medical discovery.

—Boston Wachman and Reporter.

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND,
GEORGE W. SWETT, M.D.,
Proprietor,

Will be manufactured in future at the
NEW ENGLAND BOTANIC DEPOT, 106 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

Under the supervision of
REV. J. V. POLAND, M.D.

DR. SWETT will attend to the business department, to whom all orders should be addressed.

Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers in Medicine every where.

Price 75 Cents per Bottle.

Important Announcement.

GREAT SALE of
WATCHES, CHAINS, DIAMOND RINGS, &C.
One Million Dollars Worth!
TO BE DISPOSED OF AT
ONE DOLLAR EACH!

Without regard to value!! Not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive !!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES!
All to be sold at One Dollar Each!!

200	Music Books, each.....	$20 to $150
200	" with Notes and Guitar.....	30 " 200
250	Silver Teapots and Coffee Urns.....	20 " 50
1000	" Cups and Saucers.....	10 " 20
1000	" Ice Pitchers.....	20 " 30
1000	" Cake Baskets, with Handles.....	10 " 15
1000	" Goblets and Drinking Cups.....	5 " 10
1000	" Castors.....	10 " 15
2000	" Fruit, Card and Cake Baskets.....	20 " 30
2000	" Cups, Spoons, Forks, &c.....	10 " 20
10,000	" Table Spoons and forks, per dozen.....	20 " 40
250	Gents' Gold Hunting-Case Watches.....	50 " 150
250	" Ladies' Gold and Enamelled-Case do.....	50 " 150
500	Gents' Hunting-Case Silver Watches.....	25 " 100
500	" Hunting-Case Watches.....	25 " 100
5,000	Gold Vest and Neck Chains.....	4 " 10
5,000	Gold Guard Chains.....	4 " 10
5,000	Jet and Gold Brooches.....	4 " 10
2,000	Chatelaine Chains and Pencil Chains.....	4 " 10
7,000	Solitaires and Gold Brooches.....	4 " 10
10,000	Gold Lockets, plain and engraved.....	4 " 10
5,000	Mosaic, Jet, Lava, and Florentine Ear Rings, per pair.....	4 " 10
5,000	Coral, Opal, and Emerald Ear Drops.....	4 " 10
5,000	Gold Pen and Pencil Cases.....	4 " 10
2,000	Gold Fob and Vest Watch Key.....	2 50 " 10
5,000	Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc.....	4 " 10
5,000	Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c.....	3 " 10
5,000	Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc.....	4 " 10
5,000	Gold Spectacles.....	2 50 " 10
4,000	" Magic Spring.....	10 " 20
3,000	Gold Toothpicks, Cologne, etc.....	4 " 10
5,000	Plain Gold Rings.....	4 " 10
5,000	Gold Chatelaine Keys.....	4 " 10
10,000	Stone Set and Signet Rings.....	2 50 " 10
5,000	Opera Glasses, Telescopes.....	5 " 15
7,500	Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Jet and Gold.....	5 " 15
5,000	" " " Coral Jewelry—Cameo, Pearl, Opal, and other stones.....	4 " 10
5,000	Gold Lead Pencils, Gold Mounted Holders and Pencils.....	4 " 10
10,000	Gold Pencils and Gold-Mounted Holders	4 " 10
5,000	Gold Pens and Gold Extension-Holders	15 " 25
5,000	Gold Pens and Silver Holders.....	4 " 10
5,000	Ladies' Gilt and Jet Hair Nets and Bells	5 " 10

Also, 10,000 Gold & Co. Manufacturers' Agents' Jewelry, Broadway, New York, guarantee that all of the above list of goods are Solid Gold or Silver Plate.

In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the Southern States, and of Cotton Goods, through the war having cut off the supply of cotton, a large quantity of valuable Jewelry and Silverware, for the Spring trade, which has been sent off for sale in this country, and MUST BE SOLD AT A GREAT SACRIFICE.

Under these circumstances, ARNDALE & CO., retiring from business, and the whole of their immense stock having been received upon a Great Gift Distribution, subject to the following plan of sale, viz:

Certificates of the various articles are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and well mixed. Each person then takes out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus the first upon receipt of the certificate he or she may see will see what you are to have, and then it is at your option to remit a dollar and have the article sent to you, or to choose any thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any Set of Jewelry on our list for ONE DOLLAR.

Send 25 cents for Certificate.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for forwarding the certificates, paying postage, and using the business card of the party ordering a certificate that the certificate is sent for. Five certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; twenty-five for $5; and one hundred for $15.

Parties who want agents in every regiment, and in every town and county in the country, and those acting as such will be allowed a liberal discount. Certificates ordered by them, provided their remittances amounts to Five Dollars, or more, will collect 26 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps.

No. 167 Broadway, New York.

What the "Press" say of us.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION.—A rare opportunity is offered for purchasing watches, chains, diamond rings, silverware, etc., by Messrs. ARNDALE & CO., of No. 167 Broadway, New York. The immense stock of articles, varying in value, and all are offered at one dollar each. The distribution is conducted in a novel way, and we have to take of a certain article, enclosed in an envelope, and are not informed what it is until we receive it. Upon receipt of the article, which will certainly be worth more than that amount, we have to pay $1, and in this manner the risk of investing a dollar.—Sunday Times, N. Y. City, Feb. 19, 1865.

Messrs. Arndale & Co. have long been personally known to us, and we can confidently assure to be very worthy of public confidence.—N. Y. Scottish American Journal, April 14, 1865.

We have inspected at the office of Arndale & Co's Agency for Jewelry and Silverware, the novel and ingenious plan of distributing a splendid and valuable jewelry of the newest patterns. We have seen the list of articles to be distributed, and understand that the whole of these newly-imported goods are to be disposed of on a novel principle, which offers great advantages to buyers, and affording extensive employment to agents. The principle of the business is to every respectable and thoroughly worthy of public confidence, and recommend our readers to send their orders to the present.—N. Y. Albion, Sept. 5, 1864.

By Messrs. Arndale & Co's arrangement the advantage must be on the side of the customer, for he has every thing to gain, and nothing comparatively to lose. He knows what he will get for his dollar beforehand, and he must not send it unless he is satisfied.—N. Y. Sunday Mercury, Aug. 6, 1864.

IMPORTANT FOR LADIES.—The most eligible and profitable employment we have heard of for ladies is the sale of articles in the gift distribution of Messrs. Arndale & Co. Arndale & Co. A lady of our acquaintance has been very successful in this business, only in filling her own purse, but also in doing a good turn to those to whom she sold the Certificates, as will be seen by the advertising agreement. Gentlemen can also be thus engaged.—N. Y. Sunday Mercury, August 14, 1864.

In our columns the reader will find an advertisement of Arndale & Co's Gift Distribution of watches, jewelry and silverware. In payment of that advertisement we received several sets of fine jewelry about which we warranted in saying that, both in finish and quality, they are quite exceptional value. We have turned out to be just what they had been represented.—Trow Democrat (Levittown), August 17, 1864.

The British Web of Fashion, C. F., says, Nov. 26, 1864, one of our lady correspondents became an agent for Arndale & Co., and by request brought some twenty articles, sent as prizes for her agency, to this office for inspection, and without hesitation we can state that each and all the articles are worth treble the amount of cost to the recipient, and some of them six times.

We have seen splendid specimens of Table and Tea Services, Gold Watches, Ladies' Chains, Plate, Brooches, etc., which have been sold by Arndale & Co. for $1.00 per set.—Augusta Reporter, N. Y. State, Feb. 10, 1865.

ARCANA WATCH.

An Elegant Novelty in Watches.

The cases of this watch are an entirely new Invention, composed of six different metals combined, rolled together and plaistered, producing an exact imitation of 18 carat gold, called Arcana, which will always keep its color. They are as beautiful and durable as solid gold, and are afforded at one-eighth the cost. The case is beautifully designed, with engine-turned shield for name, with pearl centre, and engraved in the exact style of the celebrated Gold Hunting Cases, with an equally handsome and durable, and to exact an imitation of gold as to defy detection. The movement is manufactured by the well-known M. Jumor Watch Company of Europe, and are expertly finished, having seven jewelled pallets, finest jewelled ruby, elegant regulator, with gold balance, and the improved ruby roller escapement. It is a perfect time-keeper, and is warranted a good time-keeper. These watches are of three different sizes, to be sent by mail, free of duty, and are all hunting cases. A case of six will be sent by mail or express, free of duty, to any part of the country on receipt of cash for $35. Will readily sell for three times their cost.

Watches made for the trade with the United States, and none are genuine which do not bear our trade-mark.

Address, DEVALLON & CO., Importers,
15 Maiden Lane, New York.

MESSRS. FOWLER & WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, New York, Publishers, have on sale works on PHRENOLOGY, PHYSIOLOGY, PHYSIOGNOMY, PSYCHOLOGY, MEDICINE, HYDROPATHY, MATRIMONY, PHONOGRAPHY, and on the Natural Sciences generally. AGENTS WANTED in every unoccupied county for the above and other books. Send for circulars, &c. No. 4 A NEW STREET, published at 389 Broadway.

"The West Indian Hair Curler."

Warranted to curl the most straight and stiff hair, on the first application, into short ringlets or waving masses for curls. Sent to any address on receipt of $1. Address

F. H. HENDERSON & CO.,
Box 2035, New York Post-Office.

DR. GLOVER'S LEVER TRUSS retains and cures most ruptures than any other. It gives great ease and comfort. Elastic stockings, belts, bandages, crutches, &c. No. 4 A NEW STREET, published at 389 Broadway.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE
FOR APRIL, 1865.

CONTENTS

A DOG'S DAY ENDED
WITH THE WILLOW.
WHERE THE WATTLEE WAS.
Illustrations.—Charlotte Augusta, St. Thomas.—Basile.—Montevideo.—Entering the Straits of Magellan.—Port Famine.—Magellan Sandy Point.—Cape Pilares.—Port Otway.—Port St Part Famine.—Borgia Bay.—Inscriptions at Borgia Bay.—Patagonia.—Cape Gallegos.—Fuegians in Smith's Channel.—"Hi! Chili!"—Waitara Bay.—Roundabout The Moors.—The Omnibus.
LOVE AT SEA.
THE PETTICOAT REGION OF AMERICA.
Illustrations.—Street View in Oil City.—The Hotels.—The Phillips Well.—The Wells.—The Village Scene.—Going Well in Petroleum City.—Impediments used in Boring.
HEROIC DEEDS OF HEROIC MEN.—MILITARY AND NAVAL RECORD THE ASSISTANCE.
Illustrations.—Benjamin F. Butler.—Map of the Operations on the James River.—Fort Powhatan.—Telegraphic Scenery on the Yorke.—Sam Houston.—David E. Trigg.—Thomas Ruffin.—The Instruction Corps Marched.—Landing at the Ro Grande.—Porter's Fleet.—Foraging in Louisiana.—Map of the Red River Region.—Knock on the Gun-Butt.—Preening the Dun.
MRS. MILLAIN'S SERMON.
THIEVES' JARGON.
HARPER'S EASY AND DEACON MARVIN.
WALL STREET IN WAR TIME.
THE WITHERED.
ARMADALE. By WILKIE COLLINS.
CHAPTER I. Lady and Gentleman.
CHAPTER II. What as a Landed Gentleman.
ILLUSTRATION.—The Cabin Door.
HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY.
With an Illustration.
RECOLLECTIONS OF SHERMAN.
With a Portrait.
HEARTS AND TREES.
OUR MUTUAL FRIEND. By CHARLES DICKENS.
CHAPTER I. Cheerful Spirits in Search of Work.
CHAPTER II. A Respected Friend in a new Aspect.
CHAPTER III. Mr. Boffin's Carriage in New Aspects than One.
CHAPTER IV. A Happy Return of the Day.
A SERMON TO SERVANTS.
MONTHLY RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS.
EDITOR'S EASY CHAIR.
EDITOR'S DRAWER.

Important to Subscribers.

Subscribers to the MAGAZINE and WEEKLY will find upon the wrapper of each Number a Statement of Account. The figure on the direction-label following the name indicates the month to which the subscription EXPIRES, as noted on our books. Every Subscriber whose subscription is not paid in advance will please send for his remittance, and also renew his subscription in season to prevent any interruption in the receipt of the publications. Subscriptions are particularly requested to renew the NUMBER with which the direction-label expires. Subscribers will thus avoid receiving duplicates, or missing any Number. It is desirable that all remittances should be made by check BEFORE the expiration of the former term of subscription, in order to prevent any "carry over" of the letters which annoy both Publishers and Subscribers.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $4 00
An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each; or 6 Copies for $20 00.

HARPER'S BAZAR and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, for one year, $6.

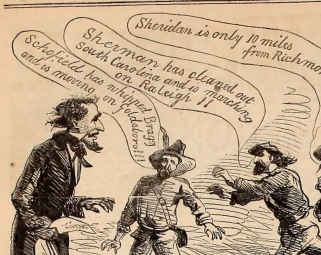
The Publishers will accept a limited number of first-class Advertisements for their Magazine, at the following rates: For a page, $40; for half a page, $20; for a quarter, $12; whole page, $250. The circulation of HARPER'S MONTHLY is now over 100,000 copies, and rapidly increasing. Publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation nearly 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.



One Copy for One Year 4 00
One Copy for Three Months 1 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00. Payment invariably in advance.

THE BOUND VOLUME OF HARPER'S WEEKLY for the Year 1864, with over 1000 Illustrations, forms a large 4to. volume, elegantly bound in Cloth. Price $7 00.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—One Dollar per line for inside, and One Dollar and Fifty Cents per line for outside Advertisements each insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

JEFF DAVIS "CALMLY CONTEMPLATING."

"Our country is now convinced with perils which is is our duty calmly to contemplate."—Extract from Davis's last Message.

SEVEN-THIRTIES.

Robinson & Ogden,

BANKERS,

AND

U.S. LOAN AGENTS,

4 Broad St. and 694 Broadway,

New York.

Subscriptions received for any amount, and a constant supply of the notes on hand for immediate delivery.

ROBINSON & OGDEN, BANKERS.

FISK & HATCH,

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.

No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

The Model Pocket-Pistol of the Age.

SLOCUM'S Patent Side-Loading REVOLVER.

Length, 7½ Inches. Weight, 14 Ounces. Carries a No. 32 Metallic Cartridge.

Its advantages over all others are:

1st. It does not require special ammunition.

2d. It is perfectly safe while being loaded.

3d. It can be loaded in the dark, and quicker than any other pistol.

4th. It can be carried in the pocket, without danger, when loaded.

5th. It is sure fire, and possesses great strength.

FOR SALE BY THE TRADE GENERALLY.

HOWARD, SANGER & CO.,

126 and 130 Chambers Street, New York.

Descriptive Circulars furnished upon application.

UNCLAIMED MONEY.—70,000 PERSONS WANTED TO CLAIM MONEY, ESTATES, &c., which have been advertised since 1794. Fee to search for name in Registry, $5. Genealogy a branch. All letters must be prepaid. GUN & CO., Unclaimed Money and Property Registry, No. 11 Charlotte Street, London (W.C.), England.

Philadelphia Photographic Company,

730 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, manufacture a large variety of card photographs for the trade. Send for catalogue.

POLLAK & SON, Meerschaum Manufacturers, 607 Broadway, between 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All orders sent to receive prompt attention. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $2 to $20 each.

Calenberg & Vaupel's PIANO-FORTES,

99 and 101 Bleecker Street, 94 Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years.

TICKS, SCAB, VERMIN.

SheepWashTobacco

Should be used by all Farmers on their

SHEEP, ANIMALS, AND PLANTS.

For sale by JAS. F. LEVIN, Agent South Down Co., 23 Central Wharf, Boston.

For sale in New York by R. H. ALLEN & CO., 189, 191 Water St., and DUDLEY & STAFFORD, 60 Beekman St.

LAWRENCE, BALDWIN & CO.,

70 Wall Street, New York,

BANKERS and BROKERS,

DEALERS IN ALL KINDS OF

Government Securities.

PETROLEUM,

AND ALL OTHER KINDS OF

STOCKS, BONDS, &c.,

BOUGHT AND SOLD ON COMMISSION AT THE REGULAR BOARD, MODIFIED, AND CONSOLIDATED RATES.

Interest Allowed on Deposits.

DEWITT C. LAWRENCE. CYRUS J. LAWRENCE.
STEBBINS BALDWIN, JR. WM. A. HAZELTINE.

VERMILYE & CO.,

No. 44 WALL STREET,

BANKERS,

And Dealers in all Classes of

GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,

479 Broadway, below Broome St.

Sing Song Chinese Porcelain

ALSO FANCY FRENCH CHINA, GLASS, &c.

French Dinner Sets.

CARPET WARP,

FIRST AND SECOND QUALITY.

Worsted Twine made of Paper.

Twines and Paper. H. A. HARVEY, 84 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

Great Sale

WATCHES AND JEWELRY,

Worth over $1,000,000,

Consisting of Gold and Silver Watches, Chains, Bracelets, Sets of Jewelry, Rings, Lockets, Studs, &c., &c., &c.

All to be sold for One Dollar each!!

WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE. NOT TO BE PAID FOR UNTIL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO RECEIVE!

Certificates of the various articles are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed well; and when ordered are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, but when you receive the envelope with the receipt of the certificate you will see what you have, and then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch or any set of Jewelry as our list for ONE DOLLAR.

Five Certificates will be sent for $1, eleven for $2. We will forward Certificate on receipt of 25 cents; also our Circular and Terms to Agents, which are most liberal. Address

A. H. BOWEN & CO., 39 Beekman St., N. Y.

Vineland Lands, a all Wanting Farms.

Large and thriving settlement, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, producing large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty, and fifty acre tracts, at from $26 to $35 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools, and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post-Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.

From Report of Solon Robinson, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune: "It is one of the most extensive fruit tracts, in an almost best position and suitable condition For planting Peaches that we know of this side of the Western prairies.

SOLDIERS' CERTIFICATES.

Beautifully printed in five colors, size 12x16. Every soldier should have one. Price 50 cents each, sent by mail. Three different varieties on hand. Agents wanted. GATES & GAMBLE, 146 Walnut Street, Cincinnati.

$150 A MONTH made by DISBROWER'S SOLDIERS and others with STENCIL TOOLS. Don't fail to send for our free catalogue, containing full particulars. Address S. M. SPENCER, Brattleboro, Vt.

N. Y. PIANO-FORTE COMPANY.

Grand and Square Pianos, superior to all others, No. 204 Hudson Street, New York.

Petroleum is King.

Fish's Patent Union Attachment,

To be attached to a Common Lamp or Gas-Burner, You Condemn Them on Supporting a Share.

PRICE 50 CENTS.

Fish's Patent Nursery Lamp.

For Kerosene or Gas.

"Indispensable in nursery or sick room."

Commended by Drs. Hosh, Parker, and many others."

PRICE $2 50.

Fish's Patent Cooking Lamp.

A family utensil complete with one can's worth of Kerosene, or two cents' worth of Gas. Three articles cooked at one time, with One Burner.

PRICE from $5 50 to $7 50.

Fish's Patent Glue-Pot.

Glue kept hot all day with four cents' worth of Kerosene.

PRICE from $2 00 to $3 50.

Billings's Petroleum Cooking Stoves.

The cooking, warming, and heating of a small family can be done at less expense than with wood or coal.

PRICE from $2 50 to $10 00.

Swift's Eureka Clothes-Wringer.

Highly commended by all who have used them.

PRICE from $6 00 to $15.

All of the above-named articles for sale by THE KEROSENE LAMP-HEATER COMPANY, No. 590 PEARL STREET, NEW YORK.

Circulars mailed gratis. Address

W. D. T. RUSSELL, President.

"Electric" Self-adjusting—mailed white, $5, $5 87, and $9 per doz.; specimens, 75c., $1. Rubber-faced, $1. Finished, linoline-stitched, $1 25. Suitable New Style, $1. Finished, linoline-stitched, "Grand" Steel Collars, $1 50; Cuffs, Ladies' Linoline-stitched Cuffs, $2. Mailed on receipt of price $1 50. Genuine steel Clasps, $2. Mailed on receipt of price and "rules." JEANERET, 78 Nassau St., N. Y. Box 3896.

To the Thoughtful.

50 Cents per Share.

Nothing in the entire history of business has proved so quickly and so largely remunerative as investments in the stock of really reliable Oil Companies.

Up to the present time the wells of Petroleum have paid seventy-five per cent. on the actual capitals of all the Companies combined. Some have paid many hundred per Company, for instance, for $5 paid on the stock, has sold for over $400 per share; that is to say,

For $500 paid, the Lucky Buyer realized over $40,000 Cash.

This Company made their money by work; but the same thing can and perhaps soon will be done by other equally enterprising corporations.

THE MORGAN OIL AND MINING COMPANY was organized for Work. Their estates embrace $200 acres in fee, clear of incumbrance, located on Oil Creek, near the following well-known wells:

COGSWELL WELL,	REED WELL,
MAPES EGAN WELL,	JESSEY WELL,
EGBERT WELL,	TURTLE WELL,
NOBLE WELL,	RUFFNER WELL.

And in West Virginia, adjacent to the famed "Hewlyn," "Morgan," and "Eternal Centre" Wells, the former of which flowed over 100 barrels of oil per hour for over nine months.

The Entire Property is deeded direct to the Stockholders, who are Joint Owners of the Land; and every subscriber enters on the "Ground Floor" of the Corporation. This Company presents a degree of security for investment, and a variety of dividends, never equaled by any Company yet organized.

THE VERY BEST PLACE FOR INVESTMENT OF CENTS PER SHARE! WAS FIXED AS AN EARNEST OF THE COMPANY'S DETERMINATION TO WORK, AND NOT TO SPECULATE.

On the property of the MORGAN OIL AND MINING COMPANY are (6) Wells of an even going forward. These, with a yield of oil equal to adjacent properties, will insure to this Company a daily cash income of $5000 to $10,000 over every possible expense.

Information concerning the affairs of the Company, or its workings and prospects, will always be cheerfully given at the Office.

If you like our straightforward plan of doing business, and any predecessors for a Company which certainly means work, we should be pleased to hear from you or some, as a very large part of the stock is already engaged.

Subscription, Price 50 Cents per Share, Full Paid.

PRESIDENT:

General GRANVILLE M. HALL,

Of William Hall & Son.

TREASURER:

F. A. WHITING,

Of F. A. Whiting & Co.

SECRETARY:

JOHN BURNS,

Of Stearns & Beale.

Company's Office, 104 Water Street, near Wall.

Subscriptions by mail, which will receive courteous attention, should be addressed to the TREASURER, F. A. WHITING, Esq., 104 Water Street, New York.

THE AMERICAN MISCELLANY

Will contain, every week, a very interesting sketch of the rebellion, and a variety of choice Tales, Sketches, Poetry, &c., &c. Single copies, Six Cents.

GOLD PENS.

The JOHNSON PEN is acknowledged by all who have used it to be the best writing instrument for the last twenty-five years of any in use. They are made of 14 carats fine gold, and warranted. Every variety of size and quantity of point made. Price in solid silver extension cases, $1 75; along slide holders, $2 00; telescopic holders, $2 50; telescopic extension cases, $3 50; duplex silver cases, $4 00; ebony holders and cases, assorted sizes, $1 25. Sent by mail, 25 cents each. Pens sent by mail, postage paid. Send for Circular.

E. S. JOHNSON, Manufacturer and Optician,

15 Maiden Lane, New York City.

DYSPEPSIA AND FITS!

FITS—A Sure Cure for these distressing complaints is now made known in a Treatise on Forcign and Native Herbal Preparations, published by DR. O. PHELPS BROWN, the prescription was FITS—furnished him in such a providential manner that he can not conscientiously refuse to make it FITS—known, as it has cured every body who used it, never having failed in a single case. It is equal- FITS—ly sure in cases of Fits as of Dyspepsia, and the ingredients may be obtained of any druggist. FITS—Sent free to all on the receipt of five cents to pay necessary postage, &c. Address Dr. O. PHELPS BROWN, No. 19 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J.

READY TO-DAY.

A MOST THRILLING BOOK.

Munro's Ten Cent Novel No. 35:

THE FATAL MARKSMAN OF THE 'RIO RED.'

'A Hunter who never missed a Shot.'

The following is a list of Munro's Ten Cent Novels, the most popular books ever offered to the public. Every one should buy a set. 'Would be far better than "striking it." 1. No. 1, The Hunters. 2. The Trapper's Retreat. 3. The Patriot Highwayman. 4. The Hunted Outcast. 5. The Trail of Fire. 6. The Man-Eaters. 7. Charlotte Temple. 8. The Death Face. 9. The Indian-Slayer. 10. The Turtle-Catcher. 11. The Hunter's Escape. 12. The Ocean Rovers. 13. The Two Outcasts. 14. Zeke Bernum, the Lake-Shore Scout. 15. Rio Rover, or the Seas. 16. The Captive Maiden. 17. Long-Legged Joe; or, The Deacon of the Woods. 18. The Wild Scout of the Mountains. 19. The Forest Lodge. 20. The Forsaken Daughter. 21. Buckskin Dick; or, the Boy Pilot of the Wigwam. 22. Richard Talbot, the Rover. 23. The Trapper's Prize. 24. The Sea Bandit. 25. The Maid of the Inlet. 26. Ben Brion's Terrible Trail. 27. The Hunter's Cabin. 28. Lightfoot, the Trailer. 29. The Giant Spy of the Yankee Hills. 30. Scar Cheek, the Wild Half-Breed. 31. Ingeborg-Lyd the Viking's Daughter. 32. Rolling Thunder; or, The Rival Braves. 33. Honey Harman, the Bold Scout. 34. Sy Sam, the Quaker Spy. 34. Three Daring Trappers.

12mo size, handsomely bound, and sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. GEORGE MUNRO & CO.,

No. 137 William Street, New York.

ASK any BOOKSELLER or News Dealer for a copy of DAWLEY'S NEW WAR NOVEL. No. 5:

OSCEOLA, The Demon Refugee,

If he has not got it, he will get it for you. Price 25 cents. The trade supplied at an extraordinary discount. T. E. DAWLEY, Publisher, 18 Park Row, New York.

TRADE MARK OF THE

MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY

To be found on each bar and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods, of whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE has full 42 cycles in each piece, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to wearers. Office of the Company, No. 95 Chambers Street, New York.

Great Imperial Watch.

See Cately Brothers' Advertisement on page 207.

ARMY AND NAVY AGENCY.

Pensions, Bounties, Pay, Prize Money, together with all claims of the army and navy promptly procured. Correspondence promptly answered. 5, 6, 8, 9, 11, Park Pl., New York.

One of Fifty Thousand.

Send Two Dollars, and have yourself enrolled among the second FIFTY THOUSAND subscribers to which number is rapidly being filled up by those who pronounce this new periodical the BEST MAGAZINE for ever published. Stories, Poems, Sketches of Travel, are of the highest character, and its illustrations are sold to be exquisite. Terms $2 00 a year. Specimen of clubs. Specimen Numbers sent, on receipt of 20 cents, by

Our Young Folks

BOYS AND GIRLS

TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston, Mass.

NAVY PRIZE CLAIMS CASHED

Or COLLECTED on LIBERAL and JUST TERMS, and settlements of MILITARY ACCOUNTS guaranteed to be effected in the shortest time. Prize lists furnished as soon as sounds are made. RUDE & SWIFT, 190 Broadway, New York City.

Free to Every Body.

SOLDIERS, SAILORS, FARMERS, MECHANICS, and EVERY BODY throughout the country will receive, free of charge, a copy of the First-Class, Interesting NEWSPAPER, by sending their address to Editor of the NEW HOME JOURNAL, 40 Ann Street, New York.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE

Magnifying small objects 500 times. MAILED FREE everywhere for 50 CTS. Address

Address P. C. BOWEN, Box 250, Boston, Mass.

Officers, Soldiers, and Citizens!

All the Army Corps Rings in 16-carat gold, changed and warranted. Also, Masonic Rings, by sending the sizes of every size, plain, enameled, and fancy, at from $2 to $5 each. Sent by mail. Send stamp for Circular.

Address E. P. BEACH, 13 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

DAMP AND EXPOSURE kill more than bullets in the Soldier. Secure yourself themselves with Holloway's Pills.

THE NORTHERN MAGAZINE,

PUBLISHED MONTHLY,

Price of Subscription for One Year only $1 25.

A New Style of Paper! New Features!!

A continuous story, and Articles under the titles of THE LEGION OF HONOR, which will consist of portraits and BRAVE NEWS.

Every soldier, we care not what his rank, who has distinguished himself by some act of personal courage, shall receive a place here. Indeed, we invite those who know of such cases to send us the information.

The NORTHERN MAGAZINE is beautifully illustrated with the finest wood engravings.

Each number is filled with exciting adventures, interesting stories, valuable essays, useful information, fireside amusements, beautiful poems, jokes, comic pectes, and curiosities. PRIVATE MILES CHRISTEY writes for each number. Address FRANK BELKNAP,

NORTHERN MAGAZINE, 20 Park Row, New York.

P.S.—3 Specimen Number will be sent by mail on receipt of 20 cents.

HARPER'S WEEKLY

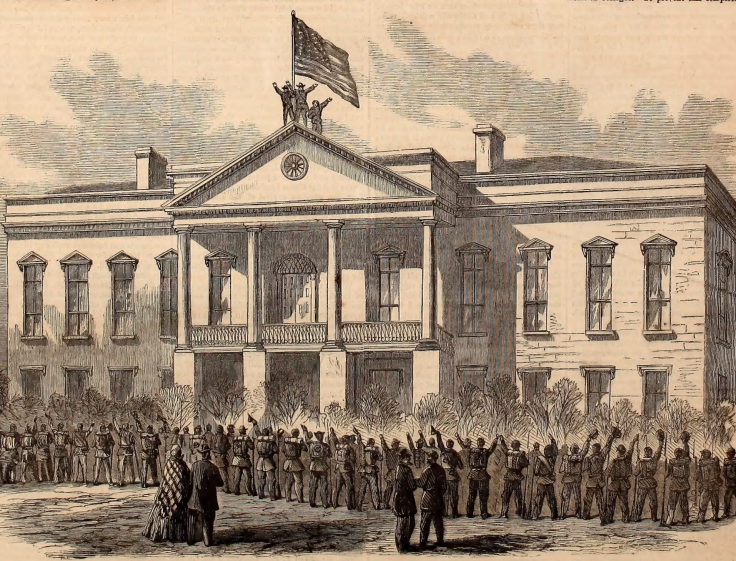
A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. IX.—No. 432.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

THE WEIGHT OF THE FEDERAL ARMIES.

THE armies of the Union are bearing down heavily upon Richmond—the great military centre upon which the revolutionists have drawn back for their last convulsive efforts against the United States Government. For almost a year Lieutenant-General GRANT has confronted the principal army of the Confederacy with a force so strong as to make any depletion of that army perilous to the safety of Richmond. Not for one moment has the tenacity of his hold been relaxed; even the old move of the rebels down the Valley against Washington proved ineffectual to turn him from the gates of the doomed capital. How long he might have to wait than he knew not, but he knew that he was compelling the concentration of the best portion of the rebel force against himself, and that the battles which SHERMAN was conducting in the West would have to be fought without any help from LEE. He knew that from the battle of Dueelron the advance of our Western armies had been a series of flank movements on Richmond. The movement of HOOD northward after the capture of Atlanta and his defeat by THOMAS was the turning-point in our favor. From that point the great flank movement under SHERMAN progressed with almost incredible velocity, meeting with no considerable resistance from Atlanta to Savannah, and thence into North Carolina.



The rebels may compare this movement to the flight of an arrow, if they please, but it was none the less a successful flank movement on Richmond. Besides, IT WAS not like the flight of an arrow, except in the matter of FAME and velocity. It has secured our possession of all the sea-ports and all the great rivers of the South. It has completely destroyed the Georgia and South Carolina systems of railroads; and it has effected these great objects, for which a dozen battles might well have been fought, without a single important struggle.

But SHERMAN'S and GRANT'S armies are not the only ones available in the combinations against Richmond. There is SHERIDAN'S splendid corps of cavalry already with GRANT; there is HANCOCK'S veteran corps, which, with the army of Western Virginia, constitutes a formidable army north of Richmond; and it is not impossible that the force which THOMAS has been organizing in the vicinity of Eastport will also take part in this final struggle of the war. We have, it is true, in the earlier stages of the war, had in the field a larger number of men than we now have, and we have before formed combinations which in themselves were quite as formidable as those now forming. But power is measured by resistance; and in order to estimate the weight of the armies now operating against LEE, it must be considered how weak is the resistance which he can oppose to them. In some sort this power of resistance has been tested. For, even if we allow that for the sake of concentration it was better for BEAUREGARD, BRAGG, and HARDEE to fall back into co-operation with LEE, it still remains true that this concentration has not enabled JOHNSTON to resist even SCHOFIELD'S column with any success. And the test thus afforded is a fair one, for there was the opportunity to fight SCHOFIELD alone; and it was most desirable that he should be defeated before he should be joined by SHERMAN.

The battle of last Saturday before Petersburg shows what LEE may hope to accomplish by hurling his columns against GRANT'S fortifications. His loss upon that occasion more than decimated his army. Half a dozen more such battles would leave him no army to fight with. In a few days it will no longer be an exaggeration to speak of Richmond as besieged. To prevent this complete investment is the work assigned to JOHNSTON. But it is a work to which his force is inadequate. Indeed how can LEE expect JOHNSTON to defeat SHERMAN while he must confine himself unable to defeat GRANT. As SHERMAN pushes forward, flanking JOHNSTON out of Raleigh and completing the siege of Richmond, the choice is given to LEE either to fight against terrible odds or to capitulate.

THE FIFTEENTH CORPS CROSSING THE SOUTH EDISTO.—[SKETCHED BY DAVIS.]

RAISING THE STARS AND STRIPES OVER THE CAPITOL AT COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA.—[SKETCHED BY DAVIS.]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1865.

OUR RELATIONS WITH ENGLAND.

IT is a very instructive recreation to compare the late debate upon the American question in the British House of Commons and that upon the Laird privateers in the same body two years ago. At that time Lord RUSSELL and Lord ROBERT PALMER announced that although privateers were constantly equipping and escaping from English ports, yet the Government had done all that the law required, while Lord PALMERSTON, with jaunty insolence, said that the Government had no thought whatever of asking a change in the law. The British Government thought the United States were in extremity, and politely sneered. It was very exasperating to us; yet we have no reason to suppose that had England been in extremity we should have done very differently.

The radically different tone of the recent debate is the result of success. The well-known opinion of Mr. GLADSTONE, Chancellor of the Exchequer, that no government in existence was strong enough to subdue so enormous a rebellion as that of the slave interest against the Union. He was confident that England could not do it, that France could not do it. He was sure that the United States could not do it. He and his colleagues spoke from that conviction. But when, after four years, they see that it is being done—when they reflect upon the triumphant army and navy which this Government has organized, and remember how unfriendly their official action has been,—they naturally ask what are the chances of war with the United States; and the pliant PALMERSTON hastens to agree gingerly with JOHN BRIGHT, and to say that he is content if England will not give to America any just cause of complaint.

There is evidently much more apprehension of war in England than in this country. We are very sure, except for serious and unforeseen cause, which does not now exist, there will be no difficulty. That public opinion in this country considers the British Government as have made unfriendly haste to recognize the rebels belligerent rights—that the British ministers have spoken very offensively of this Government and of war—that a large part of the English press has constantly and meanly maligned us—all this is true. It will be remembered, but neither nation will go to war about it. A great deal of what Lord RUSSELL and Mr. GLADSTONE said was due to their profound ignorance of the character of our Government and of the spirit of the people; a great deal more was to be justified by the statements made by Mr. DALLAS, the retiring minister under the BUCHANAN administration, and by the unfriendly tendency of opinion in American commercial circles. A great deal also was to be explained by the natural delight of every civilized power at seeing the country, whose foreign influence it has gravely proposed to rob other countries in the Ostend circular, suddenly convulsed by civil war. Nor will any American forget that part of the political stock in trade of the party so long dominant in this country was an appeal to prejudices against England. A very slight acquaintance with our political annals will show him that, if England has not been especially friendly to the United States, the United States have not been impartially friendly toward England. Nor will any while no honest Englishman will be disposed to deny that we have observed the obligations of neutrality during the wars in which England has recently been engaged more faithfully than England has observed them during the rebellion.

That Lord RUSSELL should gravely put forth a pain in Sir Somebody Something's stomach, as an explanation of a rebel privateer escaping from an English port, is as laughable as Sancho Scott's hasty plate of soup. In plain words, that the English Government were as anxious to prevent the sailing of the Alabama and her colleagu as they would be now nobody will pretend. Such a ship would, under no circumstances, now be allowed to leave an English port. But it was as possible to prevent it then as now: and the honorable obligation of neutrality was not less binding upon England in our dark day than it is in the sunshine of national success. Success resorts to a teclinical defense of her neutral conduct. But had she believed from the beginning that we were sure to conquer, she would not have been satisfied with technicalities.

One of the firmest and most intelligent friends of the United States in England writes: "I can not altogether concur in your admiration of Mr. SEWARD's dispatch in the Bahia affair: the legal positions in which I think he will find it difficult to sustain. I am most anxious that both the rights and duties of neutrals should be enlarged, but we ought to be careful of confounding between what the law is, and what we wish it to be. I have seen no warrant, either in the works of any publicist or in the decision of any prize court, for regarding the Alabama and her companions as 'pirates.' I should be very glad to see such produced. Nor do I think there is any valid ground for the assumption of your Government on the score of our conceding maritime belligerence to the Confederates..... However, I can not believe that anything will arise between us which may not and will not be ultimately settled.....if in the mean time the two nations can contrive to keep their tempers."

This is written in the most temperate and friendly spirit, and that which we believe will control the settlement of all differences with England. But the objection is perfectly and insurely not destitute of reason. A pirate, for instance, is an ocean robber, stealing and destroying without a legal commission. But when an insurrection is recognized as belligerent his right to wage war is acknowledged; and if he have a long sea-coast, is it not easy to refuse him recognition as a maritime belligerent. It is for the recognizing power to decide whether it will take the risk of mortal offense to the government against which the insurrection is directed. But when it has done so, and has taken its part as a neutral, while it is bound by every means and with sleepless care to prevent the equipping of privateers, it is absurd, if notwithstanding, a privateer escapes, and roves the sea under a commission of one of the acknowledged belligerents, it is entirely a question whether she is properly and technically a pirate.

This is but one illustration of the arguments which may be urged for the conduct of the British Government during the war. Yet with the openly confessed sympathies of the majority of Parliament, and the tone of the speeches of the British Ministers, it is fortunate that when the authorities were so favorable to the evasion of the law the law should have been vigilantly enforced. British action may indeed be open to the letter, but it has flagrantly violated the spirit.

The change in British opinion wrought by the development of the war is precisely what will be seen with pleasure, although, of course, with a little contempt, by all faithful American citizens. Washington Irving wrote in the Tory Revenal Address: "There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must correct, which is just pride ought to discard." We were shocked by the British official action, as we should have been by the coldness of a friend in our sorrow. We forgot that our relation was one of interest merely. But whenever we are conscious that we have been to any nation truly and sincerely a friend, then, and then only, may we rightfully expect from her the conduct of a friend, and not of a trader or a selfish ally.

AMNESTY.

THE mischief which is done by the well-meaning but foolish cry for amnesty for rebels shall offer fresh terms of peace is inexcusable. That the malignant Copperhead opposition should seek to embarrass the administration by representing him as averse to peace is natural; but that loyal papers should persistently poison the public mind with the impression that the President is reluctant to conclude the war is the most unfortunate. To destroy public confidence in the chief executive by incessant complaint that he does not seek peace, when the desire for peace is at every moment possible if only the President chose; to declare that the rebels are merely waiting for a kind word from him before laying down their arms, is to be guilty of the greatest injustice to him and the gravest injury to the country.

The President has already several times declared to the rebels and the world all that he has the authority to say upon the subject of peace. On the 8th December, 1863, when the act of Congress which authorized him to promise pardon and amnesty to rebels with such exceptions and conditions as he chose, the President issued his amnesty proclamation. By this act he pardoned all rebels who should solemnly take and faithfully keep the oath of allegiance to the Government, except those guilty of property except as to slaves, and excepting from the pardon certain classes of persons who had held civil or military positions, and who had treated our colored soldiers, seamen, laborers, and officers otherwise than as prisoners of war. Lost summer he repeated the substance of this offer in saying to whom it might concern that submission to the laws and emancipation were the conditions of peace. On the 5th of December, 1864, the President in his message renewed the offer of amnesty of the previous year, announcing, however, that the time might come when public duty would demand that the door of grace should be closed. On the 3d of February, at Hampton Roads, he repeated the conditions plainly: the restoration of the national authority, no modification of his position upon the slavery question, and no cessation of hostilities without a final disbanding of the insurgent armies.

What more can or ought the President to do? "What we desire of the President," says one man, "is that he clear it [the subject] of all ambiguities, by publicly setting forth precisely what the Southern people hitherto in revolt against the Federal authority are to get or save by promptly throwing down the weapons of rebellion and returning to loyalty and peace." This is exactly what the President has done, and repeated, and reiterated. It is just as well known to-day to every man who cares to know as it could be if it were announced twice a week. His amnesty is addressed to the rank and file of the rebel army, to the deluded people of the South. It could not be clearer or more explicit. But what he offers he ought not to offer, nor would public opinion justify. As a citizen of the United States he may believe, as we believe, that there is no desire of blood or revenge in the hearts of loyal men. But as President he certainly ought not to say that DAVIS, HUNTER, & Co. shall not be justly tried, and punished for treason. The pardoning power is not a dispensing power.

There is no conceivable good end to be accomplished by insisting that with every step of General SHERMAN the President ought to say to the rebels, "There! will you give it up now? Please, then!" The rank and file of the rebel armies and the citizens of the Southern States know perfectly well that when they take the oath of allegiance in good faith they are safe from molestion, and in danger of a trial for treason. If they do not know it, after four distinct proclamations of the fact, a fifth will not help them. It is very much himself within the rebel lines, would not unhesitatingly trust himself to the slaves. The reason of this is plain enough. It is that men love liberty and not slavery. It is that, despite the blissful friendship in which the "kind masters" and "happy slaves" live, a man wishes to own himself, and does not wish another man to sell his wife or his daughter. Therefore, says the Richmond Whig, as the slaves constantly want to run away to freedom, and the vile North will not send them back again, and as we have rebelled to keep them hopelessly in slavery, let us fully explain to them that if we conquer they shall never be free, and "in an army of negro troops will soon be raised."

AN APPALLING FACT.

DEAR MR. EDITOR,—The most appalling incident of Sherman's march is recorded in the Richmond Whig of March 23. That paper says that Mr. WILLIAM GILMORE SIMMS, whose house was protected by our troops and was afterward destroyed by a negro who "applied a torch," succeeded in saving over one hundred volumes of his manuscript works! Good Heaven! Mr. Editor, if LEE and "the Confederacy" wish to be safe against all attack, why don't they intrench themselves behind those works? SHERMAN'S men are heroes, but I should like to see them undertake to get through one hundred volumes of SIMMS'S manuscript works! We are told that the road to Kinston was strewn with torpedoes. That was bad; but just think of "a Confederacy" strewn with this fearful quantity of Southern literature! No wonder the rebel papers speak of a general depression of the public mind.

Yours respectfully,
CATO THE YOUNGER.

DR. LIVINGSTONE'S SON.

THE son of the famous African traveler was a sailor, and, as the London News says, was induced by a substitute broker in an American port to enlist in the Third New Hampshire Volunteers. He is known to have been in the skirmish before Richmond on the 7th of October, 1864, and has not been heard of since. If he has been taken prisoner, it is hoped that, through mention in our papers, he will become aware of his father's great anxiety to hear of him before returning to Africa.

LITERARY.

THE HARPERS will immediately issue the "History of Julius Cæsar," by the Emperor LOUIS NAPOLEON, from the advance sheets bought in London.

The same house has just published the second and last volume of "Autobiography and Correspondence of Lyman Beecher." It is a thoroughly American book. Dr. BEECHER'S character and career were typical of those of the American clergyman, and his history is full of interest in many ways. As a sketch of the religious movement of a half century it is very valuable, while the strong and noble sympathy of his children, who contribute much of the material for the biography, gives us many delightful glimpses of country clerical life during the same period.

The late WILLIAM L. STONE was one of the most eminent of our local historical scholars and authors. His interest in the Indian annals and intercourse with the Indians was profound, and his knowledge was so extensive and accurate that his works upon the subject have a permanent value. His warm sympathy was so heartily appreciated by the red men that the SENECAS adopted him as one of their chiefs. For years before his death he had projected a Life of Sir WILLIAM JOHNSON, and had collected abundant material, including a large portion of Sir WILLIAM'S manuscripts; but he died before beginning the biography Mr. STONE died. His son, of the same name, has pluckily fulfilled his father's work, and in two goodly volumes has related the story of Sir WILLIAM and his times. The material has been collected with the most conscientious care, and fully used. Mr. STONE has made a valuable contribution to the history of the country, and especially to that of New York. If two volumes seem too much for the subject, we have only to remember that Sir WILLIAM came to America in 1738, when he was twenty-three years old, and died in 1774, in his sixtieth year; and we shall see that his residence included the most interesting period of our colonial history with the long French and Indian wars, which properly pass under the biographer's hand. In all that stirring events of the time upon our side of the sea, Sir WILLIAM was a conspicuous actor. No man knew the Indians better; nor did the Indians ever trust a white man more than they trusted him. "He never deceived us," was what they said of him; and what can be said of scarcely one of the leaders we now deal with then. Mr. STONE'S narrative, if it lifts much in the forests and upon the frontier, is picturesquely broken by such episodes as Pontiac's conspiracy and the siege of General WOLFE at Quebec, and by constant vivid glimpses of the course of city and country politics in New York and New England. The whole work has a charming air of authenticity. It is written in a lucid and quiet style, and with a thoroughly enthusiasm for the subject which alone could have sustained the author in his long and patient research.—J. MUNSELL, Albany.

"TOBY BUTLER" (HARPERS) is a novel of unusual excellence. It deals with the times, and so vividly that it has been ascribed to Sir BULWER LYTTON and CHARLES LEVER. It is full of striking description, of variety, and adventure; the scene shifting from the city to the country, from Italy to England. Brief and spirited, it is a capital book for the cars and the club.

"The American Union Speaker," by JOHN D. PHILBRICK, Superintendent of the Public Schools of Boston, is a good, solid, handsome book of fresh and excellent selections, in prose and poetry, for declamation in schools and colleges. Those who remember the American First Class Book will find here enough of the best of its contents to see that mere novelty is not preferred; while the generous selections from the most modern and most American of orators will serve as an inspiration of patriotism and humanity in every school where the volume is used. As a collection of the elegant and eloquent extracts it is unsurpassed, while its peculiarly American character makes it doubly valuable. (TAGGARD & THOMPSON, Boston.)

"CHRISTIAN'S Mistake," by the author of "JOHN HALIFAX" (HARPERS), is one of those tender domestic tales in which MISS MULOCK is quite unrivaled. It is simple, natural, and pathetic, gradually developing into a pleasant and healthful ending; one of the books which, without preaching in the least, are sure to do good. Clearly printed and very neatly bound, it is sure of a hearty welcome.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE WAR IN NORTH CAROLINA.

On the 21st General Schofield occupied Goldsborough. General Sherman was at Goldsborough on the 23d.

The official report of the engagement with Fayetteville up to the 22d shows hard fighting, resulting in very heavy loss to the rebels, who had drawn, and were, over 2000 prisoners in our hands. His own loss he says will be covered by 500 men taken at the fall of Savannah. Many of them are but slightly wounded. A letter from Goldsborough says that the entire Sherman army was now marched in and met Schofield's men en enthusiastic beyond description. The gallant fellows had a swept record behind them, and had not at last met any reinforcements. Hardee and Beauregard have probably won new victories. Schofield says he will be ready in a few days to move his army south to the capture of Atlanta.

The junction of Sherman with Terry and Schofield took place at Goldsborough on the Neuse River, a few miles west of Goldsborough.

An unofficial dispatch states that the Fourteenth Corps of Sherman's army met a flag with Hardee at Averysboro on the 16th inst., in which the latter was handsomely defeated, capturing all his guns and his entire force retreating to Bentonville. Also, that at Bentonville, on Friday, the 19th inst., one division of the Fourteenth Corps was attacked by Johnston, and for a while outflanked, but was soon reinforced by the rest of the column drove the enemy back, and during Sunday night it had abandoned Bentonville and fell back across Mill River to Smithfield, some ten miles west of Goldsborough. The dispatch continues that Johnston had taken his regains at Bentonville, Joe Johnston fell back to Smithfield, to cover Raleigh. Desertions of North Carolina troops from his army were numerous.

LEE'S ATTACK ON GRANT'S LINES.

On Saturday, March 25, early in the morning, four of Gordon's division, under General Evans, attacked Meade's right before Petersburg. They had at first a partial success, capturing Fort Stedman, and a line of rifle pits adjacent. They failed, however, in securing the City Point railroad. The assault of the Federal troops to regain Fort Stedman appears to have been successful, and the rifle pits which the enemy was repulsed with great loss in killed, wounded, and prisoners. The following dispatch from General Grant gives the details of the fight:

CITY POINT, VIRGINIA,—5.30 P.M., March 25, 1865.
Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War:

The following dispatch of General Parke is received from General Meade, dated 10.30 P.M.:

The enemy attacked my front this morning, at about 4.30 o'clock, with three divisions, under command of General Gordon.

By a surprise they carried Fort Stedman, the two batteries Brigade, Fifth Division, at the foot of the hill to the right of Fort Stedman, which and overpowering the garrison, with a considerable force of the enemy.

They established themselves upon the hill, turning our own guns upon their front.

Fort Haskell and Battery Kelly opened fire.

Afterward a determined attack was made upon Fort Haskell, which was repulsed with heavy loss to the enemy, by Brigadier-General Hartsuff's division, and was repulsed with great loss to the enemy.

The First Brigade of Hartsuff's division, held in reserve, was brought up, and a check given to any further advance.

One or two attempts were made to retake the batteries, were only temporarily successful, until the arrival of the Second Brigade, Third Division, Ninth Corps, which, coupled with the troops of the First Division on either flank, turned the tables upon the enemy, and he fled in great confusion, a number of prisoners, estimated at about 1000. Two battle-flags have been captured by us.

The enemy also lost heavily in killed outside o. our lines.

The whole line was immediately reoccupied, and the line entirely restored.

I regret to add that General M'Laughlin was captured in Fort Stedman.

Our loss otherwise was not heavy.

Great praise is due to General for the gallantry displayed in handling his division, which behaved with great skill in this its first engagement.

JOHN G. PARKE, Major-General.

According to a later dispatch from Grant, dated March 27, the total loss of the enemy in the fight during loose on our side:

Second Corps.—Killed, 51; wounded, 403; missing, 417.

Sixth Corps.—Killed, 47; wounded, 401; missing, 50.
Ninth Corps.—Killed, 68; wounded, 388; missing, 500.

Our aggregate loss in killed, wounded, was 936; by the Sixth Corps 689; and by the Ninth Corps 1049. The Second Corps lost 1401. The gallant Hartsuff was severely left, and captured the enemy's strong intrenchments and turned his guns upon their own lines. Gen. Hartsuff, in trying to retake this battle was continued until the arrival of the Sixth Corps, when the enemy fled. Hartsuff plays estimates the loss of the enemy in his front at three times his own loss, or about 3000 men. This is probably that of ours. The enemy brought in a flag of truce for permission to bury his dead. The Sixth Corps captured 200 picket line and their main line of fortifications. Permission was granted.

THE WAR IN THE WEST.

Mobile was to have been attacked on the 24th. A fleet of 30 vessels was in the Tombigbee River and more than Thomas is organizing a powerful army in Tennessee.

The following dispatch is from Sheridan. All the enemies recently undertaken by Lieutenant N. C. Perkins of the Mississippi Squadron:

FLAG-SHIP "GENERAL BURNSIDE," OFF DAUPHINE, MOBILE BAY, March 24, 1865.

SIR,—I have the honor to inform you that I took advantage of the last tide in the Tombigbee River and entered Eli River Shoals with the flag-ship and the General Thomas, and went down to Blakely. Finding the enemy below this general Rhodds's camp and drove them off, captured some of their horses with the equipments, and seven bales of cotton. I destroyed the rebel communications at Lunt's Ferry. A large number of fish, pontoons, stores, and canoes that I found there I also destroyed.

I then penetrated Elk River and found a rich and populous country. A great deal of loyal sentiment was displayed. The people, seeing with a view of success in endeavoring to encourage loyal feelings on the south side of Mobile. The citizens are very anxious to get from the rebels and taking the oath. From interviews I have had with prominent citizens, I think there is no doubt that Alabama will soon return to her allegiance to the General Government. Mr. Clements, I have understood, is endeavoring to become military Governor, and I think will be very popular with the loyal people of the State.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
CORNELIUS COLEMAN,
Lieutenant Commanding 11th Div. Miss. Squadron.
Rear-Admiral FARRAGUT.

General Hartsuff, on the recommendation of General Grant, has been promoted to be a Major-General by brevet, for conspicuous gallantry in repulsing and driving back the enemy from the lodgment made on our lines last Saturday.

Major-General Gibbons, of the gallant old Second Corps, has also been ordered to Orders appointment to the command of the Department had the temporary charge of the Twenty-third Corps, and will be in command of the department as commander of that corps.

The President has also ordered Major-General Andrew, son to raise over Fort Sumter, at the hour it rose, on the 14th of April, at the same place and by the same hand as it at the time of the rebel assault, and that it be saluted by the 100 guns that were fired on that day for each and battery that there died during the war. On the solitary occasion will be performed under the direction of Major-General W. T. Sherman, whose operations embrace the ancient city of Charleston, or in his absence, under the direction of General Gillmore, commanding that military department; and also that a flag has taken place in Charleston to participate in the ceremonies. And that Rev. Henry Ward Beecher be invited to deliver a public address on the occasion.

The whole of the first lines of the seven-thirty loan has been taken up by the people. The investments of persons in the city within the last few weeks have reached the proportions of from one to five and sixty-one millions.—Not impossible that in the history of popular subscription.

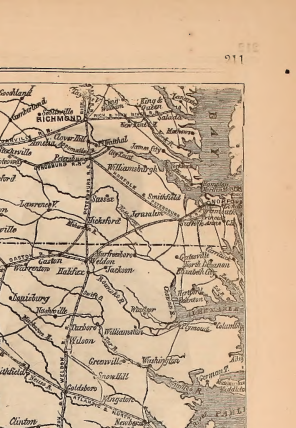
The official order for the Grand Review at Washington, which was to commission been date March 27, 1865.

General Thomas says, in an official report, that from Decatur to Gravelly Springs, on the Tennessee River, he numbered 13,189 men, and a large quantity of horses, wagons, cattle, and Indian artillery. Over 2000 deserters were also received, and a great deal of valuable ammunition and other war material was captured. Our own losses, of all sorts, are rather 10,000.

The forces in front of our Petersburg lines are the same that have been there ever since. The corps came from the Valley, viz.; A. P. Hill's corps on the rebel right; Longstreet's corps, Bushrod Johnson on the rebel left, with a couple of divisions, one of which is Rodrod Johnson's, from Georgia, between the James and the Appomattox. Longstreet has two divisions belonging to his old corps on the north side of the James River.

The President last Saturday had a distant view of the fighting before Fort Fisher, Petersburg. While going to witness a review with General Grant he stopped at a fort within reach of the rebel batteries. The fort had a parapet took a survey of the field. At one point in his position, Mr. Lincoln saw within one mile of Richmond.

Major-General George Cook has been ordered to report to General Grant for important to command. He will probably succeed General Kautz in the command of the cavalry division on the south side of the James, the rebel cavalry force being once more under the command of General Fitzhugh Lee.



On the 28th of February, at the close of the carnival, at Pietro-a-Petres, there was to have been a performance in the evening at the theatre, but in lighting the lamps, through some carelessness the scenery caught fire. The building was soon destroyed, and the Samee spread from house to house until the hundred houses were destroyed, involving a loss of forty to fifty millions of Haetian dollars, and depriving hundreds of persons of their homes. The fire, though lasting only six hours, destroyed the most active business and the city. There were but a few fire-engines, and such a scarcity of axes that hardly any thing could be done to stay the progress of the flames. The consternation of the people was great for several days after the fire. The city is now under the charge of the Government is taking measures to assist the sufferers, and has ordered the immediate rebuilding of their benefit.

The Post-office Route Agent between Charleston and Wilmington, North Carolina, has applied to the Post-Office Department for services rendered after the secession of the State.

Of the 110 rebel officers captured at Fort Steadman, and sent to the Old Capitol, four were colonels, two lieutenant-colonels, six majors, eight captains, and ninety lieutenants, representing not less than forty rebel regiments that were engaged in the attack.

Major-General Custer's cavalry, Army of the James, has been relieved and ordered to report to General Weitzel. General Merritt, of the Army of the Potomac, succeeds him.

An average of $350 a day is being paid to rebel deserters for the muskets they bring in.

MAP OF THE CAMPAIGN AGAINST RICHMOND.

FOREIGN NEWS.

EUROPE.

On the 13th of March an important debate took place in the British Parliament on the defenses of Canada and the probability of a war with America. The debate generally arose out of the supposed proposal made during the recent correspondence between the Colonial and the British federal authorities. Mr. S. Fitzgerald began the debate by calling attention to the report of Colonel Jervois on the defenses of Canada. Mr. Foster objected that the expense of the proposed fortifications would be almost fabulous. He believed that the apprehension of war was unfounded.

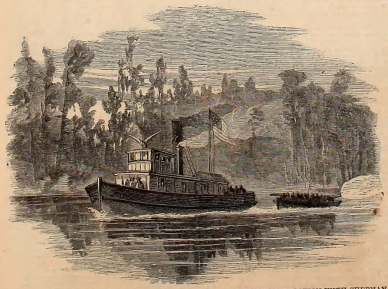
Then Mr. Disraeli arose. We can only report his speech in full, but give a few extracts. He said:

"I am not aware that in the event of the termination of the American War we should be placed in any immediate danger of coming into collision with the Government owing to our connection with Canada. I do not believe that the dismay of the United States of the North, even if entirely and completely victorious, will lead inclined to enter immediately into another struggle with a Power not inferior in determination and in resources to the Southern States of America. The democracy of America must not be confounded with the democracy of the Old World. It is not formed of the sons of turbulent cities, neither is it merely a section of an exhausted middle class which speculates in stocks and calls itself a nation. It is a territorial democracy. Now, being a territorial democracy, their character has been formed and developed in a manner by the property with which they are connected, and by the pursuits they follow; and a state of responsibility arising from the reality of their possessions may restrain them from political conduct. And I believe they are very much more inclined to welcome the returning laborers to their fields, to save around them the produce of the earth, and to behold happiness in those homes which they have left, than to be stretched, than to plunge into the misery of a new and terrible war." Mr. Disraeli then went on to say that great changes had taken place in the United States during the war. There had been great centralization, and from this would be developed after the war, on account of the new element introduced into society by the sudden creation of a new class of citizens, would yet be delivered from the evil of a standing army. He then went on to say that it impossible to accept what relations any portion of the United States might entertain with Great Britain's dependencies on a discussion of the subject. The question was for the people of the country present to remove his Australian colonies, Canada, or are we to retain that tie? Now, if these colonies expressed a wish to separate the connection, and if they preferred to be absorbed by the United States, we might terminate our connection with dignity and with advantage. But if, on the contrary, these views are just which are more generally accepted—that these colonies in the part of Canada and the other North American colonies a sincere and deep desire to maintain their present connection with the mother country, and to preserve the patronage and aid of England until time restores local vigor and shall lead to confidence, then gain a permanent ally and friend—then it would be the great political blunder that can be conceived for us to renounce, relinquish, and avoid the responsibility of maintaining the connection with Canada at the present moment. If, from considerations of expense we were to quit the North American continent, or are we to retain that tie? Now, if these colonies expressed a wish to separate the connection, and if they preferred to be absorbed by the United States, we might terminate our connection with dignity and with advantage. But if, on the contrary, these views are just which are more generally accepted—that these colonies in the part of Canada and the other North American colonies a sincere and deep desire to maintain their present connection with the mother country, and to preserve the patronage and aid of England until time restores local vigor and shall lead to confidence, then gain a permanent ally and friend—then it would be the greatest

COLONEL O. M. POE.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY GEORGE N. BARNARD.]

BRIGADIER-GENERAL H. A. BARNUM.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY GEORGE N. BARNARD.]

GEN. SHERMAN'S ARMY.



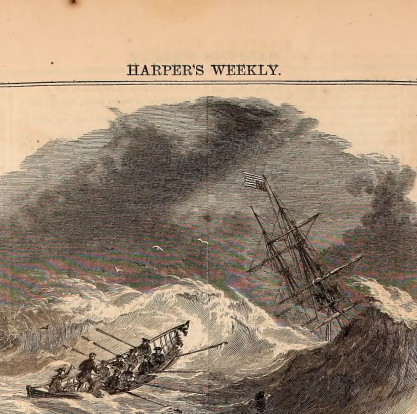
We continue in this week's issue our illustrations of General SHERMAN'S march through the Carolinas. Not the least interesting of these will be the portraits which we are able to give of General BARNUM and Colonel POE.

Brigadier-General H. A. BARNUM entered the service as a private of the Twelfth New York Regiment. With this regiment, having been promoted to the rank of Captain, he served in the several campaigns of the Army of the Potomac.—After the battle of Malvern Hill he was reported killed. The citizens of his county recovered what they supposed to be his body, took it home, buried it with the highest honors, and inscribed upon his tombstone his excellent qualities. But BARNUM turned up again. He had had a perilous escape, with a great hole in his side, which can never be closed without causing his death. On his return he was commissioned Colonel of the One Hundred and Forty-ninth New York. He was wounded at Lookout Mountain; and in that battle his regiment captured the greatest proportion of rebel colors. General BARNUM was the first to discover that the enemy were leaving Savannah, and was the first to enter the place when he received the surrender of the city. At General SHERMAN'S suggestion he was recently made Brigadier-General by brevet.

Colonel ORLANDO M. POE was appointed to West Point from Ohio in 1852. At the completion of his course he was commissioned Brevet Second Lieutenant of Topographical Engineers, and assisted Captain MEADE in the survey of the Northern Lakes. At the breaking out of the war he went to Columbus, Ohio, and assisted Governor DENNISON in organizing the first two regiments of Ohio Volunteers. He was chief Topographical Engineer on Gen. MCCLELLAN'S staff in Western Virginia. September 16, 1861, he was appointed Colonel of the Second Michigan, and was attached to BERRY'S brigade of KEARNEY'S division, in which capacity he served until KEARNEY'S death. On November 29, 1862, he received the com-

CHARGE OF THE FIRST ALABAMA AND FIFTH KENTUCKY, UNDER COLONEL SPENCER, AT WHITE POND, FEBRUARY 8, 1865.
[SKETCHED BY THEODORE R. DAVIS.]

CAPTAIN AINSWORTH MOVING UP CAPE FEAR RIVER TO OPEN COMMUNICATION WITH SHERMAN.
[SKETCHED BY THEODORE R. DAVIS.]



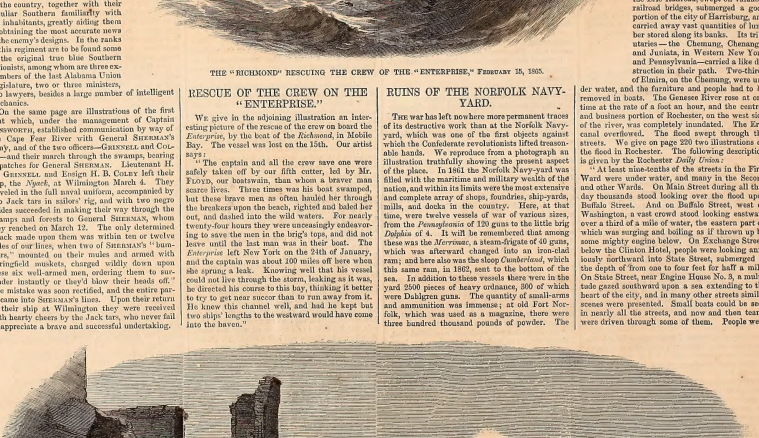
LIEUTENANT GRINNELL AND ENSIGN COLBY BEARING DISPATCHES TO GENERAL SHERMAN.
[SKETCHED BY THEODORE R. DAVIS.]

mand of a brigade of the Ninth Corps, which he accompanied to the West in the spring of 1863. In the movement on Knoxville he acted as Chief Engineer of the Twenty-third Corps. He took a prominent part in defence of Knoxville against LONGSTREET. He it was who constructed Fort Sanders, which was held against the rebel assault of November 29. In all of SHERMAN'S campaigns since the spring of 1864 Colonel POE has acted as Chief Engineer on his staff.—He is now Brevet Colonel in the Regular Army.

The graphic sketch on page 212 of the charge made at White Pond by the First Alabama and Fifth Kentucky, under the command of Colonel SPENCER, deserves particular mention. The First Alabama was organized at Corinth, Mississippi, early in 1863. During the grand campaign against Atlanta this regiment accompanied the Army of the Tennessee, rendering signal service to the lamented General M'PHERSON up to the time of the evacuation of Kenesaw Mountain by the enemy, when it was ordered to Rome on scouting duty. During the movements of HOOD upon our rear this regiment rendered most invaluable information to Gen. SHERMAN, their superior knowledge of the topography of the country, together with their peculiar Southern familiarity with the inhabitants, greatly aiding them in obtaining the most accurate news of the enemy's designs. In the ranks of this regiment are to be found some of the original true blue Southern Unionists, among whom are three ex-members of the last Alabama Union Legislature, two or three ministers, two lawyers, besides a large number of intelligent mechanics.

On the same page are illustrations of the first boat which, under the management of Captain AINSWORTH, established communication by way of the Cape Fear River with General SHERMAN'S army, and of the two officers—GRENNELL and COLBY—and their march through the swamps, bearing dispatches for General SHERMAN. Lieutenant H. W. GRENNELL and Ensign H. B. COLBY left their ship, the Nyack, at Wilmington March 4. They traveled in the full naval uniform, accompanied by two Jack tars in sailors' rig, and with two negro guides succeeded in making their way through the swamps and forests to General SHERMAN, whom they reached on March 12. The only determined attack made upon them was within ten or twelve miles of our lines, when two of SHERMAN'S "bummers," mounted on their mules and armed with Springfield muskets, charged wildly down upon these six well-armed men, ordering them to surrender instantly or they'd blow their heads off." The mistake was soon rectified, and the entire party came into SHERMAN'S lines. Upon their return to their ship at Wilmington they were received with hearty cheers by the Jack tars, who never fail to appreciate a brave and successful undertaking.

THE "RICHMOND" RESCUING THE CREW OF THE "ENTERPRISE," FEBRUARY 15, 1865.



RESCUE OF THE CREW ON THE "ENTERPRISE."

WE give in the adjoining illustration an interesting picture of the rescue of the crew on board the Enterprise, by the boat of the Richmond, in Mobile Bay. The vessel was lost on the 15th. Our artist says:

"The captain and all the crew save one were safely taken off by our fifth cutter, led by Mr. FLOYD, our boatswain, than whom a braver man never lives. Three times was his boat swamped, but these brave men as often hauled her through the breakers upon the beach, righted and baled her out, and dashed into the wild waters. For nearly twenty-four hours they were unceasingly endeavoring to save the men in the brig's tops, and did not leave until the last man was in their boat. The Enterprise left New York on the 24th of January, and the captain was about 100 miles off here when she sprung a leak. Knowing well that his vessel could not live through the storm, leaking as it was, he directed his course to this bay, thinking it better to try to get near succor than to run away from it. He knew this channel well, and had he kept but two ships' lengths to the westward would have come into the haven."

RUINS OF THE NORFOLK NAVY-YARD.

THE war has left nowhere more permanent traces of its destructive work than at the Norfolk Navy-yard, which was one of the first objects against which the Confederate revolutionists lifted treasonable hands. We reproduce from a photograph an illustration truthfully showing the present aspect of the place. In 1861 the Norfolk Navy-yard was filled with the maritime and military wealth of the nation, and within its limits were the most extensive and complete array of shops, foundries, ship-yards, mills, and docks in the country. Here, at that time, were twelve vessels of war of various sizes, from the Pennsylvania of 120 guns to the little brig Dolphin of 4. It will be remembered that among these was the Merrimac, a steam-frigate of 40 guns, which was afterward changed into an iron-clad ram; and here also was the sloop Cumberland, which this same ram, in 1862, sent to the bottom of the sea. In addition to these vessels there were in the yard 2500 pieces of heavy ordnance, 300 of which were Dahlgren guns. The quantity of small-arms and ammunition was immense; at old Fort Norfolk, which was used as a magazine, there were three hundred thousand pounds of powder. The value of the military property of the yard was estimated at not less than thirty-five millions of dollars. Commodore M'AULEY was in command of the yard at that time, but delayed to remove the property until it was too late, and he was compelled to destroy it. But the destruction was partial. Nearly all the ordnance and all the immense stores of powder fell into the hands of the rebels.

RUINS OF THE NORFOLK NAVY-YARD.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY A. GARDNER, WASHINGTON, D. C.]

THE SPRING FRESHETS.

THUS spring the mountains have paid to the sea an unusual tribute. Owing to the unprecedented fall of snow during the winter the freshets throughout the country have been greater than for a generation past, and have been very disastrous. The Hudson, the Mohawk, the Connecticut, the Susquehanna, and all our great rivers, have been swollen with the flood to an almost incredible volume, which has overflowed the land and carried away houses and destroyed factories, and even robbed graveyards of their quiet inhabitants. It is almost impossible to estimate in money the losses which have been sustained.

The Susquehanna, in its sudden rise, tore away hundreds of miles of the Erie Railroad, swept off valuable railroad bridges, submerged a good portion of the city of Harrisburg, and carried away vast quantities of lumber stored along its banks. Its tributaries—the Chemung, Chenango, and Juniata, in Western New York and Pennsylvania—carried a like destruction in their path. Two-thirds of Elmira, on the Chemung, were under water, and the furniture and people had to be removed in boats. The Genesee River rose at one time at the rate of a foot an hour, and the central and business portion of Rochester, on the west side of the river, was completely inundated. The Erie canal overflowed. The flood swept through the streets. We give on page 220 two illustrations of the flood in Rochester. The following description is given by the Rochester Daily Union:

"At least nine-tenths of the streets in the First Ward were under water, and many in the Second and other Wards. On Main Street during all that day thousands stood looking over the flood upon Buffalo Street. And on Buffalo Street, west of Washington, a vast crowd stood looking eastward over a third of a mile of water, the eastern part of which was surging and boiling as if thrown up by some mighty engine below. On Exchange Street, below the Clinton Hotel, people were looking anxiously northward into State Street, submerged to the depth of from one to four feet for half a mile. On State Street, near Engine House No. 3, a multitude gazed southward upon a sea extending to the heart of the city, and in many other streets similar scenes were presented. Small boats could be seen in nearly all the streets, and now and then teams were driven through some of them. People were seeking places of safety, some removing goods, and others carrying food to their families.

In Rochester alone the loss is estimated in millions. Very curiously this freshet was predicted by a citizen, LYMAN B. LANGWORTHY, in 1850. He said that the Genesee, in consequence of the encroachments upon its right of way to the Lake, would at some time inundate the central and lower portions of the city; and under the corner-stone of the Court-house there was deposited a memorandum of his prediction. We are indebted to E. DARROW & BROTHER for promptly furnishing us the photographs which we reproduce relative to the flood at Rochester. One of these gives a view of the river, the other is a view in the city from the south side of Buffalo Street.

On the same page we give two illustrations of the flood at Mendota, Ill., Illinois—one of Main Street and the other of Happy Hollow in the suburbs. Says our correspondent, writing after the flood: "It is amusing to watch the innumerable small boats, canoes, and rafts paddling through the city. Yesterday, while sailing through the principal street, out of curiosity I counted the small boats, and could at one time see forty-three of these diminutive vessels rowing back and forth, crossing and recrossing, in the one street alone."

In addition to the instances which we have given there are many others which we must omit. It is probable that the oil regions in Pennsylvania have suffered more serious loss than any other district. Tanks and machinery have been destroyed, and thousands of barrels of petroleum have floated down the river.

WAITING.

A little longer yet, a little longer,
Shall violets bloom for thee, and sweet birds sing,
And the linn branches, where soft winds are blowing,
Shall murmur the sweet promise of the Spring.

A little longer yet, a little longer,
Then shalt behold the quiet of the morn,
While tender grasses and awakening flowers
Send up a golden tint to greet the dawn.

A little longer yet, a little longer,
The tenderness of twilight shall be thine,
The rosy radiance of her ever dying daylight,
To fade till trembling stars begin to shine.

A little longer yet, a little longer,
Shall misery night be beautiful to thee,
And the cold moon shall look through the blue silence
For—One by her—that path upon the sea.

A little longer yet, a little longer,
Life shall be thine; life with its power to will;
Life with its strength to bear, to love, to conquer,
Bringing the thousand joys thy heart can thrill.

A little longer still, and Heaven awaits thee,
And fills thy spirit with a great delight;
Then our pale path will seem a dream forgotten,
Our sun a darkness and our day a night.

A little longer, and thy heart, believed,
Shall have its perfect will in love divine;
And joy so pure, so mighty, so eternal,
No mortal knows and lives, shall then be thine.

A little longer yet, and angel voices
Shall sing a welcome chant upon thine ear;
Angels and saints await thee, and God needs thee:
Beloved, can we bid thee linger here?

MY BOAT.

"I DECLARE, Susan, I believe something is the matter with me. My mouth tastes this morning as if I had slept all night with it full of cotton."

"That must be a funny sensation, dear," said my wife.

"Yes; 'tis queer."

"Sense in your mouth, you know."

"Eh?"

"You don't often have sense there, do you, James?"

"I didn't say I had," said I, in blissful unconsciousness that there was a pun very where about. "I said it tasted as if I had. Ditter, you know. Ugh! I feel very like getting dyspeptic."

"Dreadful," said Mrs. Dobb, with much calmness.

I was standing before the glass in our bedchamber brushing my hair. My wife was doing something with her hoop-skirt.

"I feel dizzy," said I. "Dumb-bells and things. I'm going to join a gymnasium."

Mrs. Dobb laughed outright. "What a figure you would cut, my lights and sparrow-grass! round a trap—what do they call it?—like a partridge on a spit!"

"Pooh pooh!" said I, a little nettled at this allusion to my figure—which might be pronounced dumpy, I dare say, by some envious raw-boned person; "you don't know what you're talking about, Mrs. Dobb. I don't mean that kind of thing. I have often heard of the new gymnasiums. It's dumb-bells mostly, I believe. A very genteel and proper thing, I assure you."

"Especially if genteel pretty my wife.

"Mrs. Dobb," said I, sternly, pausing with a brush in each hand, and bending a piercing eye upon her through the looking-glass, "don't talk about expense at such a time as this! If your husband's health and strength are fading away, his digestion suffering, his tongue getting furry, his eyes losing their native lustre, it matters very little what expense is incurred that may serve to check the fell destroyer before his ravages have accomplished their work."

"That isn't cyrtical," said Mrs. Dobb.

"What isn't?"

"I saw it in a medical almanac the other day. Somebody's pills."

I resumed a vigorous brushing of my hair. I was determined, however, on having the coveted exercise. At the breakfast-table the subject was resumed.

"I don't know, said I, "whether the gymnasium would be the best thing to do or not. I might try the virtues of a course of bowling."

"Bowling?"

"In an alley, you know. Ten-pins, they used to call it. Very healthy. Very popular, too. I know several of the first men in town who bowl. And something, I repeat, I must do."

"Yes, dear, I do think you shut yourself up in your studio too closely; that you keep too still there. I was going to suggest something myself, by which you could have more exercise."

"Indeed!" from my carving to see if my wife was joking. But she was tying Fred's napkin with a perfectly sober face.

"What is it?" I asked.

"Why, I was thinking, that if you were to paint a picture which would cover a great big canvas—something in the style of Church's Niagara, for instance, or Bierstadt's Rocky Mountains—instead of setting all the room, and the children, in a would give you fine exercise running about from one side of the picture to the other, and climbing up stepladders to the sky, and so on."

"How absurd you are, Susan!"

"I don't see any thing absurd about it! I should think it would be good for you. I should like to look in and see you at work. Oh dear!"

"I'm afraid that wouldn't save much expense, wife."

"Why? You could exhibit it afterward, and finally sell it for a hundred times as much as you get for a portrait, I shouldn't wonder."

"Ah, Susan, if I was a Church myself— But I'm not. I think the bells would be cheaper in the end."

"Up 'a a steeple, papa?" put in Fred, at random, anxious to have a word in the conversation.

"No, my son, not in a steeple; your mother wouldn't consent to any thing that was so high."

"James!"

"I was only complimenting your economy, my dear."

"I'll tell you what you can do," said Mrs. Dobb, brightening. "You can get a cord of wood and saw it up! That would be splendid!"

I tried the proposition with contemptuous silence, sipping my coffee and glancing over the morning paper.

"The very thing!" I suddenly cried.

"What!—the wood!" said Mrs. Dobb.

"Oh, no! But here it is, in the paper here—an advertisement. A row-boat for sale. I'll buy it."

"Why, my dear," said Mrs. Dobb, a little alarmed, "you know nothing about managing a boat."

"I know it, Susan; but I can learn—any body can learn to row. It'll be splendid exercise—bring out my muscle—expand my chest. Nothing like it. Why, look at Tom Ten Eyck; he's as strong as a horse—got the shoulders of muscle on his breast, and measures I don't know how many feet across his shoulders. He told me boat-rowing was what did it."

"Tom Ten Eyck," said Mrs. Dobb, "is a sort of a giant. No wonder he is so powerful. You don't suppose you would ever look like him, do you?"

"No, my dear, I hope not. But I shall buy that boat."

I bought it. It was what I called a regular bargain. The man was very glad to get rid of it himself on his own use; and if I wasn't goin' t' Eye-dyho I wouldn't part with her no way. She's a prize, if I do say it."

"Carry a big load?"

"You can take six in her easy," said the man "four on them stern-seats an' two forrard."

"No danger of upsetting, I suppose?"

"O Lord! not the least. Why, you can't capsize a boat built the way that boat is. Flat bottom, you see; no career to her."

I paid the thirty-five dollars for the paragon of boats, and took her away.

"Tell you what, Susan," said I that night at tea, "I've made a good bargain in the way of my life."

"The first time, I guess," said Mrs. Dobb.

"I'll put that dirt-cheap. You can't guess what I paid for it."

"Oh, I don't know any thing about what such things cost, James. What did you give?"

"Guess, guess," was the rubbing my hands briskly in anticipation of her astonishment when I should disclose my paltry figure; "guess once."

"Well, a dollar, you," said my wife.

"Was it ten dollars?"

"Ten dollars!" I exclaimed, in astonishment. "Are you crazy?"

"There!" said Mrs. Dobb. "I told you I didn't know any thing about what boats cost. You needn't get angry about it."

"Angry? Oh no; I wouldn't get angry at a thing of that kind, you know. Ha, ha, ha! By George! it's the best joke— Why, Susan, you can't get a row-boat of the commonest description for less than seventy-five dollars now."

"And what did you pay for yours?"

"Thirty-five mine at a bargain, as I told you. The man had to leave town to-night, and he sold it to me for thirty-five dollars."

"Where is the boat?"

"Oh, I've hired a place for it, in care of a German that sells fish on the shore, right down here, not fifteen minutes' walk from our house. I rowed it up myself. Ah, you've no idea what a delicious sensation it is to row a boat; you seem to accomplish so much with so little effort. And how beautiful it was to swim over the waves so easily, just dipping the oars in the cool water! Talk about its being hard work to row a boat! It was nothing but fun. I felt like a blithe young sailor-boy, and I actually began to sing a song I've heard somewhere—

"'Lightly row, lightly row,
O'er the glassy waves we go!'

Something out of Scott's poems, I think; isn't it, dear?"

"I don't know, I'm sure," said my wife; "it sounds familiar to me."

"I liked the words the song is," said my oldest daughter, the blooming Nellie—the one with a literary turn of mind.

"Ah, Nellie," I said, gratified with this opportunity to test my daughter's culture. "Well, we shall be glad to hear."

"It's in our school song-book," said she. "I can sing it. The rest of that verse is,

"'Smoothly glide, smoothly glide
Our bark o'er the silent tide!'"

"Well, as I was telling you, Susan," I went on; "I was so pleased with my purchase that I rode some distance above my German's place of business, and I don't know but I should have kept on up stream till now if I hadn't noticed my feet were getting damp."

"What!" cried Mrs. Dobb, "does your boat leak, James?"

"Why, certainly, my dear, it leaks a little; all boats do. Didn't you know that? It don't hurt any thing. She didn't leak more than two or three pailfuls all the time I was out, and I dare say half of that spattered over the sides."

"Pa-pa," said Mrs. Dobb, "you will certainly be drowned."

"Fudge! Don't interrupt my story, dear. So I turned and came back. But, curiously enough, I didn't get ahead so well after I turned round. It never struck me before that it could be harder to row down than it was to row up; but the fact was, don't you see, wind and tide were both up stream. Ha, ha! So I've learned something by my boat, eh? I might have lived on land all my life and never thought about that."

"But you got back safe."

"Yes, but I didn't row back. You see my back began to ache a little and my hands to smart; so I thought I would get a boy a quarter to row me back to the German's."

The next day I didn't go to my boat at all; the Water Lily, I had christened her. For in the morning I found, very much to my regret, that there were three or four great blisters on the palms of my hands. I thought every hour or two of the day in procuring a suitable outfit. You can't row very comfortably in a bronzleoth coat with long tails. They get wet. I bought me a blue flannel shirt, a turpaulin hat, and a pair of big water-proof boots that came above my knees. Then I bought me a pair of India-rubber gloves. And I thought it would be a good idea to have them to protect my hands.

I made my appearance at the German's next morning in my new suit.

"I want to leave my coat with you, Jacob," said I, "while I go an out rowing. You'll take care of it till I return?"

"Yah," said he; and I went out to my boat.

I found it full of water to the very top. Don't know as that is a mariner's phrase; maybe it's gunwale or something. I came back to the German in some haste.

"Why, look here!" I cried; "what have you been doing to my boat? She's full of water!"

"Yah," said Jacob, as he broke away in the night, too. Dere was a man like to git drownded mit de dam ole ting. He was lean off de dock mit a long pole, an' he fill it mit water all over his boat. He tole me he charge you half a toler. He git he out."

"Oh, he sunk her in trying to get her, did he?" said I, brightening up; "I was afraid perhaps she had sprung a leak, which I had been afraid of for him, and tell him I'm obliged to him. But how am I to empty her? Can we pull her out and tip her over?"

"Haf to bail her out mit a pail," said Jacob. "I do it for you."

But I perceived expense. Such alacrity was not a gratis article. I concluded to bail her out myself. Might as well have some exercise that way, just for once. So I went and went to work, and I had to do it by means of a rope attached to the pail, at first; for actually the seats rose above the water, and I got in. I then sat down—quite unintentional, I may say—and arose dripping like a mermaid. My costume was warm; I didn't mind it much. It took me an hour to bail her out clean; and then, after borrowing an old stump of a broom from Jacob, I swept the water nicely. I concluded to go home, for I was tired, wet, and hungry.

My wife said I looked like a fright; but she was not so frightened but that she laughed immoderately.

The next day, on going to the river, I found my bucket-and-rope gone, which I had hung up in Jacob's shanty the day before sopping wet, were new dry, and just as large as a pint of board gloves. I went to them to Jacob, and went and bought me another pair. When I returned, Jacob had pounded my old gloves out and dried them; and since then, I have known how to treat buckskin gloves when they get hard. I went out to my boat, and found her as dry as a bone, with the previous morning.

"Broke loose again, Jacob?" said I, in a vague hope that another accident had occurred.

"No," said he, "she leak dat vay."

"You don't tell me that she—" But it was no use asking the question.

"What you charge for dem boat?"

"I gave thirty-five dollars," said I.

"Ah, you git cheated bad. Dem boat ist nicht good for nothing."

"Couldn't she be mended somehow?" I asked.

Jacob shook his head with an incredulous smile. "Cost you more as a new one," said he.

Reluctantly I came to the conclusion that the boat-vender had sold me what he called the boat to me. But he was well on his way to Idaho by this time. It was useless hoping for retribution. I finally traded back my boat for a brand-new one. The price of the new boat was $80, but the man allowed me $5 for my old one.

I forgot to tell Susan about my new purchase. Luckily she had not seen the old one, though I had intended taking her out riding in it.

My first boat had oars with fastened locks; and my body who has tried it (that is, any body unaccustomed to rowing) knows how much easier it is for a novice to row with much oars than with those which have open locks, in which the oar plays freely. Good oarsmen would sneer at fastened locks; but I must say I did not feel so inclined as I handled the loose oars of my new boat.

"Confound these things!" I exclaimed, as I went splashing along; "they're as clumsy as— I can't do any thing with them!"

But I got more accustomed to them after a little, and soon began to enjoy my daily boat-ride in good earnest. I used sometimes to get in the hottest of the day, carrying with me a lunch in a basket; and then, when I was pouring down a flood of intense heat on the water, I would rest under the stern of some great ship away up-stream, where the shade was almost cave-like in its delicious coolness, and making my boat fast would eat my lunch with such a hearty relish as I had not felt in months, sitting in my little cock-pit and rocking lazily on the murmuring waves. Ah, it was delightful!

My new boat was a decided beauty—and Beauty was the name I gave her. She was painted black outside, with a strip of red running round the edge, and lead-colored inside. She had three seats—one astern, one amidships, and one forward (oh, I picked up the terms from time to time), and her prow was exquisitely rounded. I dare say any body not a judge of these things would have thought my boat looked like a common junk-man's boat—those felucca-looking craft that go round with tin, iron, etc., from the vessels, you know! The idea!

Well, the fact is, I did get taken for a junk-man, and I had to buy some handfuls of tobacco of him from ships at anchor, holding up armfuls of junk they wanted to sell; and it was immensely amusing to see them stare at me with a sort of contemptuous indifference to the offered prize, wondering, no doubt, whether they had made a blunder or I had.

One day a man hailed me from a three-master dock, and wondering what he could want I rowed over to him. Perhaps he wants a ride, thought I; if he does he shall have it, as soon as I've sold him some tobacco.

He was a gang of laborers near by, prying along a great stick of timber; and as I drew near I recognized an acquaintance in Mr. Brown—of the firm of Brown & Spalding, lumber merchants—who stood near. Brown lifted his hat to me, and I bowed in return. He had seen me out in my boat before now.

"I've got a job for ye," roared the man on the dock who had hailed me first, not noticing the recognition that passed between Brown and me.

(By-the-way, though, did you ever notice how people on shore always shout to a man in a boat, as if he was half a mile off? They don't talk that way to a man on a bridge, or any thing of that sort. This has nothing to do with my story, but it's so curious I thought I'd mention it.)

"Have you?" said I, with a wink at Brown. "What's it like?"

"Yas," said he; "want ye t' tow this 'ere stick o' timber up to Knight's dock"—half a mile off.

"Couldn't advise you, my friend," said I.

"Give ye a dollar," said he.

I shook my head, and rowed slowly away.

"Hallo, you,—you—a fat," growled the man, looking after me with his face full of profane language; "I thought you fellers would do any thing for money."

Such a peal of laughter as Brown sent up!

"Who is that fellow?" he cried. "There's an unbiased criticism on art."

The man looked quite mystified as I rowed off. After I had got to be what I deemed a pretty expert with my oars, I invited Mrs. Dobb and a young lady friend to take an afternoon ride with me. I chose to do a deed of cooking, but at last I succeeded, and they went. My wife—under that vague impression of going a long journey which women generally seem to connect with the idea of getting out on untried waters—had brought along a thick camel's hair shawl (cost five hundred dollars by-the-way—by which I had it for many years) and a nice little female morocco satchel stuffed with sandwiches and sweet-cake. She was very much pleased with the motion of my Beauty after she got a little accustomed to it. It didn't make her sick at all, she said.

As we were gliding along pleasantly with the tide, one of those junk-buyers came alongside in his boat, and hailed me with a view to trade. Then he was an Irishman, and he was a little under the influence of intoxicating beverage.

"Hillo, Jimmy!" he shouted to me, as he kept his boat near mine, "where th' divil d'ye git that soort o' job? Takin' th' ladies out ridin' What d'ye give a day?"

I made the insolent fellow no reply, and my wife stared at him in great amazement.

"Jimmy," she whispered to me, "what does that ugly Irishman mean by calling you Jimmy?"

"Johnny's gittin' proud," cried the junk-merchant, who overheard at my silence. "Bedad, he didn't luk that way th' day th' sailors pitched him overboard o' th' Empress for dhrinkin' a new rope! Hev ye had yer dinner th' day, Johnny? Faix, I seed him t'other day under th' stern o' th' Black Prince wid a hunk o' bread an' some fat as cold pertaty in t'other, 'atin' as if he hadn't seen vittles in a month o' Sundays."

There was no stopping the fellow's tongue, though my wife turned red and white alternately, and looked greatly distressed; and there was no rowing away from him either, I turned about, and he turned about, too; and while I grew red in the face with exertion, it was exasperating to see with what ease he kept along with us, dipping his oars lazily, and keeping up a running fire of Irish wit, impudence, and blackguardism the while.

He left us at last, and then I found that we were further up stream than I had ever ventured before, and I despaired of rowing back against the tide.

Mrs. Dobb would almost crying with vexation.

"James," said she, "how could you sit so quietly and let that horrid man insult you in that way?"

To which, my dear, it wouldn't have done any good to talk back at him. You don't suppose I could keep up with an Irishman's tongue, do you?"

"Well—he had no business."

"Certainly not; none whatever. But how are we to get back? that's the present question. I'm about tired out."

"Oh, let me row!" cried Mrs. Dobb, brightening up instantly. "Do, James! Let me try it!"

"No. You can't row, Susan, indeed. It with a sudden consciousness of my boasting ability.

"Just for fun, you know," she pleaded. "Let me try!"

Of course I let her try; I never can resist Mrs. Dobb when she sets about a thing in earnest. The first thing she did was to lose one of the oars overboard. I sprang for the other oar, and in trying to reach the lost one my hat fell into the water; and in reaching for that, I tipped the boat a little, whereupon Mrs. Dobb screamed with terror. Meantime the oar floated out of reach. It took me a long time, and a great deal of perspiration to recover it, and by this it was grown late, and we at least two miles from home, with a strong tide against us.

"I'm sorry to say it, ladies," I remarked, "but I can't possibly row you back against this tide to-night."

"Why, I thought you such an expert oarsman," said my wife, with just a shadow of sarcasm in her tone.

"Susan," said I, "I can do any feat with a boat that any reasonable person could expect, and unfortunately the yawl-boat dragging astern, and so tow down.

"Oh, Mr. Dobb!" screamed my wife, "you shall not! You never could do such a thing! You'll tip us all over!"

In vain I protested I had done it a dozen times. Mrs. Dobb would not consent to it.

"We will go ashore, and walk up to the horses," said she, "that's best; it won't be far. And you can take the boat back alone."

"Very well," said I, "but I assure you there isn't a bit of danger."

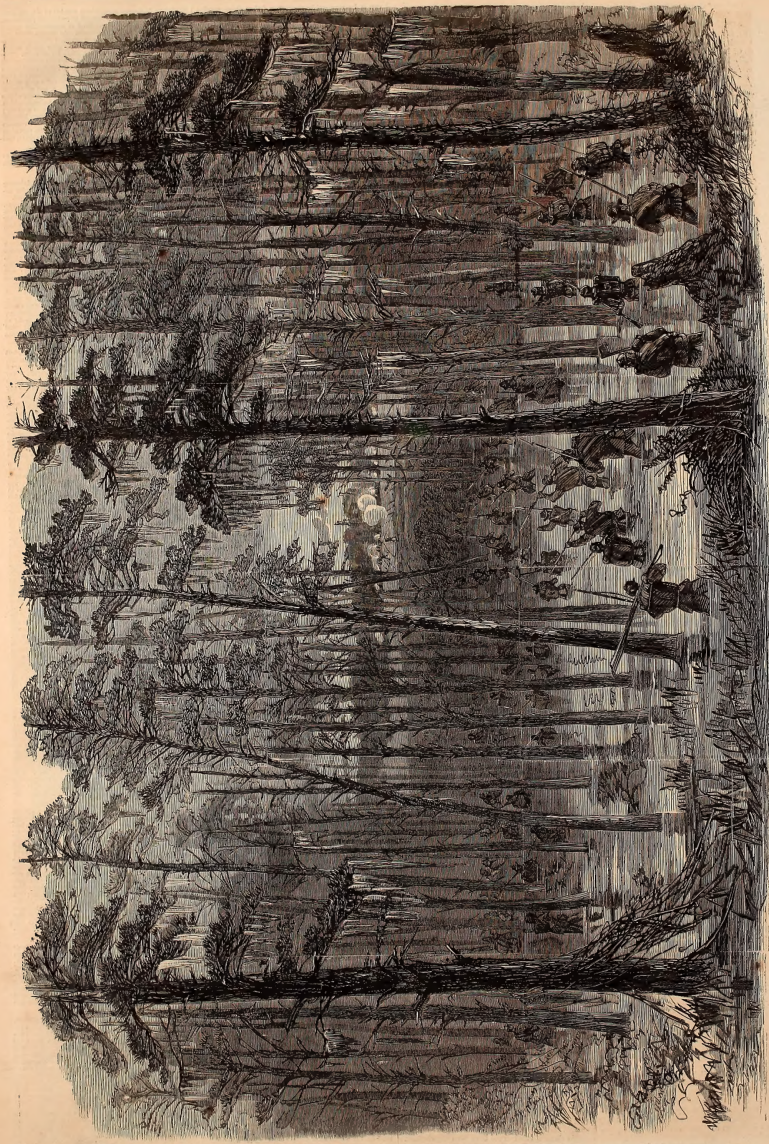
"I'll leave my shawl and satchel in the boat," she added. "You can bring them up when you come," and the skiff vessel yonder. "Now how easily I will do it, and then I'll go down-stream like a streak. I'll be home before you are. Au revoir!"

The vessel that was now approaching was moving pretty rapidly, and I understood my advice seemed too well to care for that. I struck out briskly, and was soon rowing directly in the path of the approaching vessel. I dropped astern as she came near, and unshipping my oars nimbly caught her yawl with a dexterous hand; and as I did so I turned and cast my other hand to the ladies, as much as to say, "Now you see how easy it is!"

But, alas! —I can't explain just how it was—the prow of my boat got turned a little too much onward, and I, sitting amidships, leaned half out of her, and tried to right her; I might as well have tried to right a fundamental error—the thing was simply impossible—but I was not conscious of my exact predicament at the moment. I hung on to the yawl like grim death. My boat capsized forthwith—I hung on. "Now you see how easy it is!" but, alas! —I can't explain just how it was—the prow of my boat got turned a little too much onward, and I, sitting amidships, leaned half out of her, and tried to right her; I might as well have tried to right a fundamental error—the thing was simply impossible—but I was not conscious of my exact predicament at the moment. I hung on to the yawl like grim death. My boat capsized forthwith—I hung on. "Now you see how easy it is!" but I wouldn't go, and was soon engaged in a vigorous hand-to-hand struggle with my other hand to the ladies, as much as to say, "Now you see how easy it is!"

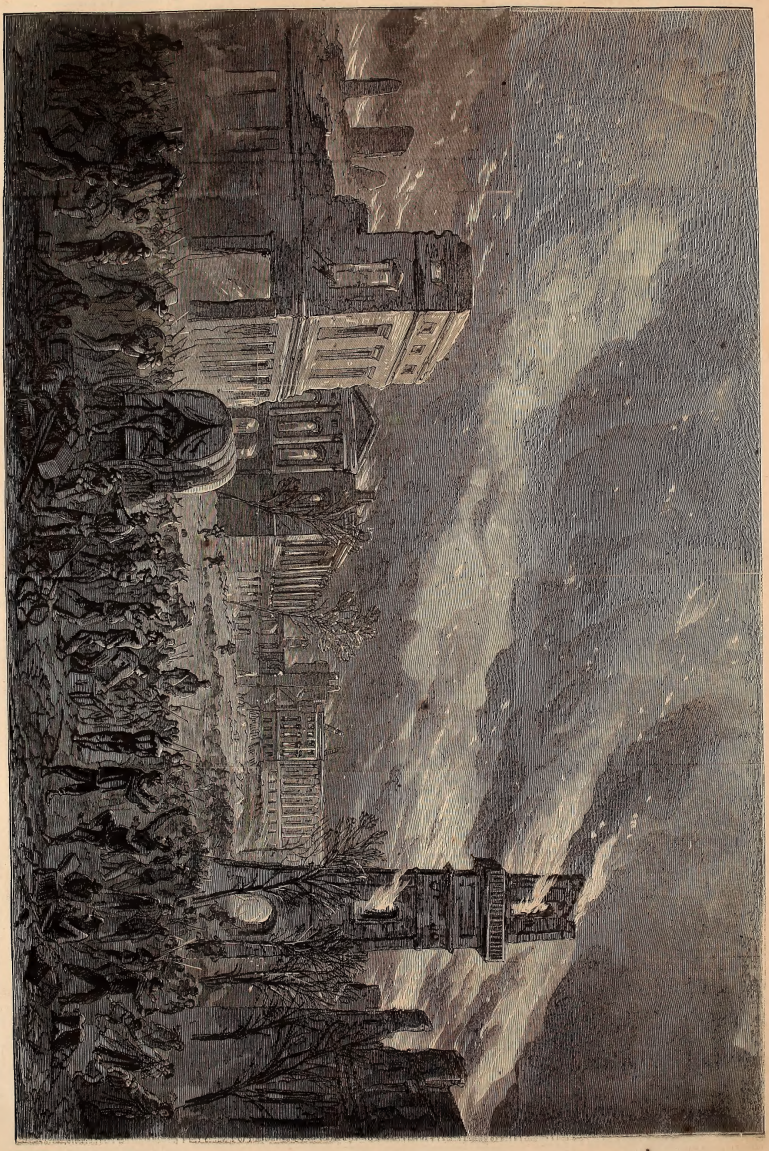
But, alas! —I can't explain just how it was—the prow of my boat got turned a little too much onward, and I, sitting amidships, leaned half out of her, and tried to right her; I might as well have tried to right a fundamental error—the thing was simply impossible—but I was not conscious of my exact predicament at the moment. I hung on to the yawl like grim death. My boat capsized forthwith—I hung on. "Now you see how easy it is!" but I wouldn't go, and was soon engaged in a vigorous hand-to-hand struggle with my other hand to the ladies, as much as to say, "Now you see how easy it is!"

"Help! help!" screamed my wife, "you shall not! You'll tip us all over!"



In vain I protested I had done it a dozen times. Mrs. Dobb would not consent to it.

"We will go ashore, and walk up to the horses," said she, "that's best; it won't be far. And you can take the boat back alone."



"Very well," said I, "but I assure you there isn't a bit of danger."

"I'll leave my shawl and satchel in the boat," she added. "You can bring them up when you come," and the skiff vessel yonder. "Now how easily I will do it, and then I'll go down-stream like a streak. I'll be home before you are. Au revoir!"

The vessel that was now approaching was moving pretty rapidly. I understood my advice seemed too well to care for that. I struck out briskly, and was soon rowing directly in the path of the approaching vessel. I dropped astern as she came near, and unshipping my oars nimbly caught her yawl with a dexterous hand; and as I did so I turned and cast

CHARGE OF WEAVER'S BRIGADE ACROSS THE SALKEHATCHIE, SOUTH CAROLINA.—[SKETCHED BY DAVIS.]

THE BURNING OF COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA, FEBRUARY 17, 1865.—[SKETCHED BY W. WARD.]

THE HOMES OF THE POOR.

OH! the homes we give the poor!
In the alleys damp and grim,
Where the noisome vapors swim,
In the cellar-caves that drink
Poison from the sewer and sink,
Are the homes we give the poor.

See the homes we give the poor:
Piled to weary, dangerous heights,
Toward heaven's cold and pitiless lights,
Chilled above by wind and snow,
While the fiends that lurk below—
See the homes we give the poor.

Are they homes we give the poor?
Danger sits by every gate,
Pain and misery round them wait,
Ghostly tenants put we in,
Death, disease, and shame and sin—
Homes they are not for the poor.

Have we no homes for the poor?
Hold we earth so cramped and bound
Place for these can not be found?
Do our homes so wide expand
That they cover all the land?
Leave we no homes for the poor?

Near us ever are the poor.
They are nearer than we think;
We but stand upon the brink
Whence we push them; and their fall
Shakes the mansion and the hall:
We are very near the poor.

Ask we how to bless the poor?
Build them houses not unmeet
To be trod by human feet—
Give them homes; and blessings thus
Shall run swift from them to us—
From the homes we give the poor.

KATE.

"WHAT has become of the Mahons?" said Tulloch to me, about seven or eight months after his return from China, as he sat in my chambers one fine spring morning. Tulloch was my first cousin once removed, at least so his grandmother, my aunt, always said, and the Mahons stood in the same relationship to me, on the other side of the house, and always, by-the-way, seemed to stand much nearer.

"Old Mahon was very hospitable and kind, when I went to Ireland. He ate me, sweetmeats and all, years ago, it must be," continued Tulloch. "I nearly lived in his house. What pretty children he had!"

"Well, he has come to grief since then, you," I returned. "His wife died, so did the eldest boy; the second went away somewhere; Mahon himself is here with the two girls, and a good deal reduced in circumstances, I am sorry to say."

"The deuce he is," said Tulloch, his strong jaw dropping with sudden regret and disapprobation. He could sympathize with sorrow or mistrust suffering honestly enough, but there was moral guilt in pecuniary troubles which grated on his perceptions in some mysterious way.

"Is he very hard up?" he asked.

"Not that I know of," I replied, cautiously. "They seem to get on quietly, but comfortably, I often see them, and they were asking about you last Sunday."

"Is he doing any thing?" asked Tulloch. "Likely to come round?"

"Well, he is not likely to make a fortune again; he is at the wrong side of sixty for that."

"Why, I thought he was as safe as the bank! If lived in such style—horses, carriages, and such a house! But I suppose he has something comfortable left?"

"I hope so. But you will come and see them?"

"Who, I? Certainly. They are not in what you call distressed circumstances? Because that is painful, and does not answer, eh?" said Tulloch.

"Oh no, not at all; you will see nothing to distress your feelings; but you need not come, you know."

"But I certainly shall come. I don't forget old times, my boy, and Mahon was uncommonly kind to me when I was a raw youngster."

"How are you off for time? Shall we go together?"

"Yes, I have nothing particular till three. I don't care if I do. What are the daughters like?"

"As pretty girls as you would see in a day's march; up to fun, and fresh as roses."

Tulloch's eyes sparkled. He was an ardent admirer of beauty, and had seen very little freshness in the sixteen or seventeen years during which he had been absent scraping together the two hundred thousand dollars which made him and his family safely, before he set himself to enjoy life, and live like a gentleman.

"It is many say off, but we will soon rattle down in an omnibus." Which we accordingly did. (I said for it.)

Mahon and his daughters lodged in an old-fashioned roomy house on the sunny side of the road. The door was opened by an indiscriminate grubby sort of a bundle, known as "Matilda" by the lodgers, and the "girl" by the missis; however, the room into which we were shown exhibited that had impression. It was a large three-windowed apartment, with a faded carpet and faded furniture; but the muslin curtains were full and fresh, there were some pretty worked cushions about, and one or two baskets of bright flowers—besides a stand of plants in the centre window.

The eldest girl, Kate, was writing at a small table covered with papers near the fire-place. Ellie, the youngest, was diligently at work repairing a number of gloves which lay before her.

went in first. "I have brought you a new cousin forty-five times removed, though bodily present,"

Kate, whose back was toward us, sprang up, and came forward with that unspeakable welcome in eye, lip, and cheek which no mere word can ever say. She was emphatically a woman, somewhere about twenty-three or twenty-four, with a tall, rich figure, full of splendid outlines, not easy, or flowing, sinking down into chairs with careless complete repose, and filling up into tall stateliness, for which her fascinating attitudes did not prepare one. With masses of chestnut brown hair, bright and clean, but alas! not tidy, tumbling into her ink and over her paper, and thrust every now and then behind a tiny ear, showing the round white throat that looked as if its tint resulted from a flirt of cream and almonds, and under the wide brow those dark gray eyes, with their long black lashes and infinite variety of expression! Oh, Kate, Kate, I was a fool then. Oh, Kate, Kate, I am a fool still!

Ellie was some six years younger; a slender, fair-haired-like creature, who looked up from her work with the daring of utter innocence; the confidence of one who had never known a wound.

Both girls had the same pale face, but in Kate's there was at times an intensity of expression, as though the soul was looking inward; both had mouths somewhat wider than is the style of beauty admits, the same brilliant teeth, that helped to give such radiance to the smile, but round Kate's lip a tender persuasive hung always, though it could laugh right merrily, and smile right scornfully.

"Who is it, Cousin Mahon?" said Kate, giving me her slight hand, while Ellie familiarly hugged my arm, and Tulloch stood transfixed by Kate's eyes.

"A! the aunt. No, it must be Mr. Tulloch. I think I remember his face."

Tulloch, albeit not a man of many words, managed to say that "He could remember her, though —though she was—" He paused.

"Rather better looking than she promised to be?" put in Ellie.

Tulloch colored, and we sat down.

"How is your father?" asked our relative.

"Quite well," returned Kate. "He is out," she added, addressing me; "he is gone to Mr. Timbs. He had a note this morning to say he had more work for him."

"Ah, yes," I interrupted, for I did not want them to be over-candid before Tulloch. "Your father's experience must be of great value to Mr. Timbs."

"I wish he thought so," said Ellie, laughing; "if you have found work for any one in your friends, Kate to Mr. Timbs." "How glad you must be to come back!"

"It is as well to rest a while; but I am thinking of joining a concern in the city. It does not do to let one's money lie idle, and not to make the most of it."

"Idle!" cried Ellie, "certainly not. Amuse yourself diligently."

"I did not make it for that," returned Tulloch.

"What did you make it for?"

"I do not mind her, Mr. Tulloch," said Kate, smiling; "she is a saucy girl."

"And so you remember me, Miss Mahon?" asked Tulloch, who had a certain quiet and secret vanity, arising from a doubtful estimate of himself.

"Yes," returned Kate. "That is, hearing your name, I saw your face in fancy, as I do now."

"I was very anxious to see you, very," said Tulloch, "as Harry Longmore here will tell you, very anxious, indeed." And the conversation flowed as easily in an exchange of questions and compliments —these last somewhat clumsily offered by Tulloch to Kate, with whom he was evidently deeply and violently enamored. I wondered she took them so kindly, though I confess there was a tone of rough sincerity about him.

"What a charming girl!" exclaimed Tulloch, as soon as we were in the street. "Such splendid eyes, such hair, such a figure! And the young one is a fairy. Really you did not say enough for them."

"Take care, man. Kate is hard to please, so do not lose your heart and think you have a safe game."

"Game! Why, don't you think she is far too sensible not to know the value of a comfortable home and enough to keep her? Besides, I don't seem pretty comfortable. I suppose old Mahon has a trifle to leave them—not much—but still a trifle?"

"I know very little of his affairs," I was beginning, when my companion suddenly hailed an omnibus.

"May as well go that way, as we are not in a hurry."

I assented; and as we rode along meditated on the little there was to know of poor Mahon's affairs.

He practised as an office of a very high and known and eccentric lawyer; and Kate, who had a genius for languages, obtained frequent employment in translating letters for foreign clients, while Ellie had music pupils. So, among them, they kept the wolf from the door and enjoyed life amazingly.

But Kate was the providence of the family. If Tulloch were to take a fancy to her, would it not be well for all parties? For that iron-jawed bright-eyed man, yes. But for her, though the ease and security of her material life would be secured, I shuddered at the idea of such profanation. I could see that, to him, she would be so much fair flesh; a rich, tender, lady, ugly in the market value he was disposed to put upon her; but the proud tender spirit, the pure frank heart with its wealth of love, the bright joyous nature, the keen intelligence, what would these be to him who only wanted a beautiful echo?

Next morning the following note was put into my hand:

"DEAR LONGMORE,—I was very sorry to miss you and Mr. Tulloch to-day. The girls tell me he has turned out a fine young man. Bring him over to dinner on Thursday, a day of comparative rest for me. Very welcome. Tell him I suppose he can do without fancy for an old friend. I am will be glad to hear that I have a good long job with Timbs; shouldn't be surprised, if I play my cards well, that he takes me on permanently, say as manager. Any how, I see the tide's turning. The girls send their love, the ducklings! Look ought to come, if it was only for their sakes. Yours always sincerely,

"CORNELIUS MAHON."

I lost no time in communicating this invitation to Tulloch, who was highly pleased to accept it, and we agreed to go together the following day.

I saw immediately on entering that my Hibernian relative had imbibed a large draught of hope's elixir. There was a certain quickening of the head, a touch of his bright blue eye, a curl of suppressed fun and good-humor about his mobile mouth, which bespoke magnificent success. Mr. Mahon! His plans were generally on the inverted pyramid system; from a pin's point of a base what a spreading superstructure it always became! Kate was a beneficent contractor. Mahon had little of this world's goods, but then fancy and temperament supplied him with true riches.

Tulloch could count on hard cash for every well-considered project his practical imagination suffered him to conjure, but beyond were no pleasant mercantile dealings, no heart-warming anticipations for him.

While these thoughts came unbidden to me, the object of them was bestowing the heartiest of welcomes on Tulloch. He had sprung with the agility of youth from his easy chair, and his slight full figure almost as upright as of yore, his fine aquiline face beaming with the light of the ohhilliks heart within.

"Delighted to see you, Tulloch, my boy!" he exclaimed. "Faith, you are a fine-looking fellow. I always said you'd fill out, and there was room for it. Lord, what a fine fellow you were! Eight, little Ellie, she was only an infant when you saw her, but Kate says she remembers you. And now you are come back for good, what do you intend to do? Go to Congress?"

This, laughing heartily, Tulloch disclaimed; and, after some general talk, Mahon cried,

"Ring the bell, Ellie darling, here's Tulloch ready to pick the bones of the chair he's sitting on with the hunger."

The bell was answered by a promising jingle, and dinner appeared.

There was a round plump leg of mutton, delicately browned, and a piece of creamy white crimped veal, with rich gravy between, and there was vegetables with forcemeat, and there was a gooseberry tart with cream, and there was a nice little dessert of oranges and apples.

The viands were irreproachable, and if the attendance were reprochable, there was an honest light-hearted Irish girl doing that was charming. She jumping up for bread, the hunting in improbable corners for the cork-screw, the indiscriminate cramming of knives and forks for every one in turn, the benevolent striving to save Matilda from additional runs up and down stairs, gave a cheerful picnic aspect to the entertainment. Then the joyous hospitality of our host! How he beamed upon us from behind the leg of mutton and praised it, and said what a happy day he counted this was the case with every thing at table), and dropped unexpected hints about the plates which were not yet ready in reach, and made surprising "long arms" to those that were not, and pressed us to drink the beer and the sherry, and declared that he would have us all, that little miser Kate would not let him have any, "though, faith, he was the first of his name that ever was refused any thing in the best; not that you are a miser, my darling, but prudent, and here's your health, my jewel!" Is it not all written in the records of domestic happiness? It was a treat to dine with Mahon. You felt that every morsel you swallowed invigorated your host. Alas! that the unalloyed joy of such a nature is so rare! The general circulation, that the sandstone which can be so readily and gracefully moulded will not stand the wear and tear of life, is sad.

Tulloch was loud and emphatic in his praises of Kate's prudence. His deep-set, dark eyes dwelt upon her with an undisguised admiration that she colored, and evidently strove to avoid them.

After the dinner, which with a jug of deliciously iced cold whisky-punch was produced—the manufacture of Ellie, who declared the weather too warm for anything but punch to hit water and the inevitable fumes.

It was a pleasant dinner; even I, though generally his humble guest, always wanting my host's cousin against unnecessary expense, was carried away by the fun, the irresistible enjoyment of Mahon, in the midst of his unvented hospitality. His genial glow which seemed to pervade all things. And Kate looked divinely handsome in a white muslin and blue ribbons, while her distinctly evidence in me was charming, though I confess Tulloch's admiration filled me with a vague dread.

The young ladies retired to some invisible withdrawing-room, and then we talked business and politics, and Tulloch gave Mahon a hint on his plan for taking possession of Timbs's business.

Tulloch listened with a slight contraction of the eye, as though he would turn here for information as to buy a house and furnish it, and that if Mr. Mahon thought he saw his way clearly to making a good thing of it, and of which he was the judge, (Tulloch) would not mind investing five or ten thousand to forward the scheme, provided there was no risk.

"Risk! my dear fellow," cried Mahon, his eyes sparkling; "it's as certain as you are lifting that glass of port to your mouth. Such an opening! Old Timbs is a clever fellow, but no enterprise, sir. Now, I have not seen only the big premises yesterday he said to me: 'Mahon,' says he, 'you're a clever fellow. How is it you're come down in the world?' 'Faith I never could tell,' says I. 'Luck was against me somehow, though I was an enterprising fellow.' 'Ah!' says he: 'enterprising! just so. I never was enterprising. Now, I suppose if I took you as a partner you would make my business spin prettily?' So you see the old chap has some thoughts of it. I am not given to fancy things, you know, but it looks like it; and if our friend Tulloch here was inclined to advance the capital—"

"Shall we call?" said I, hastily interrupting the conversation at this dangerous point.

Then the multifarious bottles and glasses were cleared away, and Kate quietly put all things in order, and placed a basket of flowers once more in the centre of the table, and then the piano was opened, and the girls sang simple old duets and sweet ballads, until Tulloch was in raptures, while I played backgammon with Mahon, and so the hour for parting came too soon.

Our adieux over, we strolled along, cigar in mouth.

"I fancy you live rather fast, Longmore," said Tulloch, gloomily.

"I? Far from it. I am as careful a fellow as ever lived. Why, Kate Mahon calls me a screw, and I am always preaching prudence to her father."

"Well, he seems prudent enough—at least his daughter is. What a wife that girl would make! I'll gift her to choose some of my furniture."

The next time I saw Tulloch he was in a thoughtful mood.

"We had a great spread at the Mortimers'. Such a lot of dishes and wine! Why, a dinner like that must cost a fortune."

"Yes; I dare say it does. Yet I'll wager a round sum you would not like our little scramble at the Mahons' much better."

"I believe you!" said Tulloch, emphatically. "Why, I ate twice as much there; but—I met Miss Goldfrap. Indeed, I took her down to dinner. She is a fine girl—a tall, fair, easy-looking creature! and, Longmore, she has a hundred thousand! There is a catch!"

"Why don't you go in and win a hundred thousand?" I returned, carelessly.

"Well, I dare say I could, if I liked; but, somehow, I can not help fancying Kate Mahon. I was always a fool about a pretty face. Come now, you are in all the secrets. What tin will the old fellow leave?"

"An old coffee-pot probably, not a jot more."

"What! do you mean to say those girls are unprovided for?"

"Yes; utterly."

"What an infernal shame!" was the energetic reply. "What a reckless old scamp that Mahon must be!" he continued, with some heat, as though responsible himself. "And I declare I never so much accepted his invitation to dinner if I had known all this!"

Tulloch now got into a sort of easy way of dropping in at the Mahons' and taking a cup of tea; and it was wonderful, considering the distance from his lodgings, how often he seemed to pass his evenings there. I know, whenever I could snatch an hour or two to pass there, I always found him installed—perfectly at home, and a certain look Ellie lallied each other, and I was usually handed over for backgammon to the pups.

Matters went on thus for some months. Could Kate care for this man, whose whole exterior was a complete though unintentional deception? He had sound health, capital intellect, and a certain quiet earnestness which laid him peculiarly open to the depths of passion.

Then the superiority of his pecuniary position gave him a delicious sense of pre-eminence over those who must be patronize him, mixed with the extreme attraction Mahon's lovely daughters naturally offered: while they, inexperienced and full of all generous tenderness, gave him credit for the truth of sympathy, which led him to desert his gayer friends for that humble house.

Kate was about even to look with admiration at his tall stately form and bold black eyes, at least I thought so! Why had I let her glide into that self-asserted beautiful tone of interference? Yet, was it not better so? I was not, to use a favorite phrase, "in a position to marry," and how could I govern of dragging my sweet cousin into ever-deeper troubles than she had already to contend with?

It happened that we both (Tulloch and myself) met one Saturday evening, about three weeks after the little dinner above described, and, to our surprise, found Mahon absent.

"Where is Kate?" was our unanimous exclamation.

"Gone to dine with Timbs; no less," returned the father, laughing heartily. "You know, he is educating her; he thinks she hasn't been properly developed, so he lends her books. Well, the last she has seen reading. Elsie dear? Abercrombie's Intellectual Powers? More power to him. And then, when the old fellow thinks she has sufficiently 'marked, learned, and inwardly digested it,' he sends for her, and the devil a thing have they for dinner, beyond the feast of reason and the flow of soul, but two chops. O Lord! To think of scraping up a hundred thousand dollars, saving your youth and manhood putting it together, to dine on a chop every day in a room without a carpet, when you are on the shady side of sixty! And, upon my life, the only glimpse of comfort the old sinner has, so he sends for her now and again, to teach her how to live. Have a glass, my lads!" added the host, laughing genially out of his superior heart-wisdom. "As if she couldn't teach a dozen like him, if they were not too old to learn."

"But," said Tulloch, a little bewildered by the train of ideas this speech suggested, "Mr. Timbs is a man of high standing in his way, a man of substantial wealth."

"Substantial wealth!" repeated Mahon, in immense mirth with the idea of Timbs's substantial money, and as though he were somewhat scandalized by Mahon's half-contemptuous mention. "I have told the man on a direction would float any company."

"May be so; he ought to have something, for it's a poor life to be always rolled up like a mummy in parchment."

Kate came in before we left. She looked a little weary.

Tulloch became, almost imperceptibly, less impressed with Kate than formerly. He even extended to the fact that the kindly Bohemianism of the party did not suit his substantial position.

Kate observed that she did not think the renowned Timbs was well, or in his usual spirits. "Poor old man!" she added, "I feel sorry for him."

Tulloch seemed uneasy at this. How was it that persons earning their daily bread with uncertainty should look down upon and compassionate a millionaire like Timbs?

Then Kate sat down to the piano, and sang us some Scotch and Irish ballads with simple pathos, and in just the rich sweet voice you would expect from her.

We returned in an omnibus that night as usual, and before we had proceeded half-way, a little elderly pale foreign-looking woman, who sat upon the opposite side from us, suddenly discovered that she had lost her purse. She was respectably dressed, in well-preserved but faded black, and it was pitiable to see the trembling anxiety with which she shook herself and disturbed every one.

"Mais bon Dieu! I had it when I got in the omnibus." A frantic plunge into her pocket. "Ah! ciel! would these gentlemen be good enough to move?"

I rose, so did Tulloch, but grumblingly. "I suppose she thinks we picked her pocket," he muttered.

"Hush!" said I, for the poor soul, seeing that it was indeed gone, sank down on the seat and covered her face, with such sincere and genuine emotion, that I could not but feel touched.

"But I have not money to paysany fare," she exclaimed, removing her hands from her face, which looked ghastly.

Feeling considerably ashamed of myself, I said, "Do not let that distress you: I shall be very happy to pay it: I hope you did not lose much."

"No, not much, yet all to me! Thank you, Sir, you do me a great service."

When she got out I very readily paid the fare to the driver.

"Ah, you are green!" said Tulloch, with a sneer, as we stood in the street. "I never saw a more regular flat."

"I do not agree with you," I returned, rather warmly: "at any rate, if a 'do,' not a very expensive one."

"A dime's a dime," said Tulloch, "and if she had had any thing in her purse she would have taken better care of it."

"Well, I don't begrudge my dime. Good-night."

We—that is, Kate and I—went the next day but one after that to hear the music at the Park. There was the usual crowd, however, we were lazily amused watching the motley mass of color and variety of costume, while many on an easy turn prefer admiringly on my beautiful companion. Suddenly I exclaimed, "Why, there's Tulloch, and is very pretty girl with him!"

"Where?" cried Kate, eagerly.

I pointed them out, and, as I looked in her speaking face, could not help fancying her countenance changed and her color paled.

The brilliant Tulloch walked was above middle height and plump, not to say fat. She had fair round, fresh-colored face, and a pair of baby blue eyes: a pleasant smile set upon her countenance, and she looked the very picture of material ease and comfort. She was richly and becomingly dressed, and there is a good article, and her whole appearance was in perfect accordance with the requirements of conventionality.

Tulloch seemed to pay assiduous court to her, and the lady seemed well pleased.

"Does you know who it is?" said Kate.

"No."

"Why, it is Miss Goldfrap, the heiress."

"Is it indeed?"

We watched them take several turns; they were evidently accompanied by a large and brilliant party. As they passed us for the third or fourth time Tulloch's eye caught Kate's; he looked a little confused, and merely bowed his recognition.

Kate was (a little) pale.

"Mr. Tulloch is on his good behavior to-day," she said; "he must not acknowledge his country cousins."

I laughed somewhat uneasily, for I felt unspeakably vexed. Here had this fellow been delighting in the cordial delight of those friendly evenings with poor old Mahon and his daughters, and doing his best to please Kate he was in love with her, and now, at the first glimpse of a richer prize, he was off. It was too bad! And Kate—I could not make her out. Could she care for him? It was hard to say. The most unattractive man at other times acquires a wonderful interest in the eyes of a woman who he loves her.

"It is time to go home, Harry," said Kate, "and will you come in and have tea? Papa will be home about seven, and you do not mind struggling it with us?"

"No, certainly not, and I have a book here for Ellie which I want to talk to her about. By-the-way, how does your education get on with Timbs?"

"Oh, very well indeed; he is very good to me in his queer way, and has been ever since I went to him so bdlly—with no introduction beyond his having been papa's correspondent long ago—and asked him to give my father work. How wonderfully we have got on since we came here, and what a friend you have been, dear cousin!" She pressed my arm so tenderly to her side, looking up into my face. Oh, what a tender look of gratitude! What rich and pleasure it gave me to look at her, but only as a useful old friend.

As we passed through the less frequented part of the Park we met Tulloch returning alone. He greeted Kate with rather forced cordiality, and said he was coming to look for her. She received him kindly enough, and we strolled on together. As we approached the further gate a lady in rusty black came in from one of the sidewalks, and went slowly along in front of us. It was a small unfashionable figure, and yet the gait and air were refined, and the aspect was that of a gentlewoman.

"How like that person before us is to our old French governess, Madame la Rose: so like," exclaimed Kate, "it purports me back many times to look at her! It must be ten years since we parted. Do you remember her, Cousin Harry? She left when we broke up, and went abroad. How kind and good she used to be!"

Here the person in question sat down wearily on a bench, and as we drew near Kate cried aloud, "It is Madame la Rose! Dear Madame, don't you remember Kate?" And they were embracing and half crying the next moment.

Tulloch's brow darkened, and he looked greatly annoyed. "I tell you, Kate, this would look very queer if any one we knew came by; do stop this nonsense," he said, rudely and peremptorily.

She raised her head indignantly. "Then leave us if you are ashamed," she said; "you are not wanted here!"

Tulloch turned pale with anger. He thought his money entitled him to the tenderest considerations. "Kate, you shall repent this. I am going."

"Don't be offended," I said, laughing; "you began it; Kate is not in earnest."

"I don't know that. But I warn you, Longmore, take care of that woman: she is an impostor. I thought so the night before last; I am certain of it now."

"We will see," I returned; for I also had recognized the stranger to be the poor woman who lost her purse.

Tulloch walked off, and I turned to Kate, who was now seated by her ex-governess, tenderly holding her trembling hand and looking into her face with those sad pretty eyes, whose eyes like wells of kindliness wherein weary hearts might steep themselves and be refreshed.

"Oh, it is the good God who has guided you to me," the poor Frenchwoman was saying, "and I was in despair! I had spent every penny, and paid my last week's lodging; for the day before yesterday, returning from an unsuccessful attempt to get an engagement, some one picked my purse. But for a kind gentleman I could not even have paid my fare. And to-day I strove to find some one in the streets to help me, but in vain, and my courage is gone. I have been ill too."

"Let me speak to you, Cousin Harry," said Kate, drawing me aside. "I know this poor dear thing, and I have not a penny to spare. Had I not better take her home? Ellie and I have a large room, and she can sleep there, and we can help her to pupils."

"My dear girl, you have enough to do to provide for your own wants. This would be an imprudence. You do not know what a burden you may bring yourself."

"I know it is imprudent; but what can I do? She is an eminently self-helpful woman. I can not desert her after sore distress. Will you ask for help if I did? No, Cousin Harry; there is no choice."

"Come with me, dear old friend," she said, again taking Madame la Rose's hand, "come! We are poor enough; but what we have we will share with you till you get better. Ah, you know, you know what pleasure it will give us to have you for a guest. Take my arm; it is not far."

"Ah, mon Dieu! I am not to know from children," cried the delighted Frenchwoman. "I must go with them; yet will I pay them." And so they went, with strength and confidence amidst your kind faces and familiar voices."

"Well, I," said I, "of madame will let me assist her—for I see she is a good deal shaken—we shall reach your abode all the sooner, Kate."

"Ah," murmured Madame la Rose, "it is the gentleman who so kindly assisted me the other evening! Sir, you have brought me good fortune."

How Madame la Rose and your fellow Timbs had known and treated her as if she were a princess, and talked of all the obligations he was under to her, and how he would be the making of a widely-puneh (which was abomination to her French palate), and how he gloried in her reminiscences of his past grandeur, and how proud he was prospects of future splendor, would take a far more eloquent pen than this poor pen of mine to describe.

I dare say it was all very magnificent. Never theless, if the recording angel's office be not abolished in these hard times, the night's work was a good deal to his glorious volume.

Tulloch was in a sad state about this proceeding of Kate's. "I wish to Heaven you had put down I don't know how many per cent. through so flagrant and reckless an act.

"I am afraid those people are incorrigible. In short, poverty only teaches extravagance and bad habits. I feel it due to myself to draw out of that concern as fast as I can. Timbs is a considerable open-hearted sort of fellow, and I feel I must resign my natural inclinations and try to be consistent. I shall have liked well enough to have given that old woman a dime the other night; but you see it would have been an infringement of the principle, eh?"

"Very likely," said I.

"Now I hope you are among a substantial lot of people like the Grimeses and that set, you feel safe. There will be no demands made upon you, no—"

A knock at the door interrupted him.

"Come in!" said I. And enter Mahon and Ellie, looking like a wild rose, in a fresh blue muslin, a new bonnet, and white ribbons.

"Come to pay you a visit, Harry, my boy. Saturday is Ellie's holiday, and poor Timbs is so ill that he can't spare her to work in the office now, so we came off early. And how are you, Mr. Tulloch? Faith, you have been a long time coming to see your friends since being with yourself? You ought to come over of an evening, as you used. We have a snug supper and pleasant evening with us, a French lady, a trifle come down in the world, like myself, but knows life well."

Poor Mahon was oblivious of the fact that Tulloch knew the whole circumstance, and that the most extended knowledge of life was of small value in his eyes if not founded on a solid basis of credit at your banker's.

"Oh, papa! Mr. Tulloch knows all about it," said Ellie, with a wicked twinkle in her eye. "He knows what a misfortune poor maddine met with, and as she wants all sorts of things we can not get her, I am going to try a subscription for her. Now, I know you are rich and generous, Mr. Tulloch, so I shall begin with you! Come! What shall I put you down for?"

Tulloch looked very black. "I seldom subscribe except to well-known charities," he began.

"Well known! and is not this well known?" cried Ellie. "Come, I'll put you off with ten dollars, in consideration of not appearing in print. Come, it is cheap, you know; because if Goldfrap and Co. were going to do a thing of the kind you would have to give fifty."

"Ah!" cried Mahon, "do not limit him, mayhe he'll like to give more. Why unknown."

We all (except Tulloch) laughed heartily.

"Well," said Tulloch, rising, "I was going over to-day to see Timbs, therefore, for I am off to Boston for a week or two."

"Oh, good gracious! Give me the ten dollars and I'll tell Kate you are a darling!"

Tulloch resigned himself, and produced the amount.

"Give my love to Kate. I'll come and see her as soon as I return. And, Mr. Mahon, excuse me, but get rid of that Frenchwoman as soon as you can. Why should you burden yourself with her?"

"Burden! Sure it's a pleasure. And the girl find her a governess's place."

So Tulloch departed, and I could not say whether he left much regret for that departure behind him, for in a day or two he was entirely expelled and all absent a month.

On my return I found two letters awaiting me. The first was from Ellie. She informed me that they were going on very tranquilly, and that Madame la Rose was very kind, and capable of taking a room in the same house, so as to board with them.

"Mr. Timbs is dead, you will be sorry to hear," she continued, "and left a will in favor of poor Kate and grand anticipation. We have never seen or heard any thing of Mr. Tulloch since the day I extracted the ten dollars from him. Do you think he died of the operation? Do come out and see us soon. I think Kate looks ill, and is not at all content as she used to be. She sends her love—does she not?—to dear Cousin Harry.

Ever yours, ELLIE M.

P.S.—An old client of Timbs's told papa that you were to be married soon to a lady with quantities of money, the daughter of an eminent personage. I hope it is not true. What sinks people will do for cash!"

How could so absurd an account get into circulation? And how could Kate—that is Ellie—believe it?

The other letter was from Tulloch, and announced his engagement to Miss Goldfrap:

"I quite forgot to say that you would see the Mahons and break this matter to Kate. I do not mind confiding to you that the poor girl was extremely partial to me; nor was I without an affection for her. Indeed, I think it a mercy of what was due to myself would have induced me to do so, but when all circumstances are to be paid out of pocket it makes a serious difference. Be sure you say how warmly I admire her, and add any thing else that would soothe her feelings which suggests itself."

Confound the coxcomb! To dare to write thus of my peerless Kate! But most he not have had good reason to be sure of his conduct, or he would not? Oh, idiot that he was, to weigh a few thousands against the love of a queen! Well, it is ill wind that blows no one good; she may turn to me yet. And really this last circuit shows me a very fine specimen of man. In four or five years at this rate, I may venture—

But my further speculations were cut short by the entrance of Kate, pale and wan as the wildest excitement, with a letter in his hand.

"Longmore, my dear fellow, here's great news: read that. Now that poor fellow Timbs has left my darling Katie his residuary legates. Residuary no less! And faith they say he has left a bank of money: but as he died worth so many, there dwells at lawyers will cheat the poor girl of the half of it. We got the letter this morning, so I came to you directly. Kate is with your friend Ellie—such a kit and thin, sunshine and storm! Now go to these people, Plackett and Mash, and inquire about it, and find out if we can touch the cash, and come back and dine, and I'll go and order in a nice little thing, with a bottle of Port and Champagne too, faith!"

The letter in question was from a well-known firm, to whom the deceased, and who permitted me to peruse a copy of the will. It proved, that after large bequests to charities, to distant relatives, to old servants, and two residue came by right of cousin—so large as even to surpass the fortune of Miss Goldfrap. After a few formalities she would be able to take possession.

A few weeks later, and I was explaining and advising with Kate in a long tête-à-tête luncheon. After listening to her queries and sensible projects respecting her father and sister, I approached a subject we had hitherto avoided.

"Have you Tulloch will be when he finds he is lost you a. I got less money with Miss Goldfrap!"

"Why? I am glad."

"Because—because—but I can not jest, dear Kate, about what may have cost you even a passing grief. Can you forgive me if you?"

"What are you talking of?' she exclaimed, indignantly. "Why, you must know that Mr. Tulloch was a man for whom without attraction for me I was not at all the sort of man I could fall in love with." Meeting my eye, she blushed and beat her fingers on the glorious hair fell over her cheek and had to be shaken back again.

"And you do not suppose you could fall in love with?" I asked, my heart beating wildly. "What sort of man could you fall in love with, Kate?"

She looked down demurely as well as prudent, she said, in a low tone, clasping her hands together, "one who can do long and true service to a friend, as though it were a personal gratification; one who is brave enough to give his arm to a poor forlorn shabby stranger in the gayest gathering-place in New York?"

"Kate—beloved Kate!" I threw myself at her feet.

"No! Not there, trust, kindest; but in my arms! to my heart!" said Kate.

HUMOR OF THE DAY.

WHY is a candle-maker the worst and most unfortunate of men?—Because all his trade is in the wicks and all his wicks are brought to light.

WHAT color did the wind and waves represent the last storm as set in?—Because the waves rose, the winds blew.

A correspondent in Illinois sends the following: In Pontiac, Wisconsin, the flags were all flying to the breeze in honor to the second inauguration of President Lincoln. It being the 4th of March. A stranger in town, meeting one of the young ladies, asked her the meaning of so much display. "Why," said she, "they've hired the man what's carried on the war for four years longer."

A young lady was recently cured of palpitation of the heart, by a young doctor, in the most natural way imaginable. She had long felt her hands in the left arm round her waist, and whispered something in her ear.

WHY can not two bishops row in the same boat?—Because one may use a diocese.

Alfonso Lombardi, a celebrated sculptor of the Emperor Charles V., was a great coxcomb. He got punished one day by a lady of Bologna, to whom he took it into his head to make love in a foppish manner. She was his partner at a ball, in the midst of which he turned to her, and, bowing a profound sigh, said, as he looked her in the face with what he thought ineffable sweetness in his eyes, and we may suppose some fantastic and writhing gesture, "If 'tis not love I feel, pray what is it?" "Perhaps," said the young lady, "something bites you."

A ship that is to be pitched by the sea should be thoroughly caulked before she goes into it.

A long bullet cruiser publishes the subjoined advertisement: "Wanted, a thin man, who is willing to undergo hard collecting, to crawl through keyholes and find debtors who are not to be found at home. Salary, nothing the first year, to be doubled each year after."

TWO sparks from London, while enjoying themselves among the theaters in a neighboring village, a fascinating sleeping-draught reading upon the top of a hill. They encountered him in a drowsy state. "You have a fine view here: you will see a great way," "Oh aye, on aye, a farry great way on a clear day—three counties and Scotland, I reckon," quoth that, "said Donald. "Ah! how's that?" "Oo, just that will tak aught saye, wi' the spy-glass, ye ken."

SAMSO ON WOMAN.—Do not pay rail against women as much as day like, day can't set me up against dem. I tink dem is de best ting dat ever was born—dat is, a good—a natural—but in dance—de fust in le-ocean mbon—ah! de fast, but, by de by, when dey get old, dey would no poor debils do without dem? Let us be born as little, a ugly, and as stupid as we you please, add a woman's arm are open to receib us. She it am who gifts us our fust look of castor-ile, she it am who cures our hoopin'-cough and cushers up our foots and toes in long flannel petticoats: and by-and-by when, as we grow up, she find a-ear-bushes with apples so we starts to stock, and kicks us out when we tease her.

SAYS I to S——, "If I marry the girl I am most interested in at the present time, why will my wife be the first one I shall be thinking of?" "Why, of course."

A little nine-year-old was going to a little party the other evening, and his mother was taking a last look to see that he was all right, when she said, "Now, Johnny, Charlie; don't be boisterous." He stood in the doorway, and said, "No, I'll be politerous," shut the door and ran off to his party.

A Quaker having married for his wife a member of the Episcopal persuasion, was asked, after the ceremony, by the clergyman for his fee, which he said was a crown. The Quaker replied, "Friend, I have given thee no ring, and as shown any text in Scripture which proved the fees were a crown." "Friend," replied the clergyman, upon which he by turned in the fifth chapter of Proverbs, verse six, where it is said, "A virtuous woman is a crown to her husband." "Thou art right," replied the Quaker, "in thy assertion: therefore take one of mine here is thy money which thou hast well and truly earned."

ANECDOTE OF RUSSELL.—Two cordiliake objected to this great master of the pencil, that in one of his pieces he had put a ruff in the costume peculiar to the time of Queen Sonn Peut. "I do not astonished at that, my lords: I have painted them as they are in heaven, thinking with shame at seeing the church so badly governed."

It happened that Swift, having been dining at some little distance from the parsonage, his attendant was returning home on horseback, in the evening, which was pretty dark. As he passed the rectory he espied a village lad in the horse at a stoo. Unwilling to run the risk of leaving the animal behind, he called to the lad through the window, and at one Kelly's, the blacksmith of the village, where, having called for ale, he asked him if he could shoe a horse with a candle. "No," replied the son of Vulcan; "but I can shoe a horse without."

If a lady is asked how many rings she has, she can say with truth that there's no end to them.

A plaintiff, in stating his case before the provost of a certain borough, said that the second witness on the part of the party who was dead, regularly described him as the deceased. Irritated by the liberality of a word which he did not understand, the provost exclaimed, "What's the use of talking to me about your dead? Do you take me for a fiend? came ye bring the man here and let him speak for himself?" "The defendant's dead, my lord," added the weaver. "Oh! that alters the case," gravely observed the provost, and proceeded.

BUNTAN'S SARCASM.—A Quaker called upon Bunyan in jail one day, with whom he professed to be a message from the Lord. "Ah!" said Bunyan, looking for the last time at the jails of England, I am glad to have found thee at last." "Friend," said the Quaker, "what dost thou mean?" "you would not have needed to take so much trouble to find me out, for for three years that I have been in Bedford jail thou seven years past."

A TIGHT FIT.—Intoxication.

A CANDID PREACHER.—A clergyman one Sunday was complaining bitterly of the fickleness of his friends since he had been delivering. "South himself" (alluding to the celebrated divine of that name), exclaimed a Scotch woman, "never preached a better." "You are right," replied the honest preacher, "it was the very best he ever did preach."

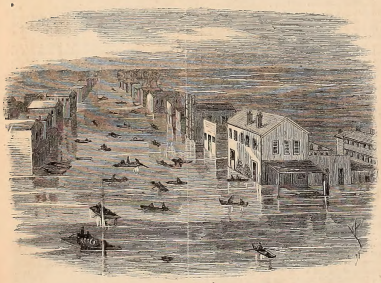
A SEVERE LUNATIC.—A lunatic, confined in an asylum for life, was asked, not long since, by a visitor, interrogated, "By a dispute. The world said I was mad, and I said the world was mad, and we could not agree it quieted me."

A SCOTCHMAN'S TESTACHE.—On one occasion during a debate in the House of Commons, one of the members of the Scotch bench rose to speak in favor of a measure of a Scotch County, and was informed that he could not be heard. "I never before," said the M.P., "knew a Scotchman quiet his place." "Except," added a friend near him, "except his native place."

DO YOU GIVE IT UP!

WHY is law like a flight of rockets?

Because there is every expense of powder, the cases are well got up, the reports are excellent, but the sticks (talents) are sure to come to the ground.

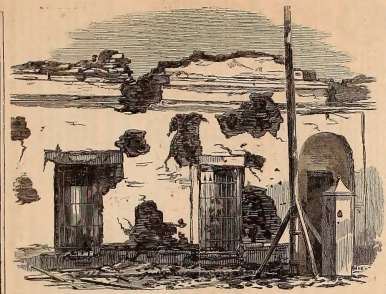


WHY is a race-horse like a lollypop?

The more you lick it the further it goes.

SCENES IN THE RECENT DISASTROUS FRESHETS.

THE FLOOD IN ROCHESTER—VIEW OF THE SOUTH SIDE OF BUFFALO STREET.
[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BACON & TAYLOR, ROCHESTER.]



FLOOD IN MOUND CITY, ILLINOIS—A STREET SCENE.
[SKETCHED BY ADAM ROSE.]

"HAPPY HOLLOW," NEAR MOUND CITY, ILLINOIS.
[SKETCHED BY ADAM ROSE.]

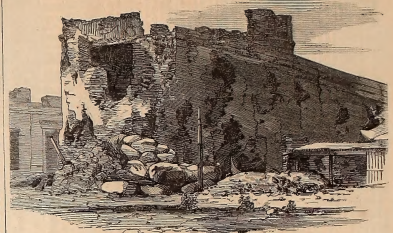
THE FLOOD IN ROCHESTER—VIEW OF ANDREW STREET BRIDGE.
[PHOTOGRAPHED BY J. W. MASER, ROCHESTER.]

LEANDRO GOMEZ'S HEAD-QUARTERS, PAYSANDU.

THE WAR IN SOUTH AMERICA.

NOTWITHSTANDING the intensity of interest with which we await the developments of our own civil war, we can not be indifferent to the more distant conflict in which Brazil is engaged against the South American Republics of Paraguay and Uruguay. The cause of this will be best understood by a brief retrospect of the last two years. During that time Uruguay, which touches the southern border of Brazil, and is wedged in, as it were, between her and the Argentine Republic, has been distracted by rebellion. The revolution, headed by Flores, has been gaining headway, the government of Uruguay being too weak to oppose an adequate resistance. Paraguay, which is just north of Uruguay, has awaited with interest the development of the revolution, throwing her influence against Flores and his party. Brazil, whose government is imperial, hoped for the destruction of the Republic. She complained that her citizens were imperilled by the situation in Uruguay, and threatened interference. Thereupon President Lopez, of Paraguay, declared to the Brazilian government that he should consider the invasion of Uruguay by Brazilian troops a cause of war.

Brazil, however, persisted in her interference. On the 16th of October, 1864, she blockaded the ports of Uruguay. One of those most strictly blockaded was Paysandú. On the 6th of December the Brazilian squadron co-operated with the army of Flores in an attack upon this town. During that day seven hundred bombs were thrown into the place from four Brazilian gun-boats, while Flores with three thousand men attacked by land. The town was defended by Leandro Gomez most gallantly. Gomez had in his command a force not quite one-third as strong as that engaged in the attack.



LEANDRO GOMEZ.

Paysandu resisted every open attack, but the rebels and invaders ultimately succeeded in taking the place. Paysandu was formerly a very thriving town on the River Uruguay; it is now, however, little better than a heap of ruins, and in the possession of the Brazilians. Leandro Gomez was murdered by the victors, and his body shamefully mutilated. We give on this page some illustrations, engraved from photographs, representing the ruins of Paysandú. One of these represents the Comendadencia Militar, or Gomez's head-quarters.

Only the front wall is standing, and it is so battered by cannon-shot that we can only recognize it was once a house by the grated windows.

Another represents the Turret Fort, whence the heroic garrison made its last stand. This work was almost entirely destroyed.

THE TURRET FORT, PAYSANDU.

From Paysandú it is expected that Flores and his Brazilian Allies will move down the river and lay siege to Montevideo, the capital of Uruguay, situated on the Rio de la Plata. We give below a view of this place. It is situated on a gentle elevation, at the extremity of a small peninsula.

MONTEVIDEO, THE CAPITAL OF URUGUAY, SOUTH AMERICA.

DO NOT WASTE YOUR MONEY buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOOD PENS, which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the BEST IN THE WORLD.

Avoid the shameless Upstarts, whose lack of bradfis compels them to attempt IMITATION, even to the advertisement. If you want the full value of your money, call on A. MORTON, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

The Latest and Greatest.

SOUVENIR GROUPS.—11 Union Martyrs; 7 Generals of Illustration; 11 Cavalry Officers and Soldiers; 11 Naval Heroes; 7 Generals of Army of Potomac; 14 Confederate Dead; 7 Political Leaders of the S. W.; 7 most prominent Editors; 8 Artists; 9 of Tom Thumb and Wife, Commodore Nutt and Minnie; 9 Major Pauline Cushman and 2 T. Barnum; 9 Opera; 35 Actresses; 14 French Dancing-Girls. Price (including cards), of the 12-different group for $3. W. C. WEMYSS, 535 Broadway, N. Y. N. B.—Books, pictures, albums, &c. Send stamp for mammoth catalogues.

DR. B. C. PERRY, DERMATOLOGIST,

No. 49 Bond Street, New York.

Treats successfully all diseases of the scalp, face of hair, and prurient disorders. Also, removes superfluous hair, moles and other discolorations from the face, without injury to the texture or color of the skin. Consultation free.

For particulars, inclose stamp for circular.

A Pocket Lantern

Only weighs 7 oz., filled, and gives as much light as the ordinary 12-inch lantern. MAY BE ATTACHED TO THE HAT AND SO OR WAIST-BELT WHILE IN USE. Is found very useful for every purpose, as a substitute for the old Quincy hand-lantern. Price $1. Sent free by express or mail for $1.

BERENDSOHN BROTHERS,

DEALERS IN HOUSE-FURNISHING GOODS, HARDWARE, AND PATENT ARTICLES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

OUR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES will be mailed free on application. Prompt attention and a liberal discount to the trade. 16 Maiden Lane, and 15 Nassau Street, N. Y.

MERWIN & BRAY FIRE-ARMS CO.'S Belt and Pocket Size Cartridge Revolvers.

The Self Cocking carries a ball 42-100 in. in diameter (same as Colt's), and can be used with either Kerr's or Colt's cartridges. The Pocket size weighs 1 lb. and carries a ball 36-100 calibre (same as Colt's) and cartridges.

These Pistols are loaded and discharged with only four motions—a degree of quickness never yet attained by any other arm. A full round may be loaded and discharged in thirty seconds. These arms have been adopted and issued by the U. S. Revenue Service. Testimonials of their efficiency are daily received from the army and navy officers from civilians. Printed circulars (with illustrated cuts), naming prices, sent by mail when requested.

MERWIN & BRAY are also proprietors of the Ballard Breech-Loading Rifle and Carbine. These arms need no comment. Their high character for Military and Sporting purposes is so well established that the public only need to know where they may be purchased. These Rifles were used by Captain Bodine and his Pilot on the famous expedition to the Pacific under orders of the U. S. Government. The General Government and the State of Kentucky have about Twenty Thousand (20,000) now in active field service, of which the highest testimonials are received.

Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers generally.

Address orders to MERWIN & BRAY,
No. 262 Broadway, New York.

P.S.—IMPORTANT.—The above Rifles can be used with either fixed or loose ammunition.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES? Any One can inforce them to grow heavily in six weeks upon a perfectly smooth face without stain or injury to the skin. Price, by mail to any part of the country, to any address, on receipt of order. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 309 Nassau Street, N. Y.

PHILADELPHIA AND BALTIMORE CONSOLIDATED PETROLEUM & MINING COMPANY.

OFFICE, 70 BROAD STREET, NEW YORK.

Capital Stock, $1,200,000, divided into 240,000 shares, at par value of $5 per Share. Subscription price for a limited number only of shares remaining $3 per share, without any further call or assessment on the Shareholders.

Lands and thirteen wells on Oil Creek, Cherry Run, Cherry Tree, Pithole, Bennett's Bend, Allegheny River, Oil Creek, Oil Creek, Sugar Creek, Elk Creek, &c., embracing 52 different tracts.

Ten new wells being bored down 500 to 600 feet, with splendid appearances of extensive yields of oil.

Rocks will shortly close, there being only a small number of shares remaining. Prospectus, maps, and full information at WISHART & CO.'S PETROLEUM EXCHANGE, No. 71 Broadway, New York.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union forces, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 65 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

Great Closing Sale!!

$650,000 WORTH of Watches, Chains, and Fine Jewelry, to be sold at auction, all to be sold by ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send for our Gift Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1. Then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any set of Jewelry on our list for One Dollar, and in no case can they get less than a Dollar's worth, as there are no blanks. Six Certificates will be sent for $1, Thirteen for $2, Thirty-five for $5, One Hundred for $12. Great inducements offered those who act as Agents. Catalogues containing full lists and particulars mailed free. Address

JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,
255 River Street, Troy, N. Y.
P.O., Drawer 12.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELRY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELRY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENT'S PINS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, ETC.,

Worth $500,000,

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars of terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
598 Broadway, New York.

SOMETHING NEW for the ARMY.

Genuine Enameled Gold Corps Rings.

Each ring is made of 18 k. Solid Gold and Ring for either Division or Corps in the Army, and for $5 I will send an extra size, extra style. This is a splendid Ring for Officers or Soldiers. (Send the size of the finger.) Also, I will send, as sample, on receipt of $1 50, a Gold Silver Badge (Coin Silver), appropriate for either Corps or Division, Cavalry, Artillery, Infantry, Engineer, or Signal Corps Departments of the Army, with your name, regiment, and company name engraved in neat letters—and for $2 I will send a Solid Gold Masonic Pin. Agents wanted every where. Send for Illustrated Circular.

B. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler,
No. 823 Broadway, N. Y.

Itch! Itch! Itch!

SCRATCH! SCRATCH! SCRATCH!

WHEATON'S OINTMENT

WILL CURE THE ITCH IN 48 HOURS.

Also cures SALT RHEUM, LEPROSY, CHILBLAINS, and all Cutaneous Diseases. Prepared by Druggist. For sale by all Druggists.

By sending 60 cents to WEEKS & POTTER, Sole Agents, 170 Washington St., Boston, it will be forwarded to any part of the country, by return mail, postage free.

NEW SONGS OF THE WAR.

THE PARTING KISS AT THE DOOR. 25.
WHEN YOU AND I WERE SOLDIERS. 25.
MY WIFE AND CHILD OF THE STARS AND STRIPES. Hews. 25.
BABY SLEEP, SHALL-OWS GATHER. Words and Music. By Geo. F. Root. 30. CEAD MILE FEALTHE. (A Hundred Thousand Welcomes.) Brown. 30. THE BOY IN BLUE BE OVER. By the Author of "Tenting on the Old Camp Ground." 30. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION

NEW YORK GIFT ASSOCIATION,

OFFICE, 37 PARK ROW, NEW YORK.

CASH

12 Elegant Rosew'd Pianos, worth from $250 to $500 00
15 Melodeons, Rosewood Cases ..... 125 00 to 225 00
20 Silver Watches ..... 50 00 to 100 00
100 Silver Revolving Patent Castors ..... 15 00 to 40 00
100 Silver Cups and Pitchers ..... 15 00 to 35 00
500 Sets of Silver Tea and Table Spoons ..... 15 00 to 30 00
500 Gold Hunting Watches ..... 50 00 to 150 00
150 Diamond Rings ..... 50 00 to 200 00
200 Gold Vest Chains ..... 20 00 to 50 00
300 Ladies' Gold Watches ..... 40 00 to 85 00
500 Gold Pens ..... 10 00 to 50 00

Diamond Pins, Gold Bracelets, Coral, Florentine Muzzle, Lava, and Cameo Jewelry, Gold Thimbles, Silver Pencil and Silver Extension Holders, Sleeve Buttons, Sets of Studs, Neck Chains, Vest Chains, Plain and Chased Gold Rings, Gold Thimbles, Lockets, Silver Basket, and FINE JEWELRY of every description. Over 100 other articles and styles, valued at $500,000!

Each Gift will be sold without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you will receive.

Distribution is made in the following manner:

Ourreceipts naming each article and its VALUE, are put in SEALED ENVELOPES which are well mixed. One of these Envelopes, containing the Certificate or Order for a Present worth at least $100, will be sent to the Agent at our office, or sent by mail to any address, without regard to the receipt of $2 25. On receiving the Gift, he ascertains the purchaser will see what article it draws, and its value, which is at once made known. The party may then send $1, and receive the article named, or can choose any other one at the same price, from our list of the same value.

NO BLANKS—Every purchaser gets value.

The Profits arising with us must depend upon having prompt returns, and the article drawn will be immediately sent to any address by return mail or express. Entire satisfaction guaranteed in all cases Six Certificates for $1, Thirteen for $2, AGENTS WANTED. Send for Circular. Address

P. H. HENDERTON & CO.,
Box 5055, New York Post-Office.

PRICE $1 25.

THE SERGEANT'S MANUAL FOR THE

COMPANY, DETAIL, and SQUAD.

A neat pocket-book, bound in a water-proof flap cover, with pencil, and calendars for 1865-5-6-7. Size, 4½ by 2¾ inches. Contains the Articles of War, and Duties of Sergeants in the field, second, and third stages.

This Manual is equally adapted to the treatment of ASTHMA, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, and all affections of the LUNGS, LARYNX, and AIR-PASSAGES; while it greatly invigorates the enfeebled NERVOUS SYSTEM, and energizes the deranged DIGESTIVE and ASSIMILATIVE functions.

TESTIMONIALS from PASTORS or CHURCHES.

"Your Prescription saved my daughter's life, and saved me hundreds of dollars."—Rev. E. HUNTINGTON, Rensselaer, N. Y.

"We blest God for the benefit we have received from your Prepared Prescription."—Rev. P. FERGUSON, Bloomsburg, Pa.

"Every one who I have recommended it to has benefited much by its use."—Rev. C. D. JONES, Racine, Wis.

For Prescriptions, and particulars of many cases successfully treated, address

REV. CHARLES E. KING,
Station D, 115th Street, New York.

TO SMOKERS!

Style, Neatness. Comfort, Economy.

PATENT IMPROVED

RIDGEWOOD SMOKING-CASE!

ARCHER & PANCOAST,

Nos. 9, 11, 13, 15, and 17 Mercer Street, New York.

Sole Agents for the Cases and Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco.

Worth $500,000,

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars of terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
598 Broadway, New York.

SOMETHING NEW for the ARMY.

Genuine Enameled Gold Corps Rings.

Each ring is made of 18 k. Solid Gold and Ring for either Division or Corps in the Army, and for $5 I will send an extra size, extra style. This is a splendid Ring for Officers or Soldiers. (Send the size of the finger.) Also, I will send, as sample, on receipt of $1 50, a Gold Silver Badge (Coin Silver), appropriate for either Corps or Division, Cavalry, Artillery, Infantry, Engineer, or Signal Corps Departments of the Army, with your name, regiment, and company name engraved in neat letters—and for $2 I will send a Solid Gold Masonic Pin. Agents wanted every where. Send for Illustrated Circular.

B. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler,
No. 823 Broadway, N. Y.

Itch! Itch! Itch!

SCRATCH! SCRATCH! SCRATCH!

WHEATON'S OINTMENT

WILL CURE THE ITCH IN 48 HOURS.

Also cures SALT RHEUM, LEPROSY, CHILBLAINS, and all Cutaneous Diseases. Prepared by Druggist. For sale by all Druggists.

By sending 60 cents to WEEKS & POTTER, Sole Agents, 170 Washington St., Boston, it will be forwarded to any part of the country, by return mail, postage free.

NEW SONGS OF THE WAR.

THE PARTING KISS AT THE DOOR. 25.
WHEN YOU AND I WERE SOLDIERS. 25.
MY WIFE AND CHILD OF THE STARS AND STRIPES. Hews. 25. BABY SLEEP, SHALLOWS GATHER. Words and Music. By Geo. F. Root. 30. CEAD MILE FEALTHE. (A Hundred Thousand Welcomes.) Brown. 30. THE BOY IN BLUE BE OVER. By the Author of "Tenting on the Old Camp Ground." 30. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION

NEW YORK GIFT ASSOCIATION,

OFFICE, 37 PARK ROW, NEW YORK.

CASH

12 Elegant Rosew'd Pianos, worth from $250 to $500 00
15 Melodeons, Rosewood Cases ..... 125 00 to 225 00
20 Silver Watches ..... 50 00 to 100 00
100 Silver Revolving Patent Castors ..... 15 00 to 40 00
100 Silver Cups and Pitchers ..... 15 00 to 35 00
500 Sets of Silver Tea and Table Spoons ..... 15 00 to 30 00
500 Gold Hunting Watches ..... 50 00 to 150 00
150 Diamond Rings ..... 50 00 to 200 00
200 Gold Vest Chains ..... 20 00 to 50 00
300 Ladies' Gold Watches ..... 40 00 to 85 00
500 Gold Pens ..... 10 00 to 50 00

Diamond Pins, Gold Bracelets, Coral, Florentine Muzzle, Lava, and Cameo Jewelry, Gold Thimbles, Silver Pencil and Silver Extension Holders, Sleeve Buttons, Sets of Studs, Neck Chains, Vest Chains, Plain and Chased Gold Rings, Gold Thimbles, Lockets, Silver Basket, and FINE JEWELRY of every description. Over 100 other articles and styles, valued at $500,000!

Each Gift will be sold without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you will receive.

Distribution is made in the following manner:

Ourreceipts naming each article and its VALUE, are put in SEALED ENVELOPES which are well mixed. One of these Envelopes, containing the Certificate or Order for a Present worth at least $100, will be sent to the Agent at our office, or sent by mail to any address, without regard to the receipt of $2 25. On receiving the Gift, he ascertains the purchaser will see what article it draws, and its value, which is at once made known. The party may then send $1, and receive the article named, or can choose any other one at the same price, from our list of the same value.

NO BLANKS—Every purchaser gets value.

The Profits arising with us must depend upon having prompt returns, and the article drawn will be immediately sent to any address by return mail or express. Entire satisfaction guaranteed in all cases Six Certificates for $1, Thirteen for $2, AGENTS WANTED. Send for Circular. Address

P. H. HENDERTON & CO.,
Box 5055, New York Post-Office.

PRICE $1 25.

THE SERGEANT'S MANUAL FOR THE

COMPANY, DETAIL, and SQUAD.

A neat pocket-book, bound in a water-proof flap cover, with pencil, and calendars for 1865-5-6-7. Size, 4½ by 2¾ inches. Contains the Articles of War, and Duties of Sergeants in the field, second, and third stages.

This Manual is equally adapted to the treatment of ASTHMA, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, and all affections of the LUNGS, LARYNX, and AIR-PASSAGES; while it greatly invigorates the enfeebled NERVOUS SYSTEM, and energizes the deranged DIGESTIVE and ASSIMILATIVE functions.

TESTIMONIALS from PASTORS or CHURCHES.

"Your Prescription saved my daughter's life, and saved me hundreds of dollars."—Rev. E. HUNTINGTON, Rensselaer, N. Y.

"We blest God for the benefit we have received from your Prepared Prescription."—Rev. P. FERGUSON, Bloomsburg, Pa.

"Every one who I have recommended it to has benefited much by its use."—Rev. C. D. JONES, Racine, Wis.

For Prescriptions, and particulars of many cases successfully treated, address

REV. CHARLES E. KING,
Station D, 115th Street, New York.

GOLD PENS

AND

CASES.

Every Pen Warranted.

Read these prices of a few of our many styles:

A fine 10-carat Pen in Solid Silver Extension Holder:

Size No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 5.
$2 50.	$2 75.	$3 00.	$3 50.	$3 75.

10-carat Pens in Ebony Slide Holder:

Size No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 5.
$1 50.	$1 80.	$2 25.	$2 75.	$3 0

10-carat Pens with Rubber Reverse Holder:

Size No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 5.
$2 75.	$3 00.	$3 50.	$4 00.	$4 50.

12-carat Pens in Gold Plated Telescopic Extension Case.

The Best Pocket Pen Made, and Pencil ever made.

Size No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 5.
$3 50.	$3 75.	$4 00.	$4 50.	$4 00.

8-carat Pens, with Ebony Holders (in Morocco Cases), or in Silver Plated Extension Cases with Pencil:

Size No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 5.
$1 each,	$1 50 per doz.	$1 25, $12 do.	$1 50, $16 do.

14-carat Pens, with any of the above Holders, only $1 each.

Pens repointed for 50 cents each.

Fine Gold plating done by the gross or by each.

All other styles equally cheap.

Dealers and Pedlers will find agents or to purchase large quantities, should send for Circular.

$2nd All goods sent by Express, C. O. D.

Address R. KEUHN & CO.,
15 John Street, N. Y.

Printing-Presses for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 39x51. Price $3500.

Also one Adams Press, Bed 29x41. Price $1000.

Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

UPHAM'S PIMPLE BANISHER

Removes Pimples on the Face, Freckles, &c. It also relieves the skin and beautifies the complexion. No toilet is complete without it. Price 50 cents. Mailed to any address, for 75 cents, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE JAPANESE HAIR STAIN

Colors the Hair, Whiskers, and Mustache

a beautiful Black or Brown. It consists of only one preparation. Color will not fade or wash out. Only 50 cents a box. Mailed to any address, for 75 cents, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

ARCANA WATCH.

An Elegant Novelty in Watches.

The cases of this watch are an entirely new invention, composed of six different metals combined, rolled together and planished, producing an exact resemblance to fine gold, called Arcana, which will always keep its color. They are as beautiful and durable as fine gold, and are offered at one-tenth the cost. The cases are handsomely engraved, with panel and shield for name, with polished bezels, and secured in the same manner as fine gold-cased Gold Hunting Levers, and are really handsome watches. No, and are not an imitation of gold as to their character. The movement is manufactured by the well-known A. Huse Watch Company of Europe, and are superior to most, having engraved plates, fancy curved bridges, adjustment regulator, with gold balance, and the improved lever jewelled action, with fine dial, and skeleton hands, and is warranted a perfect time-keeper. They watches are in two different sizes, the smallest being for ladies, and are all hunting cases. A case of the lady is sent to any address free for $15. A single one sent in an elegant morocco case for $20. Will be readily sold for double the price. We are the sole agents for this watch in the United States, and none are genuine which do not have our name on them. Address DEVAUGH & CO., Importers,
15 Maiden Lane, New York.

NEW AND HANDSOME.

The Fairy Album, for holding 40 pictures, $1 25; 80 pictures, $1 50. Trade supplied. W. C. WEMYSS, 535 Broadway, N. Y.

100 PHOTOGRAPHS OF UNION GENERALS sent by post-paid for 25 cents; 50 PHOTOGRAPHS of REBEL GENERALS, 25 cents; 50 ACTRESSES, 25 cents; 100 ACTORS, 25 cents. Address
BOX 40, HOLLAND P.O., NEW YORK.

Photographs of Mrs. Gen. Tom Thumb
Price 25 cents.
Send orders to Box 5459 Post-Office, New York.

Whiskers and Mustaches.—Do you want to know how to make whiskers and mustaches grow heavy and luxuriant? We will send you Graham's, Hunter's, Brown's, and Wood's Recipes, for 25 cents. Address P. O. Box 5459, N. Y.

"GOOD BOOKS BY RETURN MAIL."

Any Book, Map, Chart, Portrait, Album, Magazine, or Paper, sent by return mail for list price. Send for Catalogue. All works on PHONOGRAPHY, HYPNOTISM, ASTROLOGY, MEDICINE, MECHANICS, MUSIC, GAMES, GAZETTEERS, ENCYCLOPÆDIAS, and on the NATURAL SCIENCES. Address FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

EMPLOYMENT

At your own homes. Thousands can realize $100 weekly. No utensils required except those found in every household. Any person can do the work and live at home. Now is the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of two stamps for return postage. Address C. MUNRO BROWN, No. 74 Bleecker St., N. Y.

Old Eyes Made New.

A pamphlet directing how to speedily restore sight and give up spectacles, without aid of doctor or medicine. Sent by mail, free, for 25 cents. Address
E. B. FOOTE, M.D.
1130 Broadway, New York.

PORTABLE PRINTING OFFICES

For Merchants, Druggists, Hospitals, small Job Printers, &c. Also, Printing Presses, Type, Cards, &c. Send for New York. Specimen Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., Six Cents.

Whiskers! Mustaches!!—The celebrated HIMALAYA GOLDEN BALM will force a heavy growth of Hair of Whiskers in two weeks. An English patent article, which does all we claim for the skin. Sent by mail, for $1. Address Dr. H. DE FORREST, Troy, New York.

Weston's Metallic Artificial Legs.—Lightest, strongest, most durable, and most natural in appearance. Price $75 to $100. Send for a pamphlet.
J. W. WESTON, 651 Broadway, N. Y.

AGENTS, COME and EXAMINE

An Invention urgently needed by every body, or samples sent free by mail for 25 cts., which will convince you of its merits. R. E. WOLCOTT, No. 170 Chatham Square, N. Y.

"How 'tis Done." Whiskers in 6 w'ks. Gumbling exposed. Sent for 25 cts. Address Box 5459 P.O., N. Y. Secrets. Free for 25c. Address Brother C. O., Hinsdale, N.H.

Howard's "Improved" SWEAT-PROOF Soldier's Money-Belt.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, on receiving, by enclosing $1 00 or $1 50 (according to the quality desired. Improved English knee Money Belt, for soldiers and sailors, $1 50 and $2. Large discount to dealers. HOWARD BELT CO., 439 Broadway, N. Y.

$150 A MONTH and Board for Discharged Soldiers and Sailors, and others with STENCIL TOOLS. Don't fail to send for our free catalogue, containing full particulars. Address A. J. FENNER, Springfield, Ohio.

Brandreth's Pills

Purify the Blood.

It is not pretended that a single life, or even an extended experience of one hundred and twelve years, with a medicine, however successful, is sufficient to establish a theory of cure. But if ages of experience since and during the life of Hippocrates have confirmed the utility of Purging in the cure of disease, that it is consistent in part with the medical profession, as it has with that portion of the public at large whose attention has been directed to the subject, and who have seen the wonderful curative effects of Brandreth's Pills.

I have now in press "The Literary Curiosities from the History of Medicine," in which will be found, as extracted from the writings of physicians, beginning with Hippocrates, B.C. 400, and ending with Rudolph Virchow, in 1860."

It will be thus seen that the advantages of Purging, when an innocent and effective agent is used, have been appreciated by more than one thousand medical men, whose testimonials in favor of Brandreth's Pills in a few weeks will be presented to the public. I think it will settle the propriety of the use of Brandreth's Pills theoretically. Their practical utility has already been tested for

One Hundred and Twelve Years.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. See upon it B. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING,
NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicines.

$8 OFFICER'S $10 WATCH.

Our whole stock of Imported Watches, being of rich and novel designs, are now offered at reduced prices. Single Watches at Wholesale rates.

An ELEGANT WATCH in Fine Gold Plated Double Cases, Richly Engraved, Turned Centre, Curved Enamel Bridge, English Full Plate Jeweled Movements, adjusted Regulator, Spring Bolt, Spring Detent, and Fine Enameled White Dial, a serviceable article in running order, with Key, Case, Guard Chain, and a Gold Engraved Vest Chain and a beautiful MINIATURE GOLD LOCKET, to match, with Double Cases, and Glass for Two Likenesses, sent free by mail to any part of the army or country for only $10.

A Fine SILVER WATCH, especially adapted for army use, in Heavy Double Cases, Small Size, same as the above, with Key, Glass, complete, and Guard or Vest Chain, Engraved Double Case Locket, etc. Sent by mail to any part of the army or country for only $8.

The Imperial Watch,

Containing a Rare and Wonderful Combination of Mechanism and Workmanship within its case and attached to its machinery a beautiful and correct working Time Measurer, an accurately adjusted Marking Chronometer, minutes, rank in Dial, and a Reliable Calendar, showing the date of month, week, etc., in Gold Engraved Case. Watch a perfect STEM, HEAT, and TIME INDICATOR, and a beautiful ornament of valuable Watch Guard, in Richly Finished DOUBLE HUNTING, Hard-Sparing 17 Jewel Movement, the unique being of Richly Engraved Inner case of Solid Gold Composition, Richly Engraved Outer Case of Fine Gold Plate, Hunting Cases, Heavy Push Spring Bottom, with Fine Jeweled and Jointed Arbor, Fine Gold Gemmine English Fine Gold Cap, Self-setting Click, Equal Improvement, Fine Enameled, Fine White Dial, Polished Balance, Independent Second Fusee Imitation of $100 watch, and Cased in the Most Elegant Design and Quality of Engraving, and Richly Finished Case, to their standard time-keeper. None Genuine unless bearing the Trade-mark. Every part unique and all complete, by mail, to any part of the army or country, $30. CALVERT BROTHERS, Sole Importers, 102 Nassau St., N.Y. Established 1855.

AMERICAN GOLD PEN CO.'S

CELEBRATED GOLD PENS.

Imperial Gold Pens, with silver-chony or silver-plated extension cases.

No. 1 Pens and Holders, per Dozen.....	$11 00
" 2 " " " "	12 00
" 3 " " " "	14 00
" 4 " " " "	17 00
" 5 " " " "	21 00

These Pens are all stamped "Imperial Pen," and are well-finished and fine writing gold pens, with iridium points. They are sold only by the dozen, and for soldiers and others remaining they will be found unequaled in the market.

WARRANTED GOLD PENS, 1st Quality, in Silver or Gold-Plated Ebony Desk-Holders and Cases:

For $2 75, No. 7 Pen; for $2 50, No. 8 Pen; for $2 25, No. 9 Pen; for $2 00, No. 10 Pen; for $1 75, No. 11 Pen; for $1 50, No. 12 Pen.

AMERICAN GOLD PEN COMPANY,

No. 910 Broadway, New York.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.

Manufacturers of Photographic Materials

AND DEALERS IN

591 BROADWAY, N.Y.

In addition to their own extensive MANUFACTURE, they are AGENTS for the sale of the following well-known STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS.

Of these we have an immense assortment, including the Scenes of American and Foreign Cities and Landscapes, Groups, Statuary, etc., etc. Also, Revolving Stereoscopes, for public or private exhibitions. These will be found to be sold to any wishing to purchase.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS,

We were the first to introduce into the United States, and we manufacture immense quantities in great variety, ranging from the cheapest to the most costly. Also, Portfolios, Scrap Books, Paper, Envelopes, Inks, a handy and desirable article. They will be sent by mail, FREE, on receipt of prices.

EF" FINE ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.

Our Catalogue of STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS and Stereoscopes, and subjects to which additions are continually being made, of Portfolios, Albums, Scrap Books, Inks, Paper, Envelopes, 10th Edition, 300 Engravings, 160 Other Objects, 120 Distinct Varieties, 64 Pages, Sent Free by Mail.

Address, E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO., 591 Broadway, New York.

Copying and Enlarging Pictures a Specialty. N. B. Will please mention Harper's Weekly.

$300 Wanted Immediately!

I WANT AGENTS EVERYWHERE, to sell my Celebrated Patent Elastic Stitch Sewing Machines. They will sell at sight to every family. Price only $18. Fully warranted for five years. Local Agents wanted. Address, with stamp, for circular, JAMES G. CLARK, Lockport, N.Y.

Dr. Poland's

WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

THE GREAT AND POPULAR REMEDY FOR

Colds, Coughs, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Croup, and Whooping-Cough.

Cures Gravel and all Kidney Diseases.

There have been many severe cases in Boston and vicinity cured by WHITE PINE COMPOUND, which can be referred to, and hundreds of cases of Kidney complaints, cause unknown to the sufferer, taking the White Pine Compound, have been reported by Druggists.

Among all the popular remedies ever offered for sale, no one seems to have gained favor like the White Pine Compound. This medicine was first made known in Boston by Dr. Poland, and then nearly for one individual who was affected with an inflammation of the throat, for which he obtained by it. This induced others to apply for the same remedy, and thus gradually it gained a great hold on the public. The sufferer, however, was without a name till November following, when it was called WHITE PINE COMPOUND, during which month it was advertised for the first time.

Since that time the Proprietor has purchased a bottle for a hard cough, was not only cured of the cough, but also of a severe kidney complaint of two years' endurance. This being truly a discovery, the fact was mentioned to a skilful physician, who replied in substance that the Pine of White Pine was one of the best diuretics known, provided its astringency was counteracted. Since that other articles entering into the Compound would effect this, a fortune may be made by it. Accordingly, the same has been reached; but the hundreds of cures effected by the Compound, in the most aggravated cases of Kidney Diseases, including Diabetes, prove it to be a wonderful Medicine for such cases. It is also known to be a most valuable new supply is or recommend it for such use.

But that the White Pine Compound is so useful in kidney inflammation, it is also a wonderful curative in all throat and lung diseases. Dr. Poland's pamphlet gives many affirmations that hoarseness and soreness are removed as if by magic. Numerous cases have been reported to the originator where relief in very severe cases has been acquired in less than one hour after effected in twenty-four hours.

There is a very natural reason for this. The bark, and even the leaves or "needles," of White Pine, contain eminent medicinal properties. Dr. Indian employed the bark of White Pine in treating diseases long before the settlement of America by Europeans.

A wash of the bark, steeped in water, is exceedingly useful in relieving inflammation in bleeding, and healing. In fine, the virtues of White Pine Bark are known very well, and this, therefore, is the reason why the New White Pine Compound was so favorably received at the first.

The past year has given ample opportunity to test the virtues of the White Pine Compound. It has been an unusual time for Colds and Coughs, and very large quantities of the White Pine Compound have been purchased with the happiest effects. It speaks well for the medicine that no bad effects have been reported nor high in its praise.

TESTIMONIALS.

A very large number of important testimonials have already been received from Physicians, Clergymen, Apothecaries, and others, all speaking in the highest terms of the most flattering terms of the White Pine Compound.

Dr. Nichols, of Northfield, N. H., writes:

"I find the White Pine Compound to be very efficacious and only in cases of Kidney Complaints, but also in cases in affections of the kidneys, debility of the stomach, and other kindred cases."

Rev. J. K. Chese, of Rumney, N. H., writes:

"I have for some time used the White Pine Compound as an invaluable remedy. I can truly say that I regard it as even more efficacious for Throat and Lung Diseases than just taken the Compound for a cold, and it works charmingly."

Hon. P. H. Sweetser, of South Reading, writes:

"Having been afflicted with a severe kidney medicinal properties of the White Pine, I was prepared, on seeing an advertising publication entitled the Kidney Compound, to give the medicine a trial. It has been used by members of my family in cases of Kidney and Throat, and in some cases of serious kidney difficulties with excellent results. Indeed, I may say that I have received more benefit from the Compound. We intend to keep it always on hand.

From JAMES J. HOYT,

Of the firm of Hoyt, Sawyer & Co., N. H., Sept. 1860.

DR. POLAND.—In the fall of 1851 I took a very violent cold, which brought on a severe cough, settled on my side and lungs, and raging blood. I was also very badly affected with that terrible disease—the Kidney Complaint. For the three years past I have been very much troubled with my throat and lungs, and with that raising an immense sight, with a bad cough after raising blood. I felt that my time was short, and tried every thing for relief. The Spring I was induced to try your White Pine Compound, though my faith in it was small. To my astonishment, before I had taken two bottles, my cough was better, the throat trouble also, and I could raise with without choking up and raising so much. I have taken nearly three bottles, and feel that I am cured. Yours truly,

I would add, that my father's family is inclined to consumption, and my brother died of consumption having died of it.

From STEPHEN DARTLETT,

Bradford, N. H., July, 1860.

DR. POLAND.—I had been afflicted with a kidney complaint for a long time, and had a bad cough of ten years' standing, which gave me a distressing state of suffering. No one of my acquaintances expected I would get my health again. I was induced to try your White Pine Compound have cured me of both the cough and Kidney Complaint. I would also state that a lung of my daughter's, who was so badly afflicted with a cough that she sat up only long enough to take her meals, and we all thought that she was going in a quick consumption. She took only one bottle of your Compound, and it cured her. She is just as well now as ever she was.

The White Pine Compound, advertised at length in our columns, is known to be a valuable remedy, but is a highly approved medicine. Dr. J. W. Poland, the inventor, has the confidence of many who have given testimonials which he enjoyed while laboring usefully many years as a Baptist minister. He experienced in the healing art, and to make experiments which issued in his medical discovery.—Boston Evening Mail, February.

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND,

GEORGE W. SWETT, M.D.,

Proprietor.

Will be manufactured in future at the

NEW ENGLAND BOTANIC DEPOT, 105 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

Under the supervision of

REV. J. W. POLAND, M.D.

DR. SWETT will attend to the business department, to whom all orders should be addressed.

Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers in Medicine every where.

Price 75 Cents per Bottle.

Important and Unexpected

GREAT SALE of WATCHES, CHAINS, DIAMOND RINGS, &C. One Million Dollars Worth!

TO BE DISPOSED OF AT

ONE DOLLAR EACH!

Without regard to value!! Not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive!!!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES!

All to be sold at One Dollar Each!!

100	Music Boxes, each.....	$10 to $100
250	" " "	100 " 250
250	Silver Teapots and Coffee Urns.....	50 " 150
500	" Cake Baskets.....	50 " 100
100	" Ice Pitchers.....	20 " 50
1000	" Card Baskets, lined with Glass.....	20 " 50
1000	" Goblets and Drinking Cups.....	5 " 10
1000	" Castors.....	10 " 25
1000	" Fruit, Card and Cake Baskets.....	10 " 50
1000	Gold Watches, Tea Spoons, per dozen.....	50 " 100
10,000	" " Table Spoons and forks, per dozen.....	20 " 50
250	Gents' Gold Hunting-Case Watches.....	$50 to $150
500	Ladies' Gold and Enamelled-Case do.....	50 " 100
500	Gents' Hunting-Case Silver Watches.....	25 " 75
500	Diamond Rings.....	50 " 100
5,000	Gold Vest and Neck Chains.....	4 " 30
5,000	Gold Guard do.....	4 " 30
5,000	Jet and Gold Bracelets.....	3 " 6
2,000	Charleston Chains and Grand Chains.....	3 " 6
1,000	Solitaire and Gold Brooches.....	4 " 10
1,000	Gold Pencil Cases and Pencils.....	3 " 6
5,000	Breakfast, Job, Lever, and Florentine Ear Rings, per pair.....	20 " 40
1,750	Coral, Opal, and Emerald Ear Drops.....	4 " 10
1,000	Gold Ear Drops, Enamelled.....	2 50 " 10
3,000	Gold Fob and Vest Watch Keys.....	2 50 " 10
1,000	Gold Thimbles, Enamelled.....	2 " 5
5,000	Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs, Pins, etc., per set.....	3 " 6
5,000	Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc.....	3 " 6
1,000	Gold Lockets.....	2 50 " 10
4,000	" " Magic Spring.....	10 " 50
3,000	Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, etc.....	3 " 6
5,000	Plain Gold Rings.....	4 " 10
5,000	Fancy Gold Rings.....	4 " 10
10,000	Stone Sets and Signet Rings.....	5 " 10
10,000	Gold Guard Chains.....	10 " 50
7,500	Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Jet and Gold.....	5 " 10
7,500	Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Cameo, Pearl, Opal, and other stones.....	4 " 10
10,000	Gold Chains, Bracelets, Lockets, Pencils and Pencils.....	4 " 10
10,000	Gold Pens and Gold-Mounted Holders	5 " 10
5,000	Gold Pens and Gold Extension-Holders	10 " 25
5,000	Ladies' Gilt and Gold Belt Clasps.....	5 " 10
5,000	Ladies' Gilt and Jet Hair Bars and Bands	5 " 10

A BRANCH OF THE Manufacturers' Agents, No. 107 Broadway, New York, announce that all of the above list of goods will be sold for One Dollar Each.

In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the manufacturing districts of England, through the war having cut off the supply of cotton, a large quantity of valuable machinery, originally intended for the Japan market, has been sent off for sale in this country, and MUST BE SOLD AT AUCTION AT ONCE!!!

Under these circumstances, ARRANDALE & CO., acting as agents for the proprietors of the Manufacturers' Agency, have resolved upon a Great Gift Distribution, subject to the following conditions:

Certificates of the various articles are first put into envelopes, sealed, and well mixed, and a number, and taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus paying all the risk. On receipt of the certificate you will see what you are to have, and then it is at your option to send the dollar and have the article sent. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any list of Jewelry for the sum of ONE DOLLAR.

Send 25 cents for Certificate.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for forwarding the certificates, paying postage, and doing the business. Every article will be found as enclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five certificates will be sent for $1; Eleven for $2; Thirty for $5; sixty-five $10; one hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—We want agents in every regiment, and in every town and county in the country, and those acting as such will find this a rare chance. Liberal commission ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one hundred dollars. We will allow 20 cents for every certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps.

ARRANDALE & CO.,

No. 161 Broadway, New York.

What the "Press" say of us.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION.—A rare opportunity is offered for securing a fine gold watch, diamond ring, silverware, etc., by Messrs. Arrandale & Co., at No. 161 Broadway. They have an immense stock of articles, varying in value, and all are offered at one dollar each. The distribution is very fair, as purchasers agree to take a certificate of a certain article, enclosed in an envelope, and are not required to pay the money until you are satisfied with the article, which will certainly be worth more than this amount, and which will be sent by mail. An excellent mode of investing a dollar.—Sunday Times, N. Y. City, Feb. 19, 1865.

Messrs. Arrandale & Co. have long been personally known to us as men of business, and to be very worthy of public confidence.—N. Y. Scottish Americus Journal, April 11, 1863.

We have inspected at the office of Arrandale & Co.'s Manufacturers' Agency, the remaining jewelry, the assortment of fashionable and valuable jewelry of the newest styles, which they are now offering at one dollar each, and understand that the whole of these newly-imported articles will be disposed of on a novel principle, affording great advantage to buyers, and affording extensive employment to agents. We have every disposition to be a very respectable and thoroughly worthy of public confidence.—N. Y. Scottish Americus Journal, April 11, 1863.

We have inspected at the office of Arrandale & Co.'s Manufacturers' Agency, the remaining jewelry, the assortment of fashionable and valuable jewelry of the newest styles, which they are now offering at one dollar each, and understand that the whole of these newly-imported articles will be disposed of on a novel principle, affording great advantages

THE HYGIENE OF NEW YORK CITY.

SENATORIAL INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE (to MR. T——, the Health Officer). "Do you know, Sir, what Hygiene is?"

HEALTH OFFICER. "Oh yes! I know Hygiene. It's the effluvia arising from stagnant water, the consequences of which is disease!"

[The Chamber's look astonished, and the Health Officer, suspicious of a blunder, adds: "Oh, I don't understand Greek!"]

SEVEN-THIRTIES.

Robinson & Ogden,

BANKERS,

AND

U.S. LOAN AGENTS,

4 Broad St. and 694 Broadway,

New York.

Subscriptions received for any amount, and a constant supply of the notes on hand for immediate delivery.

ROBINSON & ODDEN, BANKERS.

FISK & HATCH,

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.

No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

The Model Pocket-Pistol of the Age.

SLOCUM'S Patent Side-Loading REVOLVER.

Length, 7½ Inches. Weight, 14 Ounces.
Carries a No. 32 Metallic Cartridge.

To advantages over all others are:

1st. It does not require special ammunition.

2d. It is perfectly safe while being loaded.

3d. It can be loaded in the dark, and quicker than any other pistol.

4th. It can be loaded in the pocket, without danger, when loaded.

5th. It is sure fire, and possesses great strength.

FOR SALE BY THE TRADE GENERALLY.

HOWARD, SANGER & CO.,

105 and 107 Chambers Street, New York.

Descriptive Circulars furnished upon application.

UNCLAIMED MONEY.—70,000 PERSONS WANTED TO CLAIM MONEY, ESTATES, &c., which have been advertised since 1794. Fee to search for name in Registry, $2. Genealogists traced. All letters must be prepaid. GUN & CO., Unclaimed Money and Property Registry, No. 17 Charlotte Street, London (W. C.), England.

Philadelphia Photographic Company,

720 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, manufacture a large variety of card photographs for the trade. Send for catalogue.

Calenberg & Vaupel's PIANO-FORTES,

99 and 101 Bleecker Street, 53 Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

ARMY and NAVY AGENCY.

Pensions, Bounties, Pay, Prize Money, together with all claims of the army and navy promptly procured. Correspondence promptly answered. L. Brown & Co., 3 Hank Place, N. Y.

DALLEY'S MAGICAL PAIN EXTRACTOR

This invaluable salve is a certain cure for PILES, CORNS, CUTS, BRUISES, SORES, and BURNSTANKS. Relieves BURNS in five minutes. No one should be without it. It saves Doctors' bills. 25 Cents a Box. Sent free by mail on receipt of 37 Cents. Depot 46 Liberty St., New York.

LAWRENCE, BALDWIN & CO.,

70 Wall Street, New York.

BANKERS and BROKERS,

DEALERS IN ALL KINDS OF

Government Securities.

PETROLEUM,

AND ALL OTHER KINDS OF

STOCKS, BONDS, &c.,

BOUGHT AND SOLD ON COMMISSION AT THE REGULAR STOCK, MINING, AND PETROLEUM BOARDS.

Interest Allowed on Deposits.

DEWITT C. LAWRENCE. CURTIS J. LAWRENCE.
SIDNEY BALDWIN, JR. WM. A. HALSTED.

VERMILYE & CO.,

No. 44 WALL STREET,

BANKERS,

And Dealers in all Classes of

GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

DAVENPORT, COLLAMER & CO.,

479 Broadway, below Broome St.,

Sing Song Chinese Porcelain;

ALSO PARIAN, FRENCH CHINA, GLASS, &c.

French Dinner Sets.

CARPET WARP,

FIRST AND SECOND QUALITY;

Wrapping Twine made of Paper.

Twines and Paper. H. A. HARVEY, 84 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

Great Sale

OF

WATCHES AND JEWELRY,

Worth over $1,000,000,

Consisting of Gold and Silver Watches, Chains, Bracelets, Sets of Jewelry, Rings, Lockets, Gold Pens, &c., &c.,

All to be sold for One Dollar each!!

WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE! NOT TO BE PAID FOR UNTIL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO RECEIVE!

Certificates of the various articles are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the certificate you will see what you have, and then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch or any set of Jewelry on our list for ONE DOLLAR.

Five Certificates will be sent for $1, eleven for $2. We will send one Certificate on receipt of 25 cents; also our Circular and Terms to Agents, which we want everywhere, and offer liberal inducements. Address

GEO. ROYDEN & CO., 208 Bowman St., N. Y.

Vineland Lands. To all Wanting Farms.

Large and thriving settlement, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, producing large crops, which can now be seen growing. Tea, tweety, and fifty acre tracts, at from $25 to $35 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools, and good society. It is now the most rapid improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. ANDREW GRAY, Jr., Landis, Vineland Post-Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.

From Report of Solon Robinson, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune: "It is one of the most extensive fortifications, on an almost level position and favorable conditions for pleasant farming that we know of this side of the Western prairies.

GOLD PENS.

The JOHNSON PEN is acknowledged by all who have used them to be the best pen for the least money of any in use. They are made of 14 carats fine gold, and warranted; for one year written constantly when required. Pens in solid silver extension cases, $1 75; ebony slide holders, $1 75; rubber reverse holders, $2 50; telescopic extensions, $3 50; ladies' slide holders, $4 50; ebony holders and morocco boxes, $1 50. Pens repointed, 50 cents each. Pens sent by mail, securely paper, Send for Circulars.

E. S. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office,
13 Maiden Lane, New York City.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

ALL NEW YORK STATE BOUNTIES PAYABLE.

Apply, by letter or in person, at the UNITED STATES ARMY AGENCY, 64 Bleecker Street, New York City, opposite the Pay Department.

For the settlement of all just claims of any nature against the Government, apply as above.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED, cordially recommend to the notice of the friends of the Christian Commission the offer of S. & H. T. Anthony & Co. to devote to this object 25 per cent. of their retail sales of Albums, Stereoscopic Views, and Card Photographs, for the fortnight commencing April 3d, as set forth in their advertisement.

GEO. H. STUART, Pres. U. S. Christian Commission.
J. T. DERBYA.
H. DYER, Secretary N. Y. Branch, Christian Com.
MORRIS K. JESUP.
THEODORE ROOSEVELT.
W. E. DODGE, Chairman N. Y. Branch.

(ADVERTISEMENT.)

THE CHRISTIAN COMMISSION.

NOTICE TO EVERY BODY. TWO WEEKS FOR THE SICK AND WOUNDED SOLDIERS. During the fortnight commencing April 3d we will devote 25 per cent. of all the retail sales at our counter of Albums, Stereoscopic Views, and Card Photographs, and also receivestimes by mail for the same, where so specified, to the relief of our sick and wounded soldiers, during the time necessarily of the Christian Commission work.

Prices to be raised on the following date any time previous to May 1, will be restored, and the 25 per cent. will cover the acknowledgement of the Treasurer of the Christian Commission will be sent when required. The goods will be sent at our present catalogue prices.

S. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 Broadway, New York.
Three Doors from St. Nicholas Hotel.

"Electric" Self-Adjusting enameled white, $3, $5, $7, and $9 per doz.; sportsmen, $5 per doz., $1. Nose-wipe, linen finished, Bosom-stitched, $1 25. Suitable Neck-Tie, $1. Ladies' Bosom-embroidered Steel Collars, $1 50; Cuffs, $1 50. Gents' stee Cuffs, $2. Mailed on receipt of price and "size." ANDREW JOHNSON, P. O. Box 388.

THE NEW BROWN MICROSCOPE.

Magnifying small objects 500 times. MAILED FREE everywhere for 50 CTS., or three for $1 00.

Address E. C. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

BENJ. F. KENDALL,

BROKER IN

PETROLEUM STOCKS,

No. 52 Wall Street, N. Y.

NAVY PRIZE CLAIMS CASHED

OR COLLECTED ON LIBERAL AND JUST TERMS, and settlement of MILITARY ACCOUNTS guaranteed to be effected in the shortest time. Prize Lists furnished as soon as awards are made. RICE & SWIFT, 208 Broadway, New York City.

Officers, Soldiers, and Citizens!

All the Army Corps Rings in 14-cart gold (stamped and warranted) at $5 and $7 each. Also 100 other styles of every size, plain, enamelled, and fancy, at from $3 to $10 each. Sent by mail. Send stamp for Circular.

Address E. P. BEACH, 13 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $10

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH. Double Case, Lever, Cap, small size, white enameled dial, cut hands, PATENT STEM WINDER, and correct time-keeper, with an accurate "Miniature Calendar," indicating the "Day of Week, Month, &c." in back case.

A single one sent free by mail to any address in a neat case, with a BEAUTIFUL VEST CHAIN, for only . . . $10.

A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, with "Miniature Calendar," &c., specially adapted to the Army. Sent free by mail, to any address, for only . . . $7.

English Lever Watches, never from $25 up. Good Watches of all descriptions low.

Address CHAS. P. KELLOGG & CO., Sole Importers, 38 & 40 Ann Street, New York.

STAMMERING

Cured by Bates' Patent Appliances. For descriptive pamphlet, &c., address H. C. J. Bates, 377 W. 23d St., N. Y.

SOLDIERS' CERTIFICATES,

Beautifully printed in five colors, size 12x16. Every soldier should have one. Price 50 cents each, sent by mail. Trade Agents wanted everywhere for it. Agents wanted. GATES & GAMBLE, 143 Walnut Street, Cincinnati.

WARD'S PATENT FRENCH PRINTED PAPER COLLARS

387 B'WAY, N.Y. & ALL GENTS FURNISHING STORES.

TRADE MARK

OF THE

MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY,

To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods, of whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE is the only ruffle in the market, you will make of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. Office of the Company, No. 75 Chambers Street, New York.

Great Imperial Watch.

See Cutaby Brothers' Advertisement on page 223.

N. Y. PIANO-FORTE COMPANY.

Grand and Square Pianos, superior to all others,

No. 394 Hudson Street, New York.

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER.

This new celebrated Pistol is the most compact, powerful, and effective Pocket Revolver in the world. It surpasses the largest size in use. Length of Pistol and Revolver made. EXTREME LENGTH, 7 INCHES; WEIGHT, 14 OZ.; IN 6-SHOT, 24 INCH BALL.

Its Advantages are:

1st. It is loaded with perfect ease and safety, without removing the cylinder (or any part of it), at the fore end, and can be carried when loaded without the slightest danger.

2d. The cylinder never fouls; is made from solid steel, bored; and can not get out of repair, or clog, the cylinders made of many parts will do.

3d. The cartridge is made on an improved plan; the fulminate is concentrated in one piece, which insures sure fire. In METALLIC CENTRAL-FIRE, AND WARNER PRIMER.

4th. Its peculiar model makes it the most desirable Pocket Revolver ever made.

FOR SALE BY THE TRADE GENERALLY.

GEO. A. HICKCOX, 84 Cliff Street, New York.

Certificates.

I have used the "National Revolver," and believe it to the best and most convenient revolver ever offered to the public. (Signed) JOHN S. FOLK,
Inspector of Metropolitan Police, N. Y.

I have thoroughly tested the new "National Revolver," and find it an effective weapon, of sure fire and convenient size. At fifty yards, I think I could with this Pistol kill at every shot. I take pleasure in recommending it as a weapon in every way desirable. In company with Capt. Swift, Provost-Marshal, and other officers, I fired this pistol a large number of times, and not one cartridge failed to explode. (Signed.) JOHN CHARLESTON,
Chief of Police, Cairo, Ill.

We have one of the "National Revolvers" now in use, and pronounce it one of the most reliable arms of the kind we ever saw. It is simple in construction, substantial, sure fire, and shoots with the force and accuracy of a rifle. Any one in want of a good and reliable weapon can not do better than procure a "National Revolver."

(Signed.) J. S. VINCENT,
Editor and Proprietor "New Era."

We, the undersigned, having used and thoroughly tested the National Revolver, have no hesitancy in saying that, for accuracy, force, and convenience, we think they are far superior to any other Revolver yet produced.

M. C. LOOMIS, with J. G. and W. J. Averell.
JOHN C. ROBERTS, Chief of Police, Ogdensburg.
J. H. FAIRCHILD, Insurance Agent.

EXCELSIOR

PHOTOGRAPH ESTABLISHMENT,

F. F. WHITING, 67 Fulton New York.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS will cure any Rheumatic Affections or Stiffness in the Limbs. Only 25 cents per Pot and Box.

The Leading Purpose

Of the conductors of the popular juvenile,

Our Young Folks

Is to combine amusement with instruction in the contents of the magazine—to interpose Moral Lessons with Pleasing Stories, Sketches of Travel and Adventure with pretty Poems, and to invest the entire book with the character of an EFFECTIVE JUVENILE INSTITUTE. The literary writers of the country contribute regularly to the pages of Our Young Folks, and the cost of publication per Terms $2 00 per year; a large discount to clubs. You may get a specimen by sending 20 cents to the publishers,

TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston, Mass.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. IX.—No. 433.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

MAJOR-GENERAL CANBY.

THE Gulf Department has been in this war so far removed from the vital centre of the rebellion that our interest in it has not been very intense. Especially of late, when the series of brilliant victories gained by THOMAS, SHERIDAN, SHERMAN, TERRY, and GRANT, extending in one continuous line of glory from Nashville across the States of Georgia and South Carolina, and up the Atlantic Coast to the Shenandoah Valley, has absorbed all our attention, we have overlooked important movements in the Southwest, and have lost sight of some of the bravest heroes of the war. Among our veteran officers there is probably none who, for fidelity, integrity, and hard service, has more claims upon the gratitude of our people than Major-General EDWARD R. S. CANBY.

General CANBY has been for nearly thirty years in the military service. A native of Kentucky, he entered the Military Academy at West Point in 1835, from which he was graduated with the rank of Second Lieutenant. In 1846 he was promoted to a First Lieutenancy, and the year after to a Captaincy. In the Mexican war he gained high distinction in the battles of Cerro Gordo, Contreras, Churubusco, and Belen Gate. He was rapidly promoted, first to a Major and then to Lieutenant-Colonel by brevet. In the war on the frontier, also, he performed important services, which gained for him a high place in the esteem of the army and the people.

General CANBY entered into this war against the rebellion with the devotion of spirit and the disinterested patriotism which characterize the true soldier. Placed early at the head of the Department of New Mexico, he maintained his ground in that Territory with an obstinacy which won the victory even from superior numbers. His operations in this department were conducted under many disadvantageous circumstances. He was remote from the seat of government, and surrounded by hostile tribes of Indians. The vicinity of Texas enabled the rebels to confront him with an army superior in numbers. The country was almost a Sahara. Available springs of water were many miles apart, and his fortified posts must of necessity lie upon the banks of the rivers. It was under these circumstances that, in the spring of 1862, he fought the battle of Fort Craig, called by the enemy the battle of Valverde, against an army of Texans under the rebel General W. U. SIBLEY. This battle was fought in the open field against great odds; and the result, though a repulse, was in no sense a disaster. He was compelled to retire upon Fort Craig, where the rebel General declined to assault him. Here for some weeks General CANBY was compelled to remain, powerless for an offensive movement. Reinforced at length, he boldly took the field, and in a brief space of time drove the rebels back into Texas.

General CANBY superseded General BANKS in the command of the Department of the Gulf, and is now at the head of the operations against Mobile. This city is chiefly important from its situation at the mouth of the Alabama and Mobile rivers. Its capture will wind up the war in the Southwest. General CANBY's combinations are such as must inevitably bring success to the national arms. Since General CANBY has been at the head of the Gulf Department he has, in the midst of temptations that would corrupt many men, preserved his integrity intact. No officer in the army can produce a cleaner record. None is more respected and beloved by the soldiers of his command.

The photograph from which, on this page, we reproduce the portrait of General CANBY was taken by Mr. THEODORE LILIENTHAL, of New Orleans, to whom we are indebted for many similar courtesies in the past.

MAJOR-GENERAL EDWARD R. S. CANBY.
[PHOTOGRAPHED BY LILIENTHAL, 131 POYDRAS STREET, NEW ORLEANS.]

THE INTERIOR OF FORT LAFAYETTE.

LIKE old Sumter, Fort Lafayette is a sea-girt fortress, standing at the entrance of New York Harbor, and, bristling with 100-pounders, is ready, with its sister forts, Hamilton and Richmond, on Long Island and Staten Island respectively, to dispute the passage of the Narrows. As soon as the war commenced the National Government recognized the adaptability of this fort as a military prison. It was here that the members of the Maryland Legislature were imprisoned in 1861. PIERRE SOULÉ, too, and a host of other notables, have been confined here; among whom were Admiral BUCHANAN, General PAGE and his Staff (captured in Mobile Bay and at Fort Morgan), Generals PRYOR and BEALE, and Captain THOM. In room No. 2, which is the subject of our illustration on page 236, Captain BEALE, recently executed as a spy, and Captain KENNEDY, who has also lately met his end in a similar manner, were confined.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL GRANT'S HEAD-QUARTERS AT CITY POINT, VIRGINIA.—SKETCHED BY A. R. WAUD.—[SEE PAGE 240.]

THE JOY-GUN.

BY LIEUTENANT RICHARD REALF.

[1] Soon after the occupation of Wilmington by the United States forces a negro called at the head-quarters of General Schofield, to whom, being interviewed, he made known his errand. He had gathered together thirteen of men and women, escaped slaves, marching them from the interior by night. Not knowing whether our forces were in the possession of the city, he had left his people behind him and scouted through alone, prepared to them that if he found the Union soldiers he would ask the General to fire a 'joy-gun,' when they were all to come in and join him. The General ordered one of the heaviest pieces of artillery in the fort to be fired."—Army Letters.

Born on the wings of the Northern breeze,
Wafted on airs from happy seas,
The word of the Lord by his servant's mouth
Came to the imprisoned Negroes of the South;
And young and old with a sudden cry,
Answered, "Yes, Master, here am I!"

* * * * * * *

With the drest of his old life shuddering through him,
With the hope of his new life beckoning to him,
In his heart the goal of the troubled eyes
Of those whose prayers flew on before him,
And a vast vagus dream of fresh skies
Beating like God's dear pity over him.
The black man looked in our General's face,
Speaking his word for himself and race.

He was only a black man; grim and gaunt,
Torn and tattered and lean from want;
Mired with the slime of the oozing fen
Wherein he had crouched from tiger-men,
Poor and ignorant, mean and low,
Blessed of sky of shame and woe.
Cowed by scourges and chains and whips,
Starved of bountiful fellowships;
Dull of brain and prone to think
Dead to the finer spiritual sense
Which through the white man's passion and pain
Sees that the barriers are clear, and thence
God shining on us. Only a slave,
With the ache in his breast which dumb souls have.

But as he stood there bare of head,
Telling the Union General
How his people arose and fled
Out from the dreadful gates of hell,
Into the darkness, into the night,
Through terrible leagues of mortal flight,
Past forest and thicket, swamp and flood,
Leaving a trail of human blood,
And how he too had crawled and crept
Through the armed watch the enemy kept,
To see for his brethren, hidden there
Down in the jungle's fastnesses,
Whether indeed a pathway were
Open to Freedom for him and his.
And how they waited with straining ear,
And hearts on tip-toe of hope and fear,
To catch the sentry, of the blessed gun
Which he prayed might shout to them all was won,
And the General said it should be done:—
Oh, it was wonderful to see
How, o'er his black and stolid face,
Shot like an instant gleam from the sun
A grand rapture, an awful grace,
An august look in his lifted eyes,
Tranced with a vision through which there brake
The sublunar Infinite Voice which spake
To the dead Lazarus, saying, Arise!
So was the human soul within him
Drawn from its hideous subjections,
To where archangels might woo and win him,
And the breath of the Lord be Comforter.
So from his brow like a cowl there slid
The stagnate seeming of sullen care,
In the dark of which had the MAN lain hid:
A new life stirred in the roots of his hair:
The glory of God eclipsed the brute,
And the slave fell dead at the freedman's feet.

Oh, gun of freedom! that then and there
Poured for the hunger fugitives
Oil of gladness upon despair,
Healing balm upon bruised lives.
Albeit thou spak'st but once, I know
That thy grand thunder shall never die,
But gather an angler voice, and grow
In groaning echoes around the sky,
Over the hurtling shouts of war,
Landward and seaward, near and far,
Till every fortress reels and rocks,
Smitten to hell by mighty shocks;
And the wasted hearts of the weary cause
Springing from drunken watery graves;
And its blessed billows of music roll
To shackled body and thralled soul,
Slave and master and head and foot,
Till the whole earth, Lord, lies pure in Thee.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1865.

RICHMOND.

WHEN OLIVER CROMWELL won a vast and decisive victory his earnest heart thanked God for a "crowning mercy;" and we may be sure that nothing less than the consciousness of a great deliverance could have set every bell ringing, every flag flying, every heart beating, and have brought merchants and bankers to the steps of the Exchange on high-noon of Monday, April 3, 1865, to unite in solemnly singing "Old Hundred" and "John Brown." The Virginian capital, doctrously defended for years as the very heart of the rebellion, was not surrendered by military or civil negotiation: the armies of the United States did not occupy it by permission of any man or body of men. Their victorious entrance, and liberated thousands of their fellow-citizens from the most relentless despotism,

It was fit that the old flag should be restored to the city of Richmond by soldiers of the race to secure whose eternal degradation that flag had been pulled down; and it was peculiarly fit that the army of the Potomac so brave and steady and persistent, so long baffled by various fortune, should at last justify their own patient heroism and the national confidence by striking the final blow. Nor less pleasant is it that the concluding operations of the war in its chief battle-field of Virginia should have been personally directed by the simple, silent, sagacious, tenacious soldier, whose name will be always precious in the national heart, the Lieutenant-General of the armies of the United States.

It is a natural speculation to wonder what the rebels will do next. Their leaders are men who will relinquish the struggle until the defeat and disappearance of their soldiers assure them that there is no other alternative. Those soldiers comprise the most desperate men of the insurrection, and their fighting at Fort Steadman, and Bentonsville, and through the tremendous week that destroyed their cause before Petersburg, shows that then, at least, they were not demoralized. If LEE can escape with any considerable force which will organize and kill join JOHNSTON, and either make for the mountains or for the Southwest; or, possibly, upon a calm military survey of the situation, considering his ghastly disaster in Virginia and the comparative fewness of his defeated troops, surrender unconditionally. If he can not escape, and if surrender is the GRANT option, the question will be decided before these words are read.

As for the country, solemnized by the war and inspired by its success, it has learned what it did not know at first—and that is, what it is fighting for. While it has been defending its Government, assailed by rebels, it has learned that the assault was made in the interest of a system inconsistent with free government, as it is with social Christian civilization. Meanwhile an earlier and easier victory would have blinded its eyes, and have delivered it once more to the deadly political corruption of slavery, which would have made the shock of terrible civil war even more perilous than this has been. Bull Run was a bitter pang, but it was a higher wisdom that caused us to > "Wait beneath the furnace blast

> The pangs of transformation," until the cold blood of its noblest children washed the national blindness away, and every man saw the reality of the terrible conflict between humanity and brutality, civil order and barbarism.

And now, with no hatred of our fellow-citizens with whom we have fought, and whom we know were deluded by leaders who can never be forgiven, without scorn or vituperation, but with devout gratitude to Almighty God for this crowning mercy, let us all, remembering the young and brave by whom we have been saved, the eyes that are dim and the hearts that are breaking, even in this hour of jubilee, resolve that the peace they have secured shall be as broad as liberty and as eternal as justice.

SHERIDAN.

AMONG a host of heroes it is almost unfair to mention a single name only. But the attentive reader of the reports of the great battles before Petersburg will not be able to restrain his enthusiastic admiration of General SHERIDAN. For two days he was baffled, and his defeat would have implied the whole movement; but with masterly skill he retreated, re-formed, knew no such word as fail, and finally, grasping his army with the hand of genius, hurled it at the enemy, routed them, and secured the victory. No name will be sweeter to American ears than that of "LITTLE PHIL SHERIDAN."

THE AGASSIZ EXPEDITION.

THE generosity which sends our greatest naturalist and his party to South America deserves a permanent record. MR. NATHANIEL THAYER, of Boston, knowing that PROFESSOR AGASSIZ was contemplating a tour of scientific exploration up the Amazon and Andes, authorized him to take with him as many assistants as he chose, and assumed all the expenses of the expedition. This is a national gift. It is not only spending money, but spending it wisely. Like the Astor Library, and LAWRENCE Scientific School, the Institute, the AGASSIZ expedition will be a monument of Mr. THAYER's munificence. The jealousy of riches disappears when they are nobly used, and we feel that he has a right to thank who shows that he considers himself a steward and trustee for the public benefit. Nor ought we to omit to mention that the Pacific Steamship Company, in the most generous spirit, have made their contribution to this expedition of AGASSIZ by conveying him and his party without expense in the splendid ship Colorado. It is a graceful munificence that will not be forgotten.

We wish the example of MR. THAYER might be followed by some other of the wealthy men of country. The Evening Post has already suggested a special agricultural embassy to China, which should be intrusted to DR. MACGOWAN, and there are many other good things that might be done. For instance, a complete gallery of casts from all the famous statues in the world would be a collection easily made and of the highest value. The expense would be great, but there are great fortunes that could well support it; and as a cast is the most perfect copy of a work of art possible, we should have the treasures of all the capitals of the world gathered in our own. NAPOLEON brought the bronze horses of St. Mark from Venice to Paris, and Italy sighed and deplored as the noble works borne away as trophies. But some of our peaceful conquerors might stretch their golden wands, and, without robbing a single foreign city, indefinitely enrich their own. That is a secret which neither NAPOLEON nor JULIUS CÆSAR knew. Peace hath her victories not less renowned than war.

ART CRITICISM.

NOW that the beautiful doors of the new National Academy of Design are about to open upon an exhibition of paintings which will probably be more numerously visited than any previous one, the critics are burnishing their pens and preparing for their duties. The experience of last season admonishes us that there will be much difference of opinion, and that frank and fearless censure both of the spirit and the manipulation of pictures will not always be agreeable to the artists. It is only fair that there should be no avoidable misunderstanding; and as we are friendly to the artists, and shall not hesitate to say what we think of the pictures upon exhibition, we think that we believe to be the limits of just and generous criticism.

It seems to us, then, that the criticism of pictures should proceed from a kind and sympathetic study of them—a study enslaved by no theory, no school or clique, while the judgment should be a candid statement of the impression produced. Sneers and sarcasm recoil upon the critic. A quip may easily excite a prejudice, and a sneer pass for a verdict. A critic has duties and responsibilities, and no man who remembers that the painting of pictures is the means of livelihood of many meritorious artists will wantonly injure them unless he is very contemptible.

On the other hand, the critic can not forget that he has undertaken to say what his sincerely thinks of exhibitions of general public interest, and, if he have a true sense of honor, he will no more speak falsely about a picture than about any other subject which he is treating. If he has duties to the artist he has them none the less to the public: and if a man exposes a wretched daub, hoping that nobody will discover it, another man who knows it to be a good, or who, having assumed to speak, allows his silence to be construed as approbation, is merely accomplice in an imposition. On the other hand, if a critic were to visit a gallery, and speak only of the pictures that he could honestly praise, those that he did not mention would be as emphatically censured by his silence. If a man's object is to say pleasant things it is a very excellent object, and we wish him unvaried success. But if he wishes to criticise honestly or not, or hesitates in conduct, or character, he will often be compelled to say very unpleasant things.

Yet the strictest and gradations of all things should be remembered. A man may paint a very wretched picture without the least moral offense. Because his imagination is at fault, and his eye for color, or his drawing is defective, he is not necessarily so terrible a sinner that he must be overwhelmed with obloquy. The mildest and most innocent man is sometimes paint the most atrocious pictures, just as they whistle out of tune or quote poetry incorrectly. In treating of their poor pictures an overpowering solemnity of wrath is the manner it recoils. It is a crucifying a moth. It is proclaiming figs in the name of the prophet.

But while a painter's picture does not betray a bad heart in the painter, a very clever picture may be of very corrupting influence; and the critic who, in a high or low way, writes of it in literature or art, is persuaded that it is injurious to public morals, is certainly bound to say so. He may be mistaken, of course. Another man may be differently employed. But it would be very foolish for one reader of BYRON's "Don Juan" to refrain from condemning what he thought to be the loathsome tendency of the poem because another reader thought better of it, even though the other reader were Professor WILSON, who considered it the finest of modern poems.

It should be remembered, also, that the critic is not to be accused of personal malevolence because of his opinion of the immorality of a work. It is hostility to the shade of the leaden-pipes ASPHER BEHN to say that her novels were prurient and disgusting? And if a man for the first time encountered the tales of PAUL DE KOCK, not knowing who wrote them, could M. DE KOCK justly charge the critic with injuring his moral character if he advised his friends not to read them? If all honest moral censure of æsthetic works is to be interpreted as enmity of the authors there is an end of criticism. And if it be unkind or uncivil to censure in print, it must be no less so in conversation; and we thus arrive inevitably at the absurd conclusion, that if we think a book or a picture or a statue immoral, we must carefully hold our tongues, and so permit the public mind to be corrupted, lest the feelings of the corrupter should be hurt. If, indeed, a critic should gravely declare that the Madonnas of RAPHAEL were demoralizing pictures, he would only make himself ridiculous. But if he said that CORREGGIO's Io was a work which might harm young people the critic might be mistaken, but the sensible CORREGGIO could not be fairly angry. Or we take an illustration at hand. GEROME's picture of the Almes is, in our opinion, a work which may wisely be exhibited; but if M. X. or Y. or Z. who are for other papers, should say that it is too indecent to be publicly seen, we should not at once angrily suppose that he meant to injure M. GEROME, nor to spoil his market.

It is for this fidelity and frankness in criticism which distinguish the little monthly journal called The New Path that we are glad to see it taking a fresh lease of life and, we hope, of public attention. Its aim is single and sincere. If its criticisms seem to us crude and unjust and severe, they yet have the radical merit of honesty. If it appear to favor new and unacademic school of art, it is because, in common with some of the acutest and most thoughtful critics of the time, it believes the principles of that school to be correct. If it censure the departure of artists from the great original, Nature, it censures in good faith and before the public judgment. We do not always agree with what it says, nor can we always commend the manner. But it has freshness, vitality, conviction, and a genuine interest in the subject. The Open Spirit of The New Path can not be too highly commended. What we all need—painters and public and critics—is a little more honest frankness: and with the opening of the doors of the new Academy we heartily hope that the doors of a new era in current art criticism will also open.

THE SPIRIT OF THE SOUTH.

THE important question is the disposition of the people in the Rebel States. Are they the people actively hostile to the Government, or is the strength of the rebellion in the army? The answer to these questions is best found in the unconscious admission of the chief rebel journals.

The Richmond Sentinel of March 30, in a very long and serious article on the state of the opening campaign of GRANT, SHERMAN, and THOMAS: "Without doubt this combination is very formidable, and should be faithful to stand fast. On the 1st of March it said: "Why is it that our public men can not see the importance of cultivating a cheerful spirit and encouraging hopeful sentiments among the people and soldiers?" On the 7th it said: "We will surely win the fight if we do our duty.....No one can imagine that the few poltroons with beards on who are whipped without ever having been in a fight are a sample of our population.....We do not intend to be whipped out of house and home.....Stand up like men in this hour of trial." On the 8th it said: "Nothing can be more unpalatable or in worse taste than to disparage the majority with defection and abandonment unless they shall yield their opinions to a loud and unscrupulous minority.....We do not credit any threats or rumors of desertion." On the 15th it said: "In the great occasion which is upon us all have opportunity for the display of whatever courage and devotion the soil has implanted in them.....The opportunity has come to all; are all improving it?" On the 25th it said: "The war is the business of the people in daily improving, and all except the contemptible Tories, who harbor the desire of their country's overthrow, are elated at the prospect of the coming victories."

All this is full of significance. It shows a profound consciousness of a fatal division of the unanimity and moral spirit. The Richmond Sentinel was fond of appealing to the illustrious examples of history. Let us remind its warning and cheering tone, then, that this tone of doubt, of expostulation, of contempt, of spite, of pathetic appeal, irresistibly suggests that the people to which it is addressed are not like the Romans after Cannæ, who, like Rome, were discovering their cities before JULIUS CÆSAR, nor like the French in the beginning of their struggle with allied Europe, nor like the Dutch fighting with Spain.

The cardinal fact of the situation is clearly read in its own late editorials, and that is, that the rebellion is as strong as the combined army and no stronger. It does not actively exist in the population of the rebel section. And when the Richmond DAVIS's organ declared that this campaign was the solution of the war it confessed that DAVIS's talk about fighting for twenty years was the utter folly which every sensible man knew it to be when it was uttered. The rebellion will last as long as an organized army keeps the field, and no longer.

ANOTHER VIEW.

The country seems to be under a curious misapprehension as to what has taken place in and around the city of Richmond. It has been generally supposed that GRANT had defeated LEE in a fierce and sanguinary series of battles, and had finally compelled him to a hasty and rather uncomfortable retreat from Richmond. But the real facts of the case are set forth by the New York organ of the rebellion, as follows:

"The great armies that have so long defended Richmond and Petersburg have removed to another quarter, where, in the estimation of their General, their valor and endurance can be made more available."

And again: "During that night the army moved out of both Richmond and Petersburg, and marched to take up the line of defense which had been determined on since the adoption of the Confederate policy of interior lines."

And once more: "Lee's army withdrawn intact, and tied no longer to one position, the Confederate forces have a more terrible duty today from the fastnesses of her vast interior."

LEE'S army "withdrawn intact" is good.

THE SONG OF THE BUGLE.

Out of my brazen throat each morn
I call the boy to the break of day,
And my hollow notes on the wind are borne
High over the hills and far away;
But first they wind through the drowsy camp,
Then on through the valley and over the hills
To find out where and wake they go
Till the mellow music the wide air fills.

The trooper starts from his bed on the ground
Where all night long he sleep has lain;
The war-horse neighs when he hears the sound
Float on through the air again at the dawn of day;
And the trooper buckles against his side
The trusty blade he has worn so long;
And away rush they to the field and the road
Wind the mellow notes of my morning song.

The wild bird hears it within his nest
High up in the tops of the tall pine-trees,
As he pours from out of his swelling breast
His one sweet song at the wandering breeze—
Then I call aloud from my hollow lungs,
"To horse to horse!" and the echoes hang,
And the wide woods echo as if through their breadth
A thousand clustering arms rang.

Then forward, and over the rugged way
Sound the hoofs of the sabres, the horses' loud tramp;
The sun looks out from the halls of day,
But views no longer a waking camp;
And out of my bronze throat I fling
A call that is heard in loud and clear,
That it rings through the misty vales and wakes
The slumbering echoes afar and near.

But louder then all are the notes I sound
When the foe is at last given to charge the foe;
Then the war-horse spurns with his hoof the ground,
And many a gallant trooper lies low
In the fiery ocean's terrible shock,
Where the dumb earth seems to hold its breath,
And eyes that kindled with ruddier fire
Are fixed in the glassy stare of death.

But a louder blast shall be heard one day
Than any which sounds from my hollow throat,
High over the hills and far away
Through the still air upon the song shall float;
But before the angel shall sound that call
War and famine and hate shall cease,
And the earth with her fruits and smiling flowers
Shall bloom through a thousand years of peace.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE SITUATION.

The result of the series of battles beginning March 29 and ending April 9 can hardly be estimated with any degree of accuracy. It can certainly best be summed up with him from the field of his defeat can half of his army. The estimate of rebel prisoners captured has been put at 25,000. Lee's loss in killed and wounded can scarcely be put down at less than 40,000. The stragglers and deserters can not be numbered.

General Sheridan telegraphs from Richmond that of railroad stock he found there 56 locomotives, 64 passenger and baggage cars, and 176 freight cars.

At 5.30 A.M. April 4 General Grant from Sutherland Station, the end of the railroad, telegraphs, and at 8.30 A.M. telegraphs as follows:

"Sheridan has just picked up one thousand two hundred prisoners to-day, and three hundred have come in since. We have captured a large train. The majority of the army that went in behind the Lee army are now well up to the rear between the Lee and Danville. The line of retreat is marked with artillery, ammunition, burned wagons, broken wagons, and exhausted horses, etc.

"The army is pressing on to-day."

The army has pressed on closely that the enemy have been forced to destroy probably the greater part of the transportation, artillery, and munitions of war. The number of prisoners captured yesterday will exceed 5000.

"From the best data to the present time our loss in killed, wounded, and captured will not probably reach 7000, of whom 1000 were captured, and a large part slightly wounded. I shall continue the pursuit as long as there appears to be any use in it."

NEWS ITEMS.

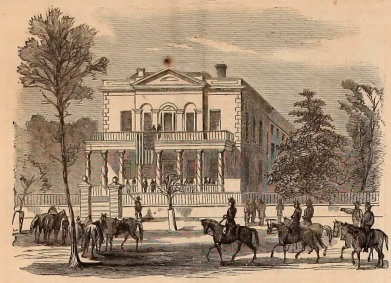
The funeral of General A. P. Hill, killed in the recent battles, was attended with military honors, just previous to the evacuation of Petersburg, General Lee and other distinguished officers being present. He was buried in the City Cemetery on the day of his death, the circumstances accompanying the reception of his remains being:

In the battle of Five Forks, on Saturday, April 1, Brevet Brigadier-General Washburn—cousin of Theodore Winthrop—was mortally wounded. The World correspondent that narrates the circumstances attending his death. He fell at once, and his men who loved him gathered around and took him tenderly to the rear, where he died before the stretcher on which he lay could be dispatched back for nothing more done. On the way from the field to the hospital he wandered in mind at times, crying out, "Captain Wardle you're in line! Take those men," recorded, etc.?" Whom he had been remustered for a guess he said: "Lincoln, I am done for." Then he wrote: "Straighten the line!" And he died peacefully. He was a cousin of Major Winthrop, who was killed at Big Bethel, and the brother-in-law of Mr. August Belmont.

He was twenty-seven years of age. I had talked with him before going into action, as he sat at the side of General Ayres, and was persuaded by the guard of honor to endure and look upon it. He was pale and beautiful, marble rather than corpse, and the uniform cut away from his broken sword how white and fresh was the body, so perfect, even now. General Griffin said to me: "This victory is not worth Winthrop's life."

Winthrop went into the service as a simple color-bearer. At his death he commanded a brigade in Ayres's Division of the Fifth Corps.

On the 31st of March the steam transport General Lyon, from Washington for Fortress Monroe, having on board between five and six hundred persons, including a number of soldiers and sailors and female followers, burned and sank five miles off Cape Hatteras, and was entirely consumed. The flames were lighted by a light colored woman, who was a lacrosse barrel, and in a very short time the whole vessel was ablaze. The New York Herald says that a schooner was both near the General Lyon while she was burning; but she immediately put on all sail and tried to give succor, very few of the unfortunate passengers could be rescued, owing to the high sea and strong gale. The scene is described as most heart-rending. Many, including Washington Forrest, a nephew of Edwin Forrest, swung the water to escape a fiery death, only to be swallowed up by the waves, while others remained on board and were scorched by the flames. Out of the entire number only thirty-five or forty are at the present time known to be saved, though hopes are entertained that some others may have been picked up.



The advance of General Stoneman's cavalry force, which recently moved from Knoxville, Tennessee, and which the rebels have reported as designed to strike Lynchburg, Virginia, effected and captured the town of Boone, North Carolina, on the 27th ult., after routing the rebels stationed there, inflicting on them a loss of ten killed and over sixty wounded. The rebel papers report that Stoneman's movements indicate that he has visited every alley, and that he is accompanied by the Fourth Corps of national infantry, under General Schofield, marching in a fast fifteen thousand men.

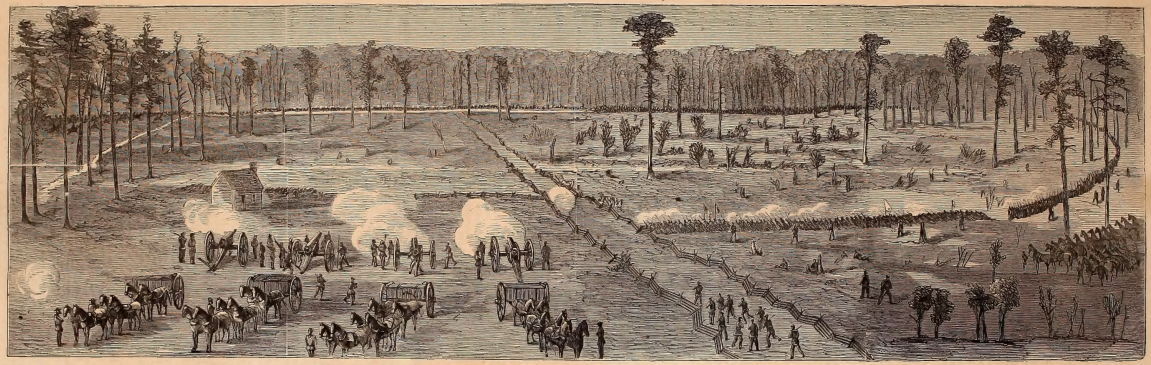
Admiral Dahlgren will resign the command of the Brooklyn Navy-yard on the 1st of May, and will be succeeded by Commodore Charles H. Bell.

The vote of New York on the Court of Appeals amendment, excepting Soldiers' Voting Bill, is 356,526 in favor, and 80,636 against. Only one-fifth of the vote of last November was polled.

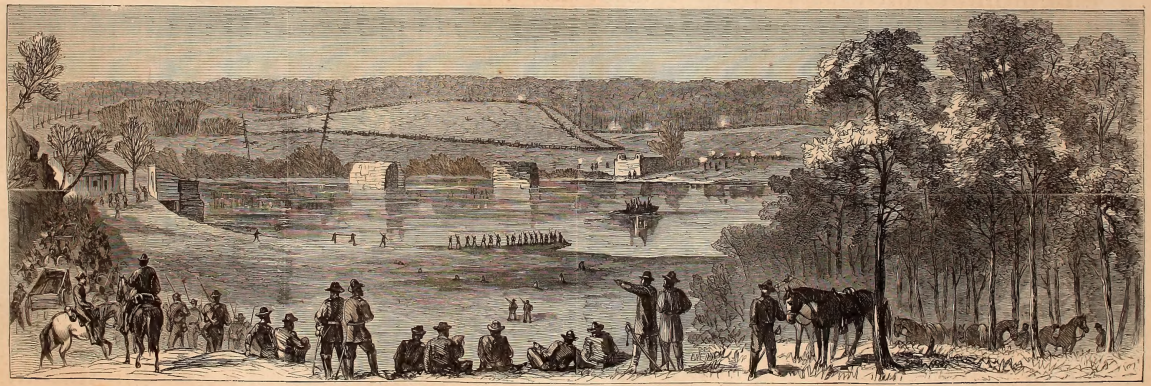
INTERESTING ITEMS.

SIGNOR MAZZINI and the Pope.—Signor Mazzini has published a manifesto in which he calls on Italy to remain quiet. Having shown the futility of the anathemas in that letter he says: "There is one Pope who blesses Italy, regards with reverence" when the Pope were the despotic and persecuting Pius the Ninth, and who blessed the dismission of justice and liberty for all, intrepid against all who sought to violate their purity and ready to sacrifice his faith, which then was the faith of the peoples, the Pope, from the hills to the Apennine centre, who raised and promoted the progress which Pio Nono now condemns." "But," he says, "the Pope of the Gospels and of the Word of princes at the present day. You reign through force, not through right. Your party is not national and Catholic, and the Sanctuary is surrounded by Neapolitan brigands upon whom you confer the name of soldiers, and by self-appointed champions of justice for the peoples who invoke God's liberty and equality. You have abandoned the principles of your own mission of justice and liberty for all, intrepid against all who sought to violate their purity and ready to sacrifice their faith, which then was the faith of the peoples, the Popes

THE REBEL GENERAL WADE HAMPTON'S MANSION IN COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA, HEADQUARTERS OF GENERAL LOGAN.—[SKETCHED BY W. WAUD.]



GENERAL WADE HAMPTON'S GARDEN, COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA. [SKETCHED BY W. WAUD.]



COLONEL WELLS, OF JONES'S BRIGADE, CROSSING THE NORTH EDISTO, SOUTH CAROLINA.—[SKETCHED BY W. WAUD.]

GENERAL SHERMAN AND STAFF CROSSING BROAD RIVER, SOUTH CAROLINA.—[SKETCHED BY W. WAUD.]

THE BATTLE AT BLACK RIVER, NEAR AVERYSBOROUGH, NORTH CAROLINA, MARCH 16, 1865.—[SKETCHED BY W. WAUD.]

LOGAN'S CORPS CROSSING THE SALUDA RIVER ABOVE COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA.—[SKETCHED BY W. WAUD.]

GENERAL GRANT'S VICTORY.

GENERAL LEE'S attack on GRANT'S right, south of the Appomattox, on Saturday the 25th of March, was the beginning of a series of battles which have resulted in the capture of Richmond and the abandonment by the rebel army of an intrenched line of works, the strongest, with the single exception of the line of works opposed to them, that were ever held by any army in any war. Through LEE made the first attack, GRANT had made the first move. The alternative was clearly forced upon General LEE either to break GRANT'S lines or to abandon his own. And it would not be long that even this alternative would be left him. On the midnight of Friday, the 24th, he knew that he must make his choice immediately, or he would soon have no choice at all. His attempt to avoid these humiliations against him would be to insure the capture of his army. These combinations were now nearly perfected—but not quite. SHERIDAN had not made his final move, but he was on the point of making it. THOMAS and STEADMAN had not quite come up on his westward and southern line of retreat—but they were swiftly coming up. SHERIDAN had not yet, in conjunction with GRANT'S army, secured a position on the Southside Railroad—but he would directly gain that position. LEE knew that GRANT'S army was already massed on the left for that very move.

"At this moment," thought LEE, "there is a single chance that I may by one move save my king from checkmate—just one move, and that must decide every thing. GRANT is comparatively weak on his right, this side of City Point, on the Appomattox, at a point held by the Ninth Army Corps: close up to the river is Fort Haskell's key, three-quarters of a mile then Hankle. This position at Hare's Hill is strong by nature—so much the better for me if by surprise and with overwhelming numbers I can force it. Just beyond it runs GRANT'S military railroad from City Point, completely commanded by the position. Fortunately, on this HARE'S HILL is just under my nose—there are not more than two hundred yards between it and my own lines. If then, tonight I can mass a strong force at this point, there is no short a space to be traversed by the assailing columns that the surprise will be quite complete. GRANT'S different army corps are scattered along a long line from within half a dozen miles of Richmond to Hatcher's Run, and it will be a difficult matter for him to bring up reinforcements in time to be available. Success at the outset is quite certain—success followed up may be final victory for my army. And even a partial success, maintained, may disturb GRANT'S calculations on my right."

In pursuance with this plan the attack was made. At the first blush Fort Stedman was taken—but that was all. Even so much could not be maintained. The fort was commanded by the Ninth Corps, and not less than 1800 prisoners, including forty or fifty officers, and thirteen or fourteen battle-flags were captured at the same time. The attack of the rebels, and the recapture of the fort, and the coming in of the prisoners we have illustrated in these issues 232 and 233.

LEE'S movement had utterly failed; and instead of disturbing GRANT'S calculations on LEE'S right had given an opportunity for the Union army to advance in that very direction. Immediately General LEE saw that he must leave Richmond and its intrenched camp at Petersburg. That he would now attempt to do this General GRANT knew, and hurried up batteries, withdrew the greater portion of ORD'S army from the north side of the James, and prepared to move the main portion of his army against the Southside Road. This movement General LEE in full strength and before he had actually begun to remove his army from its intrenchments. Thus what LEE intended should be a brief evacuation was transformed into a disastrous retreat with GRANT and SHERIDAN on his flank and rear. It was should only necessary for him to follow.

There was no delay in GRANT'S movements. SHERIDAN had scarcely made his junction with FORD before he was off on the 25th with a large force of infantry in co-operation. Away past GRANT'S extreme left—by General SHERIDAN'S own admirable Court House, with the Fifth Corps, under General WARREN, on his right. On Friday, the 31st, the Fifth Corps, having gained on the previous day a position on the Boydton Road, advanced against the White Oak Road farther to the west, found the rebels in force on Gravelly Run, and was driven back to the plank road again. Later in the day the ground lost was recovered. The repulse, however, in the forenoon, had given them quite a little trouble, and it was only at great sacrifice that he held the field against the enemy. Saturday's fighting consisted of two corps under Generals DEVIN and CUSTER, CROOK's division of cavalry, and a cavalry brigade under General MACKENZIE. On Saturday these, with the Fifth Corps, were placed under SHERIDAN'S command. On that day was fought the successful battle of Big Five Forks. The greater part of the day was consumed in driving the divisions of PICKETT and BUSHROD JOHNSON into their breast-works; and as soon as this had been accomplished, the Fifth Corps came in upon the rebel left, and after a desperate conflict an thousand of the enemy surrendered. Eight thousand muskets were taken, and twenty-eight battle-flags, with several pieces of artillery.

This success exposed LEE'S flank on the Appomattox, and at the same time permitted the destruction of the Southside Road. And now as GRANT had intelligence of SHERIDAN'S victory he ordered an advance on his right along the whole line. This was at 9 P.M. on Saturday. ORD and WRIGHT and PARKE had, ere an hour, passed the picket-line, and cast themselves en masse upon the enemy's lines before Petersburg. The rebel line was carried by assault. On Sunday night the national troops rested in the rebel intrenchments, their line extending from the Appomattox above Petersburg to the same river below. That night Petersburg itself was abandoned. The next morning GRANT started in pursuit toward Burkesville. The distance of Burkesville from Richmond is 52 miles.

The news of the capture of Petersburg had scarcely reached the War Department before it was followed by the announcement, that, at 8.15 A.M. on Monday morning, General WEITZEL had entered Richmond with the troops left on the north side of the James. Thus, after three days of fighting, the Confederacy was left without a capital, and its great army was put to flight.

In connection with the events of the past week, the sketch which we give on our first page of General GRANT'S Head-Quarters at City Point has a peculiar interest.

SKETCHES FROM SHERMAN'S ARMY.

WE continue this week our illustrations of General SHERMAN'S march through the Carolinas. Not the least interesting of these are those engraved on pages 228 and 229, illustrating the actions at Averysborough and Bentonsville.

SHERMAN started from Fayetteville for Goldsborough on the 14th. The successes already gained by General SCHOFIELD had made the Neuse River immediately available as a base of operations. The country in his front was now stronger than he had been at any other stage of the march. BRAGG and HARDEE had joined GARDNER, to whom had been assigned the conduct of the campaign in North Carolina on the part of the Confederates. It was probable, therefore, that, in the march to the Neuse, SHERMAN would have to measure his strength against JOHNSTON, and he made his arrangements with a view to that event. The army was divided into two, while the wagon-trains, were dispatched on the road to Goldsborough. Another column, headed by KILPATRICK, and consisting of the division of the Twentieth and two of the Fourteenth corps, advanced on the road to Raleigh, by way of Fayetteville and Smithfield. A command being between this column and HOWARD. KILPATRICK met the enemy's cavalry about five miles from Fayetteville on the evening of the 15th. His infantry supports coming up, he attacked and drove the enemy from his advanced line, capturing three guns and 200 men. The Confederates fell back to Moore's Cross Roads, near Averysborough, where they held a strong position, between Cape Fear and Black Rivers, with a swamp in front. On the 16th there was fighting all day, which made such an impression upon the enemy that during the night following they left us in full the way was uncovered for the army to advance on Goldsborough. Their force, as ascertained by a prisoner, was estimated as less than 800; JOHNSTON states his as 450, and extravagantly surrenders SHERMAN'S whole army. The loss of the enemy's dead and wounded were left on the field. Among the prisoners captured was Colonel RHETT, son of the governor of South Carolina.

Another battle was fought near Bentonville, 12 miles from the Neuse. Here the enemy was found strongly intrenched on the 19th. In an attempt to flank this position a portion of the Twentieth Corps sustained a repulse, taking advantages of which the enemy assaulted the left centre of the whole line. A new line was formed, behind hasty intrenchments. The enemy made five charges upon this position, and was each time repulsed. At night he retired, just as at Averysborough. SHERMAN'S loss was less than 2000, while JOHNSTON'S was estimated at 3000. On the 20th SHERMAN attacked with his whole army, and the enemy that night fell back to Smithfield, and Saturday night by way of Clayborough, which SCHOFIELD had already occupied. DEVIN'S column had also come up from Wilmington. The three armies had formed a junction on the very day appointed by SHERMAN.

In connection with our illustrations from General SHERMAN'S army we have the opportunity to make amends to our excellent artist, MR. WILLIAM WAUD, for an error in our last week's issue, in attributing to another artist three of his sketches, viz.: "The Fifteenth Corps crossing the South Edisto;" "Raising the Stars and Stripes at Columbia," and "Burning bales;" and "The Charge of Weaver's Brigade across the Salkehatchie."

THE CAMP OF REBEL PRISONERS AT ELMIRA.

THE National Government has, since last July, founded a large camp for rebel prisoners at Elmira, an encampment formed at Elmira, in the State of New York, distant 277 miles from New York City, on the Erie Railroad. We give on page 236 a view of this encampment, taken from the "Observatory," which built upon the public cemetery hill, from which is daily visited by a multitude of curious persons, who pay the proprietor of the Observatory at the rate of ten cents each for the privilege to have a peep at the formidable captives. The inclosure within which these prisoners are confined is a space of some twenty acres, bounded with a broad river running in the rear, and high walls on every side. Here about 10,000 of the rebel soldiers who have fallen into our hands are kept in full for safe custody, lodging in the wooden huts or in the canvas tents shown in our engraving. Rations are posted all round on the walls, in such a position that they can have a clear view of every thing within the camp, while the movements of the sentries themselves can not be watched by the prisoners. At night the whole place is lighted up with kerosene oil lamps. A number of prisoners are allowed to mix with the prisoners and inform the Commandant of any plots which they may form to escape. Notwithstanding these precautions, an attempt was made, at the end of November, by about 300 of them, to dig a trench underground, from one of the hospitals to the wall, intending to pass under the wall, and get out beyond. This scheme was, however, detected, and their escape prevented, on the night which they had fixed. The prisoners at Elmira are well fed and clothed, and there is an efficient medical staff to attend upon the sick. They amuse themselves with reading and writing, or making toys and other small articles for sale.

GOD HELP THE POOR.

God help the poor who on this wintry morn
Come forth of alleys dim and courts obscure.
God help the poor pale girl who drops forlorn,
And sweakly her afflicted cash endure.
God help the outcast lamb! she trembling stands,
All wan her lips, and frozen red her hands;
Her mournful hands are modestly down cast;
Her right hand lifteth not a mouse on the first shall;
Her bosom, pansing fair, is half revealed,
And oh! so cold the snow lies there congealed;
Yet she is modest for these all vast and weak,
God help thee, outcast lamb, who standst forlorn!
God help the poor!

God help the poor! another have I found,
A bow'd and venerable man is he;
His shoulder has a heavy load to bound;
His coat is gray, and threadbare, too, I see;
"The rubs winds" seem "to mock his hoary hair,"
His shirtless bosom to the blast is bare.
Anon he hums and casts a wistful eye,
And with scant napkin wipes the blinding spray,
And looks again as if he fain would spy
Friends he hath feasted in his better day.
Ah, some are dead, and some have long forborne
To know the poor; and he is left forlorn,
God help the poor!

"IT WILL OUT."

THE 16th of October, 1712, a fête-day in the little town of St. Denis, near Marcilles, was celebrated over, a day of reconciliation in the family of the Sieur de Sala, a retired officer of distinction, inhabiting a handsome villa just beyond the town.

This gentleman's family consisted of seven children, viz.: two daughters (professed nuns) and five sons: Antoine (a lieutenant in the navy), Jean-Baptiste, François-Guillaume, Etienne-Gayetan (in the army), and Louis-Claud, a lad of thirteen.

M. de Sala, the father, had married a woman twenty-two years his junior—very beautiful, but of a violent, impetuous temper. Their married life had consequently been one series of bitter quarrels and hollow reconciliations. In all these Madame de Sala had never shown a trait of one opposite nature, that of weakening the bonds of duty and affection between the children and their father, and attaching the former exclusively to herself; an aim in which, as will be seen, she had been but too successful.

On the day above-mentioned, M. de Sala had been induced by his wife to accept an invitation to dine, a grave dereliction of duty, in having married, without consent, the pretty penniless daughter of M. Sendon, one of his tenants.

The reconciliation was, however, complete; and the old gentleman had insisted upon his son's remaining to dinner, though engaged to partake of that meal with his father-in-law.

The dinner passed off with unwonted good humor and cordiality, and Madame de Sala had withdrawn to her own apartment, when François-Guillaume, happening to pass by the door, applied to his father for some money for the purpose. Now it was one of the mother's plans for maintaining her ascendency with the children, to be herself their purse-bearer. Her husband, therefore, unprepared for his son's request, and having, indeed, but little in spare, unbuttoned the coat of such ancient value that the latter conceived himself insulted.

This may seem a trifling cause for anger. In point of fact, it was the breaking forth of that hidden fire which had never ceased to smoulder in the hearts of all the unnatural children of Madame de Sala.

The latter becoming irritated in his turn, words rose higher and higher; others (especially the newly-promoted Jean-Baptiste) joined in the quarrel, and finally, Madame de Sala, rushing in, and taking the part of her sons, increased their fury tenfold. As Jean-Baptiste Guillaume, she presented with vituperating his father, in his maniacal rage drew his sword.

At this last outrage M. de Sala started from his seat, and summoning a Turkish servant—one Hassan-all—bade him saddle a horse, loudly declaring his intention to proceed straight to Marseilles and lodge a formal complaint against his unnatural children.

Not reflecting that the parent who threatens most loudly is often the slowest to execute, and completely blinded by the flames de Sala's extreme fury her sons to oppose their father's exit, assuring them that, should he do as he had threatened, their ruin was inevitable.

The old gentleman persisting, a desperate struggle commenced, the maddened woman actually dragging him by the hair of his head, while one of the sons secured his arms and legs. Thus overpowered, he was flung to the ground, and, in falling, received a blow that caused a wound so deep as almost to render him unconscious. Rallying a little, the unhappy father appealed in touching terms to his cruel assailants:

"What have I done to you, boys, that you treat me as though I were your bitterest enemy? Have I ever ceased to obey and honor me as a father, at least remember that we are still united in a common humanity. Look at these grey hairs! Will my own children be my murderers?"

Finding his remonstrances produce no effect, M. de Sala now made a desperate attempt to rise, and was probably in attempting to strike this that Jean-Baptiste grasped him so tightly by the throat as to reduce him to complete insensibility. In fact, whether or not he died at this instant was never fully known. What is certain is, that the guilty fiend felt they had now gone too far to recede; and, with clutching, convulsive hands, and—it was said —the sword of François-Guillaume, made their horrible work complete.

During the frightful scene the younger son, Louis-Claud, had crouched weeping in a corner, longing, but not daring, to succor his father. For a similar reason the Turkish servant had remained inactive. The only other domestic, Susanne Borelli, was absent at the fête.

No sooner was the parricide consummated than dismay succeeded. The actors in this tragedy, disordered, breathless, flecked with blood, stood gaping in each other's white faces, as though they were not what next to do. The bright autumn sun streamed in full upon the remotest figure of their victim. They almost recoiled before the murdered despoiler; but as yet there was no voice of vengeance. "Patience, because eternal," says Tertullian.

The hideous deed was, however, soon aroused them to action; and she whose influence had brought about the deed was the first to regain collected self-command to take measures for averting its consequences. Aware that the chief danger lay in the chance of some one of the party, in the first access of what had passed, involuntarily betraying himself and the rest, she assumed a calmness she was far from feeling, and affected to treat the matter in the light of a mere misadventure.

She had the firmness to search her husband's pockets, and take his keys and money. Of the latter she gave a portion to François-Guillaume, desiring him to go, as he had proposed, to the fête; but to return early, and help in "putting things to rights."

She ordered Jean-Baptiste and Hassan-Ali to convey the body to a chamber on the top floor, and bring the key to her.

Her next step was cool. She sent Louis-César to the curate, M. Senelon, requesting his attendance; and, on his arrival, quietly informed him that her husband—her two eldest sons and François-Guillaume had killed their father.

If Madame de Sala had judged M. Senelon aright. Heroic-stoic as he was, he was not the man by himself to denounce the husband of his child. Committed, therefore, to utter concealment under the atrocious crime, he suggested that the body should be placed in bed, and that it should be given out that M. de Sala had died of apoplexy.

On learning, however, that the marks of violence were too apparent for this explanation, the curate proposed that the body should be left there as an upper window into the garden, dressed as it was, and with the finger still retaining the ring of a bridegroom which another day would be celebrating to reach which it might be surmised that M. de Sala had overheated himself and fallen. Having, as he was, free, front and after the fact, accomplice, the curate turned to withdraw; but passing on the threshold, spoke a parting word:

"Though I have consented—against my conscience and my duty—to aid in the present concealment of this unnatural and terrible deed, I am sure that no human craft or caution will secure your permanent safety. Prepare yourselves, by your Easter Duty, for the inevitable judgment of God."

Now was seen a curious feature of humanity. Jean-Baptiste, who had been foremost in the murderous assault, trembled from head to foot at the very thought of the fresh indignity he was called on to inflict upon the senseless corpse. He at first positively refused to lay a finger on the body: and it required all the influence of his mother to overcome his repugnance. As it was, he was seized with a deadly sickness at last; and the disfigurements that fell prone among the crushed flowers was hardly more livid and corpse-like than he who dropped it there. As for Madame de Sala, she only by this time regained all her natural self-possession, she neglected nothing that might further the deceit. She threw her husband's cloak over the body; and then going down to her hen-house, killed some fowls, and sprinkled the blood about the prostrate body.

In a few minutes more she had convened the neighbors that something had happened at the house of De Sala; and there, rushing in, found the family on the eve of lifting the dead body from the floor. It was placed upon the nearest couch, amidst tears and shrieks; and every means for restoring animation resorted to with well-acted assiduity. These exhausted, Madame de Sala gave herself up to the wildest grief, bewailing her hasty, and exhibiting very token of despair; the rest, each according to his several gift, imitating as best they might.

A magistrate now arrived, got sworn and by two surgeons, examined the body. Not the slightest suspicion of foul play visited their minds. The medical men reported that M. de Sala had died from injuries received in an accidental fall; and the bereaved family were quickly left to the free indulgence of their sorrow.

This satisfactory proceeding removed a great source of anxiety. The whole party, excepting the young Louis-César, now assembled in the rich renewed courage, the mother assuring them that, were they but true to themselves, their future life would be for happier and more peaceful than hitherto.

Matters did go on for some months with a tranquility labored and unnatural, but still unhappy home, when a little cloud made its appearance above their horizon. M. de Sala had possessed but slender means to begin with, and had received from government. The family soon began to feel the pressure of poverty and, finding their resources all but exhausted, resolved on the sale. Accordingly, of Antoine, already provided for—wrote a joint letter to their uncle, the Count de Sala, describing in touching terms their destitute position, and entreating his influence to ameliorate it. In answer to their application, the count conferred on the family a pension of six hundred livres a year.

In this interval, certain suspicions having arisen in the minds of the two elder sons, Antoine and the sailor and Etienne-Gayetan the soldier, these two arranged a joint visit to their home: and, taking their youngest brother apart, subjected the lad to so close and searching an examination, that he ended by divulging the horrible secret, and describing minutely the tragedy of which he had been a witness. There followed a family consultation, in which fresh pledges for the concealment of the secret were exchanged, and these would probably have been observed had not the allowance granted by the count proved a source of fatal division. Madame de Salis insisted that this money should be paid over to her, as most competent to use it for the general benefit. To this her sons, who had ceased to treat her with their wonted deference, demurred; and the party separated, Madame de Salis repairing to Aix, Guillaume-François and Etienne-Gayetan remaining at St. Barnabé, Jean-Baptiste and Louis-César taking up their residence at Marseilles.

It was not without opposition from Jean-Baptiste that Etienne-Gayetan took possession of the paternal mansion, etc. The latter's object, however, had not been a selfish one. He was a good economist, and believed himself capable of developing the resources of the little property for the advantage of all. An angry correspondence followed between the two brothers, and ended at such a point that Etienne-Gayetan was induced to remind his elder that not only the landed estate, but his life, were at the mercy of the man he vilified. Jean-Baptiste was of violent and headstrong disposition. The threat only strengthened his hate. Whether he was transported beyond himself, or whether he secretly believed that his brother would never take the step at which he subsequently hinted, at all events he replied with disdain and defiance. Thereupon Etienne-Gayetan seized his pen, and, with pulses still throbbing, wrote to an old comrade of his brother, the Marquis de Montolieu—a precise detail of the frightful transaction.

Scarcely had the marquis read and reflected on this startling communication when a visitor was announced—Louis-César. The latter's object passed at this interview never appeared. It ended, however, in the lad's dismissal, carrying with him the letter, and a verbal caution to silence. Whether the marquis probably believed would suffice to induce the accused either to stand forward and clear himself, or to rid the country of his presence.

Jean-Baptiste resolved to attempt the former. In great alarm he wrote hastily to Marseilles, and, with much ingenuity and no small eloquence, cast the whole guilt of the murder upon his mother and his brother Guillaume-François. These were already two traitors to the guilty compact. Another quickly succeeded.

Madame de Salis, made aware of the quarrel among her sons and the threats of Etienne-Gayetan, became extremely uneasy. She lost sleep and appetite. Fire mind perpetually recalled the scene of murder with sensations of horror and dread such as had not accompanied even the act itself. A consciousness of impending vengeance overwhelmed her with every idea that crossed her mind, with every habitual movement of the day, with every nightly vision. At length, in despair of other means of saving herself, she wrote to the Count de Salis, her brother-in-law, revealing the black secret in all its atrocity, but laying it to the charge of Jean-Baptiste alone.

The horror with which her correspondent received this information may be conceived. It was some time before he could collect himself sufficiently to make a reply. When he did so, it was conceived in the following terms:

"I forward to you, my dear sister, a letter which has been addressed to me under cover to you. It is probably from some enemy, who has copied your handwriting so skillfully that one might almost swear it was your own. Therefore it forthwith, and be careful to give no ground for attacks of such a character from any one whomsoever. I shall write to my brother's old friend, the Marquis de Montolieu, recommending my nephews to his care, in the hope that he may be able to reconcile their differences, and recall them to their filial duty."

Meanwhile the letter of Jean-Baptiste to M. de Montolieu had thrown the latter into the greatest consternation. Of the murder he entertained not the slightest doubt. The question which perpetually slily presented itself to his conscience was, whether, or for how long, he should suffer the actors in a crime of such atrocity to pollute society with their presence. After much consideration he resolved to confide the matter to an intimate friend, the Marquis de Caveyrac, and, accordingly, the latter transmitted the whole fatal history, intimating, at the same time, his determination to isolate the guilty family from society.

The Marquis de Cavoy immediately communicated with the Count de Salis, proposing to use their united influence to obtain a private banishment. But to this the count objected that his object—that of keeping the matter quiet—would be defeated, as the king would publicly inquire the grounds of the application for the lettre de cachet, and, on learning them, would, with equal certainty, deliver the criminals into the hands of justice. He promised, however, to write a soothing letter to M. de Montolieu, and also to restore peace in the divided family.

Up to this moment, it will be seen, the prudence and sagacity of the Count de Salis had not exceeded the danger that had been caused by the imprudence of Madame de Salis and her sons. But divine justice had decreed the revelation of these crimes, and brought about this result in an unexpected manner.

The Count de Salis, before permitting his friend the Marquis de Cavoy to depart, had received from him a promise to destroy the letter of M. de Montolieu, which he had left in his cabinet. On returning home the marquis, mindful of his promise, took out the letter and placed it in his pocket, intending to burn it in a brasier in the hall. As he entered that apartment, a servant announced a messenger from the minister of justice, M. de Pontchartrain, who desired to see him instantly on a political matter of importance, on which they had already several times conferred.

De Cavoy hastened to the minister's residence, and a discussion, which drove the business of the morning entirely from his mind, ended in M. de Pontchartrain requesting his friend to leave with him all the papers connected with the subject of their consultation, and to visit him again on the following day.

An hour later, as the statesman still sat in meditation, the documents before him, a strange expression in one of them chanced to catch his eye—"atrocious murder." He took up the paper and read it from beginning to end. It was the letter of the Marquis de Montolieu!

It at once occurred to the astute minister that his friend had purposely done him the honour of bringing the affair to his knowledge, with the view of avoiding the painful duty of coming forward as actual informer. In any case, however, M. de Pontchartrain felt that there was but one course open to him; and this he at once adopted. Going straight to the palace, he placed the matter before the king. The latter, struck with horror, directed that the parties should be immediately arrested, and that M. Lebret, president of Provence, and M. Lagarde, procureur-general, should take measures for bringing them to condign punishment.

Early on the succeeding day M. de Cavoy, having discovered the loss of his letter, made his appearance in a state of disorder at the minister's house, and desired leave to examine the documents he had left. M. de Pontchartrain at once informed him of what had been done, manifesting at the same time the impression he had conceived that such a proceeding would be in accordance with his visitor's wishes, since it was not to be supposed that he (the latter) would knowingly cast a veil over so horrible a crime. M. de Cavoy retired without reply.

It so happened that M. Lagarde was stopping at the house of M. le Bret when the missive conveying the king's command was delivered to the latter. Both these gentlemen had been personally acquainted with M. de Salis and his family; both were alike in slumber-struck at the dreadful intelligence.

M. Lagarde avowed his entire disbelief. That Madame de Salis was possessed of a warm temper, had been generally remarked; but that that lady, and her orderly and seemingly dutiful children, should have been guilty of such a diabolical crime, appeared positively incredible.

His host agreed with him. It was now eight months since this supposed murder. The narcotraites had attended at the time; the surgeons had made their report. Such charges were not unprecedented, as the case of Madame Barnadine, who had a grudge against some unfortunate family.

But on M. Lagarde's arriving at his own house, he found a communication awaiting him from M. de Pontchartrain, in which the crime, with all its details, was fully set forth. He was enjoined to lose not a moment in repairing to Aix-en-Provence; and accordingly issued the necessary directions, in pursuance of which lieutenant of police Bernet, with an escort of archers, proceeded to St. Barnabé, and quietly surrounding the house, arrested the two sons, Guillaume-François and Etienne-Gayetan, in their beds.

Finding that Jean-Baptiste and Louis-César were still at Marseilles, the former sent instructions to write to their brothers, proposing a general family council, for the arrangement of their affairs; and that they should, for that purpose, come on the morrow to St. Barnabé.

Bonnet himself, attended by three archers in disguise, was the bearer of the letter. Then, after a minute's hesitation, returned a verbal answer, to the effect that if Jean-Baptiste was in Provence they their letter come to him at Marseilles. Thereupon Bonnet placed both brothers in the custody of his archers.

But a few hours elapsed before the indefatigable lieutenant made his appearance in the apartment of Madame de Salis in the house of her friend, M. Ailland, of Aix. On learning his errand the unhappy woman fell into a paroxysm of grief and terror. She came to a full confession of all that she would not quit the house without a promise that she should have an interview with the procureur-general. The latter was summoned, and received for his wish; but the interview, as that several persons were present, at which, as expected, the result beneficial to the prisoner; and she was then lodged in the prison at Marseilles, within whose gloomy walls she remained for the space of a year.

The king now reiterated his commands that the process should be commenced without a day's delay. But, in the then state of the public security cause, no care had been taken to separate the accused from each other. In consequence, they had concerted a line of defense which baffled the first investigation, if adhered to, to defeat the ends of justice.

The first important witness was the Turk, Hassan-Ali, who deposed to the death of his slave, and occasioned by a fall from the window while feeding a pet bull-finch.

This dreaded witness having thus delivered himself, a zealous friend of the accused hastened to smuggle him away into a place of concealment, whence, however, in the man's clemency he awakened suspicion in the mind of the experienced procureur-general. The latter, therefore, had the lieutenant for not having included this witness among his prisoners.

The lieutenant replied that, the minister of justice having limited his instructions to the arrest of the mother and sons—while aware of the presence of this death-struck Turk—he had not conceived he had naturally concluded that there was a certain object in thus leaving the man at liberty. The matter was quickly settled through the intervention of the Turk himself, who, venturing from his retreat, was rearrested, and lodged in jail.

In the mean time the second witness, Susanna Borelli, had undergone examination, but had revealed nothing of importance. It was manifestly on Hassan-Ali that the prosecution would be compelled to rely. To extort the truth from him all means were employed in vain. He was first passed through two protracted interrogatories without approaching a jot nearer to the truth. It was then resolved to place him in a dungeon, upon bread-and-water; and the effect of this system was soon apparent.

Hassan-Ali purchased an improved state of things by denouncing Guillaume-François as the parricide, and faintly implicating Jean-Baptiste. The two were consequently placed in separate cells. But here the matter seemed to rest. So long as both were silent the testimony of Hassan-Ali was innocuous.

Five months elapsed, when the Turk suddenly requested leave to amend his former statement; and now exonerated Madame de Salis and Guillaume-François, declaring that Jean-Baptiste alone was guilty.

In addition to this testimony, other parties came forward to declare that Madame de Salis had expressed her intention to practise upon her husband with some slow poison that should at least confine him to his bed, and thus leave her the sole direction of the household.

This was confirmed by Jean-Baptiste, who acknowledged that his mother had on occasional occasions sent him to purchase the drugs—which, however, the chemist had refused to furnish.

Finding the tide set so strongly against her—and inspired, above all, with resentment against Jean-Baptiste—Madame de Salis now resolved to take her turn at confession, and accordingly denounced the former as the sole assassin. She declared that her only reason for reserve had been a natural reluctance to betray her son to the scaffold; but that since Hassan-Ali had evidently been tampered with on his behalf, and been prevailed on to implicate herself and Guillaume-François, she now resolved to declare the truth.

Invited to confirm this statement with her letter to M. de Montolieu, she denied the inference attempted to be drawn from the latter—and (for M. de Montolieu had died in the interval) this point was abandoned.

The mother and son were then confronted. The latter still persisted; he listened in silence to her deposition; then addressed her in a low, quiet tone, as follows:

"Can you, in your conscience, mother, persist in a statement that casts upon me—the least guilty—the whole responsibility of a crime? Was it not Guillaume-François who drew his sword upon my father? Did not you yourself, at the first consultation, declare that, in the event of your assailment, seize our victim by the hair, and, when he was flung to the ground, assist in trying to strangle him? Was it not Guillaume-François who struck him on the temple with the sword, while I in vain strove to stanch the flowing blood?"

His mother replied not without reply; and now the other two brothers, Guillaume-François and Louis-César (the guilty and the innocent), added their confirmation to general effect. Jean-Baptiste, to exonerate their mother, and to lay the crime on Jean-Baptiste.

The process, which had lasted nearly twelve months, at length terminated with the following decrees:

"Jean-Baptiste—guilty of murder and parricide, condemned to have both hands cut off; his arms, legs, thighs, and body broken; and broken afterward to be fixed upon the wheel, there to linger so long as God shall please; after which his body to be burned and reduced to the winds. A fine of ten livres to the king.

"Guillaume - François, the same, quoting one hand.

"Louis-César—guilty of not interposing—condemned to be banished perpetually from all provinces; then to perpetual banishment.

"Madame de Salis—for aiding in the murder—sentenced to decapitation.

"Hassan-Ali—for failing to assist his master—to stand for two hours in the pillory.

"Etienne-Gayetan and Susanne Borelli, acquitted."

An appeal having been subsequently made against the sentence, the whole of the prisoners were conveyed to Aix, where the mother was lodged in a chamber of the Conciergerie, and the brothers, Jean-Baptiste and Guillaume-François, in separate cells.

The case had by this time created an extraordinary sensation; and when at length the judgment on appeal was delivered, the tribunal-court-yard was evinced by all ranks to obtain a place of hearing.

The impression in hall of the Palais de Justice was crowded with persons of the highest distinction, not a few of whom were connected by family ties with the accused. The latter, as before, appeared, with some slight modifications, the former sentence.

It was expected that Madame de Salis would have fallen into a swoon when called to the dock; on the contrary, she bowed her head submissively, only murmuring,

"Oh, se rend pas justice!" ("They do not do me justice").

Justice, that is, to her crime; for it appeared that her sentence was never fully awakened, and that she desired only to make what atonement was possible to God and man.

In the conciergerie was met in an adjoining apartment. They were to see each other but once again—on the scaffold. At six o'clock they were to die.

Jean-Baptiste, holding up his heavy chains with both hands, knelt to his mother first, and entreated pardon for the testimony he had been compelled to give.

Madame de Salis knelt likewise, embraced her son, and assured him of her complete forgiveness. Then, addressing her children generally:

"They are about," she said, "to separate them mortal frames; but our souls, let us humbly trust, shall be reunited in heaven. Thank we God, who has brought us to this just and merciful condemnation. Think no more of the life we quit, but of that to which we are hastening. Adieu, my children! I led you to this guilt; I will precede you to its punishment."

There followed a brief dialogue between Jean-Baptiste and François-Guillaume. The latter had preserved a somewhat sullen demeanor, and was disposed to deny his fatal participation in the murder.

"You will forgive me, brother," said the elder, "for having confessed the truth?"

"You have not always kept to the truth."

"But are right as to the first interrogatory, but not the latter," was the reply; "and you yourself, François, have done as much."

"Well, that is true; and I—I wish—"

And François, melting, threw himself into his brother's arms.

"For my part," continued the latter, "I never truly believed that Heaven would suffer such an act to go unpunished. I never passed the place of execution at Aix without repeating to myself, 'There I must end my life; it is but a question of days.' There is but one thing that troubles me—the thought of my poor wife and children. They will but burn my corpse. They should rather give my body living to the flame."

A Capuchin informed the speaker that he would not be left to linger on the wheel. They would accord him the parricide-axe.

"Still further mitigation!" exclaimed the prisoner. "Do they think I can not bear all that my guilt deserves? I ought to linger, and for one, but many days—ay, many weeks. They should tear from me each day some fragment of this guilty frame. It is my desire to be made my last sigh in the midst of the worst pangs justice can inflict."

The wretched family engaged separately in devotional exercises for the intervening hours. At six o'clock the executioners entered the prison, and Madame de Salis was the first to appear. She shed tears, but was otherwise calm and self-possessed. She frequently pressed her lips to the crucifix she carried, murmuring:

"Mother of grace, Mother of mercy, defend us from the shoults of the enemy of souls!"

Francois followed. He stretched out his arms to the assistants.

"Bind these impious hands," he said, "stained with a parent's blood. They should not only be bound, but burned in a slow fire."

Madame de Salis then knelt before the altar, and uttered a prayer that touched the hearts of all:

"My God, I offer Thee my spirit, my heart, my soul, and my body in reparation of the evil I call upon Thee; my heart, because it loves but Thee; my soul, because it pants for Thy presence; my body, that it may be offered in fitting expiation of my crime. I offer Thee this head, about to fall; and would that I had ten thousand, that I might offer them all!"

The condemned exchanged a last embrace, and the procession was then formed; the two sons being placed between two priests, and Madame following, supported by the Turk, Hassan-Ali, in another. An immense multitude lined the way; and although a profound silence was observed on the occasion, it had frequently to halt while room was made to pass.

Arrived opposite the church of St. Sauveur, the carts drew up before the door, in order that the usual amende honorable might be made. But the criminals were not required to descend. The reverend director of the Capuchins performed this humble function in their name, extending pardon of God, the king, and the law.

The cart which bore the two brothers being the first to reach the scaffold, they were assisted to mount the steps; and the crowd, ever awake to the minutest circumstances that mark these solemn moments, did not fail to observe that, coincidence, perhaps intended by divine justice, that Guillaume-François, who had been the first to consummate the fatal quarrel, was the first to set foot on the platform.

Seeing her sons ascending before her, Madame de Salis became much agitated, declaring that the authorities had broken faith with her, having promised that she should be first to die.

Her confessor assured her it was merely a proceeding rendered necessary by the relative position of the vehicles, and pointed out to her the executioner, hastening to assist her to ascend. In another minute she was standing on the platform, with her dress contented look; and turning to the people, besought, in low, humble tones, their prayers for herself and her children.

Turning to the executioner, she said, "My friend, I do not fear death; but lest, in my agony, my woman's modesty should prove too weak, I pray you not to put me to any needless pain."

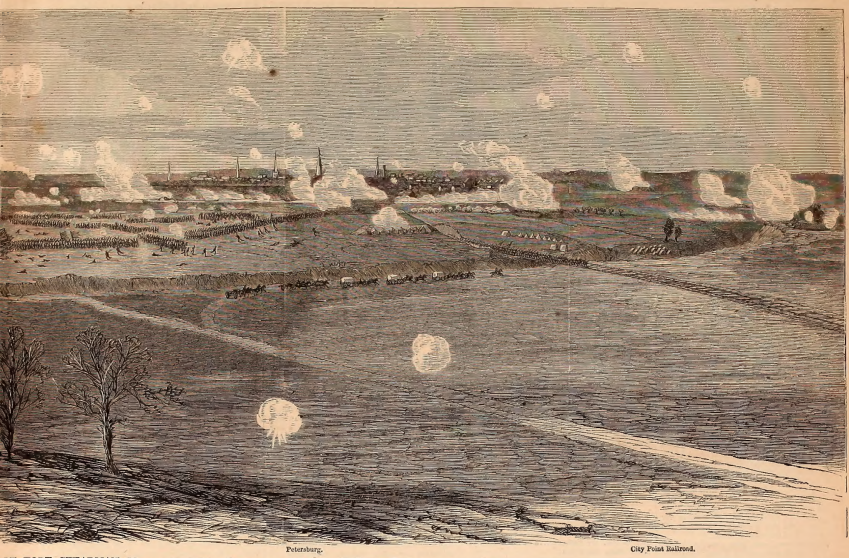
The executioner took off a black scarf she had hitherto worn on her head, and bound over her eyes. She then moved in the direction of the block, and feeling for it, knelt and laid her head quietly down. The executioner which then struck the blade close to the slender white neck—raised it aloft—struck. The head dropped forward; and though the victim was dead, it needed the application of a knife to complete the decapitation. Head and body were then placed together in a coffin, and Guillaume-François was the next summoned.

He had heard the fatal blow, although from intervening objects he had not seen it; its witness it, and was filled with fear at what was over. He desired to see the body. The confessor, fearing the sight would unman him, objected; but the young man persisting, he was conducted to the side of the coffin. With one deep sigh he turned away and strode to the block, laying his right hand upon it.

"This," he said, "is my first expiation—this impious hand. Take it quickly."

The executioner, struck so unskillfully, that the blow was not wholly effectual; and in the sudden anguish the young man uttered a loud cry. A second blow divided the remaining muscles; then Guillaume-François laid down his head. The same want of skill caused the headsman again to fail in doing his office at one blow; for though he struck with such force that the criminal was slain and the block itself shattered, it needed a second stroke to make the work complete.

Jean-Baptiste came forward with firm step and unchanged look. The hands had been removed, and a huge and heavy cross substituted. To this, his upper garments having been removed, the patient was now firmly bound; this done, his hands were struck off, one after the other; then the brawny headsman, seizing a ponderous iron bar, broke in succession his legs and thighs, and finally dealt him three several blows on the stomach, chest, and head. With his last was the "pardon-stroke," instantly mortal.



Thus came this murder "out."

THE FINAL CHARGE OF THE NINTH ARMY CORPS AND RECAPTURE

THE REBEL ATTACK ON FORT STEADMAN, MARCH 25, 1865.

OF FORT STEADMAN, MARCH 25, 1865.—[SKETCHED BY ANDREW M'CALLUM.]

REBEL PRISONERS COMING IN TO THE HEAD-QUARTERS, FIRST DIVISION, NINTH CORPS, MARCH 25, 1865.—[SKETCHED BY ANDREW M'CALLUM.]

MAUREEN LACEY.

I.

MAUREEN'S long day's work in the open air was almost over, and she stood knee-deep in the heather, binding her bundle of broom with a rope of straw. Round and round about her swept the sad, barren Island, very sad and very barren at such a season, and such an hour.

The girl had a good walk before her. Swinging her burden on her shoulders, she set out at a brisk pace. There was not a sound in the air but the screaming of some sea-mews round a pool, or now and then a whirring sound of wings, as a sudden flight of moor-fowl rushed past overhead.

Presently a more homely sound stole over the air. Some one was shuffling on the path behind Maureen. Hearing this, she quickened her steps, with a toss of her head, her face, and tightness of breath. But the following foot came surely on. Its pace was swifter than hers.

"Save ye, Maureen!" said a genial voice beside her. "Give us the bunch. Yer fair broke in two halves with the weight of it."

This speaker was a stalwart young fisherman, with as much eagerness in his bronzed kindling face as there had been haste in his pursuing step, Maureen stopped short, and looked at him with a proud troubled directness in her eyes.

"What for should I give you my bun'le, Mike Tierney? It's quite steady, strong."

"You just carry yer own burdles, and I'll carry mine. That's the safest that I can see unless we both do."

She gave her burden a resolute jerk, and began plodding on more steadily than before. But Mike kept by her footsteps.

"It's always the hard word with you, Maureen," he said, bitterly. "It's often a throuble to me wonderin' if I was to write for a hondred years, or a thousan smile, would you give me that same in the end?"

"Just as likely not," said Maureen, shortly. "If ye have so little to do with yer time begin and work for girls that has the world light on their shoulthers. There's plinty, I doubt it, for you to make love to this 'without waitin' for the hoodhert years to be up. Maureen Lacey have no time for such fooling."

"Whisht, Maureen!" cried Mike. "You know well that I care as little for the smile that isn't on your face as for the sunshine that's there for the moor the read-side. Ye know that the sight o' you's mate an' drinkin to me the longest day that ever I tasted, an' the smallest bit o' the heart in me is the wather I sweeter to me than the larks' singin' in the spring. But if my corpse was waked to-night you'd thramp over my grave to-morrow to think now o' the daisies ye hurt with yer foot than of me lyin' below."

"Ye not dead!" said Maureen, sullenly, "nor ayin' neither, nor likely. But if ye were, ay or grave lay in the road o' my work, I suppose I'd thramp over it all the same for that."

"Well, Maureen," said Mike, drawing himself up, "I'm not the mane wretch to keep botherin' a girl wasn't at all in a mind to listen to me. But you, there's others I could like better. But that's what you inver said to me yet, Maureen, an' in spite o' yer hard words there's a glint I've seen in the eye, ay, faith! a weeshie glint, that keeps me warm the cruelest day that iver I put in on you waves. There's more in that glint to be to-night, an' the bit of a question I wanted to ax ye. But when ye come sich on me with yer crass talk, it just chokes the courage in my throat entirely."

"I'm glad it does," said Maureen. "I neither want to hear yer words nor to answer yer questions. An' now we're comin' to the village. Here's yer path, an' there's the road to the East Ind. Ye'd bether let me go home myself."

"Go your lone, then!" said Mike, fretly, "an' I'll go mine. I'll be bether off than you, anyways, that hasn't a heart to break nor heart for anyone. Sorra bit! but such a thing was left out clane the day ye were made. Maureen!" he added, eagerly, as she turned, his angry voice failing into a coaxing whisper, "there's to be a Hallow's Eve dance at Biddy Prendergast's to-night. Hurry the children to their beds, an' yer mother her heads to count at the fire, an' come. Will you?"

Maureen had stopped short. "No, I won't," she said, in a low voice.

"Fetch ye will now, avourneen!"

"Fetch I won't!" repeated the girl, doggedly, with her eyes on the ground.

"An' ye plase, then," cried Mike, with another burst of passion, "I'll be pleased to plase myself, too, at Biddy's—Peggy Moran for wan, the best dancer in the island. But soran to the bit of my cold brogues that I'll dance off my feet by the Lucky House under the Hill with her. No, but ye'll come, Maureen. I'll take no nay onth that I'll see you comin' walkin' in like a May morning afore I put on the floor a crack with Peggy."

Maureen turned her head, and looked at Mike one final glance, as she turned away.

"An' if you do," she said, "I'll give ye love in full to take an' to keep, an' the word I'm bound to say every could word that iver I said since you begun to spake to me this ways. A pleasant dance to you, then, and good-night. Good-evening!"

She turned off abruptly, and struck out on her homeward path. Mike gave one passionate look after her, and then muttered away in the other direction, whistling The Little House under the Hill with all his might.

At one of the furthest cabins facing the sea Maureen stopped, and stepped over the door-step into the fresh darkness. Her eyes, accustomed to the red smoky atmosphere, saw her step-mother sitting at the hearth-stone with a child upon her knee, and some four or five other little ones grouped about the embers at their play. These Maureen had expected to see, but her eyes went straight from them to two other figures, less familiar. Two visitors, a man and a woman, were seated properly on chairs, visit-or-like, at a respectful distance from the fire. On those, for the air of their presence, Maureen's glance passed severe judgment.

"Save ye, Lavelle!" she said, slowly, as she closed the door behind her. "Save ye, Nan?"

And then, without heeding their response, she went to the hearth-stool of her step-mother, and threw her bundle of heather from her back upon a heap of turf. Straightening her bent figure with a sigh of relief, she untied the blue kerchief from her head and knotted it loosely round her neck. She passed her hand over her hair, damp with the dew, and smoothed back a straggling lock or two. Then, with her arms full of turf, she came silently over to the hearth, and began to "make down" a good roaring fire to boil the potatoes in a little brass pot, her visitors drew back to give her more room, and the step-mother whispered, as she bent forward to the blaze.

"Who was walkin' on the bog with you, Maureen?"

A flash leaped out of the girl's eyes. She went on with her task in silence for about a minute, and then she said, in a steady voice, loud enough for the others to hear:

"If ye hard there was any wan, mother, ye hard who it was, and so I needn't tell ye. Have you knowed afore."

"What was he sayin' to you, asthore?"

"It's no matter to any body what he was sayin'. He's plotin' no murther, that his words should be kep' an' counted."

"An' what did you say to him, avourneen?"

"Nothin' that went again my promise to you, mother. An' if he come that way often, or offered me afore strangers, we'll talk about somethin' else, an' ye plase."

So saying, Maureen rose to her feet with a brusqueness of manner that cut the dialogue short. The visitors, uneasily silent while it had lasted, now shuffled in their seats, and Mr. Con cleared his throat, and Nan clattered her chair closer to the hearth. Maureen drew a stool from the corner and sat down, leaning her elbow on her knee, and her head upon her hand, with a sullen, set face.

Lavelle, a good-humored looking, rug-headed young woman, was a bran-new green Cobourg gown, was the first to speak.

"We come, Con an' me," said Nan, "to see if you'd go with us to Biddy Prendergast's. There's to be two pipers, no less, wan Tady Kelly, from Mayo side, forbye our own Paudeen; an' the two o' them is to play for the best for their best music. They say that this Tady has great waltzes an' gran' fashions, but Paudeen's the best partner for the jiggin-ones after. An' there's to be say up in Biddy's new room, an' duckin' for apples, an' jumpin' at candles. Sorra sich a turn-out ever was seen! You'll come, Maureen?"

At the beginning of this address Maureen had changed color quickly, and, seizing the tongs, had commenced a fresh attack on the fire. But she answered readily:

"I thank you, Nan," she said, "for comin' so far out o' yer way for me; an' I'm obliged to yer brother, too. But I think I'll not stir out again to-night."

"Och now, Maureen, an' you against the logs! goin' to spen' yer Hallow's Eve at the fireside yer lone. Sorra wan o' you—"

"I'm quite to be by, an' by-an'-by," said Maureen. "I'm thinkin' it's the fittest place for me that's been workin' hard since four this mornin'."

"Ay, Maureen, you're the hard word hard," said Con Lavelle, speaking for the first time, shaking his eyes with a brawny hand, while he stuck a glance of tenderness at her from under his massive rough-hewn brows.

Maureen flushed again as she felt the glance. "That's for my own judgment," she said, impatiently. "I'm young an' strong, an' it ever I'm to work it's now or never, an' I thank God for it."

"But you'll come to the dances?" said Nan, cockingly.

"No, Nan; I'll go to my bed."

"Well, if ever I seen or hard of such a girl!" said the sickly step-mother, fretfully. "Heavens above! when I was yer age there was not their daughter acre, and that I wouldn't be at. Come, none o' yer laziness, Maureen! Bed, indeed! I tell ye there's room on airth for restin' young bones after a hard day's work like a good dance. Up with you, girl, an' put on yer smartest, an' be the chak."

"Mother!" said Maureen, looking up in ashamement, "don't bid me for to go-night. You don't know what's ailin' me."

"But I do bid you for to go, an' if you guinsay me now, it'll be the first time in yer life. As for what knowed I what's ailin' it's a queer speech, Maureen, an' wan I didn't expect from you. Be off with ye now!"

"An' I to go, mother?" she cried.

"You're to go, an' be quick!"

"Then let it stan' so," said Maureen, rising up suddenly, and looking at her step-mother with such a queer expression on her face. "I'm doin' yer biddin', an' come good or come ill of it, ye must have the blame for it."

Down to the room went Maureen with a lighted candle in her hand, which she stuck in a sconce on the wall.

"I have shrived an' I have wrought," muttered she, as with trembling hands she began to pull out her gray worsted stockings, and the shoes that on Sundays and state occasions only covered her stockin-feet. "I have slighted the boy that was willin' to give me my will as much as to the sayin' of 'I'll go or I'll stay. Now I'm doin' her biddin', as I still have done it, an' if all comes out of it, let her look to it. I've hardened myself, an' I've hardened myself, but I'm not as hard as the rock yet. An' if I go at all, feth I'll go decent, an' not be danced under foot by the grandeur of Peggy Moran, with my genteel shoes on her heels, an' her fine airs an' flounces, stickin' out all round her, starched as stiff as the grass in a white frost. Oh!—"

Here Maureen gave a terrible gasp of impatience to the thought of Peggy Moran, and struck her heel on the ground to drive it home in the unaccustomed shoe. Who should keep her from going to Biddy Prendergast's dance now? Not all the men in Bofin, armed to the death with shillalahs.

She opened an old painted chest in the corner, and produced a gown. This gown had belonged to her own dead mother, and was the one piece of finery which Maureen possessed in the world. It was a grand chintz, with blue and gold-color flowers on a chocolate ground, and fitted her figure to a nicety. This was quickly assumed, and her long amber hair rolled round her head in as smooth a wreath as its natural waviness would permit of. When this was done, a little cracked looking-glass over the hearth declared her toilet complete. Then she came back to the kitchen, and while Con Lavelle's admiring eyes devoured her from a shadowy corner, she served out their supper of potatoes to the children, and placed the pot of fish in a little brass tea-pot, burned black, on the hearth within reach of her step-mother's feet. These things done, she put the key of the house in her pocket, and taking "her cloak," a family garment, she followed her friends out of the cabin into the moonlit night, which had replaced the gloomy twilight.

Biddy Prendergast's house was in the Middle Quarter village, about a mile from the Widow Lacey's. When Maureen and the Lavelles arrived at the festive scene operations had already commenced. Persons of slighter pretensions to their entrance from a crowd of boys and girls who were ducking for apples in a tub of water behind the door. The kitchen was lighted by a huge fire that roared up the cooking chimney. In the smoky rafters hens dozed, and nets dangled. Patches of bacon and bunches of dried fish swung in the draught when the door was opened. Biddy Prendergast was a well-to-do woman, one of the island aristocracy, and her kitchen took two or three callioghs, anglicè crones, were toasting their knees and nolding their chat, while that light heart and their wool petticoats and their withered faces and hands. In a retired corner was Paudeen, the island piper, wrinkled and white-haired, sitting with his face very ball-flushed, dozing and tuning at his pipes, holding commune with them, as it were, rallying and inspiring all their energies for the coming fray with the rival piper, and piper, who had come to dispute the palm for skilful harmonies with the Bofin instrument and the Bofin musician. Tady, the other performer, was "down in the room" at his tea. And "down to the room" was the name given to the North Beach.

In this room a notable assemblage was convened. A long board, contrived by means of several small stables, was spread with cakes, cakes, "crackes," and potato cakes, several pounds of butter in a large roll being placed in the centre on a dish. A bed, with blue checked curtains and patchwork counterpane, choked up one corner of the room, leaving no space for chairs. This difficulty was comfortably removed by the bed being on the bed, and squatting their cups and platters on their knees. Those opposite were less fortunate, as the heels of their hosiery were protruding on the earth. All the élite of Bofin were here.

Biddy Prendergast, a plain-faced woman in a crimped dress and a large cap, was making tea at the head of her board in high spirits. She was talking volubly, joking and laughing at Miss Tierney, who with a big black kettle in hand was replenishing her earthen tea-pot. Every now and again her voice rose above the din of the room, and by, with her back to the fire, in all the glory of the five muslin flounces a host of red ribbons blazing under her chin, and her black eyes dancing, responsive to Biddy's winks, or falling demurely on her tea-cup when handsome Mike looked her way. Near to Biddy's chair was the best-looking man in the house, tall, and manly, and bronzed; with his cooking voice, and his roguish smile, and his frank way of tossing the dark curls from his forehead by a fling of his head. Peggy, the belle, had long desired to count him on the list of her admirers. Peggy's father and two brothers, forbade to her lower; the finest fortune in Bofin. Biddy, therefore, had resolved will to Mike, her favorite, was trying to make a match between him and the heiress. This unknown to the elder Morans, who would consider the mere thought matrimonial on Con Lavelle's fine farm at Fawnmore. Biddy's hints and Peggy's handsome eyes had until to-night remained unheeded. But there was a sudden change. Mike was remarkably civil to both of these ladies. He tucked Peggy's flounces carefully away from the fire, and helped her to the crackers. Peggy dimpled and blushed, and Biddy laughed and winked, and Mike was in the act of pouring the tea into the tea-pot, when the door was pushed open, and Maureen and her friends came in.

A scream from Biddy greeted their entrance. "Bad manners to it for a little!" cried Mike, getting very red in the face. "It's the finger anabled off o' you entirely? Sure if it is I'll put a ring on it for a plasther, an' if that doesn't mend it, sorra more can I do."

The finger was suitably bound and bemoaned, and Biddy pardoned the offender, forgot her pains in a hearty welcome to her new guests.

"Come down, Con, come down, man, here's a sate by the fire. The night's could. Good luck to you, Nan, keep the cloak on the door there, an' come down an' ate a bit o' somethin'. Yer welcome, Maureen Lacey! Make room, girls, an' let her come down. It's sathers we get you to come out. An' how's the runatics with yer mother?"

Con Lavelle, the important man, the richest farmer in the island, was soon forced into a seat by the fire, and he and his sister had their wants quickly attended to. Maureen, who was looked on by the hostess as rather an interloper, was not so eagerly noticed. Maureen felt this with a swelling heart. The next moment Mike had shouldered his way to her, had cleared a place for her on the bed, and taken his seat beside her, just at the corner, where he could see her face as his head bowed in looping of the curtain, and look at her proud, downcast face as much as he pleased. Peggy, with a huge cup and saucer in her hands, trembled so that she spilled the tea all over her grand chintz gown. Sitting there opposite to Peggy Moran's jealous eyes, with Mike leal and true beside her, Maureen struggled in the toils of the temptation to turn round and smile in his face, and ask him to hand her a piece of cake. She knew that Mike was thinking of her last words to him on the bog, knew it by his jubilant air, and the fire from his eyes that shone on her from behind the looping of the curtain. The temptation fought within her to let him have it his own way. In the whirling vision of a second she saw herself Mike's wife, mistress of a snug little shelter at the East End, making ready the hearth for Mike coming home from his fishing. No more drenching in the high spring tides, battling with storm and sea, carrying home the sea-sick on misery midnights. No more long days of labor in the fields of strangers for the wretched earning of sixpence a day. No more lettering for the fretful step-mother, but always those strong hands beside her, and always these tender eyes. Oh, for Mike she could gladly work, with him rejoice, have all need be. These things strove within Maureen as she sat pulling her tea over her grand chintz gown. But the still, small voice of duty, c'pity that depending on her, of fidelity to her promise to her stepmother, still kept her from speaking in her care, though but dimly and from afar off. The temptation shook her; but when the gust allayed itself, she regained her vantage-ground, breathless, but sure of foot. The habit of restraint was strong within her. She did not turn and smile on Mike; neither did she ask him for a piece of cake.

Peggy Moran, sitting with her back to the fire, was beginning to get very red in the face. Biddy Prendergast had not had fallen deaf. There was no one to tuck Peggy's flounces away from the blaze, nor to hold the kettle gallantly for Biddy. But tea was over and the tea pots were now smoking forth rival squalls sad groans in the kitchen. Change her were now endless, and all the "room" was deserted, and the dancing began with spirit.

Maureen had made one gallant struggle, but it was hard to proof against all the enchantments of this most trying night. When Mike, whom many looking eyes were watched for a partner, presented her for the first dance, her customary short reply was not ready; and she found herself up on the floor by his side before she had time to think about it. As for Mike, he was wild with spirits. He saw Maureen's conduct in the light in which she knew he would see it. He thought she had relented at last, and made up her mind to smile on him for the day. And Maureen, who understood the spirit of the dance; panting and smiling, she tripped it with the nimblest among them. Every thing began to dip away, but the present delight of the moment. Blushing rosy red, her eyes sparkling, her hair shining and shaking out in little gleaming rings about her forehead, she developed a radiant beauty that hardly seemed to belong to the grave Maureen.

Peggy Moran and the young man from America with whom she consoled herself, tried to get up one genteel round of the Copenhagen Waltz. This being finished, Paudeen the piper struck Maureen a compliment to her dancing, to tell him her favorite air. Whereupon Maureen, with a shy laugh in her eyes, asked for The Little House under the Hill. This was Paudeen's greatest tune, and at it he went with the will of a piper. Mike, his hair shaking, his wrinkled cheeks bursting, and his one leg with its blue-ribbed stocking and brogue hopping up and down under his gigantic frame for sad enthusiasm. How he shrilled and shrieked it, how he groaned and wheezed it, and how all the company joined in the last and closed of it! How it was stamped and shuffled, how the deafening clatter of feet, and the "whoops!" and "hurroos!" rose up to Biddy Prendergast's smoky rafters—all these belong to the hens, and not them a clucking, and how Tady, the vanquished performer, was pressed over and mused on the primitive state of uncivilization in which these benighted Bofiners were plunged! There was only one person who took no part in the dance, and who stood with his long loose figure drawn up against the wall in a corner, his wistful eyes searching the crowd of laughing faces for the occasional glimpse of one face. That man was Con Lavelle.

After this jig was over, the house being literally "too hot to hold" the dancers, they turned out in couples, some to go home, others only to cool themselves in the moonlight, and return. It was late ere Mike Tierney and Maureen Lacey. Under the shelter of Biddy's gable wall Mike got here at last to "spake" all he had tried to say so often, and Maureen cut him short with no cross answers. He told his news, and he "axed" his question.

II.

THE next night a yellow moon hung high over Bofin, gilding the spars of the Liverpool trader, rocking still in the harbor. The headlands lay like speckled-stone lions couching in the moon. An ocean of silver glimmered out of the obscurity of space and vanished in the haze. The cabins on the North Beach a man was plodding with a parcel under his arm.

Con Lavelle had loved Maureen Lacey long. Last night had shown him that if his chance were not speedily improved it would very quickly become nothing. The Widow Lacey counted on him, he knew, for she reckoned on Con's soft nature and Con's good farm to help her out of many of her difficulties. This knowledge, however, Maureen was cold. Last night he had seen her melt and brighten; and though the change, he knew, had not been wrought by him, his heart had ached at her unwonted beauty that he could not, like a wise man, turn his face the other way and think of her no more. No, he would have his chance out. He would offer her his love; and if she would not have that he would tell her the story of her mother's house, his goodly land, and help and protection for her family. If Maureen could not give him her love he would grieve; but if Maureen could be bought he would buy her.

This was the state of Con's mind when he lifted the Lacey's latch. The children were in bed, the house was swept, the bits of tins and crockeries were all straight on the bumble dresser, the few rude chairs were ranged with precision along by the walls. Maureen's step-mother was dozing in her little straw chair in the apartment corner. She was not in her veins that the fever burned which had caused his spell of prostration. Maureen stood on the hearth, in her work-a-day crimson petticoat and loose bodice of print, with the blaze playing over her petty bare feet, not yet spoiled by expensive, and keeping the heated spots on her cheeks sure, and gilding the willful ripples of hair that would creep outland keep straying about her forehead. Twice Maureen had slipped "down to the room," and spread her face to the one little mote of the window's purest forth at the night without, where the yellow moonlight fell rich and flat on the rugged causeway, and the silver Atlantic shift-ed and glimmered between the gray stone-walls of the neighboring cabins. And the last time she had withdrawn her face with a gesture of impatient dismay. This was not the shape she wanted to see, this lube, swinging figure coming along with its swayed shoulders.

Col lifted the latch and came in. The noise wakened the widow, who hailed him with glad surprise: "What can bring him to-night again?" flashed through the minds of both the women, followed also by the same surmise, only the latter, with no a hope, with the other a fear. Maureen's "Say ye, Con!" was only a feeble echo of her step-mother's greeting, wrung from her by the absolute requirements of hospitality. Curiosity was quickly allayed, and hope and fear confirmed. Advancing to the corner of the fireplace, the young man set down a bottle of whisky, pipes, and tobacco. This his errand was at once declared. Con Lavelle had come "upon breaking."

The step-mother rubbed her wasted hands with delight. "You're welcome, Con, agra, machree!" she said. "Maureen, set out the things, fetch the glasses, an' fill the pipes."

Maureen did as she was bidden, uncorked the bottle, and handed the glass and kindled pipe to her mother, all with a set defiance on her face, which did not escape the timorous sister.

"I'll let you alone on business, Con?" began the widow.

"Ay," said Con, blushing and fidgeting. "I come, Mrs. Lacey, to ask yer daughter for a wife. Gib sees I'll make her as good a husband as iver had all he had in a girl's lap an' only axed for her in return."

"It's three for you, Con, dear," said the step-mother. "Or we 've have her with all the goodfast wish. Come down, Maureen, and give yer hand to yer husband."

Maureen had been standing, pale, over in the shadows, at the dresser. Now she moved down to the hearth. "I 'll not be my husband," she said, never my husband. In my heart I'm thankful to ye, Con Lavelle, for thinkin' kindly of a poor girl like me, but I can not take yer offer."

"Good Lord, sich talk!" cried the widow, enraged. "Don't mind her, Con, asthore; it's only a way girls have to keep themselves from bein' a small blame to them! She'll be yours, wirer fear, an' willin' an' pleased on her weddin'-day."

"Mother," said Maureen, "what's the use of talkin' this ways? Yer not my God nor my Maker, that ye have a right to ban' over my soul an' body to this man or that man against my will. Con Lavelle, yer a decent man, an' ye wouldn't be for takin' a girl for her wife that hated the ground the man that wasn't you. I'm a pleaded wife, an' as good as a wife this minit in the eyes o' the Almighty where I am' throw air face I'll stan' to my word, so help me Christ, my Saviour!"

Slowly, and with a stern reverence in her tone, Maureen uttered these last words, her eyes on the ground and her hands squeezed together. Con flung his head and hoped no more, and the step-mother rocked herself to and fro in her chair, weak and raged with disappointment.

"Is you bould hizzy!" she cried. "Oh, you bould, shameless hizzy, that's been deavin' me all this time! Goin' pigrin'o yer dances an' makin' yer matches, an' throwin' dust in the eyes o' them sickly mother at home. Oh, you bad, ongnatural daughter!"

"Ayy, say, Mrs. Lacey," put in soft-hearted Con. "Throth I'll not listen to that from ye. If Maureen can not like me I'll tell the thruth o' her. She's the good, hard-workin' daughter to you, whatever!"

"Hould yer tongues!" shrieked the passionate woman. "What do you know about her? She'll be ye take yer answer kindly. It's always the likes o' a soft fool like you that gets tumbled in the most while the worfles goin' roun'. Oh, I'm sorry, sorry, that iver I should rear sich a daughther!"

Maureen turned up to Con and held out her hand. "I thank ye," she said, eagerly, "for puttin' in that kind word for me. I have thried to do her bidding, an' God sees it's her own happiness I've come to this so soon. I'm rale grateful to ye, Con, an' if I could make two women o' myself, wan o' me should be her wife. Bein' only wan, I must go aither my heart."

Big tears swelled up in Con's eyes as he shook her hand and let it drop. "It's sorry I am, Miss Maureen," was all he said.

"Oh!" cried the step-mother, fiercely—"oh! if I could just get my tongue about that limb o' the devil, Mike Tierney—"

"God send him here" said a hearty voice, as the latch was lifted, and Mike himself stood among them.

Maureen, blushing, fell back into the shadows and left the battle to him.

"Lend us yer arm, Con," cried the step-mother, trying to shake off "Begone!" she added, waving her puny fist at Mike, "begone from my house, you thief, you beggar!"

"Thruth, yer not well, Mrs. Lacey, dear," said Mike, "yer not well at all. An' it's Con's fault here for givin' you too sthrong a taste o' this fine whisky o' his, an' you so wake about the head. Sit down now, Mrs. Lacey, asthore, an' rest yersel a bit," he went on coaxingly, slipping her hand from Con's arm, setting her in her chair, and drawing a seat confidentially beside her. "An' feth ye may make yer mind aisy about thieves or beggars, for there isn't a sowl of sich a crew in the house at all: sorra wan; nor out bye neither, for the moon's as bright as daylight, an' I couldn't miss but see them if they were there."

All this was poured forth in Mike's own rolling, coaxing, devil-may-care tone, completely drowning any attempt of the widow's to finish her interrupted volley of abuse. She sat grasping the sides of her chair in silence, and mentally scratching his face.

"Oh, the impernence of ye!" she hissed between her teeth, at last, "to think to come round me with yer blarney. I know ever one!"

"You do, Mrs. Lacey?" said Mike, "you know that Maureen—" here his eyes deepened and flashed, and as a ruddy smile overspread his brave face as he glanced at a shadowy corner opposite, "that Maureen has promised me her own sel' for a wife gin this day year when I come home from my voyage? An' that's the day of the strange vessel that's been lyin' below all week. Well, the captain is a decent man, an' he's offered to take me with him in the ship, an' promised to put me in a way of arnin' in a year as much money as 'll do all I'll want it to do, On this day you'll remember, Con, I took a wife-husband, plase God, an' I'll buy the best holdin' in Bodin, save an' exceptin' Con Lavelle's here. Maureen has given me her promise for me, an' I know that's my errand, to tell ye all this that's arranged betuns us."

This information of Mike's threw a light on the widow's perplexity- and the storminess of her wrath became somewhat calmed.

"I'll tell you the truth, Mike," she said, with a sneer, "I want yer off out o' Bodin with yer blarneyin' ways, an' yer rovin' ways, sorra fut will ye iver set in it again."

"Don't say that, Mrs. Lacey," said Mike, gravely. "You mustn't say that, an' me ready to swear the contrhairy."

"Ay," she sneered again; "the likes o' ye 'll swear to anything, an' break it the next day. But it would be better for Maureen to take up at wanst with a decent man like Con Lavelle there, sitting comfortable at home on his farm, than to be waitin' for years till a rover like you takes the notion to turn up again from the other ind o' the world. Which ye never will."

"Well, Mrs. Lacey," said Mike, drawing himself up, and speaking solemnly, "I'll give Maureen free laave, I'll said free, to marry Con Lavelle on this day year, if I be not here to claim her first myself."

"Ay," said Maureen, looking suddenly out of the shadows; "an' I'll give my word full an' free to marry Con Lavelle on the same this day year, if Mike be not here to claim me first."

"Yell swear that?" said the step-mother.

"Ay, we'll swear it both of us," said Mike, "said Mike, smiling proudly down on Maureen.

"He's ready enough to han' you over, Maureen," said the widow, with a sneer that was a trap for her to feared to do the same by him, I'm thinkin'."

Maureen made no reply, but, slipping her hand out of Mike's, went over to the dresser and busied up for something, to a little cracked cup on the shelf.

"Here's two rings," she said, coming back to the hearth, "I was I got on the last fair day, an' the other I've had aught it before I left Ireland. There's for you, Con, an' there's for you, Mike. Wan o' you wean 'll put wan o' them rings on my finger upon this day year. Con left hand, Con; Mike, if he's hume in time. This I swear, mother, in spite o' yer tants, an' by the Blassed Virgin I'll keep my oath."

A silence fell on the group. The blaze of the fire dropped down, and a shadow covered the hearth. A moaning cry chord passed over the house as it to the flush of its rash happy confidence: Was it a whispered reminder of the perils that beset the sailor abroad on the ocean, or of the fickle nature of the ships drifted out of their tracks? But Mike was not one to be put his mind about thought.

"Yell thrink to that all round?" said Con Lavelle, presently.

"Ay, we'll thrink to it," said Mike, gayly; and Maureen mending the fire, a jovial glow lit up the house once more.

Con Lavelle had become a different man within the last few minutes. His dejected face was kindled, and his brawny hand shook as he poured the whisky into the glasses.

"Here's to Maureen's happy weddin' on this day year!" he said, knocking the glass against his teeth as he raised the spirits to his lips. "Amen, amen." went round in reply, and matters being thus concluded, the two men presently took their leave, and closed the door together.

"Look ye here, Mike Tierney," said Con Lavelle, stopping short, as the two walked along in the moonlight, "I'll give you wan warnin' before I part, I have loved Maureen Lacey since iver she was able to toddle. Sein' she liked ye the best, I would not have made me medel'n' between ye. But with yer own an' her own free-will she took an oath to-night, before my face an' before God, to be my wife by bargain. Look to't well, an' come home for yer wife in time, for sorra day, nor hour, nor minit o' mine will I give you, if so it falls out that ye fail her!"

Mike Tierney drew up his towering figure, and looked contemptuously into the feverish face of his rival.

"When yer axed for day, or hour, or minit o' grace, Con Lavelle," he said, "it then come an' give me yer warnin'. Ye may wish me what evil ye like, but the Holy Mother himself will blow the blast that'll bring me o'er the wide wathers in the time I avid hopes. I'm lavin' my wife in His hands, an' I'll ask me, an' he shall answer for her."

Shame fell on Con for a moment, and his better nature was touched.

"I do not wish ye evil, Mike Tiernay," he said, sulkily, "but only to have my chance."

III.

MAUREEN'S year of trial began in peace. Her step-mother's anger passed away with the moon, and Con Lavelle had left her untroubled. Her trust in Mike was as whole as her trust in God.

Presently Con Lavelle began to change his demeanor; growing regular and systematic in his attentions, sending boys to cut her turf and carry her rack, and do odd rough jobs for her by stealth. Her stern rejection of these real services made very little difference to Con, who went steadily on laying siege to her gratitude in a number of subtle ways. The step-mother grew more sickly; and how could Maureen, who had little to give her, turn Con Lavelle from the door, when she came smiling in of an evening with a nice fat chicken under her cloak, or a bottle of whisky in her hand? Or how could she throw in the fire the gay new sappikeen, bought on the fair-day, that the widow wore tied on her head, and which Con had not dared to present to Maureen? Con was not bold, but sly. He did nothing that could offend Maureen, but he kept up a constant remembrance of her promise. Often, as he smoked his pipe at his farm-house door at sunset, he would dip out a little brass ring from his pocket, twirl it on the top of his own huge finger, and smile at the vacant Atlantic, lying shiftless and sparkling before him. Why should Mike Tierney return?

So the year went on, and October came round again. On the 31st of the month drew near public excitement ran high. Men made bets, and kind-hearted women said prayers for Maureen. Con Lavelle was cast down with feverish spells and a restless fret, while indoors Nan already made rare preparations. The widow, with her little step-mother chattered incessantly about the wedding, and her bride that a daughter of hers should be mistress of Bodin House, and Con Lavelle's harvest and in about her, Maureen struggled hard to go and come like one who was dest and blind. She made ready her female trousseau, and her new grey stockings, and stitching her new blue cloak, bending her sharpened face over her work, contradicting no one, and answering no questions. Neighbors who came to meet the flash of her eye went away crossing themselves. People began to feel afraid of Maureen Lacey.

At last Hallow Eve arrived. Biddy Prendergast came another of the girls, and Peggy Moran figured at it as the bride of the young man from America, on whom she had bestowed herself her three years, and her own affections. But Con Lavelle and his sister Nan were busy at home, making ready for that wedding of the morrow which was the subject of eager discussion in Biddy's teachable delight. The wedding-feast was to be spread at Ewnmore, and many guests had been invited.

It was a tempestuous night. If the Bofiners were less hardy a race, or if the storm had commenced in its violence an hour or two earlier, Biddy Prendergast might have had to remain at her dame's for Hallow Eve. About eight o'clock Nan Lavelle was bending over her pot-oven inspecting the browning of her cakes, when Con was pulling up a fine new curtain on the kitchen-window to make the place look more cheerful against the 1st. Suddenly down the chimney, and its thunders overhead drowned the noise of the hammer and the sound of some one knocking at the door, the latch of which, however, the door was pushed open, and Maureen Lacey came whirling breathless over the threshold, with the storm driving the drops of fresh fall of rain from her heels. Her face was white and streamed with rain; her dripping hair and the soaked hood of her cloak were dragged back from her head upon her shoulders. She tried to close the door behind her, but could not, and the yelling wind kept pouring in, shaking everything in the kitchen and upstairs. The place were invaded by an army of devils.

"God save us!" said Con, dropping her knife and rushing to shut the door.

"Maureen!" said Con, with a blaze of surprise on his face, and pushing eagerly to meet her attempting to draw the wet cloak from her shoulders.

"If ye had any word to say to me, asthore, ye might have sent word by the messenger that was to-day. I'd have walked twenty mile for yer biddin' forbye wan, an' the night was ten times worse than it is."

Maureen gave this touch with a shudder, and retreated a step or two.

"I haven't much to say," she said, hoarsely—"only this: What time o' day have ye sett'n for to-morra?"

"Ten o'clock," said Con, suddenly, his glow all extinguished, and his face dark.

"Ten!" echoed Maureen. "Oh, Con," she cried, clasping her hands and raising her wild eyes to his face in a pitiful appeal, "say it's not ten, make it twelve."

Con glanced at her and cast his eyes on the ground in dogged shame. "Let it be twelve, then," he said. "Twelve at stan' yer white face, though the same white face might harden a man, sein' what it's to-morrow. This much I'll do for you, an' ye, but ye needn't ax no more. I have stood my chance fair an' honest, an' I'll not let ye off with yer bargain."

Maureen's supplicating face, at this, was crossed by a change that made the bridegroom start.

"You don't mane to say," said Maureen, "that ye may man or mortal had it in their power to let me off, I wouldn't be comin' prayin' to ye here to-night. But I come to say it to my God, an' to Him I must answer for't. An' that was the rash sworn-in' when death wasn't put in the bargain. For mind ye, Con Lavelle, there's nothin' on land or sea, but death only, 'll bring me to yer side to-morra in yonder church. Think!" she said, as a long, thunderous gust roared over the roof; "there's death abroad to-night. Las' night I saw a ship comin' sailing, sailing, sailing, over the rovin' waves, an' a big wave rolled over the ship, an' thin there rose wan screech. I woke up, an' there was the storum howlin', screechin', like wan Lavelle, will ye give me a mouthful o' could wather?"

She drank the draught eagerly, and then she pushed her wet cloak around her.

"Thank ye!" she said. "I'll be goin' now. Good-night to ye!" Con wakened out of his bluck amazed here wet cloak around her.

"Thank ye!" she said. "I'll be goin' now. Good-night to ye!" Con wakened out of his bluck amazed here wet cloak around her.

cried, grasping her cloak to detain her. "Ye dar not go out yer lone in the rage o' yon wind. Stop a bit, an'—"

"Let me go!" said Maureen, fiercely, shaking him off. "You'd bether let me go, for I will not answer for all my doin's this night."

Her hands were wrenching at the bar, and the door flew open as she spoke. Again the blast poured in with its frightful gambols. Con Lavelle and his sister fell back, and Maureen's white face vanished in the darkness. Nan Lavelle made fast the door again, and returned to her pot-oven with a weight upon her heart. Presently matter-of-fact as was this young woman, it did not occur to her now for the first time that to-morrow's wedding was to be an all-screened event. There was an hour of silence between the brother and sister, and then Nan cried, aghast, as the crashing overhead arose in a fresh gust of fury:

"God keep us, Con! It's three what Maureen said. There'll be death abroad afore morn'n!"

"Ay!" muttered Con, as he stalked restlessly up and down with his hands in his pockets. "But it's three as well as what she said for—Any day out put death in the bargain. Dead or alive, if he beant here, 'fore Heaven I'll have my rights!"

The people of Bofin are accustomed to storms. The tempest is their lullaby, their alarm, their hurly-fried, or their treacherous enemy. It rocks the cradle, it makes the oven cry, rings the bell when they die, and keens over them in their graves. When there is no storm the world seems to come to a stand-still. Yet the oldest islander could not recollect so awful a night as the night of Maureen's wedding. Few will ever forget it by what means, for few could imagine the terrors of a Bofin hurricane; how the sad, barren island is scourges by its devastating rage; how the waves of the ever-living hundreds come ringing through its smothering clamor; how the tigerish Atlantic rushes hungrily over its cliffs, roaring "I will have it!" and goes hissing back again to do its deed of destruction.

A light like this brings spells to the island sheres, and many are abroad, looking right and left, by break of day. On this particular morning, at early dawn, two men were hurrying along the northeast headlands. The might of the storm had subsided, and the black sky was breaking into frightful grey. Streaks of purple and green rode over the seething ocean, tinting the foam of the tossing surges, whose howling voices were darkened by the thick mists that drifts. Now rosy bars began blushing out from the eastward, glowing and spreading till they looked like the flush of the Angel of Death, passing over the Angel of Death, passing in again at the gates of heaven. Coming along in this splendid dawn the two men saw a female figure hastening as if to meet them.

It was Maureen, in her wedding-gown and her wedding-cloak, with a new azure kerchief tied over her pretty gold hair. Her face was turned to the sea, and the wind had driven the color into a white cheek as she passed them by without seeming to see them.

"Preserve us!" said one; "she's ready for her weddin' airly. Where is she boun' for at this hour do ye think?"

"God knows!" said the other. "I niver seen a cowl got so wild-like. If I was Con Lavelle I would wash my han's o' her."

"Sorra doubt o' Con doin' any sich thing!" laughed the other. "But where ondher heaven is she gettin' out to now? Mother o' marcy! it's not go-in' to throwher head she is!"

The men were still on the headlands, but Maureen had descended to the beach. Plowing her way through the sand, slippery shingle, she reached a line of low rocks, on which the surf was dashing, and she was presently beyond the old battered smuggler's telescope, and, turn about, they peered long and steadily out to sea.

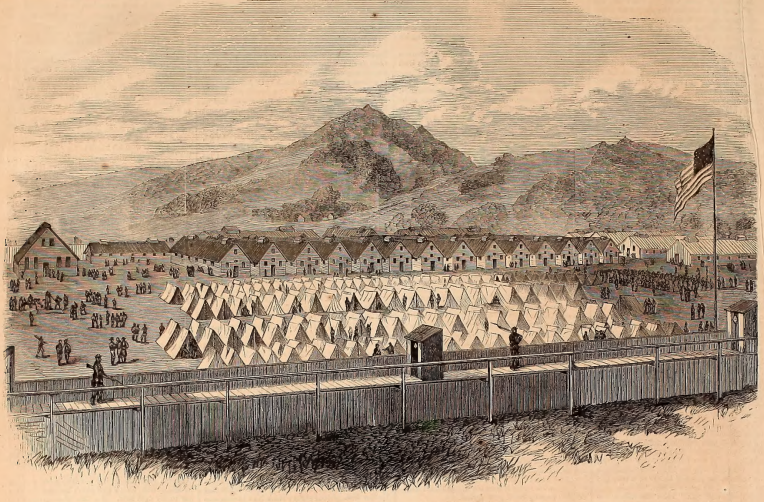
"Oh, I'm afeard for Mike she is, poor girl!" said one of the men; "an' feth she may save her-sel' the throuble. The safest ship that iver he sailed in wouldn't live in sich wither-ation as Bofin last night. Whisht! what's yon floatin' thing out far there agin the sky? Show us yer glass."

The other produced an old battered smuggler's telescope, and, turn about, they peered long and steadily out to sea.

"Oh, thrue! it's a wreck!" said the one.

"Ay, feth!" said the other.

"Is she dead?" said the first. "Could rest the poor sowls that are goes to their rock'nin'! but it's an ill win' that blows nobody good. There'll be many a the a mornful day's raisin' in Bofin afore night. Maureen!" he cried out, suddenly, raising his voice to a roar. "My God! I was feared she was mad. Maureen!"



A long, unearthly cry was the answer, ringing through the dawn. Maureen had been crouching down in the sand, unobserved by them, and now, as if searching under the curve of each breaker as it crashed up and split its bulking froth upon the rock. She was standing with her cloak up, and the howling her arms wildly over her head, leaped into the sea and disappeared.

Almost swiftly down the headlands, the men gained the beach, and there they saw Maureen, not struggling out to sea against the waves, standing battling with them, up to her waist in the seething foam, clinging with one hand to the rock beside her, and with the other feeling and grasping at something dark and heavy that rose and sank with the swelling and rebounding of the tide. Dashing down the water, the men were quickly at her side.

"It is Mike!" gasped Maureen, pale and limbed, half choking with the surf. "Bring him in."

They loosened her finger from the dark heavy something, and found that indeed it was the body of a man. They laid him on the beach, and turned him his face, and recognized their old comrade, Mike Tierney. Maureen uttered no more wild cries. She took the cloak from her shoulders and spread it up to his chin. She put her hand into his bosom, found the ring she had given him attached round his neck by a string, and slipped it at once upon her finger. Then she sat down and laid his head upon her knee.

"Will you go," she said, calmly, to the men, "and tell Con Lavelle that Mike Tiernay has come home? Will ye tell him," she added, holding up her hand—"will ye tell him Maureen Lacey has a ring upon her finger?"

CAMP OF REBEL PRISONERS AT ELMIRA, NEW YORK.—[SEE PAGE 230.]

And this was all the wedding that Boñn saw that day.

But little further of Maureen Lacey is known to the writer of this history. The wreck of the ship in which Mike had been returning was one of those disasters whose details fill the daily newspapers in winter-time. Sewn in the poor fellow's jacket was found a note for a good little sum of money. The following year a fever visited the island, sweeping off, among others, Maureen's step-mother, and all her children but one. About a year after this Maureen sold all their worldly goods, and took her departure for America with her little brother in her arms.

PRISON IN CASEMATE NO. 2, FORT LAFAYETTE, NEW YORK HARBOR.—[SEE FIRST PAGE.]

BATTLE OF BENTONSVILLE, NORTH CAROLINA, MARCH 19—FOURTEENTH AND TWENTIETH CORPS ENGAGED.—[SKETCHED BY W. WAUD.]

BATTLE OF BENTONSVILLE, NORTH CAROLINA, MARCH 20—FIFTEENTH CORPS ENGAGED ON THE RIGHT.—[SKETCHED BY W. WAUD.]

PETROLEUM.

THOSE interested in oil will find the Prospectus of The United Service Petroleum and Mining Company on the next page, Major-General W. S. Hancock, President.

DO NOT WASTE your Money buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOLD PENS which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the BEST IN THE WORLD.

Avoid the Nameless Upstarts, whose lack of brains compels them to attempt IMITATION, even to the advertisement. If you want the full value of your money, call on A. MORTON, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.

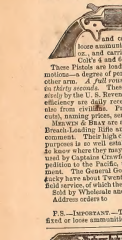
The Patent Portfolio, for every-day business wants, combines, in one, a memorandum, or any article requiring being then, trunnel, carrying, or getting into hard knocks. They send to THEM A TRIAL. NEAT, USEFUL, and ORNAMENTAL. A pair sent by mail for 25 cents.

W. C. WEMYSS, 575 Broadway, New York.

NEW JOURNAL OF FASHION—Le Petit Messager. Subscription: one year, monthly, 12 numbers, 25 copies, 6c. Address E. T. TAYLOR, 549 Canal St., N.Y.

MERWIN & BRAY FIRE-ARMS CO.'S
Belt and Pocket Size Cartridge Revolvers.

The Belt size weighs 2½ lbs., carries a ball 42-100 calibre (larger than the Navy), and can be used with either fixed or loose ammunition. The Pocket size weighs 1 lb., and carries a ball 30-100 calibre (same as Colt's), and 6 inch.



These Pistols are loaded and discharged with only four motions—a degree of perfection never yet attained by any other arm. A full round may be loaded and discharged in thirty seconds, and the arms have been subjected practically to the U. S. Revenue Service. Testimonials of their efficiency and safety received from the Army and Navy, also from civilians. Printed circulars (with illustrated cuts), naming prices, sent by mail when desired.

MERWIN & BRAY are also proprietors of the Ballard Breech-Loading Rifle and Carbine. These need no comment. Their high character for Military and Sporting purposes is so well established that the public only need to know where they may be purchased. These Rifles were used by Captain Ballard and Pike on the recent Expedition to the Pacific, under orders of the U. S. Government. The General Government and the trade can quickly have about Twenty Thousand (20,000) now in active field service, of which the highest testimonials are received.

Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers generally.

Address orders to MERWIN & BRAY,
No. 262 Broadway, New York.

P. S.—IMPORTANT.—These Rifles can be sold with either fixed or loose ammunition.

Capital Stock $1,000,000, divided into 200,000 Shares, at 50 per Share. Subscription price for a limited number only of shares remaining $3 per Share, without further call or assessment on the Shareholders. PRESIDENT, J. S. CLARKSON.

Lands and Interests only on Oil Creek, Cherry Run, Cherry Tree Run, Walnut Bend, Allegheny River, opposite Hibbs Creek, Bogart Creek, Tik Creek, and Clay, embracing 700 different properties.

Ten new wells boring bored down 300 to 500 feet, with splendid prospects of immense yields of oil.

Books will shortly close, there being only a small number of shares remaining. Prospectus, maps, and every information from BARRETT & CO.'S PETROLEUM EXCHANGE, No. 71 Broadway, New York.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baltimore, Washington, and all Stations owned by Union troops, and Sutlers by HARDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 65 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

Great Closing Sale!!

$650,000 WORTH of Watches, Chains, and Fine Jewelry, to be sold at once, at 10 PER CENT. DISCOUNT for cash, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1. Then if not your option to send a dollar and have the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any other article of value for One Dollar, and in no case can they get less than a Dollar's worth. Over 100 kinds to select from. Certificates will be sent for $1. Thirteen for $5. Thirty-five for $25. One Hundred for $75. Great inducements offered those who act as Agents. Catalogues containing full lists and particulars sent free.

JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,
265 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

P. O., Drawer 12.

Whiskers! Mustaches!!—The celebrated HIMALAYA CANADIAN BALM is warranted to start a full set of Whiskers in two weeks. An English patent article, which does the work to the life. Sent by mail for $1. Address Dr. H. DE FORREST, Troy, New York.

THE FUNNIEST OF LIFE, No. 8, will be ready this week, with Extraordinary Developments of Life on the Brain! and Brains on Ice! The most comic, laughable, and enlightening Oil-Joke and Humor Fun ever put on paper. Laugh and grow Fat. Sold every where.

WHY SQUANDER MONEY on useless articles claiming to grow hair, when you can purchase it (Beckton Wells') preparation for that purpose, which will cut the hair if rude or female immediately, and will last 6 months? Prepared at my chemical laboratory, N.Y. city. Address me as my residence, E. Beckton Wells, Jersey City, N. J.

"The West Indian Hair Curler."

Warranted to curl the most straight and stiff hair, on the first application, into short ringlets or waving manes. Free curls. Sent to any address on receipt of $1. Address P. H. HENDERTON & CO.,
Box 3292, New York Post-Office.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELRY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELRY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GEM'S PINS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, ETC.,

Worth $500,000,

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and description. A terrible to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Union.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
265 Broadway, New York.

Itch! Itch! Itch!
SCRATCH! SCRATCH! SCRATCH!
WHEATON'S OINTMENT
WILL CURE THE ITCH IN 48 HOURS.

Also cures SALT RHEUM, ULCERS, CHILBLAINS, and all ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN. Price 50 cents. For sale by all Druggists.

By sending 60 cents to WEEKS & POTTER, Sole Agents, 170 Washington St., Boston, it will be forwarded by mail, free of postage, to any part of the United States.

PRICE $1 25.

THE SERGEANT'S ROLL BOOK FOR THE
COMPANY, DETAIL, and SQUAD.

A neat pocket-book, bound in a water-proof flap cover, with pencil and blanks for 100 names. Size, 5×3½. Package, 6½ by 4 inches. Containing blanks with printed dates for thirty-one days, and one hundred names for six months.

Mailed free on receipt of the price.

JAMES W. FORTUNE, Publisher,
109 Centre Street, New York.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials
AND DEALERS IN
501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

In addition to our stock in trade of the PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, we are now making a specialty of STEREOSCOPES AND STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS,
to which we have an immense assortment, including War Scenes, Groups of Generals, Views of Cities, Landscapes, Statuary, etc., etc. Also, Revolving Stereoscopes, for public or private exhibition. Our Catalogue will be sent to any address on receipt of Stamp.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS,
We were the first manufacturers in the United States, and we manufacture immense quantities in great variety, ranging in price from 25 cents to $25. Our Catalogue will be sent to applicants, or to any address on receipt of Stamp. Albums will be sent by mail, FREE, on receipt of price.

CARTE DE VISITE AND CABINET CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.

Our Catalogue contains the names of THOUSANDS of Subjects which additions are continually being made) of Portraits of Generals, Statesmen, Authors, Actresses, Opera Singers, Dancers, Ballet Troupes, Bible Scenes, Nudes, Statuary, etc., etc. Also, Revolving Stereoscopes, for public or private exhibition. Our Catalogue will be sent to any address on receipt of Stamp.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS,
We were the first manufacturers in the United States, and we manufacture immense quantities in great variety, ranging in price from 25 cents to $25. Our Catalogue will be sent to applicants, or to any address on receipt of Stamp. Albums will be sent by mail, FREE, on receipt of price.

CARTE DE VISITE AND CABINET CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.

Our Catalogue contains the names of THOUSANDS of Subjects (to which additions are continually being made) of Portraits of Generals, Statesmen, Authors, Actresses, Opera Singers, Dancers, Ballet Troupes, Bible Scenes, Nudes, Statuary, etc., etc. Also,
35 Steps 35 Premium Wheels,
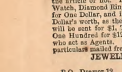
2000 Gift Works of Art and Jewelry, including reproductions of the most beautiful Paintings, Pictures, Statues, etc. Catalogues sent on receipt of Stamp. An order for One Dozen Fine Stereoscopic Photographs will be filled on the receipt of $1.00, and sent by mail, FREE.

And on the Editorial Sciences generally. AGENTS WANTED. Send a stamped envelope for catalogues and terms.

Photograph Albums
MAILED FREE OF POSTAGE
TO ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTRY.
ALBUMS FOR THE PEOPLE! THE ARMY!! AND THE NAVY!!!

Persons ordering will obtain the most approved Albums, rich Turkey Morocco Photographic Albums, 20 Portraits, ... $2 00
Photograph Album, Morocco, 40 Portraits, ... 3 00
Photograph Album, Turkey Morocco, 60 Portraits, ... 4 00
*Photograph Album, Morocco, 60 Views, extra size 5 00
*Photograph Album, Turkey Morocco, 60 Views, extra size 6 00
*Photo. Album, Turkey Mor., also ruled, for Views 5 50
*Photo. Album, Turkey Mor., also ruled, 60 Views 7 50
Photo. Album, Turkey Mor., oblong ruled, 100 Views 15 00
*Photo. Album, Mor., ruled and gilt edges, 100 Views 9 00



NEW QUARTO, FOUR VIEWS ON PAGE.
Photograph Album, Morocco, 100 Views $7 50
*Photograph Album, Turkey Morocco, in relief and gold, small but ornamental 9 00
*Photograph Album, Turkey Morocco, in relief and gold, unique, full ornamental 12 00

Those marked (*) have French ornaments or rests and chased edges. The cheapest and best made.

PHOTOGRAPHS. Sent by mail, prepaid, to the amount of TWENTY DOLLARS, will have a FOUR-DOLLAR Album sent gratis.

WILLIAM W. HARDING,
MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER, PUBLISHER OF FAMILY AND PULPIT BIBLES,
No. 326 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

ALBUMS FOR EVERY BODY.

The Cheapest and Best Album, containing 24 PICTURES for 75 CENTS. Albums of all descriptions from 25 CENTS to $50, sent free by mail or express, on receipt of price.

C. HUGHES,
Album Manufacturer,
141 Centre St. N. Y.

PORTABLE PRINTING OFFICES

For Merchants, Druggists, Hospitals, small Job Printers, &c. Address ADAMS PRESS CO., 98 Ann St., New York. Specimen Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., Six Cents.

LADIES' LETTER

Five Anatomical Engravings.
Has Information never before published.
By an Experienced Nurse and Female Physician.
Sent free in a Sealed Envelope for Ten Cents.
Address MRS. DR. KEWLER, Brooklyn P. O., N. Y.

PATENT IMPROVED
RIDGEWOOD SMOKING-CASE!
ARCHER & PANCOAST,

Nos. 9, 11, 13, 15, and 17 Mercer St., New York, Sole Agents for the Case and Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco.

SPUNK, NEATNESS, COMFORT, ECONOMY.

An elegant case complete for 1c. No. 1, $1; $2; $3 50; 4, $4; 5, $5; 6, $8.

Single cases sent by mail, or large free on receipt of price and 25 cents extra. Send for Cash! Liberal discount to Agents.

FROM THE ARMY.

"It is the most complete apparatus I have ever seen."—A. E. BURNSIDE, Major-General.

"I find pleasure in the neatness and practical arrangement of your new invention."—F. SIGEL, Maj.-Gen.

"I believe your beautiful little invention will prove most useful to every officer and soldier who can stand smoke as well as fire."

—G. THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER.

"If I were rich enough every man and officer of the Ninety-third Ohio Volunteers: God bless them all!) should Col. CHARLES ANDREWS. Col. Commanding Regiment.

Send for a circular. Lieut.-Governor of Ohio.

EF To Publishers inserting the above (omitting the cuts) to the amount of $5 in their papers, we will, upon receipt of paper containing it, send one five-dollar case by express.

ARCANA WATCH.
An Elegant Novelty in Watches.

The cases of this watch are an entirely new invention, composed of an ornamental metal combined, solid together and planished, producing an exact imitation of 18-carat gold, called Arcana, which will always keep its color. They are as beautiful and durable as solid gold, and are offered at one-eighth the cost. The case is richly and elegantly, with panel and shield for name, with patent pendant, and engraved in the best style of the celebrated Gold Hunting Lever, and are really handsome and desirable, and so exact an imitation of gold as to defy detection. The movement is manufactured by the well-known St. James Watch Company, Jersey City, and is fully warranted, having engraved plates, fancy carved bridges, adjusting regulator, with gilt escapement, and the improved roll jeweled action, with line dial, and skeleton hands, and is altogether a reliable timekeeper. These watches are made in different sizes, the smallest being for ladies, and are all hunting cases. Price of watch, with chain by mail or express for $15. A single one sent in an elegant morocco case for $16. Sent C. O. D. for three hours' examination. We are the sole agents for this watch in the United States, and none are genuine unless bearing our trade-mark.

Address DEVAUGH & CO., Importers,
No. 208 Broadway, Room 4, New York.

FUNNIEST OF LIFE No. 8, the greatest and most original side-splitting oily jokes and grand comic sketch-book ever published, and more than filled with a splendid show of oily plum. The world will laugh! It will be made another better after sending the PHUNNIEST of Life, No. 8.

ENVELOPES AND NOTE PAPER.

At wholesale prices, sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of the price.

Best Buff Note Paper, extra thick..... $4 00
500 white note envelopes, double thick..... 2 50
One ream of Note Paper and 100 envelopes..... 3 00
One ream note style Magnolia envelopes..... 2 50
One ream very thick fine note paper..... 4 00
1000 Canary color letter envelopes..... 4 00
Samples sent if requested.

G. S. HASKINS & CO., Stationers and Envelope Manufacturers, 26 Bookman Street, New York.

"INDISPENSABLE.—To the Correspondent, Gentleman, Lady, Public Speaker, Teacher, nor Man of Business should be without it."—The Red-Book. HOW TO WRITE; HOW TO TALK; HOW TO BEHAVE, and HOW TO DO BUSINESS. Complete volume of 160 pages, for ready reference. Sent by first post for $2 25. Agents wanted. Please address FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York.

BARD & BROTHER'S (Established 1849)
GOLD PENS,

PEN AND PENCIL CASES. Also Manufacturer of BARD & WILSON'S CELEBRATED ANGULAR WRITING PENS. JAS. D. BARD, Ag't, No. 23 Maiden Lane, N. Y. Depository, 91 Cedar, New York.

GREAT INVENTORS.—Fulton, Stephenson, Davy, Gutenberg, Archimedes, Daguerre, Morse, Whitney, Arkwright, Watt, Franklin and descriptions of their Inventions. Maj.-Gen. Terry, Miss Butt, Baron Cuvier, Sir John Herschel, Mrs. Hemans, Lord Brougham, Burton, Goethe, Schiller, Gottfried, Burnett in his Comic Physiognomy (with 15 illustrations), Dr. Kane, Dr. Hayes, HOW TO GAIN OR BROADWAY, illustrated; Color of Eyes, Blue, Brown, Black, Hazel, Gray; Size of the Eyes; Place of the Iris; Color of the Eyelids; Eyelashes, CHOICE OF OCCUPATION, or Parts; the Head, Forehead, Temperaments and Hippocrates and the Temperaments; Crazy Phrenologists. RE-PRODUCTION; Law of Reproduction; Consequences of Reproduction; The Law of Progress; Color Blindness; Noses, Mouths, Chins, Ears, Hands, Feet, Walking, portraits of MEMORY WOODFALL and JAMES PERRY. PHYSIOGNOMY; Physiognomical Classes; Chase in Physiognomy; Lagging to go up; Hide among the Stars; Yielding Jupiter; Ideal Saturn; Observing Mercury; Mixed; VITAL-NOLOGY—Nature in History; Climate and Vegetation; Climate and Crime; North and South; Making the Races; How the Races die out. OUR SOCIAL RELATIONS—Love; Courtship; Whom to Marry; Age to Marry; Marrying for Show. With 57 engraved Illustrations. PHRENOLOGY AND SPIRITUALISM. Price 50 cents. Number. Only 50 cents, by first post, or $2 a year. Address FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York.

Look! Look! Look! My Golden Compound will force the Beard to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days. Satisfaction given, or money refunded. Price 50 cents, or Sixteen for $1. Address Dr. FRANKLIN, Cathom, Ill.

Weston's Metallic Artificial Legs.—Lightest, cheapest, most durable, and most natural limb ever used. Price $18 to $100. Send for a pamphlet.
WESTON & CO., 827 Broadway, New York.

Will force a beautiful set of whiskers or mustache on the smoothest face from five to eight weeks, without stain or injury to the skin, or hair on bald head in eight weeks (HAIR NO REMEDY). I receive recommendations most every day from persons that have used it and found it genuine. Testimonials of thousands. I will send Dr. Beggs's Golden O'Dor by mail, sealed and post paid, for 75 cents (Warranted). Send orders to DR. C. BRIGGS,
Drawer 6360, Chicago, Ill.

$8 OFFICER'S $10 WATCH.

Our whole stock of Imported Watches, being of rich and novel designs, are now offered at reduced prices. Single Watches at Wholesale rates.

AN ELEGANT WATCH in Fine Gold Plated Double Case (Gold Dial), Patent Stem-Wind Centre, Carved Bezel and Backs, English Full Plate Jeweled Movements, adjusted Regulator, Gilt Escapement, Sapphire Pallets, and Fine Imported Dial, a serviceable article in running order, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and a Gent's Elegant Vest Chain and a beautiful MINIATURE GOLD LOCKET, to match, with Mother's Name, Day, and Date of Birth, Engraved Free. Sent by mail to any part of the army or country for only $10.

A NAVY SPECIAL WATCH, of the same style for army use, in Heavy Double Cases, Gold Size, same as the above, with Key, Case, Chain, Locket, etc., complete. Free Chain, Engraved Double Case Locket, etc. Sent by mail to any part of the army or country for only $8.

The Imperial Watch,

Containing a Rare and Valuable Combination of Mechanical Effects, combining vitality its cases and attached to its machinery a beautiful and correct working Tachometer, an accurately adjusted Observer's Compass in miniature, sunk in Dial, and a Reliable Lever, indicating day of month, week, etc., in Case, rendering this Watch a perfect Steam, Heat, and Time Indicator. The beautiful machinery of this valuable Watch is encased in Finely Finished Double Hunting, Magic Spring Plain Cases the color cases being of the 18-Carat Gold, inner cases of Solid Gold Composition, Engine Turned, Top and Bottom, with Panel for Name, and Fancy Push Spring. Genuine English Engraved Jeweled Actions, M. J. Tobias' movements, Fullsized Cap, Self-acting Click, Equal Balance, Independent Action, Fine White Enamel Finished Dust Cut Hands, and is an Exact Imitation of $100 watch, and made by the Best Workmanship and Offers at the Extra Amt, as their standard time-keeper. None Genuine unless bearing our private trade-mark. Price per single one, all complete, by mail, to any part of the army or country, $10. CLUBS SUPPLIED AT WHOLESALE RATES.

192 Nassau St., N.Y. Established 1855.

BOUND VOLUMES
OF
Harper's Weekly,

From the commencement, will be furnished, free of carriage, upon receipt of the price, viz.:

Cloth Binding ..... $7 00 per Volume.
Half Morocco ..... 9 00 "
Each Volume contains One Year.
HARPER & BROTHERS,
Franklin Square, New York.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Compound will force them to grow heavily in six weeks, or no pay. Perfectly safe and sure, and no injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post paid, to any address, on receipt of a letter. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 109 Nassau Street, N. Y.

SUDDEN DEATHS Prevented.

Remove from the system offending humors, which, if permitted to remain, result in this cause. Of the year, are fraught with great danger to life itself.

COLDS, DIZZINESS, BILIOUS AFFECTIONS, RHEUMATISM, GOUT,
SMALL-POX,
And all Fevers are speedily cured by the

Brandreth's Pills,

Which should be used in doses sufficient to remove all crudities and impurities from the stomach and bowels.

Oh! what heartaches would be prevented if these Pills were used with fearlessness and promptitude in the beginning of sickness!

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchasers must unless my PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. See upon it B. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING,
NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicines.

GO ON THE BRAIN AND BRAINS ON OIL.—A grand new Oil-Joke and Humor Fun for a million of people, the laughable, exciting, and splendid show of Oil on the Brain and Brains on Ice! No. 8 now ready. Mailed free on receipt of 15 cents. AMERICAN NEWS CO., 121 Nassau Street, New York.

AGENTS, COME and EXAMINE

An Invention urgently needed by every body, or samples sent free to any Agent. Address at once, with stamp, R. L. WILCOTT, No. 170 Chatham Square, N. Y.

"How 'tis Done." Whiskers in 6 w'ks. Gambling exposed. Fortune-telling. Vermifuge, &c. 100 great secrets. Free by mail. Address DR. CHARLES, Boston, Mass.

MME. DEMOREST'S EXQUISITE TOILET PREPARATIONS. LILY BLOOM, for imparting a purely natural and transparent color to the cheeks. WHITE BLOOM for tinting the complexion with a youthful freshness. Sold by druggists. MME. DEMOREST'S Skin-dressing cures and beautifying the hair; price 50 cents. EYEBROW PENCIL, for shading the eyebrows; price 50 cents. Sold by druggists and perfumers every where, or mailed free on receipt of price by MME. DEMOREST'S EMPORIUM OF FASHIONS, 473 Broadway, New York. Dealers supplied on very liberal terms. Send for circular.

CHILDLINE'S fine Carriages, spring Rocking Horses, Velocipedes, Baby Jumpers, and self-operating toys. L. TIBBALS, 513 Broadway, opposite St. Nicholas Hotel. Send stamp for Circular.

Printing-Presses for Sale.

Two Hand Printing Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 38x51. Price $3500.

Also one Adams Press, 26x40, $2000.

Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

UPHAM'S PIMPLE BANISHER

Removes Pimples on the Face, Freckles, &c. It also relieves the skin and beautifies the complexion. No toilet is complete without it. Price 50 cents. Mailed to any address, for 75 cents, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE JAPANESE HAIR STAIN

Colors the Hair, Whiskers, and Mustache to a beautiful black or brown. It consists of only one preparation. Any child can use it. Price 50 cents, by express. Mailed to any address, for 75 cents, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Dr. Poland's
WHITE PINE
COMPOUND.
THE GREAT AND POPULAR
REMEDY FOR
Colds, Coughs, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Croup, and Whooping-Cough.

Cures Gravel and all Kidney Diseases.

There have been many severe cases in Boston and vicinity cured by the WHITE PINE COMPOUND, which can be referred to, and hundreds of cases of Kidney complaints, etcetera everywhere by taking the White Pine Compound, have been reported by Druggists.

Among all the popular medicines offered for sale, no one seems to have gained favor like the White Pine Compound. This medicine was first made as late as the spring of 1855, and then merely for one individual who was affected with an inflammation of the throat. A cure was effected by it. This induced others to apply for the same remedy, and every one appeared to receive a great benefit. Physicians, however, want without a name till November following, when it was called White Pine Compound. During that month it was advertised for the first time.

Some time in 1856 an individual, who purchased a bottle for a hard cough, was not only cured of the cough, but also of a severe kidney complaint of ten years' endurance. This being truly a discovery, the fact was mentioned to a skilful physician, who replied in substance that the basis of White Pine was one of the best diuretics known, provided its astringency could be counteracted. If the other articles entering into the Compound would affect this, a fortune was in the medicine! The Yellow Kidney pill was then reached: but the hundreds of cures effected by the Compound, in the most aggravated cases of Kidney diseases including Diabetes, prove it to be a wonderful Medicine for such ailments. A large number of physicians now employ it or recommend it for such use.

But while the White Pine Compound is so useful to kidney inflammation, it is also a wonderful curative in all throat and lung diseases. It is quickly relieved and always inflammation that hoarseness and soreness are removed as if by magic. Numerous cases have been reported to the originator where relief in very severe cases has been experienced in less than one hour, and a cure effected in twenty-four hours.

There is a very natural reason for this. The bark, and even the leaves of "hemlock," of White Pine, contain exhaustless medicinal properties. The Indians employed the bark of White Pine in treating diseases long before the settlement of America by Europeans.

A wash of the bark, steeped in water, is exceedingly useful in external inflammation and chronic sore eyes. In fact, the virtues of White Pine Bark are known every where, and the object of the proprietor in compounding the White Pine Compound was so favorably received at the first.

The past year has given a great opportunity to test the virtues of the White Pine Compound. It has been an unusual time for Colds and Coughs, and very large quantities of the White Pine Compound have been purchased with the happiest effects. It speaks well for the Medicine that in every case in which it is prepared are high in its praise.

TESTIMONIALS.

A very large number of important testimonials have already been received from Physicians, Clergymen, Apothecaries, and indeed from all classes in society, showing the most flattering terms of the White Pine Compound.

Dr. Nichols, of Northfield, Vt., says:

"I find the White Pine Compound to be very efficacious not only in coughs and other pulmonic affections, but also in affections of the kidneys, debility of the stomach, and other kindred complaints."

Rev. J. K. Chase, of Rumney, N. H., writes:

"I know I am not regarded your White Pine Compound as an invaluable remedy. I can truly say that I regard it so from my own effects, and valuable they are to me. I am just taken the Compound for a cold, and it works charmingly."

Hon. P. H. Sweetser, of South Reading, writes:

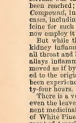
"Having long been reminding of the many valuable medicinal properties of the White Pine, I was prepared, on seeing an advertisement of your White Pine Compound, to give the medicine a trial. It has been used by members of my family for several years for cold and coughs, and in some cases of serious kidney difficulties with excellent results. Several of our friends have also used it and received benefit from the Compound. We intend to keep it always on hand.

From James J. Hoyt.

Bradford, N. H., Sept. 1860.

Dr. Poland.—In the fall of 1857 I took a very violent cold, which settled on my lungs. I very soon raised a bad cough, and rising blood. I was also very badly affected with the troublesome disease called Kidney Complaint. For the three years past I have been very much troubled with my throat and lungs, coughing up and raising an immense sight, with a bad cough after raising blood: I felt that my time had come, and was about leaving day of it. Having a friend who had used your White Pine Compound, I had my faith in it was such as to be my astonishment, before I had taken two bottles, my cough was better; the kidney trouble also, and I was soon raising without choking up and raising so much. I have taken nearly three bottles, and can feel no further pain in me.

I would add, that my father's family is inclined to consumption, my father, mother, and two children having died of it.



From Stephen Bartlett.

Bradford, N. H., July, 1859.

Dr. Poland.—I had been afflicted with Kidney Complaint for a long time, and had a bad cough of ten years' standing, which was fast to get blood raising and choking. No one of my acquaintance expected I would get my health again. But two bottles of your White Pine Compound have cured me of both the cough and Kidney Complaint. I would say that a child is safe in using it. Mine was so badly afflicted with a cough that she sat up only long enough to have her bed made, and we thought she was going in a quick consumption. She took only one bottle of your Compound, and it cured her. She is just as well now as ever she was.

The White Pine Compound, advertised at length in our columns, is the result of a long and successful trial by a highly approved medicine. Dr. J. W. Poland, the inventor, has the confidence of many who know him—a confidence which he enjoyed while laboring usefully many years as a Baptist minister, in which capacity he was called to the make experiments which issued in his medical discovery.

—Boston Watchman and Reflector.

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

GEORGE W. SWETT, M.D.,
Proprietor.

Will be manufactured in future at the
NEW ENGLAND BOTANIC DEPOT, 108 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON,
Under the supervision of
REV. J. W. POLAND, M.D.
DR. SWETT will attend to the business department, to whom all orders should be addressed.
Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers in Medicine everywhere.
Price 75 Cents per Bottle.

UNITED SERVICE
PETROLEUM AND MINING COMPANY
OF NEW YORK,
INCORPORATED UNDER THE LAWS OF NEW YORK.

Capital, $500,000, in 100,000 Shares. Par Value, $5 00. Working Capital, $155,000. $140,000 Stock. $15,000 Cash.

NO FURTHER ASSESSMENTS. NO PERSONAL LIABILITY.

OFFICES: 240 Broadway, New York; Post-Office Box 5359.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT—MAJOR-GENERAL W. S. HANCOCK. SECRETARY—GEO. D. KELLOGG.
VICE-PRESIDENT AND GEN. SUP'T—W. D. MANN. COUNSEL—W. S. HILYER.
TREASURER—W. C. CHURCH. BANKER—BANK OF THE REPUBLIC.

TRUSTEES:

MAJOR-GENERAL W. S. HANCOCK, United States Army.
W. S. HILYER, New York.
W. D. MANN (of Mann, Hamm & Co., Manufacturers), New York.
H. A. CHADWICK (of Sykes, Chadwick & Co., Willard's Hotel), Washington, D. C.
S. A. H. MARKS, Washington, D. C.
BRIGADIER-GENERAL W. HOFFMAN, U. S. A., Com. Gen. of Prisoners.
B. B. HOTCHKISS, Manufacturer of "Hotchkiss Shell," &c., New York City.
D. STRATTON (of Stratton, Cress & Co.), New York.
W. C. CHURCH, Editor and Proprietor of ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL, New York.

ONLY 28,000 SHARES FOR SALE; SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $3 00.

THE COMPANY'S PROPERTIES.

No. 1.—One-half (i) acre on Cherry Run, Venango County, Penn., three-fourths of a mile above the great Rock Well, and in the immediate neighborhood of the new Two Hundred Barrel Well, which has within a few days attracted so much attention. This well is owned by the Company.

No. 2.—One-half (i) acre adjoining the above tract. Perpetual lease. Half all Oil.

No. 3.—Three-fourths (¾) of an acre on the Run next above the lots just described. Perpetual lease. Half all Oil. These lots are within the Creek bottom, level and smooth, with room enough for ten wells.

No. 4.—One-half (i) acre, fee simple, on Rocky River, Medina County, Ohio, being a part of the famous "Oil Spring Lot," and but four rods from the well now producing Lubricating Oil—a well bored for salt many years ago.

No. 5.—Twenty (20) acres, fee simple, on Rocky River, adjoining the farm on which is the above-described Oil Well, and on the outskirts of the village of Liverpool, Oil Gatherings, who recently prospected here, found the place where the Oil should be obtained, and only on this tract, at a point where a ravine makes into the river.

No. 6.—Fifty (50) acres, fee simple, on Rocky River, adjoining the farm on which Oil is now obtained. There is on this property a fine large house, good barn, and outhouses, which will be valuable in the operations of the Company. A derrick is up on this lot, and is being bored by hand power to the depth of two hundred feet, while an engine is being got on to the ground.

No. 7.—One hundred and fifty (150) acres in the Federal Creek, Athens County, Ohio, oil country, in the immediate neighborhood of the Joy Farm One Hundred Barrel Well, struck recently, and surrounded by many good producing wells. The territory around this well is owned by the Company. A great many wells are now producing largely in this section, and hundreds going down. No failures are reported any where in this region. It is just opposite the Oil Creek and Kanawha oil belt, and has been examined and pronounced by all the best geologists as in the very centre of the Oil Basin.

Nearly the entire 600 acres of land owned by this Company is bottom land, and every foot of it boring territory, giving ample room for more than 1500 wells.

The property is all heavily timbered, and none of them in mythical or unknown regions, where perhaps there is not a well being bored within fifty miles, and where, if oil should be found, the means of transportation would be situated so far away from the property that the product would be worth but little. This property, on the contrary, has the advantages of which will readily appear, in that all these lands are surrounded by active development, numbers of wells going down, and transportation already at hand to reach that, should oil be found, the property is enhanced in value the Company should not at once commence operations themselves on all the lots.

ORGANIZATION AND PROGRESS OF THE COMPANY.

This Company has been organized on a different plan from most Petroleum Companies now in operation, the advantages of which will be apparent to every one.

The property of this Company was purchased by an Association of forty-five gentlemen, and was selected after the most careful examination by two of their number, sent out for the especial purpose. With the money for the purchase of the lands was raised $15,000 working capital, and placed in the hands of the Trustees. This enabled the Association to lease on favorable terms, and to commence operations at once. The Trustees are all men of business habits, and proposed to at once commence operations, instead of waiting for the sale of the stock to produce working capital, as has been the case with many wells now in operation in the Oil Regions.

The Trustees are also men of means, and have been able to lay out their money in the most judicious manner. With good success, sixty days will suffice to complete these wells; and with a few rods of this favorable trial oil territory will be worth a million dollars. On Cherry Run, and within a few rods of this property are some very fine wells. The famous Coquette (800 bbls.), Mercer (400 bbls.), and Rock Well (300 bbls.), and Norman Wells (900 bbls.), are immediately across on the Run. The Two Hundred Barrel Well, which flows 200 barrels hourly, is less than one mile below on Cherry Run, and a large number of wells in the Rock Well and Stone Mill Run lots are to be recognized as soon as the Oil Burn yet discovered, and immediately between the Rock Well and Stone Mill Run lots are to be recognized as soon as the Oil Burn yet discovered, and immediately between the Rock Well and Stone Mill Run lots are to be recognized as soon as the Oil Burn yet discovered, and immediately between the Rock Well and the one side and the Coquette, Jersey, &c., on the other side, the largest oil wells in the world, and in the distance there are numerous wells in this same vein of oil. Further on in this same line is the famous Pole Hole Well of the United States Petroleum Company, and the "Oil Spring Lot; one on the Goodrich Farm, and these wells are now getting down to the Oil Sand. This property is but a short distance from Titusville (only 30 acres, Liverpool; and one on the Brown Farm, Gerdine

FROM OUR SPECIAL WAR CORRESPONDENT.

CITY POINT, VA., April —, 8.30 A.M.

"All seems well with us."—A. LINCOLN.

SEVEN-THIRTIES.

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND
U.S. LOAN AGENTS,
4 Broad St. and 694 Broadway,
New York.

Subscriptions received for any amount, and a constant supply of the notes on hand for immediate delivery.

ROBINSON & OGDEN, Bankers.

FISK & HATCH,
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

The Model Pocket-Pistol of the Age.

SLOCUM'S Patent Side-Loading REVOLVER.

Length, 7½ Inches. Weight, 14 Ounces.
Carries a No. 32 Metallic Cartridge.

Its advantages over all others are:
1st. It does not require special ammunition.
2d. It is perfectly safe while being loaded.
3d. It can be loaded in the dark, and quicker than any other pistol.
4th. It can be carried in the pocket, without danger, when loaded.
5th. It is sure fire, and possesses great strength.
FOR SALE BY THE TRADE GENERALLY.
HOWARD, SANGER & CO.,
105 and 107 Chambers Street, New York.
Descriptive Circulars furnished upon application.

UNCLAIMED MONEY.—75,000 PERSONS WANTED TO CLAIM MONEY, ESTATES, &c., which have been unclaimed since 1794. Fee to search for name in Registry, $3. Genealogies traced. All letters must be prepaid. ✠ CO., Unclaimed Money and Property Registry, No. 17 Charlotte Street, London (W.C.), England.

Calenberg & Vaupel's
PIANO-FORTES,
99 and 101 Bleecker Street, 2d Block West of Broadway,
Warranted for Six Years.

ARMY and NAVY AGENCY.
Pensions, Bounties, Pay, Prize Money, together with all claims of the army and navy promptly procured. Correspondence promptly answered. L. BOWEN & CO., 37 Park Row, N.Y.

This invaluable salve is a certain cure for Piles, Corns, Cuts, Bruises, Sores, and Rheumatism. Relieves Burns Pains in five minutes. No one should be without it. Saves Doctors' Bills. 25 Cents a Box. Sent free by mail on receipt of 27 Cents. Depot 43 Liberty St., New York.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE
Magnifying small objects 500 times. MAILED FREE everywhere for 50 CENTS, OR THREE FOR $1.00.
Address P. C. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

GINGER SNAPS.
A Collection of Two Thousand Substitutions of Wit. THE Material Gathered, and the Whole Dished Daked, by JO COX. Special care has been taken in the preparation of these "Ginger Snaps" that nothing should be contained in them that might offend the most fastidious taste. 160 pages. Price, fancy paper, 25 cents; boards, 38 cents; cloth, 50 cents. Sent postpaid. AMSDEN & CO., Publishers, Boston, Mass.

LAWRENCE, BALDWIN & CO.,
70 Wall Street, New York.
BANKERS and BROKERS,
DEALERS IN ALL KINDS OF
Government Securities.
PETROLEUM,
AND ALL OTHER KINDS OF
STOCKS, BONDS, &c.,
BOUGHT AND SOLD ON COMMISSION AT THE REGULAR BOARD, MINING, AND PETROLEUM EXCHANGES.
Interest Allowed on Deposits.
DEWITT C. LAWRENCE. CYRUS J. LAWRENCE.
SIMEON BALDWIN, JR. WM. A. HALSTED.

VERMILYE & CO.,
No. 44 WALL STREET,
BANKERS,
And Dealers in all Classes of
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,
479 Broadway, below Broome St.
Sing Song Chinese Porcelain;
ALSO PARIAN, FRENCH CHINA, GLASS, &c.
French Dinner Sets.

CARPET WARP,
FIRST AND SECOND QUALITY;
Wapping Twine made of Paper.
Twines and Paper. H. A. HARVEY, 40 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

Great Sale
OF
WATCHES AND JEWELRY,
Worth over $1,000,000,
Consisting of Gold and Silver WATCHES, Chains, Bracelets, Sets of Jewelry, Rings, Lockets, Gold Pens, &c., &c.,
All to be sold for One Dollar each!
WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE! NOT TO BE PAID FOR UNTIL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO RECEIVE!
Certificates of the various articles are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the certificate you will see what you have, and then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch or any set of Jewelry on our list for ONE DOLLAR.
Five Certificates will be sent for $1, eleven for $2, 30 (with premium gold pen), for $5, 100 (with premium gold watch) for $15. We will send one Certificate on receipt of 25 cents; also our Circular and Terms to Agents, which will want every where, and offer liberal inducements. Address
A. H. ROWEN & CO., 36 Beekman St., N.Y.

THE FAMOUS "YOUNG UN!"
Writes for the American Jeweler. The best tales, sketches, and poetry, also entertaining enigmas and games, are given every week. Single Copies, Six Cents.

ILLUSTRATED FLY. After a long search, are spotted and quickly healed by Holloway's famous Ointment. Only 25 cents per Pot.

GOLD PENS.
The LIVINGSTON PEN is established by all who have used it to be the best pen for the least money of any in the market. They are to be had in fine gold, and warranted, and for one year's service guarantee when required. Pens in solid silver extra-gun metal, $1.75; ebony wood holders, 50 cents; pearl reserve holders, $2.50; telescope extension cases, $2.50; stylus silver cases, $2.75; ebony holders and cases, $1.50. Pens repaired, 50 cents each, and sent by mail, postage paid.
H. S. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office,
19 Maiden Lane, New York City.

NEGROLEUM, formerly PETROLEUM.
IS NATURE, SOURCE, &c., by HORRIBLE GREASY, Etc. PRICE 25 CENTS. Sold by all Druggists.
AMERICAN NEWS CO., 121 Nassau Street.

Great Imperial Watch.
See Cosby Brothers' Advertisement on page 328.

N. Y. PIANO-FORTE COMPANY.
Grand and Square Pianos, superior in all others,
No. 204 Hudson Street, New York.

MUNRO'S TEN-CENT NOVELS exceed in popularity any thing of the kind ever published.
Ready to-day, "EAGLE-EYED ZEKE, THE LONG-ARMED TRAPPER," a wild, strange, thrilling story.
A "breath of a boy" in "Eagle-eyed Zeke!"
For slimming a mountain and swimming a creek,
Or chasing Indians; and his "Jeep," "Injuneh,"
Would split you with laughter, his ways are so odd.
The following is a list of Munro's Popular Novels:
No. 1. The Hunters. 2. The Trapper's Retreat. 3. The Prairie Bird's Revenge. 4. The Border Rifles. 5. The Track of Fire. 6. The Man-Eaters. 7. Charlotte Temple. 8. The Death Feet. 9. The Indian-Slayer. 10. The Tiger of the Ocean. 11. The Hunter's Triumph. 12. The Ocean Rovers. 13. The Fiery Cutwitted. 14. Keke Starnum, the Lion-hearted Scout. 15. The Scourge of the Seas. 16. The Cipher Maiden. 17. Long-Legged Joe; or, The Demon of the Woods. 18. The Wild Scout of the Mountains. 19. The Forest Lodge. 20. The Rollicking Rangers. 21. Rattlesnake Dick; or, the Flower of the Wigwam. 22. Saltwater Tom, the Sea Rover. 23. The Imps of the Prairie; or, The Shecher of the Cave. 24. Tom Roberts' Trump. 25. Joe, the "Serpent." 26. Lightfoot, the Scout. 27. The Giant Spy of Pound Hill. 28. Star Cheek, the Wild Half-Breed. 29. Sparkling Eyed Poll. 30. Snakey Snodgrass. 31. Rolling Thunder; or, The Rival War Chiefs. 32. Steve Hickford, the Bold Scout. 33. Sly Sam, the Quaker Spy. 34. The Three During Trappers. 35. The Fatal Marksman; or "Big Bull." 36. Eagle-eyed Zeke, the long-armed Trapper.
☞ For sale at all News Agents, and sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, 10 cents each. GEORGE MUNRO & CO., No. 127 William Street, New York.

ASK ANY NEWSDEALER OR BOOKSELLER for a copy of DAWLEY'S NEW WAR NOVELS. If he has not got them he will get them for you.
No. 1. Mosby, the Guerrilla.
No. 2. Pauline, the Female Spy.
No. 3. Semmes, the Pirate.
No. 4. Kildare, the Black Scout.
No. 5. Osgood, the Demon Refugee.
Illust'd, Illuminated Cover. Price 25c.; trade $2.50 per 100.
T. R. DAWLEY, Pub., 13 and 15 Park Row, N.Y.

"Electric" Self-adjusting enameled white, $3, $5, $7, and $9 per doz.; specimens, 50c., $1. Snow-white, linen-finished, Bristol-stiffened, $1 25. Suitable Neck-Tie, $1. Gentlemen's Handkerchiefs! Best Cotton, $1 50. Cuffs, $1 50. Genie' steel Cuffs, $2. Mailed on receipt of price and "rules." JEANERET, 79 Nassau St., N.Y. Box 2586.

Free to Every Body.
SOLDIERS, SAILORS, FARMERS, MECHANICS, and EVERY BODY throughout the United States, Free, by mail, a First-Class, Interesting NEWSPAPER, by sending their address to HARPER'S "ARMY AND HOME JOURNAL," 69 Ann Street, New York.

"I do not see how an officer or soldier can have a complete outfit without it."—GOV. DIFFORD.

For sale by all Fancy-Goods Houses and Sutlers.
Price $2 50, rent free of postage.
D. B. BROOKS & BROTHER, Salem, Mass.

To Consumptives.
THE ADVERTISER, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure.
To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure CURE for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable; and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.
Parties wishing the Prescription will please address
EDWARD A. WILSON,
Williamsburg, Kings County, New York.

INDIA-RUBBER GLOVES
Are an excellent protection in gardening, house-work, &c., making the hands soft, white, and roney visits; also a sure cure for chapped hands, salt rheum, &c. Sent by Mail on receipt of $1 50 per pair. Sizes, 6 to 12 for gents. GOODYEAR'S I. R. GLOVE MFG'G CO.,
Sept5,'67 205 Broadway, New York.

Beards!
In three cases of nearly, related growth, the person over GAYE'S GARNET, the Italian Hair Dye. Numerous Sworn Sheets have been found to excite the Beard, Moustaches, &c., to a luxuriant growth within 20 days. Testimonials. The History and a small sample of this Inimitable Liquid sent free by return post.
JOHN RAWLINS, 915 Broadway, New York.

SOLDIERS' CERTIFICATES,
Beautifully printed in five colors, size 12x18. Every soldier should have one. Price 50 cents each, sent by mail. Three different varieties for $1. Agents wanted. Address J. C. BUCHANAN, 145 Walnut Street, Cincinnati.

IN THE EDUCATION OF YOUTH,
Familiarity with a PURE AND REFINED LITERATURE has an important influence. As a vehicle of such literature,

Our Young Folks
stands without a rival. Its Sketches of Travel and Biography, Tales, Poems, and Essays, upon topics of peculiar interest to youth, are the work of our Best Writers; and the accompanying illustrations are by our Best Artists.
THE TERMS, the Beautiful, the Good, Young Folks are contemplated by its pages to love and learn.
Terms, $2 00 a year; a liberal discount to clubs. Send 10 cents, for a specimen number.
TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston, Mass.

WARD'S PATENT
FRENCH PRINTED
PAPER COLLARS
387 B'WAY, N.Y. & ALL
GENTS FURNISHING STORES.

PETROLEUM at $1,
Versus
ALCOHOL at $5.
Hotel, Restaurant, and Steamboat Proprietors can save 80 per cent. by using our Patent Kerosene Lamp for Chafing-Dishes and Tea and Coffee Urns. They can be adapted to all the styles of the above-named articles now in use. Call or address KEROSENE LAMP HEATER COMPANY, 706 Broadway, New York.

$7 ARMY $10
WATCH.
A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH. Double Case, Lever, Jewelled, small size. Warranted for three solid hunds, "English Movements," and correct time-keeper, with an accurate "Meridian Calendar," showing the "Day of the Week, Month, &c.," to back case.
A single one sent free by mail to any address in a neat case, WITH A BEAUTIFUL VEST CHAIN, FOR $10.
A neat Silver Watch, same pattern with "Minature Calendar," &c., specially adapted to the ARMY. Sent free by mail, to any address, only $7.
English and American Levers from $15 up. Gold Watches of all descriptions low.
Address CHAS. P. NYMPTON & CO., Sole Importers, 38 & 40 Ann Street, New York.

TEETH like pearls and breath of sweetness secured by Caswell, Mack & Co.'s Fumodonta Tooth-Paste.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED, cordially recommend to the notice of the friends of the Christian Commission the offer of K. & H. T. Anthony & Co. to devote the object 25 per cent. of their retail sales of Albums, Stereoscopic Views, and Card Photographs, for the fortnight commencing April 3d, to the work in their advertisement.
GEO. H. STUART, Pres. U. S. Christian Commission.
J. T. DODGE.
H. DYER, Secretary N. Y. Branch, Christian Com.
MORRIS K. JESUP.
THEODORE ROOSEVELT.
W. E. DODGE, Chairman N. Y. Branch.
[ADVERTISEMENT.]

THE CHRISTIAN COMMISSION.
NOTICE TO EVERY BODY. TWO WEEKS FOR THE SICK AND WOUNDED SOLDIERS. During the fortnight commencing April 3d we will devote 25 per cent of all the retail sales at our counter of Albums, Stereoscopic Views, and Card Photographs, and also requirements by mail for the same, where so specified, to the relief of our sick and wounded soldiers, through the instrumentality of the Christian Commission.
Orders by mail for this object, bearing date any time previous to May 1, will be received, and the 25 per cent. paid over. The acknowledgement of the Treasurer of the Christian Commission will be sent when required. The goods will be sold at our usual printed retail prices.
E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 Broadway, New York.
Three Doors from St. Nicholas Hotel.

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS OF THE WAR,
OBTAINED AT GREAT EXPENSE, AND FORMING A COMPLETE PHOTOGRAPHIC HISTORY OF THE GREAT UNION CONTEST.

Bull Run,	Dutch Gap,	Strawberry Plain,
Yorktown,	Fenton Trains,	Deep Bottom,
Gettysburg,	Hanover Junction,	Bolte Plain,
Fair Oaks,	Lookout Mountain,	Moulton,
Savage Station,	Chickamauga,	Chattanooga,
Fredericksburg,	City Point,	Fort Negley,
Antietam,	Nashville,	Atlanta,
&c., &c.	&c., &c.	&c., &c.

Every body is interested in these memorable scenes. Just published by E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 Broadway, New York.
Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.

POLLAK & SON, Meerschaum Manufacturers, Importers, and dealers in Meerschaum Goods, Pipes and Holders, 97 Nassau St., N. Y., wholesale and retail. Repairing done. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $5 to $50 each.

BENJ. F. KENDALL,
BROKER IN
PETROLEUM STOCKS,
No. 52 Wall Street, N. Y.

NAVY PRIZE CLAIMS CASHED
OR COLLECTED ON LIBERAL AND PROMPT TERMS, and settlements effected. PRIZE ACCOUNTS guaranteed to be effected in the shortest time. Three time drafts issued as soon as awards are made. RICE & SWIFT, 208 Broadway, New York City.

Officers, Soldiers, and Citizens!
All the Army Corps Rings in 16-carat gold stamped and warranted at $3 and $5 each. Also 160 other styles of every size, plain, enamelled, and jewelled, from $5 to $10 each. Sent by mail. Send stamp for Circular.
Address E. P. BEACH, 12 MAIDEN LANE, N.Y.

TICKS, SCAB, VERMIN.
SheepWashTobacco
Should be used by all Farmers on this
SHEEP, ANIMALS, AND PLANTS.
For sale by JAS. Y. LOCKE, Agent South Down Co., 21 Central Wharf, Boston.
For sale in New York by R. H. ALLEN & CO., 189, 191 Water St., and DUDLEY & STAFFORD, 69 Beekman St.

OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY,
Is to be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods, of whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are sold by the box in 6-yard pieces, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. Office of the Company, No. 95 Chambers Street, New York.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

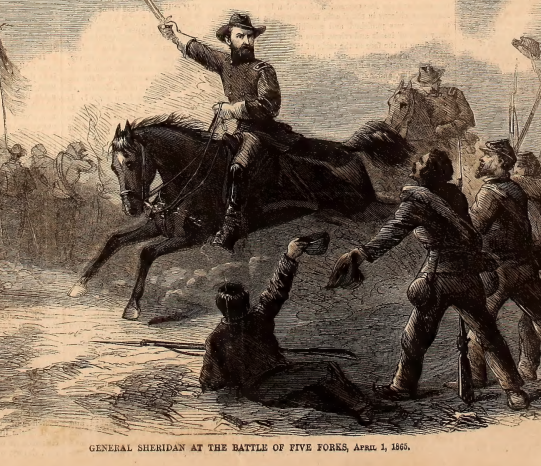
VOL. IX.—No. 434.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

THE FINAL VICTORY.

THE people are full of rejoicing. The war for the Union has been their war, fought in their interest, sustained by their patriotism—a patriotism that has withheld neither property nor life.—Let the people rejoice, then, in the final triumph, with a consciousness of their own strength, but especially with a conviction of the righteousness of their victory and a sense of overwhelming gratitude to the God of Battles. Their Hail Columbia is fitly accompanied by their Te Deums.

This journal having in its pictorial illustrations followed the course of events during the war, it is now with peculiar gratification that we present to our readers in this week's issue illustrations of the closing scenes of the great conflict. We give on page 247 a Map of the last battle-field of the Armies of Virginia. For this map, drawn from the official maps furnished to the corps commanders, we are indebted to the Army and Navy Journal. The decisive battle of Five Forks, fought by General SHERIDAN, April 1, and in which LONGSTREET's corps was swept from the field and LEE's right flank uncovered, we have illustrated on this page. This battle will go down to history as the great master-piece of General PHIL SHERIDAN. For strategy it is unsurpassed by any thing in the war. During the first stage of the battle the infantry was not disclosed. But so soon as LONGSTREET had been driven into his breast-works, then, by a sudden movement, he was flanked, and his entire command captured and dispersed. Our illustrations of the battle relate only to the operations of the cavalry. SHERIDAN was more himself than ever before. Riding up and down along his front, his fiery enthusiasm inspired the men to almost superhuman efforts. With such a presence among them there could be no shrinking from the fight. And it was an obstinate fight, too. But SHERIDAN knew what depended upon that action; and when night came, and his work had been well done, he knew that LEE's army had been defeated.



CAVALRY CHARGE AT THE BATTLE OF FIVE FORKS.

The same spirit which had secured the victory on Saturday was infused into the army in front of Petersburg, in the assault on the enemy's entire front on Sunday. This also we have illustrated on page 244. We give on that page a sketch of the fort near Burgess Mill, where the Boydton Road crosses Hatcher's Run. It was out of this fort that the rebels were flanked by the Sixth Corps. On Sunday night this corps had advanced to the banks of the Appomattox, above Petersburg, having captured 2000 prisoners and about 20 guns. Another sketch on the same page illustrates the gallantry of Colonel SNIDER, of the One Hundred and Eighty-fifth New York, who, after four color-sergeants had been shot down, and two line officers, who had taken the colors from the hands of the sergeant, himself seized them and rallied his wavering line. A third sketch represents the rebels retreating across the Appomattox, by the turnpike-bridge, they having set fire to the Railroad Bridge, just above. The building shown in this sketch was the rebel Commissary Depôt.

On page 245 we illustrate the entrance of Petersburg by the Ninth Corps. The first troops to enter the city were Michigan veterans, under General ELY. The rebels had been crossing the Appomattox all night, and had just brought up their rear as our troops entered. The flag was raised over the Custom-house by the Second Michigan Regiment.

On the same day General WEITZEL entered Richmond, which had been evacuated Sunday night. The rebel General GARY's cavalry had been the last to leave the city. His force passed up Main Street not five minutes ahead of the Union column. The scene of the entrance of the Union army has been graphically portrayed by our artist on pages 248 and 249. KAUTZ's cavalry were in the advance, and were met by Mayor MAYO and a deputation of the citizens, who formally surrendered the city. Most of WEITZEL's men were negroes, and advent excited the greatest enthusiasm among the swarthy denizens of the rebel capital. It is estimated that one half of the population left in Richmond were negroes. Nor was the enthusiasm manifested by the citizens confined to the negroes. All seemed glad, as if they had thrown off from their shoulders an intolerable burden. The city was on fire when our troops entered. By order of General HEINTZELMAN the torch had been applied to all the public buildings, from the Tredegar Works, on the canal above the city, to the Navy-yard at Rockettsand distance of two miles—including the laboratories, artillery-shops, arsenals, Franklin paper-mill, the Petersburg and Danville depots, all the Commissary and Quarter-master buildings on and near Fourteenth Street, Rahm's Foundry, and other buildings. By seven o'clock A.M nearly the whole city south of Main Street—between Eighth and Fifteenth streets, and Twentieth and Twenty-third streets—was one great sea of flame. The aspect of Main Street became now completely changed by the fire, that those best acquainted with the buildings can not possibly meet with certainty; the street is an amphitheatre of crumbling walls and falling chimneys. While the city was burning, about nine o'clock in the forenoon, terrific shell explosions, rapid and continuous, added to the terror of the scene, and led to the impression that the city was being shelled by the retreating Confederate army from the Southside; but the explosions were soon ascertained to proceed from the Government arsenal and laboratory, then in flames.

GENERAL SHERIDAN AT THE BATTLE OF FIVE FORKS, APRIL 1, 1865.

Other illustrations which we give of the city of Richmond appear in its present desolate aspect. We give a view of Castle Thunder and of Libby Prison on page 252. In regard to the former of these buildings we quote the following interesting description from the World:

Leaving Richmond proper, and descending into the low, squalid portion of the town known as Rocketts, one runs among the many large warehouses, and is struck with surprise for the strength of a fabric, a certain one more irregular than the rest. An archway leads you under ponderous walls and to the second story; and if you be of a thoughtful or fortawy, whereupon excited imagination. This is the jail of Castle Thunder, and it was the civil or State prison of the Confederate. In the second story, and there in the new commandant's room by the record left behind by the Confederates. In large letters one slender.

There are some of the entries:

"Corporal Stevens—giving the foot to Federal prisoners of war; forty lashes upon the bare back."

Same carried out by order of [illegible].

"Peter B. Irwin—passing forged government notes; thrice and his head twice months; forty lashes a day. Approved.

"Andrew Wright—attempting to desert to the enemy; sentenced to be shot. Approved. Executed March 30, 1864.

"John Montjoy—communicating with the enemy; to be hung. Approved. Carried into effect March 26."

In an inner room are some fifty pairs of iron shackles, with which the unfortunate upon them, which have bent the spirit and body of many a resisting heart. Within are two condemned cells, perfectly dark and dank that over the window pep-hole—the smell from which would knock a strong man down.

For in their entire lies the sink, ever open, and the floors are spread with unclean[illegible]. In the cell is a door leads to a washed yard not forty feet long, set fifteen feet high, secured by the barred windows of the old prison rooms, and by enemy-bores upon the wall-top. Here the wretched prisoner said and lung in the air, and breathing comrades. The brick wall at the foot of the yard is scarred and worn by balls and bullets which have passed through some human heart and wrote here their damning testimony. The gallows had been erected at the end in the ledge, and in mid-air the impotent captive swung, none dared or dared to say a good word for him. Not so for any offense against God's law, but for offending mis neighbor, or shedding blood, or seeking his kind unbreathe, but for standing in the way of an ignoble ambition which has now gone down in the dust before the justice of the South, and arguments are prompt to defend the liberty's prison-yard rises and the sun may that has not stained with the blood of the innocent. Many a one has ever been committed, as did many a one who there now, never to return; but the jail was now hidden from mortal sight, even who shot at every rag fluttering in the breeze, and with this little circle of earth in life was cracked close to the light, river, and under the cover of that high Capitol where held and held the sheen of war to wring from a reluctant Union a little path of arrogant independence to rule civilization as they pleased, and warp the destinies of our race. Now only a few remnants endure in the Castle Thunder. Every captive who survived the fame of the city made a perilous descent from the windows and scaled the dead wall.

The "Libey" is now occupied by rebel prisoners, and our artist has taken the moment of their occupation for the sketch which we have engraved.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1865.

PALM SUNDAY.

UNDER the shadow of waving palms the Prince of Peace rode into the holy city; and on the festival that commemorates that day, peace, plumed sheathed wreath, returns to our beloved country. So great an event our history has not known. For Peace, under her joyous banner, brings Justice and Union. The light that mildly beams from her starry brow is the light of liberty. The flag that was lowered in sorrow and shame four years ago, now floats again in silent triumph, and no man henceforward will doubt what that flag means.

It is not possible in the moment of jubilee to comprehend the scope of this event. It is a victory that has been won is not selfish or limited. It is not an American victory only. It is the vindication of the equal rights of men every where. "Man," says the historian MERIVALE, speaking of JULIUS CÆSAR, "can not defy mankind with impunity." No class, no privilege, no theory, which involves permanent injustice to men can withstand the course of civilization. That God works in history is only a way of saying that the progress of human development will inevitably assert itself against all resistance. Four years ago it was hard for us in this country to believe that we, too, must be forced through blood and sorrow to defend this truth. We thought we fully believed it. But the fierce glare of war we can now see that even this sharp and bitter struggle was necessary to establish our own principles not only before the world but in our own hearts.

Let us thank God that we have not failed. Let us rejoice that, through all the doubt and darkness, through the fires of opposing guns, and the secret and malicious objections of those who believed and wished those fires might prevail, the great heart of the American people has been strong and true. Let us thank God that we thank God that the young and noble who obeyed the call of their brave souls, and, leaving all that makes life dear and fair, died to defend their country might live, have not died in vain. Peace may return, but the precious darlings of a thousand hearts and homes shall return not more. Those whose names shone to-day, and those who fell unnamed in the heroic ranks, were not divided in their deaths, and shall forever share a common gratitude and glory. And by the love we bore them and they bore us, by the untold and unimaginable sacrifice, let us fervently pray that God may strengthen us to secure that which we have won, and perpetuate a peace which will not shame their memory, and that Palm Sunday may henceforth be the symbol of the reconciliation of national principles of the Government. And when he asked Thomas why, under the circumstances, he wished to risk every thing by leaving the army, Secretary Toomes replied, substantially, "Don't be uneasy. I will agree to drink every drop of blood that will be shed in the war; and I draw the sword only to the edge, and precipitate by terror, and the consequent submission of the country, the very supremacy of the South in the Union which we leave."

The public sentiment of the South was radically hostile to the Union because it was opposed to the principles upon which alone the Union was possible. If it could have its own way it was satisfied. If it could suppress free speech, if it could indefinitely extend slavery, and prohibit the National Government of any protection by giving it a Constitutional sanction, as STEPHENS believed it had effectively done, it was willing to continue to use the Union as its tool. And to the only way to the Union of the South. It was a Union subordinate to State sovereignty. It was a Union which had no power to act except against the enemies of the Southern policy. It was a Union whose Government had no right to enforce its authority against any citizen of the United States if the State to which he lived declared that those leaders were able to begin and maintain with remarkable unanimity of popular support this large and strenuous rebellion against the national authority.

The practical question now is how much this opinion is changed by the war. Cannon conquer, but they do not necessarily convert. The South has learned that it can not establish State sovereignty by force of arms; but does it any the less believe that every State is rightfully sovereign? If it still holds that view, can the Government of the United States wisely recognize the resumption of political power by the people of the States which he has overcome? What power will not be used against the Union? Must not the resumption of that power be preceded by an acknowledgment upon each, in every instance, of the supreme authority of the nation, and the relinquishment of the doctrine of State sovereignty in the Southern sense? In the present triumph of the national power to prove merely that this particular revolt of State sovereignty has failed, or that all rebellion upon that ground is destined to be impotent? Unless we utterly mistake the feeling of the American people, they are resolved that no man shall henceforth serve in their army or navy who recognizes any flag before the Stars and Stripes; nor any man sit in their Congress who does not solemnly swear that he holds the Government of the United States, and not of any individual State, to be the supreme political authority in the country. We have no less faith in the consent sense than in the magnanimity of the nation.

GRANT.

ELEVEN months ago—on the 3d of May, 1864—General GRANT broke up on the Rapidan, and advanced upon Richmond. The route he chose had been declared impracticable. The army that confronted him was the choicest force of the enemy, long and carefully trained, and led by their most trusted chief. The preparation up on both sides had been most elaborate and prolonged, and the issue of the campaign was the life or death of a nation. The battles that followed were tremendous and sanguinary. The loss upon both sides was enormous, and will never be known. Driven back step by step, slowly retreating toward Richmond, the rebel General pulled every mile. Flanked and worsted, he still held his army compact and effective. Recalling from the Shenandoah Valley in his front, he still guarded his rear, and, posting himself outside his capital, was suddenly forced into the works that immediately defended it by one of the most daring and successful of military movements.

When GRANT crossed the James he had demonstrated that his route to Richmond was not only the best, because it entirely covered Washington, but was the most effective, because it had so fearfully disabled LEE's army. He had not indeed driven it in a pout, nor compelled its surrender. He had not gained the advantage of an entire failure in his subsidiary movements in the Shenandoah and to the south of Richmond, and therefore were good military critics who thought that his campaign had failed. But they did not know the man. They did not remember Vicksburg or Chattanooga. GRANT said, quietly, "I shall fight it out on this line, if it takes all summer." It did take all summer and all winter. But he fought it out, and obliterated the army and the cause of his antagonist together.

The whole career of Lieutenant-General GRANT shows the most profound comprehension of the rebellion, and the most absolute mastery of the means necessary to suppress it. An earnest, faithful, silent man, he understood both the spirit and the resources of the enemy. Consequently he struck heavily at both. The loss of life in the Wilderness was fearful. Timid folk said timidly, and bold folk said fiercely, he is a butcher. The devastation of the Shenandoah was terrible. The same objectors exclaimed that it was inhuman. General GRANT knew that to reduce the rebellion it was necessary to kill men and to destroy provision. He knew that the sacrifice of life on our side was the shortest and the most bloody road. He knew that he compelled a greater loss upon the enemy's. We could better lose a hundred lives than they could lose them. And in his position fighting was imperative.

But while thus he struck at their resources of life and food, and set before Richmond, holding his doomed army in the hollow of his hands, he ordered THOMAS to extinguish HOOD, and then SHERMAN to advance, that the spirit of the rebellion might be crushed at home and its prestige destroyed abroad, by showing that it was a crust, and that the people of the South had resigned their defense to a force. Then the great march of SHERMAN to SAVANNAH, and northward into the heart of North Carolina, revealed this truth. GRANT had demonstrated that LEE's army was the rebellion.

From that moment the cardinal necessity of his position was to prevent LEE's escape and transfer of the field of war. He could hold him to a battle for the defense of Richmond, and in case of success cut off his retreat, there would be no alternative but surrender, and in LEE's instructions to his officers he said, "To this end he moved out upon his extreme left to secure the interior line in the event of victory. The battle began, and turned, as GRANT intended, upon SHERIDAN at the extreme left, as the pivot. The indomitable energy and soldierly skill of SHERIDAN did the work upon which GRANT counted; and then the masterly ability of the Lieutenant-General, seconded by the glorious and tireless valor of his soldiery, struck the blow he had designed from the first through the enemy's lines, compelled a hasty evacuation of Petersburg and Richmond, and at the same moment hemmed in his own victorious columns to the left that he might complete the work. How he completed it is already history.

It was reserved for the modest soldier who practically finished the war in the West to end it at the East, and to end it not only with the most prompt and effective support of all his fellow-Lieutenants but with their profound admiration and sympathy, while the country pays now, and will forever pay, the homages of its unqualified gratitude to his genius and his spotless character. For it is not the least of "the crowning mercies" of these days, that our political and military chiefs are men upon whose simple, earnest, unselfish devotion to their country no taint of suspicion was ever breathed; and our children will be forever grateful that our national salvation was achieved by men people under two such leaders as ABRAHAM LINCOLN and ULYSSES S. GRANT.

ROBERT E. LEE.

THAT the general satisfaction with the surrender of Lee should begin by a kind feeling for the rebel General is not unnatural. But it is a great folly to invest him with any romance. ROBERT E. LEE may be an honest man, a gentleman many of the rebels were, but beyond that he has no claim of any kind whatever upon the regard of the American people.

His army was very bold. Educated an army officer, he acknowledged the doctrine of State sovereignty, and, honestly holding it, he followed his State when she seceded. Now followed his State when she seceded. Now even if a man believed that his State had a right to secede at her pleasure, if he thought the occasion insufficient, as LEE confessed he did, he would silently acquiesce, and no more. But if the occasion were infamous, if the object of the exercise of State sovereignty at such extremes peril to the lives and happiness of his fellow-citizens were nothing but the perpetuity of human slavery, a noble and generous man would have protested with all his heart. ROBERT E. LEE offered his sword.

From that moment he has been an active soldier. His military skill has been much overrated. STONEWALL JACKSON, his Lieutenant, achieved his most famous successes, and LEE's two aggressive campaigns were ignominious failures. No man can be held guilty of a want of genius. But will those who are so eager in excluding CHARLES LEE inform us why this Christian hero had not a word to say in regard to the atrocious treatment of our prisoners in rebel hands, quartered at Belle Isle, under his eyes? Will the flatterers of this Virginian gentleman explain why his reports of operations in the field were so unfair and deceptive as to lead friends of this simple-hearted soldier say why he tried a trick of words in his final correspondence with General GRANT?

There is no use known to us during his long career as a rebel in arms which should favorably signalize ROBERT E. LEE among hundreds of his fellow-rebels. Why does not JOHNSTON, or EWELL, or LONGSTREET, or HILL deserve the same praise? What excellence of character or excess for conduct has he which they have not? To those who speak so softly of his crimes feel as gently about JEFFERSON DAVIS? YET DAVIS at least heartily believed in his cause, and it was LEE, at the head of the army, who first made DAVIS's crime so prolonged and bloody.

We have no emotion of vengeance against General LEE. We would not hang him, even because he has not deserved hanging, but from motives of state policy. Neither are we inaccessible to attention for a fee. But, as Americans, we can buy, but General ARNOLD we despise. ROBERT E. LEE was an American citizen educated by his country, who, from a mistaken sense of duty, deserted his flag. Had his step ended there it would have been sorrowful. But he drew his sword against that flag not because of any oppression or outrage, but because a peaceful and lawful means it bade fair to become the symbol of justice and equal rights; and he drew it, thank God! in vain. There his story ends, and it is infamous.

OUR FOREIGN FRIENDS.

In this hour of high patriotic exultation our thoughts naturally reach across the sea and with the profoundest gratitude to our friends abroad who have steadily maintained our cause and their faith in its final triumph, and maintained it against the doubts and hostility and ignorance of the ruling class. They will now feel that their faith is the strength of a people whose government is fully justified. The remark of the British Chancellor of the Exchequer that DAVIS had created a nation, and that the British Foreign Minister, that the United States Government was fighting for dominion, sprang from their conviction that their own Government could not refuse to consolidate a rebellion, and from their total ignorance of the capacity of a free popular system. We can forgive them: but the event proves that the highest political sagacity is with the liberal and not the aristocratic party in England.

In Europe the members of the Government have been more reticent, but their acts have spoken plainly; and the unfriendly feeling of the court circles has been apparent. The Emperor, a student of history, has wished to keep from committing himself, and his wisdom will now have its reward.

But to us now, and to all faithful Americans hereafter, the names of JOHN BRIGHT, and RICHARD COBDEN, and GOLDWIN SMITH, and JOHN ELIOT CAIRNES, and WILLIAM E. FORSTER, and NEWMAN HALL, with their friend R. D. WEBB, and of HENRI MARTIN, LABOULAYE, LAUGEL, and others in France, will be always honorable and precious. Shall the events of the last four years not teach us that all believers in a true popular government, enlightened and just, whether they advocate its claims by argument or vindicate its power by irresistible arms, and in whatever country they live, form the great liberal party of the world, to which the interests of civil order and peaceful progress are intrusted?

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

THE following striking portrait of the President we find in the Northern Whig of Belfast, in Ireland; and we can hardly be mistaken in attributing it to Professor JOHN ELIOT CAIRNES, of Queens College, Galway, the author of one of the most valuable books upon our history ever written, "The Slave Power," and one of our most effective foreign friends. In the earlier months of the war Professor CAIRNES, in a series of most trenchant and unanswerable articles under his own name in the London Daily News, most triumphantly refuted several of the foreign accession leaders who tried to argue with him the question of the war in its economical and political aspects:

"MR. LINCOLN is one of those historic characters whom CARLYLE, in the better days of his earlier and saner genius, would have loved to sketch. Among the men who have been summoned from the unambitious pursuits of everyday life to save and guide nations in their hour of trial, the unsisted and yet not undignified figure of Abraham will rank with the truest and most self-reliant of the race. But for the subjection of his father across the Ohio to ARCHIBALD LINCOLN, it is unlikely, again, that now he is risking the worthless life of a 'cracker' or 'sand-hiller' in the armies of JEFFERSON DAVIS. If it were not for MR. CARLYLE's oblivion to the principle of 'hiring servants for life' as one of the forms of the rule of the strongest, it is easy to see to which of the two leaders in the civil war his sympathies would turn. JEFFERSON DAVIS is a type of the professional politician—practiced in the convention of government—a master of those arts of national 'palaver' and diplomatic 'leaving the room' by which, with ease, even in an unreasonable degree, MR. CARLYLE's dislike is content to be appeased. Of a more statesmanly mien is Mr. POPPER VARNEY. ABRAHAM LINCOLN, on the other hand, with his genius for silence, and its correlative, occasional felicitous speech, struggling with the difficulties of a imperfect early education—the fine spirit in the rough garb —blending from purpose with humanity, even a deep religion, with a genuine, if homely, humor—seems made for CARLYLE's pen. The formal, documentary, speech of the founder of the Union will contrast strangely with the ungainly and unpolished figure of (we trust) its destined preserver. But history will recognize, as CARLYLE once did to GEORGE WASHINGTON and ABRAHAM LINCOLN—a pure honesty of purpose in both. When the basis of party passion and international jealousy have abated, when everything has spent itself but the simple and unselfish gossip of the day goes the way of all lies, the place of ABRAHAM LINCOLN, in the grateful affection of his countrymen and in the respect of the world, will be second only, if it be second, to that of WASHINGTON himself."

THE LAST OFFICIAL ACT OF GOVERNOR YATES.

A FRIEND in Illinois sends a story of Senator, late Governor, YATES, of that State, which should become historical in his honor.

By the "black laws" of Illinois, lately repealed, free negroes, or, as the law expressed it, "the people of color" when found in the State were liable to arrest and sale. Under this law two persons were arrested about two years since, and convicted of the crime of "being people of color." They were sold, one for fifty-five and the other for ninety-nine years. A prominent lawyer in the town (the names are given us) believing the law to be unconstitutional appealed the case, becoming security for costs, to the Supreme Court, which declared the law constitutional, and that the contract of sale with no bail been temporarily released by the lawyer's action should be returned to the buyers. The offended ex, however, had meanwhile left the State, and the lawyer found himself liable for a large sum.

He reflected for some time, and finally repaired to Governor YATES, who was about vacating the office. The lawyer submitted the case to the Governor's sagacity and humanity, and at the close of the interview emerged with a radiant face. Meeting a fellow-lawyer who was familiar with the circumstances, he said to him, cheerfully,

"Well, it's finished."

"How finished?"

"The men are pardoned," said the lawyer.

"How pardoned?" asked his friend.

The lawyer looked at him for a moment while a grim smile passed over his face, and then answered,

"Pardoned for being black."

This was the last official act of Governor YATES, and Illinois has done wisely in bidding him go up higher.

THE CORNELL UNIVERSITY.

THE tumultuous excitement of these closing days of the war has prevented attention to an act which, in the more tranquil times of the future, will be estimated with all the honor it deserves. EZRA CORNELL, Senator from the Twenty-fourth District, in this State, proposes to give five hundred thousand dollars immediately to found a university, with the name, at Ithaca. Mr. WHITE, Senator from the Onondaga District, one of our most excellent scholars and most efficient public men, has introduced a bill into the Senate incorporating the University, and appropriating to it the income of the sale of public lands granted to this State by Congress by the act of July, 1862.

The importance of Mr. CORNELL's gift to all the higher interests of the State is so apparent that the Board of Regents appointed a committee to visit the People's College at Havana, to which the proceeds of the grant had been previously appropriated, for the purpose of ascertaining whether that college did not conform, or was likely within the limited time of five years to conform, to the conditions of the grant. The committee visited the People's College, made a careful investigation of its condition through the testimony of its officers and neighboring friends, and reported that it did not now conform to the requirements of the law. They further submitted the testimony from which it could readily be inferred whether it was likely to conform in them within the time.

No candid man can read the testimony without seeing that there is no reason whatever to believe it can do so. The People's College is apparently a small and feeble school, with no prospects than such as may arise from the fund under the act of 1862. It consists of a college building and a hundred acres of land; furniture to the amount of a thousand dollars, and a library of two thousand volumes, made up of Congressional documents, Pacific Railroad reports, and documents of the State of New York. It has no philosophical or chemical apparatus, nor shops, tools, machinery, nor farm buildings, farming implements or stock, although the expressed intention of the United States grant was the fostering of practical mechanics and agriculture. Instruction in the collegiate department has not begun, and there are about a hundred and fifty students in the preparatory school.

Whoever has the interests of the most generous education at heart can not doubt that the union of the grant of the United States with the gift of Mr. CORNELL will secure a foundation for a university worthy of the State, and that the advantage of one comprehensive, amply equipped institution is greater than that of a dozen smaller and exaggerated ones, in which no adequate concentration is power. The character of a truly noble university attracts the most eminent men to its chairs, and in its turn sustains a multitude of students. Who can estimate the value of AGASSIZ, for instance, to the University at Cambridge? Not only an institution so liberally endowed could secure the services of a GIBBS so eminent against the imperial competition of Europe. In every way the increase of resources increases the opportunity and the usefulness of a college, and we can see no public reason whatever in the interest of education, why the grant under the act of Congress should not be transferred to the Cornell University.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

To be praised by GIBBON, says THACKERAY, is like having your name written upon the dome of St. Peter's; and if any man, however unworthy, had the right to be vain of praise, it would be he who can mention it to his friends. We have been reminded of THACKERAY's remark by the approbation which the course of Harper's Weekly during the war has elicited from the North American Review for April, 1865, the able, brilliant, and scholarly organ of the truest American conservatism; and we feel no forbearance repeating it with pride and pleasure to our readers:

"It has been one of the most powerful of the organs of public opinion that have appeared in this country, ably and sustained by the excellence and variety of its illustrations of the scenes and events of the war, as well as by the spirit and tone of its comments, and by its fearless wide. It has been read in city parlors, in the log-hut of the backwoodsman, in the tents of our soldiers, in the wards of our hospitals, in the trenches before Petersburg, and in the ranks of the rebel army wherever it has gone is has kindled a warmer glow of patriotism. It has served to hearts and strengthen the arms of the loyal people, and he does done its full part in the furtherance of the great cause of Union, of Freedom, and of Law. Whoever believing his country to be the constant progress of a people of nature conviction, high principle, and strong feeling, has taken that journal as his guide in newspaper-reading of the time. They are a running commentary upon events, and the most unexceptionable expression of that public opinion which they help to mould and to direct.

"Our historical societies and public libraries throughout the country should make complete sets of the volumes of Harper's Weekly, for every year will add to their value as an illustration of the times; and as long as the paper is edited as it now is, and maintains the public cause with such fearless independence, it will be one of the most trust-worthy and important expressions of the better political opinions of the times."

THE TELEGRAPH AND THE TREE.

THERE is an old, old tree a-dozing by my door;
Not a leaf upon it green for four long years and more;
Nor cones there ever bird, or butterfly, or bee,
But it was in the forest, the old, old tree.

Among its topmost twigs, that so closely interlace,
Run the wire-cords that harness the steeds of time and space.

The telegraphic runners that ceaselessly convey,
From north and south and east and west, the tidings of the day.

This morn o'er the old tree I saw a change had come:
The bursting forth of green leaves; the insect's joyful hum;

And the warbling of the spring birds that gladness brought to me
To the boughs that long were moaning in the wind and storm and sea.

What can that have stirred the heart of the dry old tree?
The little birds that sing there now have whispered it to me:

"Twas the singing of the wires with such glorious news alive,
In the dawning of the glad days of April, Sixty-five.

☞ In HARPER'S WEEKLY will be commenced immediately a new and original story, entitled

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY,

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS,
Author of "BARBARA'S HISTORY," &c.

"Barbara's History" is a very graceful and charming book, with a well-managed story, clear-cut characters, and sentiments expressed with an exquisite elocution. The dialogues especially are much regarded. It is a book which the world will like, and which those who commence it will care to finish. It is a worthy praise of a work of art, and so we intend it.—From the London Times.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

SURRENDER OF LEE'S ARMY.

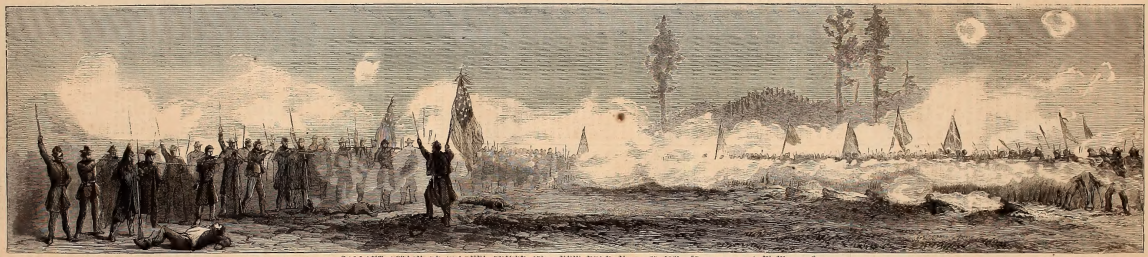
Upon the evacuation of Richmond and Petersburg Lee's army moved westward toward Burkeville. The army was thoroughly demoralized, and the line of retreat was strewn with muskets, knapsacks, and artillery caissons. General Grant distinguished himself in the pursuit no less notably than in the defeat of the rebels. Moving his own army westward, he kept pushing Lee northward, keeping him to the north bank of the Appomattox. Lee finally succeeded in crossing the river, and concentrated his forces in the region of Amelia Court House. But in the mean while, by the night of Tuesday, April 4, Sheridan and the Fifth Corps had, by a march of thirty-six miles, gained Jetersville, on the road to Burkeville, to the west of Burkeville. This movement resulted the next day in the capture of a train of three hundred wagons, with five cannon and a thousand prisoners.

Grant, on Wednesday, with the Twenty-fourth Corps, had reached Nottoway Court House, and here learned by a dispatch from Sheridan that Lee had been intercepted. On Thursday Grant had brought his army up to Sheridan's support, and with the Second, Fifth, and Sixth Corps lay in line of battle at Burke's Station, facing to the north-west, the road cutting Lee off from Danville. Lee then tried to move on toward Lynchburg, by taking a circuitous route by way of Danville, but Grant, ever dramatic, which he hoped to cross, and, with the river between him and Grant, destroy his army. These last movements were too rapid to permit of this. Lee was surrounded. On the 8th Ord, with the Army of the Potomac, had by a march of thirteen thousand prisoners, including Generals Ewell, Kershaw, Corse, De Barry, Anderson, Humphreys, and Barlow. Fourteen cannon were taken, and several hundred wagons.

The battle was fought on Thursday, April 6. The next day General Grant wrote to Lee asking him to surrender his army, and received from Confederate Secretary of War Lee's reply, in which he had no authority to grant such terms as Grant had proposed, but suggested that terms be had are will understood. By the South laying down their arms they will hasten that end, and prevent, even, thousands of human lives and hundreds of millions of property and its destruction.

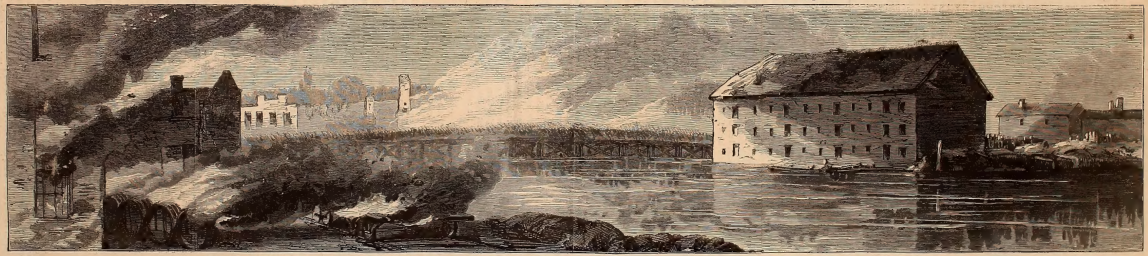
This note was received by Lee on the spot which he had selected for the interview of the two commanders, replied, stating that he had received the note on the picket line, and had ridden forward to the point agreed upon to definitely the terms on which the army could be surrendered. Grant, however, had forgotten this letter, and consequently in his letter requesting the interview that he could meet Longstreet at the house of Wilmer McLean, on the Northern Virginia. He now fell back upon Grant's original offer, and received an immediate letter repeating the terms of surrender. This letter reached Grant on the morning of Sunday, April 9. He was then preparing instructed to the front to meet Lee. At Appomattox Court House Lee's troops were stipulated that the side arms of officers and men should be made in duplicate; that both officers and men should give their parole not to take up arms against the Government of the United States until properly exchanged; that each company or regimental commander should sign a like parole for the men of their command; and that the officers and men should be allowed to return to their homes, not to be disturbed by United States authority so long as they should observe their parole and the laws in force where they resided. Lee's army numbered 26,000 men at the surrender.

GENERAL,—I have received your letter of this date, and in reply would say that, notwithstanding the recent disasters which have befallen the army of Northern Virginia by you. As they are substantially the same as those expressed in your letter of the 8th inst., they are accepted. I will proceed to designate the proper officers to carry into effect the terms of the surrender.



Very respectfully your obedient servant,
R. E. LEE, General.

OPERATIONS AGAINST MOBILE.



On the 17th of March the Thirteenth and Sixteenth Corps formed the advance of Canby's force, and the Nineteenth, on the city of Mobile, on the east side of the bay. On the 18th the batteries of the works opposite Spanish Fort opened fire upon the gunboats and transports which were passing up the bay. On the 19th the Sixteenth Corps was brought over to Fish River, and encamped for the night. On the 20th, by mid-afternoon, the Sixteenth Corps had reached Fish River, and had formed a line of battle, with its right resting on the bay, and its left on Fish River. The Nineteenth Corps was also brought over to Fish River, and encamped for the night. On the 21st the Nineteenth Corps moved forward, and formed a line of battle, with its right resting on Fish River, and its left on the Spanish Fort road. The Sixteenth Corps moved forward, and formed a line of battle, with its right resting on the Spanish Fort road, and its left on the bay. The Thirteenth Corps moved forward, and formed a line of battle, with its right resting on the bay, and its left on the Spanish Fort road. The Nineteenth Corps moved forward, and formed a line of battle, with its right resting on the Spanish Fort road, and its left on the bay. The Sixteenth Corps moved forward, and formed a line of battle, with its right resting on the bay, and its left on the Spanish Fort road. The Thirteenth Corps moved forward, and formed a line of battle, with its right resting on the bay, and its left on the Spanish Fort road. The Nineteenth Corps moved forward, and formed a line of battle, with its right resting on the bay, and its left on the Spanish Fort road

BEFORE PETERSBURG—REBEL FORT AND LINE OF WORKS NEAR BURGESS MILLS, CAPTURED BY THE SIXTH CORPS, APRIL 2, 1865.—[SKETCHED BY A. W. WARREN.]

GALLANT ACTION OF COLONEL SNIDER, 16TH NEW YORK, MARCH 29, 1865.—[SKETCHED BY A. W. WARREN.]

BEFORE PETERSBURG—THE RETREAT OF THE REBELS ACROSS THE APPOMATTOX, BY THE POCAHONTAS BRIDGE, APRIL 3, 1865.—[SKETCHED BY A. W. WARREN.]

THE UNION ARMY ENTERING PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA, APRIL 3, 1865.—[SKETCHED BY J. E. HAMILTON.]

A TRIBUTE TO FATHER.

SENT WITH A PAIR OF SLIPPERS TO THE ARMY.

I'm sitting alone by the window,
Outlooking the forest afar,
And dreamily working a slipper
For Father, who's gone to the war.

The green bud grows on the slipper,
And the green bud swells on the tree,
And the wind sighs in the pine-tops,
And, Father, I'm sighing for thee.

From the old oak down in the meadow
Comes the crow's monotonous caw;
And the blue-bird sings in the garden,
And I sing: "Come to the war."

As a nun counts her beads at her prayers
I'm counting the days till you come,
And praying the angels to bear you
Safe under their wings to your home.

Do you know that I've been with you, Father,
Through all of this weary campaign?
My feet have been bruised with your marchings;
Beneath the cold heavens I've lain.

By your side have I wrought in the trenches—
Stood guard in the heat and the dust;
I've hungered and thirsted and fainted—
I've borne with you the hard crust.

I know that the good God is with us—
I know the right triumphs at last;
I know that a glorious rainbow
Will smile when the tempest is past.

But I know not—He only knoweth,
Whose pleasure is infinite law—
Whether these slippers, dear Father,
Will ever come home from the war.

TRACKING.

SUSAN ALDUS sending one morning over a back way of hers calls lilies in the valley to her love. But one must first be old Hebrew significative of a lily, and erect and pliant, with shining head, soft, starry, hand eyes, and with a skin that dazzled you, she was one of those beautiful white women that seem like nothing so much as lilies themselves. So evidently thought the two young men in hunting gear who stood beside her, watching her fingers twinkle in and out among the great green lilies. Then with a heightened color one of them sauntered away, and seating himself near a table took up a newspaper and was apparently lost in its contents, which must have been of a particularly absorbing nature, as he found himself able to peruse them upside down.

"Well, Clement," said a lady entering the room, "you are off at last?"

"Off at last, Mrs. Aldus," answered the knight of the newspaper.

"We shall miss you sadly. You are quite one of us, you know. And Harvey, too."

"Thank you, Mrs. Aldus. You and Miss Susan have been very kind."

As she bent her name mentioned the faintest rose crept chilly over Susan's cheek, but without turning she continued listening to what Harvey murmured in her ear. But, directly, the latter suspected that though she lent him the little rosy shell of her ear, she kept all its inner hearing for Clement and her mother. There is nothing so suspicious as love; and abruptly silencing himself, he leaned against the side of the window and watched her without a word.

"Now you are angry with me," said Susan, looking up in her appealing way after the silence had continued for some time. "Are you waiting for the answer to some question that I lost?"

"I am waiting for an answer, indeed!" murmured he, looking at her intently. But with the faint, fleeting flush again, Susan busied herself over her flowers.

Meanwhile Clement was napping out their route to Mrs. Aldus, disdaining either to watch or to hearken, but feeling, as it were through the pores of his skin, that Harvey was saying tender things to Susan, and Susan was listening. Finally, he drew a writing-stand toward himself, and without pausing to reason penned a few vehement lines, inclosed them in an envelope at hand, sealed, directed, and left it on the table. Then he leaned back, impatient to be gone, yet hindered by the desire from hurrying his adversary, who was at the same time his friend.

Perhaps if he had been asked the question Clement would have found it hard to answer whether he most desired himself or his friend to find success in this suit. He had always seemed to think that now that he loved Harvey as a part of himself, but then Susan Aldus was himself. He and Susan had been children together; they had grown up almost husband and wife in earnest while yet in pinafores; they had been fast friends since through years of separation; but owing to that separation which had given him doubt and uncertainty as to her feelings, not till the note written that day in her presence and that of his rival had Clement ventured to tell her all that she was to him.

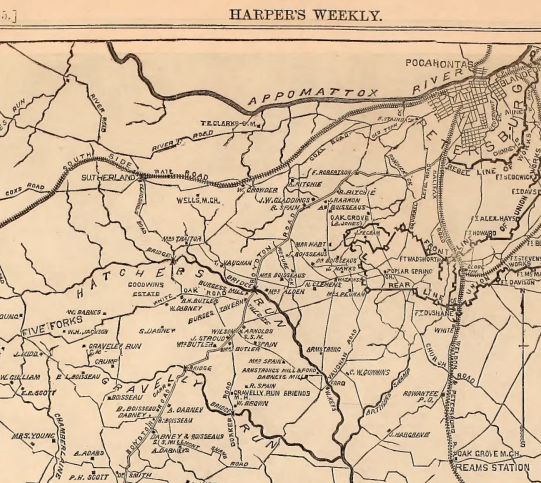
As for Harvey, he had been a college companion of Clement's; he had been introduced to Susan by Clement; and ravished out of himself, forgetful of friendship and every thing else in his sudden ardent passion, he had used his best endeavors to win her regard, and had bent before her more than could have been expected from so fiery, impetuous, and haughty a spirit as his. But so quietly had Susan maintained her sudden reserve that to this moment though he palpitated hourly between hope and despair, he could not fully assure himself whether he or Clement was the favored one. So tormenting had he found the suspense that he had resolved upon ending it and tearing himself away. But to go and leave Clement in the field was not to be thought of; so he proposed one day that they should start together on a hunting expedition into the woods of Maine, quartering themselves upon a lumber camp and its gang of sturdy lumbermen; and scorning to win favor merely by his own presence in the other's absence, Clement had not hesitated to take part in the wintry exposure and all the exhilaration of crisp air, sparkling snow, and the eager hunt.

"Now, young gentlemen," said Mrs. Aldus, mildly, "you never must consider me inhospitable: but as you told me the boat left the city at twelve, excuse me for admonishing you that you have but three minutes to reach it."

"Ah, Mrs. Aldus, you do not forget the promised haunch of venison!" said Harvey. "Well, we're off. But,

"Leaving the wild deer and chasing the roe,
My heart's in the Highlands wherever I go!"

he declared, in undertone, to Susan. And then shaking hands with her and Mrs. Aldus went out.



Clement lingered a moment to bid farewell, and as he stood by the table, scattered over the note that he left there all the burning words of a mass too that he had taken from its vase and played with half an hour gone. Then he, too, went; and before high noon they were steaming down the harbor, leaving cold white clouds behind them as they sped, and moaning after the fleet gulls and their fret-fed, tuition to reach their final one by means of train and stage and slow-dragging lumber-team.

They had been in the forest nearly about a week, meeting with but indifferent success from their rifles, and lost in all the cheer and novelty of the scene. By day, within a great cabin, and accompanied by some trusty guide, they scoured the woods; by night, clustered round the immense fire, while some slept and some shook dice, some lolled down the shining spruce-gum and some handled a clumsy needle, they listened to the strange stories of forest life, which, with the fine relish of its dangers, till the blood curdled in their veins.

It was on one such eve that a lively night that the teamster who had been down to the nearest town for supplies was heard having and greeting his scum, and getting them supplied with their rations. Then entering the long log-hut he was met with such warm welcome as only those receive whose appearance seems timely, and who are on their way before him. When he had removed the vast boots that could have floundered, one might have said, through the snow, and had received a hot cup, seeded, with a slow tantalization that he enjoyed much more himself than any one else, he began at his capacious pockets of their all and sundry commissions, with a package of tobacco for one, a pack of cards for another, a jew's-harp for a third, a fife for a fourth, and a jack-knife for a fifth, and at the very end of all, rumpled and crumpled, he tossed a letter, perfumed note that Clement knew by its delicate perfumed note—it was the scent that Susan was so fond of, and neither the neighborhood of tobacco, nor a peppermint lozenge that Harvey had in his mouth, could disguise. It was from Susan—he knew that before he read the superscription; Harvey, sitting on the other side of the fire, caught his hearth, knew it too, as he testified by his sudden start and bend, the flush upon his face, his quick, glistening eye with been the bride were not. The scrawl of the charcoal sketches on the great flat rock with a long, sharp, white twigs. It was from Susan; the answer to the note that Clement had left upon the table for her scattered over with its more than rose-leaves in the bold hand in his hands. She loves me—loves me not. Should he put it to the test and tear open the dainty seal before Harvey's eyes, these other hands that so kindly curious eyes—read her words in any presence but his own alone—learn whether he were a solitary, unwelcomed lover, or whether he were most supremely blessed for life and for death, with a hundred faces to watch the changes of his face, to cry or in despair? Or should he, on the other hand, to wait till daylight, perhaps to die in the night, with this prying heart-ache, this fear of one who might have whispered her words to another's. Waiting was impossible. He threw a pitch-pine knot into the fire, and watching it as it sheet held screeningly, so that the blaze might fall thereon, and whatever was written there be read by him. He was long about it, but when he had read of him, bend them elsewhere as much as he might, Harvey could not keep his eyes away; back again they came, as if upon the wings of a moth that in their worst to read in the face held low over the sheet, in the figure, in the hands, what Susan's love had to say to Clement. Oh, I hope there was for him himself. Were the veins so big upon his forehead from the excitement of the hunt, or did he hang there till he should have recovered self-control from any pang of disappointment? How could Harvey know? He had finished reading long before one could fairly see his face had gone out into the night. As he opened the door there came in the wild, shrill cry of a fox that was hunted by husband and wife in earnest while yet in pinafores; they had been fast friends since through years of separation; but owing to that separation which had given him doubt and uncertainty as to her feelings, not till the note written that day in her presence and that of his rival had Clement ventured to tell her all that she was to him.

As for Harvey, he had been a college companion of Clement's; he had been introduced to Susan by Clement; and ravished out of himself, forgetful of friendship and every thing else in his sudden ardent passion, he had used his best endeavors to win her regard, and had bent before her more than could have been expected from so fiery, impetuous, and haughty a spirit as his. But so quietly had Susan maintained her sudden reserve that to this moment though he palpitated hourly between hope and despair, he could not fully assure himself whether he or Clement was the favored one. So tormenting had he found the suspense that he had resolved upon ending it and tearing himself away. But to go and for gallivantin' off for to save a woman or a baby lost in the hollers." And shortly afterward the logger returned, bringing Clement beside him, and sitting down entertained him till midnight with recital of all the horrors a pioneer can have to tell.

It was the next morning that, according to previous agreement, the two friends started out after deer, tracks having been seen on the day before. They felt now sufficiently acquainted with the character of things to dispense with a guide—perhaps, besides, they mutually desired to be alone with one another. If this last were their object, however, it was soon frustrated, since, following the trail, the broken crust of the deep snow, the soft-tipped browsing of black-birch stems, they suddenly lost it altogether, and were obliged to separate in order the sooner to strike it again. Harvey went west to Clement to trace the course of a little frozen brooklet down to its outlet, on a meadow just where there was a break in the forest, that immediately beyond the brook began again and went on denser and darker and wilder into the north. As he did so, all at once he thought he noticed a trail again along the bank. He was quite right; there were tracks. He halloed to Harvey, but received no answer. It was very exciting to Harvey and after another halloo he plunged along, every moment surer, and making certain that he was on the path of some young buck, for the footprints in the snow were evidently those of long agile bounds till they left the bank and went down into the bed of the frozen brook. There was a light snow falling, just enough to sheathe the ice, a soft, slow, showery fall of large-flaked snow flakes. That the trail was recent was evident from the fact that one by one, as he went following, there were the footprints set before him by the light falling snow. Clement pursued this with no fire now with eagerness to bring down the game himself. At last the brook debouched upon the meadow, and there was a single, lonely, meagre mass in summer-time it fed. The meadow, too, was a sheet of ice, overflowed by the brook in spring rains and thaws, and half-way across it there rose the stem of a single tree, its few branches, only half sheathed with the great sphinxlatate of the pine forest, all bent one way with the wind, but each bough stalwart as a floor itself. It was directly to the foot of this tree that the trail of the deer led, one print falling before another, and there they stopped. Clement rubbed his eyes in perplexity—then he glanced up at the tree—then at the sky—then, in natural history, had deer or moose been known to take to the trees? Yet here the tracks ceased. And at a loss he reconsidered as willing to tell people what she thinks as she is to speak of them during their absence. She is the rather prefers it, as she is thus able to inflict more pain and vexation. "You made that dress yourself?" she says to a friend. "Ah! I thought so: one can see directly the difference between a thing made by a dress-maker and an amateur." Or, if the dress has passed through the hands of a dress-maker: "I must say, dear, that she has by no means done justice to your figure. What a pity! How many yards did you say you gave her?" Then, with a look of incredulity, followed by one of compassion, "My dear, she has certainly robbed you. She has not given you half your stuff. We all know how these people croh. Why did you have him? It is horribly unbecoming to you. Why did you let her put in that sleeve? that shape has quite gone out," etc., etc. To a musical friend she declares, with a wry face, that amateur playing or singing is unendurable, and a sheer waste of time; for the spiteful girl, though she affects much judgment, rarely hath any music in her soul. If one of her friends—acquaintances, it should be said, for she has no real friend—if some girl whom she knows happens to injure herself on the beauty of her mouth, she contionally tells her that it is absurd to fritter away precious time on doing things which may be purchased for a mere trifle now; and if she is obliged to admit that the work shown is well done, she regrets that so ugly, or ineffective, or old-fashioned, or easily soiled a pattern should have been selected, or objects to the combinations of color, or asserts that crochet is rapidly becoming "out of date," or, any thing which may suggest itself to her imagination. If she knows that any body fancies they have a reputation for being clever, she says, with an indescribable look, which points, or barbs, her remark, "How nice it must be to have any kind of talent, even a spark of the divine fire. What a pity it is one never meets any clever people in private life!" The sulky girl is only second to the spiteful one. Nothing pleases her. The day is too hot, too cold, too sunny, too dull; she will not admit that she cares about any thing. Ask her opinion, and she irritates you by the very tone in which she answers you. She is often a sloven, for she regards the world with disdain; she is frequently ugly, and revenges her misfortune—if it be such—on every body who may come within her reach. There is a wonderful difference in ugliness. A pleasant ugliness will often gain the preference over superlicious beauty; but sullen ugliness is without question most repulsive.

THE SCENE OF CONFLICT IN VIRGINIA.

The girl who insists in reposing confidence in all her friends is eminently disagreeable. She is particularly flattering, but decidedly a bore, to be the depositary of her secrets; for, in the first place, they are not worth knowing—every-day secrets usually—and in the second, you are perfectly conscious that all her friends and acquaintances are in the receipt of them. They are generally love-secrets, relating either to her or somebody else's affairs. If she would simply tell you, and please herself by the sound of her own voice, it would be bad enough; but she asks so delicately and so seriously for your advice, that you are vexed with yourself for not being able to sympathize with her griefs or her joys.

The girl with one idea is undoubtedly disagreeable. So long as people are talking around her on any thing in which she takes no interest, she will sit or lean back in her chair with a countenance in which nothing but stolid stupidity or weariness is depicted; if some one chances to touch on her favorite topic—dress, flirtation, personal appearances, scandal, be it what it may—she starts up and begins to chatter as if she had been wound up like a clock. Unfortunately, it usually happens that her favorite subject is one of narrow limits, which does not admit of prolonged discussion. This girl is much addicted to whispering in a corner.

The irritable, capricious girl is detestable. The slightest word, spoken at random, will suffice to estrange her from her "dearest friend." She is not in the habit of making such bitter speeches as the spiteful girl, but she contradicts, and interrupts, and reproaches in the most provoking manner every instant. She is disrespectful to her parents, cross and unyielding with her brothers and sisters, captious with her friends, barely civil to her acquaintances. The latter, however, fare the best with her, as she is either ashamed or has no speck of sanity to display her ill temper before those of whom she knows little.

There is one disagreeable girl who combines all the unpopular qualities of her sisters. She is haughty, she is plain, but tries to compel every one to confess that she is the reverse; she is irritable, she is sulky, she patronizes those who do not either declare open war against her, or treat her opinion with thinly-disguised contempt; she says spiteful things with an air of condescension; like the famous miller of song, she "cares for nobody," and regards love and friendship as chimeras of the brain.

Some girls are disagreeable to those of their own sex, but very agreeable in the society of "the gentlemen;" others are voted extremely disagreeable by men, but liked by women; others, again, are disagreeable to every body. Some are disagreeable because they can not help being so; others are disagreeable because they will not take the trouble to rid themselves of the peculiarity which renders them unendurable. Some are pleasing at first, but after a little time, from some mysterious cause, they change, and become excessively disagreeable. These girls are perpetually acquiring and losing friends, and it is to be observed that, when they have lost a friend, they seize every occasion of "backbiting" and "telling tales" of them, and assure you that "really, I was the last to blame in the matter at all; now would you have put up with such treatment?"

The aggressively handsome and the aggravatingly ugly girls are equally disagreeable. The one is either utterly inane or intolerably flippant, seeing in every other girl a rival, and in every man a victim; the other is perhaps resentful and "strong-minded," or stolidly stupid. It would be impossible to pronounce a verdict of these types might be called the most disagreeable.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

EXCESSIVELY FOND OF YOUNG MEN.—Women as youthful and as fresh as spring wear dresses covered with artificial insects, butterflies, lizards, scarabees, shells, and birds, rake-drops, and showers of bugles. Duchesses and Marchionesses may be seen at the theatres in red satin and yellow velvet jackets, ornamented with steel, crystal drops, and Chinese embroideries. All that is eccentric and showy is accepted with enthusiasm. The jewelry follows in the same vein: observation are made with

A Apartments to let" written on them; gold brooches are fashioned with the figure in black enamel, and mounted as weather-cocks; the ear-rings are both heavy and long, and the necklaces are equally out of proportion. What is delicate and feminine gives way to exaggeration and eccentricity.

A FEMALE PIRATE.—Piney was, in early times, a favorite and fashionable portrait. One of the most celebrated pirates of the Northern seas was a Princess Alvilda, the daughter of a Gothic king, who, according to legend, embraced the occupation of a sea-rover to relieve herself from a marriage which was equally to be imposed upon her, contrary to her inclination, with Alf, a Danish prince. She habited herself in male costume, and selected her rovers and crew a band of Amazonian damsels, who assumed the same attire. Touching at a strange port in one of her first cruises, she met an association of male pirates, who were bewailing the death of their leader, and, captivated by the gallant bearing of the heroine, they chose her as their chief. Thus elevated, she became so formidable in her depredations that her former suitor was sent to encounter her, and a fierce contest ensued at sea, in which, after vigorously repulsing for a time his warlike assaults, Alf at length boarded her bark, and, having slain numbers of her crew, she became his prisoner. The Princess wore a canopy, which concealed her face; he raised it, and recognizing his former fair one, she fainted in his arms, and on his again offering her his hand she bowed his bride.

A NEW OPENING FOR PHOTOGRAPHY.—Nothing up there appeared in various publications the other day of the origin of a tombstone, below which the widow had caused the artist to engrave her husband's likeness, surrounded by a view of her husband's business; thus preserving a certain bond of union between the dead and the living, and making a profit out of the grave. Not long ago it occurred to a photographer that he might increase his business by introducing that he copied photographs of deceased individuals, and commenced in such a way then. He placed in collusion with the defunct, they would endure for any number of years, and the tombstone on which he said to have been the custom on the Continent. And it is very evident that a good deal may be said in the favor; one would not be void of a novel proceeding of a well-favored widow, who, lately, in one of the large cemeteries, desired to see a row of immortelles on the tomb of her deceased husband, which were out of season.

THE RULING PASSION.—Whoever has visited Niemes has seen the statue of the great sesquipedalian and will remember how dangerous it appeared to climb to the summit. An anecdote is related in a local paper of a youngster who would persist in mounting the walls, in spite of the tenders and entreaties of his parents, in search of bats, which abound among the ruins. One day his father caught sight of the youth, and, notwithstanding the peril to his child, rushed up, managed to reach his boy and seize him by the leg. "Father," exclaimed the boy, as he held him suspended by the leg in the air, "Now," said his father, "I will you never climb up there again!" The position was enough to frighten the boy, who could see nothing between him and the ground but a frightful fall, thinking of which he shrieked, he exclaimed eagerly, "Stop a little lower, father; I can see a whole swarm of bats in a hole out of your reach—just let me get them, and I will promise you not to climb up there any more."

A TRUE ...TRAGEDY.—A great... ngedy is reported from SICILY. An Arab slave in the h... se of Almost Effendi was, by unauthorized freedom, ... ve of the favorite wife of the Effendi's wife, the time for greatest ... k was postponed. The slave was discovered by the Effendi, who, in a paroxysm of the absence of his master and... the whole of the household, and a crowd of ... ed, and demanded to enter the harem, and deliberately strap... a his mistress, whom he encountered at the ... ance to the harem, whom he encountered at the mosque door, and told out to bring him a bed from the ... ber, and suspended it between trees. Accompanied by the police and many other persons, the Effendi arrived, and, on hearing the ... rem, truly enough found the corpse of his murdered wife. He then, with many expressions of thanks for the ... ce, he exercised his feelings. Upon this charge the lamented Effendi was taken prisoner to the police, and ... ed with the common guard till the authorities had fully investigated the tragic affair.

PRIMITIVE COSTUMES.—Several of the Paris journals speak against the extremely decollete style of dress which the ladies have adopted at the ball this season in the French capital; "What remains at the present day of women's dress," says M. E. Texier, in the Siecle, "is so small that it is hardly worth talking about. Ladies are almost attired like the natives in South America—with nothing but a necklace. Besides this, such a style of dress may be made very rich. It has the advantage of covering the limbs; and as to that, where the limbs are of ivory, one can not be too thinly clad!" M. Vesse, in the Monde, makes the following remark: "If one of the present queens of the Parisian beau monde were to walk out of doors in her costume, the moment she should turn back up, and the correctional tribunal would visit her with the wholesome effect of a conviction."

A LADIES' DUEL.—Madame de Nerle, irritated by the attentions of the Duc de Richelieu to Madame du Deffand sent her an insulting letter, concluding, "Si tu oses, madame, ces raisons au vous paraissent pas, je t'attendrai demain, dix heures du matin, au bois de St. cagne. Mon arme est le pistolet." They met, attended by their seconds, and it was arranged that they should fire on reaching a scarf placed half-way between them. Madame de Nerle fired first and missed. Madame du Deffand fired more deliberately, and wounded her rival in the shoulder; but Richelieu, for once in his life, acted like Cato, and preferred the conquered to the conqueror.

In some places in England it has been found necessary to get up an anti-Mormon league, as the gentlemen who wish to wed a few dozen have become very triumphant in their efforts, and it is feared there may be a scarcity of womankind if they go on exporting to America.

WORTH KNOWING.—A correspondent says: "A young lady, while in the country some years ago, stepped on a rusty nail, which ran through her shoe and foot. The inflammation and pain was of course very great, and looked for a speedy end. A friend of family, however, recommended the application of a beet, taken fresh from the ground and pounded fine, to the wound. It was done, and the effect was very beneficial. Soon the inflammation began to subside, and by keeping on the remedy hot, and changing it for a fresh one, as its virtue seemed to become impaired, a speedy cure was effected. Simple but effectual remedies like this should be known to every one."

A NEW WORD.—In the growth of Hebrew, the German poet, who was expelled from the Prussian dominions, has the following word appears: "Bismarckwirdsgangenschangenmagsichergeschlagen"—meaning a man who is exempt from conscription from the payment of taxes. The expulsion of such a poet as this would be justified by the laws of primogeniture by the code of Prussia.

SOME people have the toothache; to them it may be interesting to know without a five-dollar fee that between the tip of the left-hand thumb and the next there is a great connection; the nerves of the nose are connected with the teeth, and headache may therefore be cured by the application of a mustard poultice to the tip of the left-hand thumb.

PYRAMIDUM.—A veteran living statesman has taken occasion, from time to time, to illustrate the rarity of good penmanship in our age, as compared with former time. It is, in our opinion, a well-founded complaint. How gentlemen nowadays write a perspicuous hand, or how better than a scrawl. See even when a stranger addresses you, do you find one-half of his sentences unintelligible, and the signature so utterly enigmatical, that you are forced into the impoliteness of cutting out the name and sending it on the envelope of your answer? If you cast your eye over any extended manuscript or packet of letters of the early part of the last century, the writing is generally of a very different character. The letters of this period possess a meaning of well-formed writing at different times, between 1740 and 1773, by a single hand, and in the course of it he has never detected an s or an t without its loop, or an i without its dot; neither, in spelling, was he ever at a loss about the meaning of a single sentence. We can not say much for the handwriting of ladies of that or any earlier age, for a tolerable education for women is a matter of later date. But certainly there was a time, and that not long ago, when all our mothers—when feminine handwriting was both elegant and intelligible. Of late years it has become rather than young ones.

THE MAGDALENA, a very little, a very, very little!" said the Brook to the Bank.

"Just a little more," was silent, and the Brook were its side till the earth melted away and the soils floated down the Mississippi.

"Just a little more, a very little more!" said the Brook again; and the wheat-crop was lessened with frosts; it ever fell on by one the willows fell and were borne away in the torrent.

"Just a little more!" cried the Meadow, as the tide rushed in.

"If I had not neglected the attack on my bank, my fences would never have been destroyed; and my property protection is gone, and I am rightly served in being turned from a fruitful field into a watery waste."

THE UNION ARMY ENTER

NG RICHMOND, APRIL 3, 1865.

"WHEN MY SHIP COMES HOME FROM SEA."

"O a golden comb for golden hair,
And milk-white pearls for a neck as fair,
And silver chains, and all for me,
The day my ship comes home from sea!

"O silken 'broideries, green and blue,
And wrought with crimson through and through,
With coral and amber, all for me,
The day my ship comes home from sea!"

"And where is the good ship sailing from
That brings these brave things safely home?
And by what name do you hail her free,
And who is her captain on the sea?"

"My ship comes sailing from the west,
And her name is called The Sailor's Rest,
And the happy souls of all her crew,
Her captain, is my lover true."

"O pever will that ship come home,
Wherever she be sailing from:
I warn'd my hands beneath the stars
To gather a mound of her broken spars.

"And three days dead the captain lay,
But how he died no man may say:
I laid him out by the pale moonrays,
And made a shroud of the 'broideries.

"With coral and gold I weighted him,
And still he was light enough to swim;
With silver chains I bound him down,
Then shut the cold corpse so hard to drown.

"It's back hair lines as eagle's nest
On a sea-girt cliff in the lonesome west:
Now jet for coral there must be,
And weed for amber, ebony."

TID'S OLD RED RAG OF A SHAWL.

THE Miss Hibberds were holding a court-martial, attended by all the officers in their service, in the dining-room of their school in Lavedder Lane.

The Miss Hibberds were of a certain age. Miss Hibberd was tall, had a small fine head, like a greyhound's, and had her velvet head-dress with bee lappets. She wore hoop-rings on china hands, cambric cuffs on spare wrists, a narrow neck-ribbon, like a dog's collar, showing a delicate bluish throat beneath the skinny bag under the pointed chin, and always looked as if she put herself fully dressed into a sale basket every night and took herself out as fresh as paint in the morning.

Miss Charlotte Hibberd was short and stout, with a solid neck, a full bust, and much strong grizzled hair, so as to render it difficult for her, in the very easy costume as Miss Hibberd's, to make the most distant approach to elegance.

Miss Blount, the senior English governess, had turned the old room at corner of thirty, clothed herself in a lavender woollen gown, with a ruche of the same material round the neck, and without any other adornment, in the heat of summer. Her complexion was too muddled to suffer from the wear and tear of life; but the leonine cast of her mouth was deeply dented by high spirit, strong sense, a few crotchets on the social science movement, and considerable experience of grim care.

Mdlle. Ia Rue was twenty-eight, and dressed elaborately. She had ringlets, a gilt comb, a knot of ribbon, a nosegay, a general rustle of silk and aroma of perfume. Her sallow face was keen in contour and expression, even when it languished, in accompaniment to words of much heroism and stage sentiment, quotations from French classics, from Les Heroes, Athalie, and the Roy Bias.

Fraulein Kister was about the same age as her French sister, put up the broad chin of a broad face in a white worked cravat, and wore a net drawn almost to her eyebrows over her very sandy hair, finished by a row of little tassels like little bells all round her head, and a pair of large tassels with loops of coral to her ball-pulls above her left ear. Fraulein Kester was a specimen of good living and phlegmatic philosophy.

Miss Farren, the junior English governess, at eighteen was put, with her own consent, into a lavender gown, in imitation of Miss Blount; but the Quaker color would not quench blushes, erase dimples, nor dim eyes—only mortification and vexation did that. She was possessed a warm complexion, soft-cheeked, cleft-chinned face; but at this moment it was tear-stained, out of the last remnant of pure sensibility with the accompanying rose-brown hair and the nice collar and sleeves, like the feathers of the most ruffled little bird in the world.

The consultation sat on a culprit, and if mercy were not found in the breasts of the members there was little in the room to call forth the softer human emotions. Miss Farren was crying bitterly, ruffling her brown hair, as crying ruffles hair when little hands press from the brow, and seeming to relieve tightly over the shrinking face. She was arraigned before the authorities, accused of misdemeanor in the matter of her fellow, summarily found guilty, and only awaiting her sentence. She was not attempting to prevaricate or defend herself, but colored with shame and distress, and willing to creep into a mouse's hole. No marvel that Miss Farren was overcome to know that the words buried at the girl's devoted head. "Evil example," "trust abused," "ingratitude," "giddiness," "unwilling yielding to an unworthy gentleman's advances." At the last expression Miss Farren looked up and spoke up a little.

"Yes, Miss Hibberd, don't say so; Mr. Bishop did not mean to do me harm—he only meant to be kind." And there Tid broke down worse than ever.

"You are a fine judge, Miss Farren," said Miss Hibberd, with irony. "Very dignified, delicate-minded, brotherly kindness in Mr. Bishop to write notes to Miss Farren, and hand them to her along with the poor dear deceived girls' examination-making appointments for half-holidays; and one of the notes was found and whispered about, so that the affair can not be hushed up even for Miss Charlotte and myself would consent to such a breach of truth. Miss Farren to receive the notes and keep the appointments, and wear particular dresses for the occasion"—bringing herself up short, summing up the main offenses, and looking hard and long at breath—"Oh, Miss Farren!"

"Oh, Miss Farren!" echoed Miss Charlotte, in so deep a voice that she looked as to have something sepulchral in its tones.

"Ah, ciel!" cried Mdlle. De la Rue, clasping her bony hands, thinking at the same time: "If that cold, shy mouvaise had had taste for the tournure, if he had made eyes to me, Mlle! he should have been mine—mine as chevalier all the seasons without these vieilles demoiselles, or any one else, being the wiser."

"So, so!" Fraulein Kester testified in condemnation, raising her not by an elevation of her lights eyebrows, and declining it again by the slowest shaking simultaneously like so many dumb-bells.

Miss Blount stated plainly: "I am surprised that you could be so foolish, Miss Farren, though you are a girl of eighteen."

"He only wrote to me thrice," pleaded the girl, set bay: "and there was about Miss Martin's bad spelling in her dictation."

"Enough, Miss Farren!" Miss Hibberd ended the sitting summarily. "Under the circumstances, what does it matter? I need not say you must both give up your situations; and I can not tell you whether I am glad or sorry that it is the eve of the Midsummer holidays, and you may be spared disgrace, or that society will lose a warning. But I should like to know how we could the upper classes trust Miss Charlotte and me with the rearing and training of young ladies, in a time when such a ridiculous conference, or duty occurred actually within the shelter of our walls? You'll keep your room, Miss Farren, as we are not in the habit of having you will not be guilty of any further folly in my house. Miss Blount, Mdlle., and Frauleln, I shall fet much obliged by your assistance in this matter of nursing. It is fortunate for the poor innocent young things that they are too much occupied with going home to discover and to imitate the folly of their fol ocurrence. Miss Charlotte, you will be so good as to accompany me to our sitting-room."

Miss Charlotte rose as the last words stumped out, Mademoiselle shrugged her shoulders with that incomparable French shrug, Frauleln repeated her "so, so!" and Miss Farren began to cry afresh, crying. Miss Farren believed she was ruined, and, what was a great deal better, that Tid, likewise a sensitive girl, found courage to pick up a particular acquaintance and advance to what Miss Hibberd would have called plundering, was one of the puzzles which occur in society every day. Mr. Bishop, whose bashfulness amounted to a disease, was the constraint of a sense of wrong-doing, with its call for concealment—not in the affair with Tid. Mr. Bishop was a bachelor, and had no shilly-shally there; he felt in the seventh heaven, he glorified himself on his intercourse with Tid; but Mr. Bishop had a vicious dog-fox terrier, which, in spite of addicted; he smoked, he smoked pretty considerably. A reckless, dissipated young man he was, almost parallel with the age of Tid, with his cigars and Manillas than the texture of his kids; and he could not resist the desire or deny himself the gratification. His terrier was a fine, high-bred, pretty ite 'bauses, his irregular meals—he had neither mother nor sister to look after him—he was wearing, owing profession, his solitary life might be slight excuses. Notwithstanding, to enter No. 2 Lavender ner, no lodger visit could be paid, no note sent to the state tobacco, even in the refined guise of the best cherocts, impregnating and oozing from his person, was a privilege. Mr. Bishop had considered that in reason to recognize could only be accorded to Frauleln Kester's huge, tranquil countryman, Herr Schneider, who never dropped a word with Miss and Frauleln, approved of his merchaan and its enchantment—a privilege absolutely refused to a young English and educated gentleman. Mr. Bishop was constantly sniffing his own air guiltily, unfurling his fragrant pocket-handkerchief, and flicking atrocious odor of patchouli, drawing his fingers through his soft lank hair. In his agonizing apprehension of discovery by the superintending schoolteachers like the Miss Hibberds and the female heads of families, Mr. Bishop ran up a serious score at a hair-dresser's shop, and purchased quires of perfumes, and he bought and paid for as many bouquets, like a dandy on the steps of his club, as he spent on visits to the conservatory. Mr. Bishop, November; he had such slavish dependence on a bunch of violets, or a camellia, or a sprig of myrtle, as implacable as Nemesis, to refresh his seedy young person, that he could not venture abroad to play his part for the day without a bouquet. Mr. Bishop, in mid-winter he trusted a hard frost broke scent to human as to canine noses. Mr. Bishop was the youngest unmarried master at No. 2 Lavender Lane. He stood five feet eight in his boots; he had a tolerable nose, and almond-shaped gray eyes; he was weak in whiskers, but was not in consequence so fair left to himself as to set up a straggling beard; he was strong in forehead, even when he was young, and there was a charm in the reverential distance he kept from the girls—the kind of chivalry with which the invested the sex—which, if the girls were not capable of appreciating the treatment—they were more susceptible to the vagrant aroma of tobacco, which supplied the young man to them with the zest that the thorn gives the rose. Bishop was a great favorite with the girls; many of them doted on him, styled him in confidence "Dear Bishop," "sweet Bishop," "that dear Bishop"—surreptitiously boarded the pencils he dropped, the bits of paper he had occasion to write upon, particularly the ends of them, the pen-holder, pressed of his, dilated their hair at him, made dreadful allusions to him in their verses, which would have thrown Bishop into fits and caused him to bolt in shame and dismay, had he understood them, as he corrected the halting lines. On the other hand, they all bullied him, tormented him, and unaffectedly cheated him.

This day Bishop was merely in class to give them their places and return them their papers; but even to that Bishop was unequal in with her bonnet on her head, giggling and causing the rest to giggle at the liberty.

"Please, madam, do me the favor to remove that bonnet, I can not see the face. I shall make a mistake," implored Mr. Bishop. Being the man he was, it is needless to say Bishop was near-sighted.

"Oh, please, Mr. Bishop," responded Miss Bewcastle, joyously lifting up her head, and glancing out from beneath her turned-back curls, "it won't come off. I tried it on to see how it would do to travel with; it has been worn in from the millinery, and the string has run into a knot, and it won't come off—you can try it yourself if you like—unless you break the string, Mr. Bishop. I'm coming and I'll have to sit with it at dinner and tea, before Miss Hibberd and Miss Charlotte, and sleep with it, and that's all one consequence, as I leave it even in the morning."

"Mr. Bishop, will you have you put me fifth?" was put a game, in a frown.

"I would not mind it if I were not blow mist, Rhoda Turner. What do you say? Sit here only one day and the Miss Hibberds and me can be one? No, I won't. Sir, I tell you plainly. I would not mind it if I were not love with a youthful dwarf, Rhoda Turner, and I the head and shoulders taller; and Mr. Vallance says I am the best artist in the school now. I thought you were love for me, Mr. Bishop"—and the furious, overgrown child's breast began to heave, and the heart within to melt behind the cotton print—"but you were since"—sobs—"I gave you"—sob, sob—"a lozenge for your cough—"

"Miss Yates, you were very kind, but I am a man of honor, and you are a child," said Mr. Bishop. "I am all women of honor, young gentlewomen, for whom I have the most thorough respect and regard. You are a child, Miss Yates, and I have made no compliant. If any one of you is the best artist in the school, I protest I am proud to hear it; but that excellence does not entitle you to sit higher in the English and rudimentary Latin class. Indeed, I think I can not interfere with our distinction if I were you, Miss Yates."

"But, Mr. Bishop"—and big rebellious Miss Yates drew a gusty sigh—"Rhoda Turner has a distinction too."

"And it is my due when you are allowed to gain one; and you see, I have no marks from adjectives, and wrote in your essay that Roger Bacon was Lord Chancellor of England," little Rhoda defended her.

Mr. Bishop was sure it to control girls than he was to put babies in their cradles or embroider pin-cushions. He could be firm with boys; the last was, they called him a contradictory, obstinate pig; but, in his present development, he dealt with the girls in so gingerly a fashion, was so frightened for being hurt when he put them, so much more affronted than they were at the idea of taking liberties with them, that it was necessary Tid should sit, standing in a corner, with a womanly, protecting air, in the room with her class, positively to keep order in it, and prevent each other's servants under Mr. Bishop's well-formed nose, or repeating their lessons to be said by heart off neatly-written slips of paper, which guided their vivid memories or under their fancy aprons. And evil came of that precaution in its turn.

Mr. Bishop was in his last interview for the season with Miss Hibberd. He had only to call himself back and correct himself for wrong names and numbers, and then congratulate himself on Miss Hibberd, and assure her, in penitent perturbation, that he had added up the whole correctly in his bedgings' room, and could not find a flaw in all his mathematics, why the sums would come out wrong in her drawing-room next day.

Miss Hibberd nodded and looked to Mr. Bishop, and dropped down on a chair, with her whole drapery, crinoline and all, swathed round her in the most insignificant manner.

Miss Hibberd shook out her dress, smoothed her gloved hands with a significant move from the wrists, and said, stiffly: "I have a few words more to say to you, Mr. Bishop. I am exceedingly sorry, as a matter of duty, to part with you."

"It is the smoking at last," thought the young man. "I had out my match on Wednesday before the Miss Hibberds' delivery. I was thinking of Tid, and I might have been in the drawing-room, or in a first-class carriage, it would have been all the same." He felt a perverted hypocritical, hot perspiration starting at every pore: "I am very sorry, madam, I am at a loss—" and there stopped for the first time.

"Mr. Bishop, I believe you have become accustomed, under our roof, with our governess, Miss Farren?"

"Madam, I have the honor," gasped Mr. Bishop, thrown back, by the unexpected shock, pulling to a girl's—to Tid's paleness.

"The honor!" Miss Hibberd could not help repeating in a high key. "The honor which could prevail upon you to—such notes as a ladies' school."

"Madam, madam!"—stammered Mr. Bishop, more faintly, clasping his shabby hat to his heart.

"We have observed more considerable—more Having conducted ourselves with unblemished integrity all our lives, we were justified in imagining that a young man of your acquirements would grant our roof, and the confidence we placed in them, and not indulge in the most reprehensible associations and appointments. We have been mistaken; temptations have been presented, deceit has been practiced. Our young people—the numerous household of young ladies of the highest character—who have been living under our care and profiting by the instructions given under the direction of Miss Charlotte and myself, have been exposed to the most unsettling, the most demoralizing influences."

Miss Hibberd delivered her harangue with unsteadiness. Miss Charlotte listened, much impressed.

"Miss Hibberd, I beg your pardon," burst out Mr. Bishop. "I had no conception you would regard such a step in approach I made to Tid, to Miss Farren, in so dark a light. I know now I ought not to have written the notes, but I was so accustomed to write notes, to correspond with young, inquiring letters along with her—that I could not resist the inclination—though I should have controlled myself, to have one of her own composition all to myself."

"I am under the painful necessity of informing you that your services will not be required, under any circumstances, next session at Lavedder Lane," said Miss Hibberd.

"Very well, Miss Hibberd," assented young Bishop, quietly.

The golden emulsions touched Miss Hibberd more than any apology or display of ignorance of the world, rashness, single-heartedness—Mr. Bishop looking young all the time. "I have no fault to find with your teaching or conduct in other respects," conceded Miss Hibberd. "In spite of your imprudence, I will stretch a point and let you have a testimonial, if you wish it, Mr. Bishop."

"Thank you"—Mr. Bishop still expressed himself with correctness and self-control, with a little bitterness. "I am a young strong fellow; I have had a good education, thanks to the favor father. I believe there is nothing against my character; but I can not afford to dispense with the favor."

Miss Hibberd drew her desk toward her while Miss Blount looked over her nose. Miss Hibberd paused, and said again, in her rage for being just, "I feel for any member of my sex; I would shield her from attack, except in the most fairness and open warfare. I think it is but fair to tell you that I do not believe you would have been so foolish if Miss Farren had not been so much more foolish—for a woman's discretion should never be off its guard, and ought to balance a man's any day. Miss Farren has forfeited my good opinion for perfect judgment and propriety. I am very much disappointed in Miss Farren; she can not continue in Lavedder Lane, and be Miss Blount's successor, as I intended."

"Miss Hibberd!"—Miss Hibberd started, Miss Charlotte stumbled to her feet; the voice was so resolute, so eager, so full of a true man's longing to speak and plead, if it were any that, it was by no worth my while to offer to Miss Farren what I have not had the face to offer before. I may not be able to contribute myself, but I will like Tid to accept me. I am young, strong, with the most available weapon, the gift of good health, and I love her. I am favored beside Tid, clever and bright as she is: I'm a thousand times better qualified to keep the wolf from the door than a tender young girl. I have my last quarter's salary, and I don't owe more than a trifle. I'll restrict myself to a chercot a day, or I'll give them up altogether. If I don't get more teaching I can turn book-keeper, copying-clerk, reporter. I'm young and strong, and, thank God, He has kept me honest. What should hinder me from marrying Tid, and working for her and with her? She'll help, if I am forced to let her. She is a girl of resources, good and earnest, energetic, simple darling. I know she's simple, but I prefer the woman who has been tried by poverty and remorse, to the helpless, haughty, suspicious woman, though the first has the guilelessness to be cheated. We'll be cheated together, Mr. Bishop, like a prepared young madman, "and look grave for a moment, and then laugh and grow wiser. I durst not have taken Tid from her father's roof, a stranger of a father's house; but she has told me she is a penniless orphan, and you have told me you can have no living more to her. We'll marry, Mr. Bishop, for I am marrying Tid Farren, and finding room for her, and strength with her, and bliss in her, in a home of our own!"

"My dear Mr. Bishop," Miss Hibberd was repentantly, kindly, her handsome old head looking young again; Miss Charlotte was patting the modest, fervent young man on the back, as if he were her sex—"Tid, in the back room, and I have prepared to find the poorest marriage with this infinite before going off in a carriage-and-four with a millionaire——"

Tid was married in a country church, not very far off, in Kent, where the Hibberds' relations spending their holidays. You may be sure her wedding-gown was a very plain one, and as it threatened rain, she wore her old hat and her old shawl tucked round her as she ran from the porch to the cab. The Misses Hibberd were there in radiant costume, but in sedate shades under white bonnets—that on Miss Charlotte's broad head falling obstinately back to the nape of her neck, and exposing her wild natural fronts. Miss Blount walked up the aisle in exact time for the ceremony, in her ordinary lavender woolen gown and muslin cuffs and collar, as she had dressed and never was differ her life; a trifle of dust, but nothing to choke her, and the company of an intelligent married woman to the third daughters, who listened attentively to her reasons for opening all the windows, and were much struck when she described a carriage, a fish knife and fork, or a toilette bottle; but a thermometer for testing the heat of her sitting-room, and directed to regulate the mineral qualities of the water she drank there—warranting Tid that if she were carried as the bride of a rich man, she would have the need not mind much besides: she would thrive, and she might make Bishop thrive.

"But no narcotics—mind, Tid, not a narcotic any more than alcohol, on pain of a gradual stupefaction of the brain. Break your husband's pipe, Tid; fling away his cherished weed; never mind though he be as restless as a whirlwind and as cross as two straws. No narcotics, else you will have him dull, and gray, and sodden, and imbecile in no time."

Tid was the wife of Mr. Bishop, and by the express favor of Miss Hilda Hibberds, came and went with the train, and acted as day governess at No. 2 Lavender Lane. It was a dangerous precedent when the Miss Hibberds established, and they had a great many consultations before granting it; but grant it they did. Every body knew her and was glad to have her. She lunched with the Miss Hibberds at least twice a week—in confidence, she believed, every time she went—and all things had one by themselves to themselves. The evenings were sufficient, as yet, for Tid's shopping, her adventures in housekeeping, her enterprises on Bishop's shirts and handkerchiefs, gloves and stockings, new wristbanding and collaring, and darning, and cleaning, and ironing. Bishop was a fellow that knew how to run in and chatter to, to help through with his pupils' themes, to ask reading from, if he wanted to be asked, and avoid out with and "have a mouth with," as Bishop called it, putting a force on language, and build castles in the air with, and have glimpses of harvest-homes, and searches for bats and beetles on earth and constellations in the sky. In the process Tid was always taking care of Bishop, bringing him in to supper, getting him up to breakfast, inciting him to courage and constancy in his profession. Tid was not her childishness—not childishness, that was indestructible—and learned to distinguish between slue-leaves and the Chinese lotos, and call Athens or Athens three-footed cotton. Bishop, on his part, grew more composed and more indifferent to the smoking, as a representative now, representative Tid will be himself, and not used to Tid's indulgence. By the time Bishop wrestled curls of smoke over a cradle, shouldered it, and rocked it, and was able to take the command of a nursery-maid and a perambulator, he would be as steady as a rock under so much ballast, and the smoke, from its distinct under so much immunity, until he rallies girls like a brother, and rebukes them like a father.

It was a fine romance to three old fogies to consider there might be too much of a good thing. Miss Blount was constantly preaching that, when they had themselves had their sore throat and its influenza in the spring. But no one minded Miss Blount. Soon there rose a report, which the strength down with sore throat, under which the strength sank almost to death in a night, or held out to—, and was still the strange legend of the Georges, unbroken by all the doctors' efforts, until the death-rattle sounded and the patient was gone where there was no need of healing.

In one day both Miss Hibberd and Miss Charlotte were seized with the epidemic. Miss Hibberd acknowledged to Tid, and predicted the same ailment. Miss Charlotte wandered about trying to obey orders and looking for more, with feverish, distracted eyes, till Miss Hibberd stopped in the middle of a speech, stared at her sister, said, directly, "Miss Charlotte has a sore throat, and must go to bed. Doctor." And Miss Charlotte's throat was found the more fungus-grown of the two. Then the sisters faltered for a moment, till it occurred to Miss Hibberd it might be better there should be no survivor; the two had no long done their work in company, there was some comfort in dying together. The school was the first thing to be thought of in their growing helplessness—the children, and other people's affairs—committed to Miss Blount, unless they must be sent home immediately.

Miss Hibberd could not be too thankful that Tid was there, and Mr. Bishop coming presently, they would not mind seeing the girls to the railway station; and Miss Blount called too, and came in for a second, though it was an infected house.

"My dear Miss Hibberd, I have no fear of infection, I assure you, you know. I believe in the fumigation: at least, it is nothing but bad air, and that is pretty general over the country. Read Florence Nightingale's 'Notes on Nursing,' if you doubt me. Let me take the girls. Where is the use of sending them home, spreading infection, if there is infection? Or spreading their deaths of sudden panic, fatigue, and cold, a great deal more likely. I have been so particular about space and air at Park Terrace that I can accommodate double my numbers upon a pinch with open windows—open windows, Miss Hibberd."

"Miss Blount, you are a lady, you are a good woman, and a friend in need," said Miss Hibberd, huskily, through her poor throat. "But who is to teach all the girls?"

"I will teach them if Miss Blount will permit me," said Miss Bishop, stepping forward. "I will get up in the morning and take them before and after my filled-up hours: I can manage girls without help since I have been obliged to manage Tid."

Tid did not smile as he had expected, standing close to him, and stealing a cold shaking hand into his; but mumbled plaudits of her own style, her dewy lips dry.

"Good Heavens, Tid, you are not ill!" he cried, putting out his hand to pull her to the door, and detraying panic instantaneously.

"Not at all," said Tid, rowing herself; "and I will stay with the Miss Hibberds."

"Out of the question, child," Miss Hibberd was fit to preside; "you must go with your husband, and besides there can be no communication between my house and Miss Blount's."

"For myself, I should not mind as to communication," protested Miss Blount; "but I am afraid if we are to have any peace we must yield a little to the popular prejudice."

"I can not allow it, Tid," said Bishop in a loud voice, dying away as he ended and caught Tid's eye.

"Yes, you will allow me, Bishop," she said, resolutely. "Come and speak to me," and she took him aside.

"Are you tired of life, Tid—are you tired of me?" he cried, distractedly. "You are not in a fit state to undertake the sacrifice, and it is not required."

"No, it is voluntary," she said. "Would it keep me safe from death to refuse to enter the dark valley when my friends pass through? I tell you I must go with them, Bishop, and if I have a double life I will have double care. Oh! Bishop, were they idle words spoken eighteen centuries ago, about loving father or mother, husband or wife, or child, more than Him, and not being worthy of Him?"

"We have been so happy, Tid," groaned Bishop. Oh! the mortal misery, the tender human misery of that groan.

"Now, Bishop, hear me. I am not going to wander, I am not light in the head, but I have been thinking of one of the girls' Scotch songs which the papas like better than the operas; this is it—

"She's gien me a' she had to gie—
She's hern my comfort a' my days,
I dare na leave my mammy."

The Miss Hibberds gave me meat and clues when I could hardly earn them, they helped us, or we could not have come together, or having come together, you, poor fellow, would have been hastened to death with care. So, Bishop, I dare not leave the poor, good Miss Hibberds after all they have done for me."

"But how can I be separated from you, Tid? I can not bear it."

"Yes, dear Bishop, I'll tell you how I will help you. Come night and morning to the end of Lavender Lane, where I meet you, and receive and bless Miss Hibberd's window. I will hang out my red shawl, the shawl you used to know me by at a distance, your remembrance of me, and understand it as well. If you ever do not see the shawl, then you have my leave to come on and enter the house, and stay with me and take care of me, my dear, dear father! I know you would not mind giving up your classes, letting every thing take its chance, and running some risks yourself, neither Miss Blount nor the Miss Hibberds would want to separate man and wife in the circumstances. Bishop, I am not a wife in the circumstances. Bishop, I am not afraid of infection, and people like me are never smitten."

There was heroism in the tender and reverential speech (she was as calm as a judge the moment her husband left her). There was heroism in Bishop's going with his heart clutched by terror and leaving Tid to do her duty in the jaws of death. There were new songs more touching than Tid watching by her old friends' sick beds, giving them tea, medicines and cordials, carrying inquiries and messages from the one to the other, and going to them, trotting for them, relacing them in every way. She restored the courage of the frightened servants: the maid to the cooks, the cooks to the housemaids and laundry-maids, who had not a tithe of the moral endurance of small-sized Tid. The domestics had been greatly tasked when they could have wished to feel a lump in her throat as big as an egg and as black as a plum, if it had not been for "that tre dear, clever, little woman," Miss Bishop. Miss Bishop all and known "Miss Farren as was," and who staid with them, and went so softly up and down stairs, and spoke so cheerily, and came out of the sick rooms so religiously, and sensibly, and thankfully as an old nurse, bless her dear heart! and she a young wife in a delicate situation, separated from her husband as doted on the ground she walked on, and worshiped as the dispenser of blessings in the house. If there was a thing more than another that went to the heart like a clasp-knife, as the fat cook, who had charge of speeds, would say, it was to see young Mrs. Bishop hanging out that old red shawl of hers as a sign to her husband.

That old red shawl of Tid's, which had been familiar to Bishop as a lover, how little she had dreamed it would serve as a flag of hope to Bishop in his misery, and more quite as old married couple! She had imagined she might wrap her baby in it in default of something less venerable, and that she herself her baby would be none the worse for being carried about in a shawl that had belonged to its mother before her never had a child, and was a part of life and health, and a fair day on the morrow, like the red in the summer sunset, to the baby's future. She would unfold the shawl for the baby a few minutes at the half-open window, with the wind blowing her hair, straining her eyes, as if she could see Bishop coming yonder, beyond Mrs. Farren the lights began to twinkle, and then she would clasp her hands, and whether she prayed for the Miss Hibberds, or herself, or Bishop, or her unborn baby—for women have strange fancies and gleams of second-sight—it was a sweet soul that prayed, and that form heard.

Poor Bishop's heart would be thumping like a steam-engine, so that he could hardly muster a single puff after the day's hard routine, when he reached the end of Lavender Lane, and came in sight of the house, for Goodness knows it was a long distance out of Bethlehem. He would take off his hat when he caught the first glimpse of it; he might be praying in—the prayer of a hunted and long-tried man, or ever beat in a breast exposed to shot and steel. Poor Bishop did more than venture his own heart—he was responsible for Tid's heart, and Tid's peace for the future. "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I unto thee." Once he was there full three minutes before the red shawl shook out, and he got so sick, blind, and dizzy that he had to lean against a lamp-post. Then he came to himself the shawl was blushing, like the warm blood of life and the roses of June against the old yellow brick house, and a policeman's hand was on his arm. "Young man," said the guardian of society, "this here behavior is more than I can put up with. I have seen you swatching of the mine house every night I have come upon my beat this week. If you are only a moonshiny lover, it is no business of mine; but you must have done with the trick, because if you happens to have burglarious intentions I'm blowed if I'm to be responsible for allowing all this spying, without reporting you to my inspector and having you up at the office."

The red shawl was now fluttering freely, and Bishop, who was wont to tremble before schoolgirls, smiled loudly in the stern face of his captor. "Policeman," he said, "I am looking out for a token from my wife, and there it is. She is yonder, and I can not get near her, for she is nursing two sick ladies ill with diphtheria—a disease as infectious as the typhus—and we dare not come together to compromise other lives besides our own."

The policeman's grasp relaxed, and his countenance changed from a state of stone to that of a man of flesh and blood, a family-man himself, with a pet little daughter. "I beg your pardon, Sir, that is a different affair. If you are coming down upon me with a story," he said the next moment, to make up for his weakness, "I'll come down again upon your wife and you, before we drop on the acquaintance. But I believe you are speaking the truth," relenting a second time, "and I wish you many years and health to enjoy your sickness. Good-evening, Sir."

The epidemic had exhausted itself. The Miss Hibberds lived. Tid was a true prophet, and never took the diphtheria, and probably, by her kind constancy, saved her neighbors from the infection. It is needless to say how blissful was the reunion between husband and wife; how cordial were Miss Blount, the Miss Hibberds, Bishop, and Tid, when they all met again; how Bishop and Tid were promoted to the most honorable posts; and how Bishop's name and fame and capital fellow and an excellent teacher rose, till Tid taught no more unless when she taught her little children, but staid at home, and was fully employed in taking care of her bright suburban house and garden, and her friends, young and old, rich and poor; and lastly, how Bishop and Tid had their own little boy at that old red rag of a shawl without the water coming into their eyes to their dying day.

THE OMENS

Oh, when I went a-wooing
To win my darling May,
'Twas in a sunny island,
An island far away,
Where skies are blue forever,
Where earth is always gay!

And as I went a-wooing,
I met with omens three:
An eagle skyward soaring,
A cockle on the sea,
That sat and coo'd a love-song,
A love-song unto me.

The third, an emerald serpent,
That wrought so oil to man,
Slid through the blossom'd jungle,
To where a brooklet ran,
Its little heart intensify
A song of joy begun!

And all these happy creatures
Had voices unto me:
The eagle soaring skyward,
The cockle on the tree,
The snake and laughing brooklet,
Gave counsel fair and free.

Be wise as I. the snake said,
To choose a fair darling May;
The eagle: Bold and ready
Be to bear the prize away;
Nor lose the golden moments
In profitless delay.

And when your May is chosen,
Thus did the cousins coo,
Like me, be constant ever,
Be tender as you're true;
For well I know your darling
Will still be true to you!

The brooklet prattled blithely,
As on it ran apace—
Learn from me bring your darling
That chosen spot to grace,
Let mirth and joy and leisure
Have their abiding place!

And thus I went a-wooing,
And thus it did betide,
The tender-hearted maiden
Became my winsome bride
And deep is she, for denver
Than all the world beside!

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

WHAT HE DID THE FIRST YEAR.—In one of the courts in Connecticut recently, a woman was testifying on behalf of her son, and swore that he had worked on a farm for her. "And how long," asked the lawyer, "did you keep her said, "You assert that your son has worked on a farm for you the first year?" "I do." "What did he do the first year?" "He milked," she replied. The whole court laughed heartily, and the witness was questioned no further.

FASHIONABLE GOSSIP.—Crinoline is going out; so ladies' dresses will come in, in proportion.

THE LATEST DEATH.—Some of Quin's jests were perfect. When Wachurton said, "By what law can the execution of Quin be delayed?" Quin replied, "By the law of nature." "By all the laws he had left them." No wonder Walpole applauded him. Quin's repartee to Foote, who accused him of having come to close to violent ends, but Quin gave him a worse blow. "Yes, your mother died of a fall." Foote's mother, who was also the case with the twelve apostles." Quin could never resist Foote. They had at one time had a quarrel and were reconciled, but Foote was still a little sore. "Jemmy," said he, "you should not have said that I had but one shirt, and that I lay in bed while it was washed." "Sammy," replied the actor, "I never could have said so, for I never knew that you had a shirt to wash."

JUDICIABLE SUPERLATIVE.—"Tree named me?" exclaimed the disappointed young lover, calling for his woodcut leg after the first glorious battle.

AN EXTRACT FROM "PASSAGES OF A WORKING LIFE."—An old tooth.

URBUT AT LAST.—We have often wondered what earthly purpose could be answered by bagpipes, for they are certainly not musical instruments. We have discovered their use in the description of a fire which broke out at the Assembly Rooms of Edinburgh during the Celebration of the Waterloo Ball. In the account we read it stated that "the fire originated in some decorative scenery, a portion of which caught light from an adjoining gas jet," and it adds, "the pipers were ordered to play upon the spot, the fire was extinguished, and the alarm dissipated." We think the conflagration showed its good sense by going out when the pipers began to play. We should have done exactly the same.

THE SHIFT OF HAPPINESS.—A bachelor's.

SMALL BEGINNINGS.—Baby Bantings.

CLEANSERS.—An old lady, not remarkable for the cleanness of her ideas, describing a fine summer evening, said: "It was a beautiful night; the moon made every thing as light as a feather."

AN IMPERIAL SELL.—History of Julius Cæsar.

THE MAN WE SHOULD LIKE TO SEND TO A SEANCE.—The Man who knew how to hit the right Medium.

WHAT A FINE WOMAN IS LOSS.—A fine woman is like a brownstone, because she draws a train after her, enters the parlor, and transports the males.

TARTAR TROUT—Household ladies.

A PUZZLED INDIAN.—An Irishman on board a ship undergoing the process of fumigation for the first time felt a jog of water just as the ship was about to sail. The man in charge of the hose, as he said, was "only laying down to coil, he was afraid he should be left behind.

POPPING THE QUESTION.—" Champagne, Sir?"

A COMPLIMENT.—Quin, the actor, being asked by a lady to recommend a preceptor for her son, who would then, replied, "It is in conformity with the other arrangements of Nature: we always see more of heaven than earth."

PITY without relief is like mustard without beef.

HOW TO SWEAT A PATIENT.—A young gentleman was undergoing the examination of all the Colleges of Surgeons, when the questions put were of a very searching character. After answering a number of queries, he was asked what he would prescribe to throw a patient into a profuse perspiration. "Why," answered the young Gallen, "I would send him here to be examined; and if that did not give him a sweat, I would like to know what would."

"HOW TO TIE THE TOM-FOOL KNOT."—Marry.—Old Bachelor Bruin.

WILLIAM AND ANNA.

She.

Now, mother, dear, don't talk, I pray,
My heart remains true still;
Separation, we've heard the proverb Gales, "is"
I'm bound to have my Will.

He.

No longer, Father, shall I stand
This overbearing manner;
Though he'll leave me home and land,
For I'm bound to Love Anna.

At a large dinner-party in a certain city, lately, the finely weather had done considerable duty in supplying conversation. A stout, fussy, happy-looking person, who made a remark about cold fact. "Barely," said a body reporter, "and you are not bounded within cold fact." Amidst an awful pause she naively answered, "Yes, indeed, I am a most unfortunate person, for I have no will of my own."

MUSICAL ACCENT.—At a visit in the Court of King's Bench between certain publishing Tweedledums and Tweedledees as to what was and what was not a musical work? "I'm Old English Gentleman," T. Cooke was subpœned as a witness. On his subscribing himself as a music-seller, that learned counsel rather disgustedly said:

"Now, Sir, you say the publication sent the same, but different. What do you mean, Sir?"

Tom promptly answered: "I mean that the notes in the two copies were alike, but with a different accent."

SIR JAMES.—"What is an accent, Mr. Cooke?"

COOKE.—"My terms are a guinea a lesson, Sir." (A loud laugh.)

SIR JAMES (rather ruffled). "Don't mind your terms here. I ask you what is a musical accent? Can you not tell me?"

COOKE.—"No."

SIR JAMES.—"Can you feel it?"

COOKE.—"Sometimes." (Great laughter.)

SIR JAMES (very snarkily). "Now pray, Sir, don't beat about the bush; tell us what his lordship and the jury, who are supposed to know nothing about it, the meaning of what you call accent."

COOKE.—"Accent in music is a stress laid on a particular note—such as is made by a stress on any word—as for the purpose of being better understood. If I were to say you are a fool, I should put the accent on the word, but if I say you are an ass, it rests on you, Sir James."

Roars of laughter by the whole court, in which the bench joined, followed this repartee. Silence being obtained, the judge (Lord Ellenborough) made seeming gravity, accosted the chop-fallen counsel:

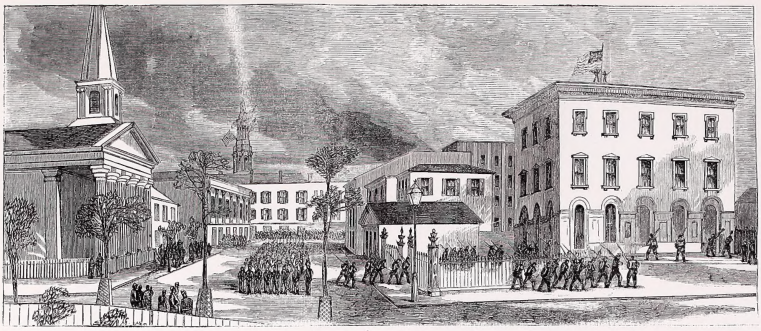
"Are you satisfied, Sir James?"

Sir James, deep red as he naturally was, had become fiendish in his countenance, and in a great huff, said, "The witness may go down."

A CROSSED TRAVELER.—A deformed gentleman, on his arrival at a certain town, was asked how he came by his crooked back. "Straight from Boston," was the reply. "Then," said the inquirer, "you must have got terribly twisted on the road."

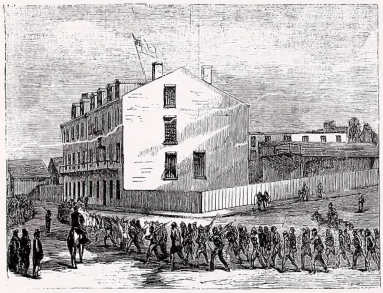
A DINER OUT.—It was remarked of a slenderer, who was also a constant guest at the table of every one who invited him, that he never opened his mouth but at the expense of his friends.

Why can a person who has run away from his creditors be said to be a sum of integrity?—Because he is a sum not a mean.



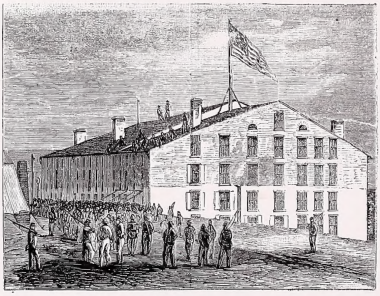
ENIGMA UPON THE VOWELS.

We are but little airy creatures,
All of different voices and features;
One of us in glory doth sing,
One of us you'll find in jail,
Another you may see in ring,
And the fourth a box within.
If the fifth you should pursue,
It can never fly from you.



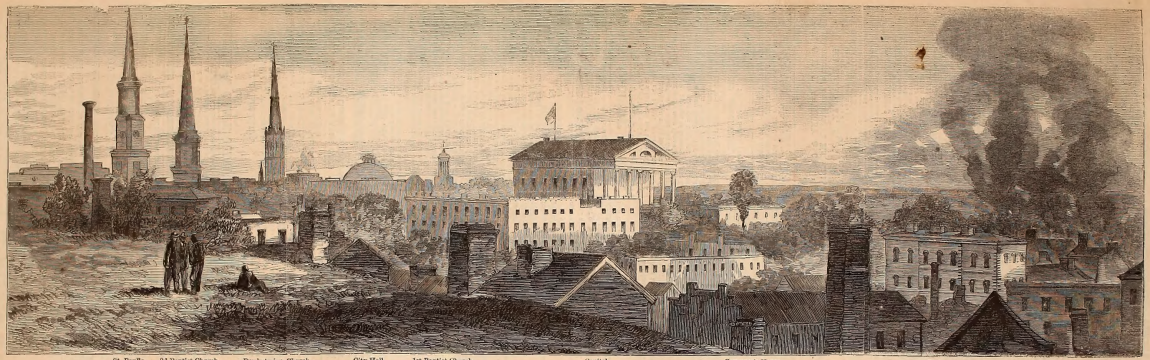
Dean Swift was once invited by a rich miser with a large family to dinner, and was requested by one of the younger children to remove the cloth the Dean uttered the following grace:

"Thanks for this miracle!—this is no lees,
Than to eat manna in the wilderness.
Where raging hunger reign'd we've found relief,
And seen that wondrous thing, a piece of beef.
Here chimney sweeps that never smoked before,
And we've all ate where we shall eat no more!

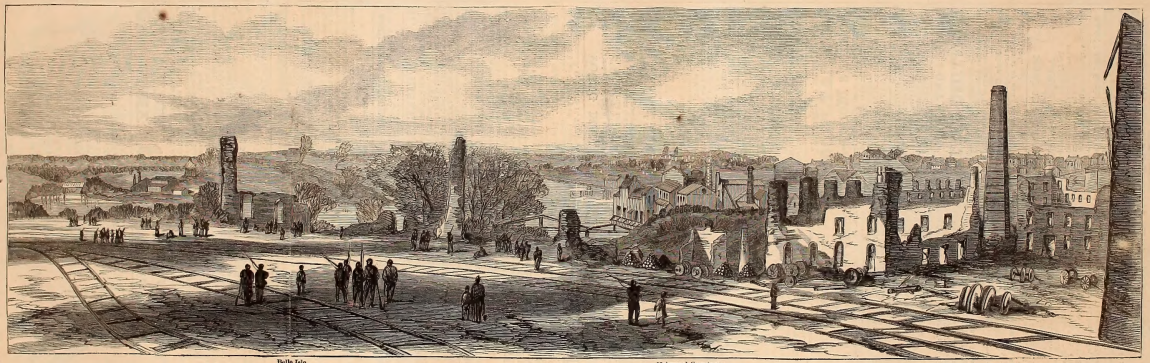


AN APPROPRIATE SON.—An Irishman, swearing the peace against his three sons, the first concluded: "The only son of my children who shows the way and filial affection is my youngest son, Larry, for he never strikes me when I'm down."

CAPTURE OF PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA—THE SECOND MICHIGAN RAISING THE STARS AND STRIPES OVER THE CUSTOM-HOUSE, APRIL 3, 1865.
[SKETCHED BY ANDREW M'CALLUM.]



VIEW OF CASTLE THUNDER, IN RICHMOND.—[SKETCHED BY A. W. WARREN.]



VIEW OF LIBBY PRISON, RICHMOND.—[SKETCHED BY A. W. WARREN.]

RUINS ON MAIN STREET, RICHMOND.—[SKETCHED BY A. W. WARREN.]

THE CITY OF RICHMOND, VIRGINIA—VIEW FROM GAMBLE'S HILL.—[SKETCHED BY A. W. WARREN.]

THE CITY OF RICHMOND, VIRGINIA, LOOKING WESTWARD.—[SKETCHED BY A. W. WARREN.]

DO NOT WASTE YOUR MONEY buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOLD PENS, which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the BEST IN THE WORLD.

Avoid the shameless Upstarts, whose lack of brains compels them to attempt IMITATION, even to the advertisement. If you want the full value of your money, call on A. MORTON, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

FAIRY ALBUMS.

For holding 40 Pictures, $1 25; 80 Pictures, $1 50. Trade supplied. Books, Pictures, Albums, etc. Send stamp for illustrated catalogue. W. C. WEMYSS, 358 Broadway, N. Y.

FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN ONLY.

The Patent Instrument, for every person wearing busts, busks, trusses, corsets, or any articles requiring lacing. Very simple, unique, curious, or getting into hard knots. ONLY GIVE THEM A TRIAL. NEAT, USEFUL, and ORNAMENTAL. Will be sent by mail for 25 cents.

W. C. WEMYSS, 358 Broadway, New York.

HARASZTHY'S GRAPE CULTURE

AND

Wine-Making.

GRAPE CULTURE AND WINE-MAKING: Being the Official Report of the Commissioner appointed in Pursuance of an Act of the Legislature of Europe, with Reference to the Products of California. By A. HARASZTHY. Numerous Illustrations. 8vo. Cloth, $3 50.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

☞ Sent by Mail, postage free, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

MERWIN & BRAY FIRE-ARMS CO.'S

Belt and Pocket Size Cartridge Revolvers.

The full size weight of 32 cal., and carries a ball 45-100 caliber. Larger than Colt's Navy), and can be used with either fixed or loose ammunition. The Pocket size is 22 cal., and carries a ball 36-100 caliber (same as Colt's 4 and 5 inch.

These Pistols are loaded and discharged with only four motions—a degree of action never yet attained by any other arm. A full round may be loaded and discharged in fifty seconds. These arms have been adopted exclusively by the U. S. Revenue Service. Testimonials of their efficiency are daily received from the most reliable sources from civilians. Printed circulars (with illustrated cuts), testimonials, sent by mail when required.

MERWIN & BRAY are also sole proprietors of the Ballard Breech-Loading Rifle and Carbine. These arms need no comment. Their high character for Military and Sporting purposes is so well established that the Public may wish to know where they may be purchased. These Rifles were used by Captain Ames and Fifty-six Men from Second Battalion to the Pacific, under orders of the U. S. Government. The Ordnance Department and the Naval Authorities have about Twenty Thousand (20,000) now in active field service, of which the highest testimonials are received. Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers generally.

Address MERWIN & BRAY,
No. 262 Broadway, New York.

P.S.—IMPORTANT.—These Rifles can be used with either fixed or loose ammunition.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baltimore prices, wholesale, and all those used by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 65 Broadway. Bottom charged low rates.

Great Closing Sale!!

$650,000 Jewelry,

Worth Fifty Cents, Dollar, and Five Dollars each, without regard to value, and to be sold for ONE DOLLAR. If you know what you are to get, send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you are to get, and if not worth the money you can remit us $1. Then it is at your option to send the dollar and have the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any Set of Jewelry on each or the Dollar, and in no case can they obtain less than a Dollar's worth, as there are no blanks. Six Certificates will be sent for $1. Thirteen for $2. Twenty-five for $5. One Hundred for $13. Great inducements offered to those who act as Agents. Catalogue containing full lists and particulars mailed free. Address

JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,
255 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

P.O., Drawer 12.

Whiskers! Mustaches!!—The celebrated HIMALAYA COMPOUND is warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in two weeks. An English patent article, which does not stain the skin. Sent safely by mail for $1. Address Dr. H. DE FORREST, Albany, New York.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

Manufacturers of Photographic Materials

501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Invite attention to their new and improved PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, as now manufactured at the following:

STEREOSCOPES & STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS.

Of these we have an immense assortment, including War Scenes, Views of Cities, Public Buildings, Groups, Statuary, Animals, etc., etc., also, Stereoscopic Views to order of Public or private exhibition. Our Catalogue will be sent on receipt of Stamp for 10 cents.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS,

We would call attention to the fact that since the late Sales, and we make Albums to suit the times, we are now selling, ranging in price from 60 cents to $60 each. Our ALBUMS for the reception of Soldiers' Photographs are very handsome and elegant. They will be sent by mail, FREE, on receipt of price.

CARTE DE VISITE MADE TO ORDER.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.

Our Catalogue contains a full list of STANDARD Albums of which a Whole additions are constantly being made. Parties of Portraits of Eminent American, etc., etc., also:

350 Major-Generals, 350 Brigadier-Generals, 350 Staff Officers,
200 Brig.-Generals, 250 Other Officers, 130 Divines
100 Admirals, 100 Naval Officers, 100 Statesmen,
24 Cabinet, 100 Judges, 60 Prominent Women,
8,000 Copies of Works of Art.

Including portraits of the most celebrated Engravings, Painting, Sculpture, etc. Catalogues sent on receipt of Stamp. Any of the above Photographs will be sent by mail, post paid, to the trade on the price of $10 and over by mail, post paid.

Photographers and others ordering goods C. O. D. will please remit twenty per cent. of the amount with their order.

☞ We pay the postage on all our goods cannot fail to satisfy. Soldiers' Pocket Albums for 20 Pictures, 75 cents.

MESSRS. FOWLER & WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, New York, Publishers, have in stock on PHRENOLOGY, HYDROPATHY, PHYSIOLOGY, PHONOGRAPHY, PHYSIOGNOMY, PSYCHOLOGY, ANATOMY, MEDICINE, And on the Natural Sciences generally. AGENTS WANTED. Send a stamped envelope for catalogues and terms.

LADIES' LETTER.

Five Anatomical Engravings.

Has 128 pages, and is never before published.

By an Experienced Nurse and Female Physician.

Sent free on a limited Envelope for Ten Cents.

Address MRS. DR. KEWLER, Brooklyn P. O., N. Y.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELRY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELRY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GUARD PINS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, ETC.,

Worth $500,000,

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars: also Terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

ARCANA WATCH.

An Elegant Novelty in Watches.

The case of this watch we are entirely new pattern, composed of six different metals combined, rolled together and planished, producing an exact imitation in color of gold, called Arcana, which will always keep its color. They are as durable as those made of solid gold, and are afforded at one-eighth the cost. The case is beautifully decorated with gold and shield for engraving, with patent keyset, and engraved in the exact style of the celebrated Gold Hunting case, and are ready for inspection and delivery, and to exact an imitation of gold as to defy detection. They movement is manufactured by the well-known St. Imier Watch Company of Europe, and are superbly finished, having patent lever, compensation balance, adjusting, adjusting regulator, with gold balance, and the improved ruby jeweled setting, with fine dials, hands and glass, and is warranted a good time-keeper. These watches are of three different sizes, and are suitable for Ladies' use as well as hunting cases. A case of six will be sent by mail or express free of duty. A single one will be sent postpaid on receipt for $25. Will readily sell for three times their cost. We are the sole agents for the watch in the United States, and none are genuine which do not bear our trade-mark.

Address DEVAUX & CO., Importers,
15 Maiden Lane, New York.

ENVELOPES AND NOTE PAPER.

At wholesale prices, sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of the price.

Ruled Envelopes, all colors, per thousand..... $4 00
500 white note envelopes, double thick..... 2 00
500 white note envelopes, papet..... 2 00
One box (250) new style Magnum envelopes..... 2 00
One box (250) new style Cameo note..... 2 00
1000 Canary color letter envelopes..... 4 00
Samples sent if requested.
G. A. HASKELL, Stationers and Envelope Manufacturers, 36 Beekman Street, New York.

Brandreth's Pills.

A lady of fifty-six was out of health generally; so bad agreed with her; always violent pains in the stomach after eating. She was induced to try a box of my pills, and after taking one box BRANDRETH'S PILLS for a few days together, then rested for a few days. This method she followed for three months, which restored her health completely.

A young lady was obliged to leave school because of a constant severe pain in the right side of the head; she was read aloud or spoke, or went up stairs or walked quickly. Her case was nearly a fatal one, by the remedies employed, of which Brandreth pills was one. She used, as said BRANDRETH'S PILLS, which in one year cured her, and now her health is fully restored.

TUMOR OF THE NECK CURED.

A young gentleman had a tumor on one side of his neck which had been years in coming. It was pronounced a cancer. DR. BRANDRETH expressed the opinion that perseverance in the use of his pills would cure. They were used according to the printed instructions which accompany each box, and soon the tumor began to give way. In a little over one year from the time he began, the gentleman could not now be surpassed for health and vigor.

It is any wonder BRANDRETH'S PILLS are so well esteemed?

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my PORTRAIT AND SIGNATURE APPEAR on the box. See upon it B. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING, NEW YORK

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicines.

FREE TO ALL.

Citizens, Soldiers, Everybody, should send their address, and receive a large illustrated Paper replete with the shortest itineraries of the day. Address

CHARLES E. MACKEY, 81 Nassau St., N. Y.

UPHAM'S PIMPLE BANISHER

Removes Pimples on the Face, Freckles,

Tetter, Blotches, and Discolorations on the complexion. No toilet is complete without it. Price 50 cents. Sent by mail, free of postage, for 60 cts. A. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE JAPANESE HAIR STAIN

Colors Hair, Whiskers, and Mustache

in a beautiful black or brown, and does not stain the skin, nor injure the hair, but fade or wash out. Only 50 cents a box. Mailed to any part of the country for 75 cents. Address T. J. Smith & Co., 63 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

GREAT INVENTION!—Patton, Stephenson, Davy, & Gottenburg, Architects, Engineers, Mechanical Draughtsmen, Artists, Illustrators, and Designers, Abel-Gen. Turro, Miss Bertha Hall, and Others, Models, Mrs. Patton, Mrs. Stephenson, Mrs. Benson, Comb, Eastlake, Gottfried, Burnett in the Combination Costume of the Century. Benson, Co., Proprietors. MANAGERS ON BROADWAY, illustrated; Color of Eyes, Hair, Complexion, and; Size of Feet. Price 25 cts. Sent by Post; Colors of the Eyelids; Eyelashes. CHOICE OF

Dr. Poland's
WHITE PINE
COMPOUND.
THE GREAT AND POPULAR
REMEDY FOR
Colds, Coughs, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, and Whooping-Cough.

Cures Grand and all Kidney Diseases.

There have been many severe cases in Boston and vicinity cured by the WHITE PINE COMPOUND, which can be referred to, and hundreds of cases of Kidney complaints, others entirely by taking the White Pine Compound, have been reported by Druggists.

Among all the popular medicines offered for sale, no one seems to have gained favor like the White Pine Compound. This medicine was first made known to the public in 1855, and then merely for one individual who was affected with an inflammation of the throat. A cure was effected by it. This induced others to apply for the same remedy, and every one was cured, to a great benefit. The sensation, however, went without a name till November following; when it was called White Pine Compound. Nothing that mouth it was advertised for the first time.

Some time in 1856 an individual, who purchased a bottle for a hard cough, was not only cured of the cough, but also of a severe kidney complaint of ten years' endurance. This being truly a discovery, the fact was mentioned to a skilful physician, who replied in substance that the bark of White Pine was one of the best diuretics known, provided its astringency could be counteracted. If the other articles entering into the Compound would effect this, a better was in the Medicine! The Sentence has not yet been reached; but the hundreds of cures effected by the Compound, in the most complicated cases of Kidney Diseases, including Diabetes, prove it to be a wonderful Medicine for such diseases. A large number of the testimonials now employ it or recommend it for such use.

But while the White Pine Compound is so useful in kidney inflammation, it is also a wonderful curative for all throat and lung diseases. It is purely vegetable and will allay inflammation that hoarseness and soreness are removed as if by magic. Numerous cases have been cured, and to the originator where relief in very severe cases has been experienced in one hour, and a cure effected in a few hours.

There is a very natural reason for this. The bark, and even the leaves or "needles," of White Pine, contain a healing balsam or resin. The Indians employed the bark of White Pine in treating diseases long before the establishment of American Colonies.

A wash of the bark, steeped in water, is considered very useful in the cleansing and cleaning of old sores; in fine, the virtues of White Pine bark are known everywhere, and this, doubtless, is the ground reason why the White Pine Compound was so favorably received by the East.

The past year has given a great opportunity to test the virtues of the White Pine Compound. It has been an unusual time for Colds and Coughs, and very large quantities of the White Pine Compound have been sold and used with the happiest effects. It speaks well for the Medicine that the more widely it is known, it is proportionately high in its praises.

TESTIMONIALS

A very large number of important testimonials have already been received from Physicians, Clergymen, Agriculturists, and indeed from all classes in society, bearing testimony to the most flattering terms of the White Pine Compound.

Dr. Nichols, of Scottsville, Va., says:

"I find the White Pine Compound to be very efficacious for not only its cough and other pulmonic difficulties, but also in affections of the kidneys, diseases of the stomach, and other kindred complaints."

Rev. J. K. Cross, of Rumney, N. H., writes:

"I have for a number of years used the White Pine Compound as an invaluable remedy. I can truly say that I regard it as even more efficacious and valuable than ever. I have just taken the Compound for a cold, and it works charmingly."

Hon. P. H. Sweetser, of South Reading, writes:

"Having had some personal knowledge of the valuable medicinal properties of the White Pine, I was prepared, on reading an advertisement in this city, of the White Pine Compound, for the three years past I have been very much troubled with my throat and lungs, choking up and raising an immense sight, with a bad cough after raising blood; I felt that my time must be short unless I could obtain relief. The spring I was induced to try your White Pine Compound, and by the time it is two months, to my great astonishment, before I had taken two bottles, my cough was broken, my kidney trouble also, and I could walk out without choking up and raising so much. I have taken many times since, and am feeling like a well man."

I would add, that my father's family is inclined to consumption, my father, brother, and two sisters having died of it.

From Stephen Bartlett,
Bradford, N. H., July, 1860.

Dr. Poland,—I had been afflicted with a bad cough complaint for a long time, and had a bad cough of ten years' standing, which I could not get rid of by any remedy. No one of my acquaintances expected I would get my health again. But after one bottle of your White Pine Compound have cured me of both the cough and Kidney Complaint. I am now a well man, and am feeling like a new man. I was so badly afflicted with a cough that the sat up only long enough to have her bed made, and we did not believe she was going in a quick consumption. She took only one bottle of your Compound, and it cured her. She is just as well now as ever she was.

The White Pine Compound, advertised at length in our columns, is one of the best in its name inviting, Rates highly approved medicine. Dr. J. W. Poland, the inventor, has the confidence of many who know him—confidence which he enjoyed while laboring usefully many years as a Baptist minister. Now he devotes his time and self to the make experiments which issued in his medical discovery.—Boston Hallowell Journal.

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND,

GEORGE W. SWETT, M.D.,
Proprietor.

Will be manufactured in future at the
NEW ENGLAND BOTANIC DEPOT, 106 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

Under the supervision of
REV. J. W. POLAND, M.D.

DR. SWETT will attend to the business department, to whom all orders should be addressed.

Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers in Medicines everywhere.

Price 75 Cents per Bottle.

Important Announcement.

GREAT SALE OF
WATCHES, CHAINS, DIAMOND RINGS, &C.
One Million Dollars Worth!
TO BE DISPOSED OF AT
ONE DOLLAR EACH!
Without regard to value!! Not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive!!!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES!
All to be sold at One Dollar Each!

200 Music Boxes, each..... $20 to $150
500 " " " ..... 10 to 100
500 Silver Teapots and Coffee Urns..... 20 " 50
500 " Cups..... 10 " 20
1000 " Ice Pitchers..... 20 " 50
1000 " Pie Knives with Pastry..... 10 " 20
5000 " Goblets and Drinking Cups..... 5 " 50
5000 " Castors..... 10 " 50
5000 " Fruit, Cake and Cake Baskets..... 20 " 50
10,000 " Gold Hunting-Case Watches..... 50 " 200
10,000 " Table Spoons and forks, per dozen..... 20 " 40
250 Gents' Gold Hunting-Case Watches..... 50 " 150
250 Ladies' Gold and Enamel Watches..... 50 " 150
250 Gents' Hunting-Case Silver Watches..... 25 " 75
250 Diamond Rings..... 50 " 150
8,000 Gold Vest and Neck Chains..... 6 " 30
8,000 Gold Pencils and Brunets..... 3 " 10
8,000 Jet and Gold Bracelets..... 6 " 10
8,000 Guard Chains and Guard Chains..... 6 " 30
7,000 Solitaire and Gold Brooches..... 4 " 10
5,000 Gold Lockets, Crosses, &c..... 3 " 10
8,000 Mosaic, Jet, Lava, and Florentine Ear Drops, per pair..... 4 " 8
7,500 Coral, Opal, and Emerald Ear Drops..... 4 " 6
5,000 California Gold and Diamond Ear Drops..... 6 " 10
8,000 Gold Fob and Vest Watch Keys..... 2 50 " 8
8,000 Fob and Vest Gold Slides..... 2 " 6
8,000 Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c..... 3 " 8
8,000 Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc..... 3 " 6
8,000 Miniature Lockets..... 4 " 10
4,000 " " Magic Spring..... 10 " 50
2,000 Gold Toothpick Cases, etc..... 3 " 6
5,000 Plain Gold Rings..... 4 " 10
5,000 Chased Gold Rings..... 4 " 10
8,000 Stone Set and Signet Rings..... 2 50 " 10
8,000 Gold Lockets, Lover Knots, &c..... 3 " 10
7,500 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Jet and Gold..... 5 " 15
7,500 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Enamel, Opal, and other stones..... 4 " 25
5,000 Gold Crosses, Silver Extra Rich Ornaments, and Pearls..... 4 " 10
10,000 Gold Slides and Gold-Mounted Holders 2 " 6
8,000 Gold Pens and Gold Extension-Holders 15 " 25
8,000 Ladies' Gilt and Jet Hair Pins..... 50 " 1
8,000 Ladies' Gilt and Jet Hair Bars and Balls 5 " 10

All the above Articles are now on exhibition at No. 207 Broadway, New York, announce that all of the above list of goods will be sold for One Dollar Each.

In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the manufacturing districts of England, caused by the enforcing out of the supply of cotton, a large quantity of valuable jewelry, originally intended for the English market, has been sent off for sale in this country, and MUST BE SOLD AT ANY SACRIFICE.

Under these circumstances ARRENDALE & CO., sole agents for Messrs. Hyde, Goldsmith, Birmingham, England, have received upon a Great Gift Distribution, subject to the following conditions:

Certificates of the various articles are first put into envelopes, sealed, and well mixed; then certificates are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, then upon receipt of a remittance. On receipt of a certificate you will see what you are to have, and then it is at your option to send the remittance named or not, as you like. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any set of Jewelry for the sum of One Dollar.

Send 25 cents for Certificates.

Upon receipt of a certificate we shall charge for forwarding the certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents only, which must be remitted when the certificate is sent for. Five certificates will be sent for $1; seven for $2; fifteen for $3; thirty for $5; fifty for $10, delivered for $20.

AGENTS.—We want agents in every regiment, and in every town and county in the country, and those acting as agents will be allowed one certificate for every certificate delivered by them, provided their remittance amounts to One Dollar. Agents will be allowed one for every certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postages stamps.

ARRENDALE & CO.,
No. 167 Broadway, New York.

What the "Press" say of us.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION.—A rare opportunity is offered for obtaining valuable jewelry, watches, diamond ornaments, &c., by Messrs. Arrendale & Co., at No. 167 Broadway. They have an immense stock of valuable goods for sale, and all are offered at one dollar each. The distribution is very liberal, as a certificate is sent for a remittance of a certain article, enclosed in an envelope, and are not known until the envelope is opened and you receive the article, which will certainly be worth more than that amount of money. This is the best mode we have known of investing a dollar.—Sunday Times, N. Y. City, Feb. 19, 1865.

Messrs. Arrendale & Co. have long been personally known to us as men of the highest order of probity and of public confidence.—N. Y. Scottish American Journal, Nov. 11, 1864.

We have inspected at the office of Arrendale & Co's Factory for Great Gift Distribution, Broadway, a large assortment of fashionable and valuable jewelry of the newest designs. The system of sale is a lucky one, and we believe, and understand that the whole of these newly-imported articles are to be disposed of on a principle, giving great advantages to buyers, and affording extensive employment to agents. We take the less in pleasure to be the very respectable and thoroughly worthy of public confidence, and recommend our friends to call at their premises.—N. Y. Illinois Staats Zeitung, Sept. 5, 1864.

Mr. Merrill, of Arrendale & Co., has arrangement the advantage of being on the side of the customer, he has every thing to gain and nothing to lose, whether he sells a watch or not. He will get for his labor beforehand, and he need not send it if he should not sell. Such is fair dealing.—Sept. 6, 1864.

EMPLOYMENT FOR LADIES.—The most eligible and profitable employment now heard of for ladies is the sale of certificates for the "Great Gift Distribution" of Arrendale & Co. A lady of our acquaintance has been very successful in this way, not only in filling her own purse, but also in giving a good deal to those to whom she sold the certificates, as will be seen from our advertising column. Information can also be obtained at No. 167 Sunday Mercury, August 14, 1864.

In our columns to-day readers will find an advertisement of Arrendale & Co.'s Gift Distribution of watches, jewelry, and silverware. In pursuance of this advertisement we received several sets of the jewelry advertised, and we are warranted in saying that in each and instance, they are quite exceeded our expectations. They turned out to be just what they had been represented.—Great Divertisement, Lewistown, August 17, 1864.

The British Ship of Kingston, C. W., say, Nov. 26, 1864, one of our lady subscribers became an agent for Arrendale & Co., and by request brought some twenty articles, sent as prizes for her agency, to the office for inspection, and without hesitation we can state that each and all of the articles were worth twice the amount of cost to the recipients, and some of them six times.

We have seen some very pretty specimens of Table and Tea Spoons, Soup Ladles, Ladies' Chains, Pins, Bracelets, etc., which have been sent by Arrendale & Co. to this place for $1 each.—Angelica Reporter, N. Y. State, Feb. 15, 1865.

U.S. 7-30 LOAN.

By authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, the undersigned has assumed the General Subscription Agency for the sale of United States Treasury Notes, bearing seven and three-tenths per cent. interest, per annum, known as the Seven-Thirty Loan.

These Notes are issued under date of June 15th, 1865, and are payable three years from that time, in currency, or will be converted at the option of the holder into

U. S. 5-20 SIX PER CENT. GOLD-BEARING BONDS.

These bonds are worth a premium which increases the actual profits on the 7-30 loan, and its exemption from State and Municipal taxation adds from one to three per cent. more, according to the rate levied on other property. The interest is payable in currency semi-annually by coupons attached to each note, which may be cut off and sold or have the value

The interest amounts to

One Cent per Day on a	$50 Note.
Two Cents "	$100 "
Ten "	$500 "
20 "	$1000 "
1 Dollar "	$5000 "

Notes of all the denominations named will be promptly furnished upon receipt of subscriptions, and the notes forwarded at once. Parties inclosed to 20th June next will be paid in advance. This is now offered by the Government, and it is confidently expected that its superior advantages will make it the

THE ONLY LOAN IN MARKET

GREAT POPULAR LOAN OF THE PEOPLE.

Less than $500,000,000 of the Loan authorized by the last Congress remain to be placed in market. This amount at the rate at which it is being absorbed, will all be subscribed for within four months, when the notes will undoubtedly command a premium, as has uniformly been the case on closingthe subscriptions to other Loans.

In order that citizens of every town and section of the country may have the official facilities for taking the Loan, the National Banks, State Banks, and Private Bankers throughout the country have generally agreed to receive subscriptions at par. Subscriptions will be received over their counters, and those who have confidence, and who only are to be responsible for the delivery of the notes for which they receive orders.

JAY COOKE,
SUBSCRIPTION AGENT, Philadelphia.

March 6, 1865.

PLAYING CARDS.

The American Card Company's
New Union Playing Cards,
National Emblems.

They are the prettiest card made, and suit the popular likes. The suits are EAGLES, SHIELDS, STARS, and LEGENDS, instead of KING, QUEENS or LLEBEYS for Queen, and MAJOR for JACK.

The new cards can be played as readily as with cards bearing foreign emblems. Ask your dealer to put up an assortment and then tie down before for the trade.

In order that all dealers may have an opportunity to sell the cards, a sample box of twelve packs will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of Five Dollars. Address

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
No. 14 Chambers Street, New York.

DR. B. C. PERRY, DERMATOLOGIST.

No. 49 Bond Street, New York.

Treats successfully all diseases of the scalp, loss of hair, and premature blanching. Also, removes no fly freckles, and other disfigurations of the skin. Medicines free. Consultation free. For particulars, address for circular.

Old Eyes Made New.

A pamphlet directing how to speedily restore sight and give up spectacles, without aid of doctor or medicine is Sent by mail, free, on receipt of 10 cents. Address

R. B. FOOTE, M.D.
1130 Broadway, New York.

GOLD PENS retailing at wholesale prices. Pens, 14K, 75 cts; 18 carat, silver cut, $1 to $3, sent by mail. Send stamp for circular. GEO. HAWKES, Manufacturer, 64 Nassau Street, New York. Also Foolscap Pens.

All the New Army Corps Badges Ready.

Solid Silver, $5. Solid Silver, $3.

On opposite side of this Medal is a true likeness of Lieut. Gen. Grant. I will send this medal, made from pure coin silver, with your name handsomely engraved thereon, on the receipt of $3. Also, for $1 50 I will send a badge for either Corps or Division in the army (pure coin silver), with your name, regiment, and corps neatly handsomely engraved thereon; and for $3 or $5 (one piece) I will send a genuine 16-carat gold Corps Ring for either Div. in the Army. Agents wanted in every regiment. Sample, by mail, to whom especial inducements are offered. Write each order I will promptly fill. Address, plainly,

B. T. HAYWARD, 369 Broad way, New York.

$8 OFFICER'S $10 WATCH.

Our whole stock of Imported Watches, being of rich and novel designs, are now offered at reduced prices. Single Watches of Wholesale manufacture.

An Elegant Watch in Fine Gold Plated Double Cases Richly Engraved, Turned Centre, Carved Balance Bridge, English Full Plate Jeweled Movements, adjusted Regulator, Second Hands, Solid Hands, and Fine Enamel Dial, a serviceable article in running order, with Key, and Seal and Chain complete, sent by mail, free of charge, for $8. A beautiful Miniature Gold Locket, to match, with Portrait of Lincoln and Cipher for Glass Reverse, sent by mail to any part of the army or country for only $10.

A Neat Silver Watch, superior quality, for army use, in Hunting Case, Small Size, same as the above, with Key, Case, etc., complete, sent by mail for $5. Also, Gold and Silver Lockets, etc. Sent by mail to any part of the army or country for only $5.

The Imperial Watch,

Containing a Large and Wonderful Combination of Mechanical Effects, combining within its cases and attached to its mechanism a beautiful and correct Miniature Chronometer, an accurately adjusted Harrison's Compass in miniature, and a Dial, and a Reliable Calendar, indicating day of month, week, date, in Cases, rendering this Watch a perfect Time Keeper, and Time Instrument. The beautiful machinery of this valuable Watch is encased in Finely Finished Diamond Hunting, Horse Jewel or Lion Cases (the outer cases being of fine 18-Carat Gold, inner cases of Gold of same quality), Richly Engraved Top and Bottom, with Panel for Name, and Fancy Push Spring. Genuine Gold Jeweled Imperial Action, M. J. Tobin movements, Polished Cap, Self-acting Click, Equal Balance, Independent Action, fine White Gilt Dial, Second Set Cut Hands, and is an Exact Imitation of $100 watch, and used by the ROYAL FAMILIES and Officers of the Russian Army, as their standard time-keeper. None Genuine unless bearing our private trade mark. Price per case, $10, all complete, by mail, to any part of the army or country, $10. CAPTAIN BROTHERS, Sole Importers, 102 Nassau St., N.Y. Established 1856.

BOUND VOLUMES
OF
Harper's Weekly,

From the commencement, will be furnished, free of carriage, upon receipt of the price, by

Cloth Binding ..... $7 00 per Volume.
Half Morocco ..... 10 00 "

Each Volume contains One Year.

HARPER & BROTHERS,
Franklin Square, New York.

O'DOR! O'DOR!

DR. BRIGGS'S
GOLDEN O'DOR

Will force a beautiful set of whiskers or mustache on the smoothest face in from three weeks. It stains the skin of injury to the skin, or hair on bald head in eight weeks (and no scurvy). I receive recommendations most every day from persons who have used it and found it genuine. Testimonials of thousands. I will send Dr. Brigg's Golden O'Dor by mail, sealed and post paid, $1 25 (Warranted). Send orders to

DR. BRIGGS,
Drawer 6308, Chicago, Ill.

BARD & BROTHERS (Established 1849)

GOLD PENS,

PEN AND PENCIL CASES. Also Manufacturers of BARD'S PATENT INDESTRUCTIBLE INDIA RUB GOLD PENS. JAS. D. BARD, Ag't, No. 22 Maiden Lane, N. Y. Descriptive Circulars sent free.

"INDISPENSABLE." No Correspondent, Gentlemen, or Lady, Public Speaker, Teacher, nor Man of Business should be without the New Manual, entitled, HOW TO WRITE; HOW TO TALK; HOW TO BEHAVE, and HOW TO DO BUSINESS. An handy volume of 300 pages, for ready reference. Sent by first post for $2 50. Agents wanted. Please address FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York.

Weston's Metallic Artificial Legs—Lightest, durable, most natural-looking and best invented. Price $75 to $100. Send for a pamphlet.
C. WESTON, 1 Broadway, N. Y.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE
FOR APRIL, 1865.

Important to Subscribers.

Subscribers to the MAGAZINE and WEEKLY will find upon the wrappers of the May numbers the expiration of Account. The figures on the direction-label following the Name show the month with which the Subscription EXPIRES, as noted on our books. Every Subscriber may thereby see exactly how he stands. Remit the proper credit for his remittance, and also when to renew his Subscription. Those Postmasters and Subscribers who are particularly requested to name the NUMBER with which the New Subscription is to commence. They will thus avoid receiving duplicates, or missing any Number. It is desirable that all Annual Subscriptions should be received a few weeks BEFORE the expiration of the former Subscription, in order that their name may be kept properly adjusted. Attention to this will obviate nine-tenths of the errors which annoy both Publishers and Subscribers.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $4 00
An Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $6 00.

The Publishers will accept a limited number of first-class Advertisements for their Magazine, at the rate of Thirty cents a line for each insertion. Number, 375; one half, 2135; whole page, $250. The circulation of HARPER'S MAGAZINE is believed to be larger than that of any other publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Circulation nearly 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year 4 00
One Copy for Three Months 1 00
And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $3 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00. Payment invariably in advance.

The Bound Volume of HARPER'S WEEKLY for the Year 1864, with over 1000 Illustrations. 852 pages, 4to, substantially bound in Cloth. Price $7 00.

Terms to Advertisers.—One Dollar per line for inside, and Fifty cents per line for last page for Periodical Advertisements each insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

A MAN KNOWS A MAN

"Give me your hand, Comrade! We have each lost a Leg for the good cause; but, thank God, we never lost HEART."

SEVEN-THIRTIES.

Robinson & Ogden,

BANKERS,

And

U.S. LOAN AGENTS,

4 Broad St. and 694 Broadway,

New York.

Subscriptions received for any amount, and a constant supply of the notes on hand for immediate delivery.

ROBINSON & OGDEN, BANKERS.

FISK & HATCH,

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.

No. 36 Wall Street, New York.

UNCLAIMED MONEY.—18,000 PERSONS WANTED TO CLAIM MONEY, ESTATES, &c., which have been advertised since 1794. Fee to search for name in Registry, $1. One single branch. All letters must be prepaid. GUN & CO., Unclaimed Money and Property Registry, No. 71 Charlotte Street, London (W.C.), England.

Calenberg & Vaupel's

PIANO-FORTES,

99 and 101 Bleecker Street, 24 Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years.

ARMY and NAVY AGENCY.

Pensions, Bounties, Pay, Prize Money, together with all claims against the army and navy promptly secured. Correspondence promptly answered. L. BROWN & CO., 2 Park Pl'ce, N.Y.

DALEY'S MAGICAL PAIN EXTRACTOR

This invaluable salve is a certain cure for PILES, CORNS, CUTS, BURNS, SORES, and RHEUMATISM. Sufferers from Pains in five minutes. No one should be without it. It saves Doctors' Bills. Sent to any address free by mail on receipt of 37 Cents. Depot 43 Liberty St., New York.

VERMILYE & CO.,

No. 44 WALL STREET,

BANKERS,

And Dealers in all Classes of

GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,

479 Broadway, below Broome St.

Sing Song Chinese Porcelain;

ALSO PARIAN, FRENCH CHINA, GLASS, &c.

French Dinner Sets.

POLLAK & SON, Meerschaum Manufacturers, 607 Broadway, near 8th St., N.Y. Wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $30 each.

GOLD PENS.

The JOHNSON PEN is acknowledged by all who have used them to be the best pen for the least money of any in use. They are made of 14 carats fine gold, and warranted for one year (unless guarantee is lost by negligence). Iridium tipped silver extension cases, $1.25; strong silver holders, $1.75; rubber reserve holders, $2.25; elegant extension cases, gold mounted, $3; gold pencil cases, $4.00 (pencil holders and tools to insert, 25 cents extra). Sent free by mail. Send for Circular. Extra pens by mail, postage paid. Send for Circular.

E. S. JOHNSON, Manufacturer and Seller,
15 Maiden Lane, New York City.

LAWRENCE, BALDWIN & CO.,

Bankers and Brokers,

No. 70 Wall Street, New York.

GOVERNMENT SECURITIES, PETROLEUM,

And all kinds of Stocks, Bonds, &c., bought and sold on commission at the regular Stock, Petroleum, and Mining Boards.

Interest allowed on deposits.

TEETH like pearls and breath of sweetness secured by Caswell, Mack & Co.'s Formodonts Tooth-Paste.

Great Imperial Watch.

See Cately Brothers' Advertisement on page 260.

ASK ANY NEWSDEALER OR BOOKSELLER for a copy of DAWLEY'S NEW WAR NOVELS. If he has not got them he will get them for you.

No. 1. Mosby, the Guerrilla.
No. 2. Pauline, the Female Spy.
No. 3. Semmes, the Pirate.
No. 4. Kildare, the Black Scout.
No. 5. Osgood, the Demon Refugee.

Illust'd, Illuminated Cover. Price 25c.; trade $2 50 per 100.
T. B. DAWLEY, Pub., 13 and 15 Park Row, N. Y.

Free to Every Body.

SOLDIERS, SAILORS, FARMERS, MECHANICS, and EVERY BODY throughout the country will receive, free, by mail, a First-Class, Interesting NEWSPAPER, by sending their address to Editors of "ARMY AND HOME JOURNAL," 40 Ann Street, New York.

"I do not see how an officer or soldier can have a complete outfit without it."—GOV. PIERPOINT.

For sale by all Fancy-Goods Houses and Sutlers.
Price $7 50, sent free of postage.
D. B. BROOKS & BROTHER, Salem, Mass.

THE BOWDOIN MICROSCOPE.

Magnifying small objects 500 times. MAILED FREE everywhere for 50 CENTS, OR THREE FOR $1 00.
Address C. GOWEN, Box 520, Boston, Mass.

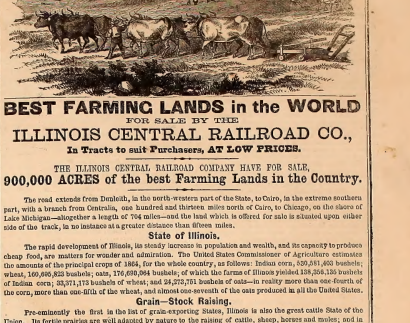
CARPET WARP,

FIRST AND SECOND QUALITY;

Wrapping Twine made of Paper.

Twines and Paper. H. A. HARVEY, 34 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

Go to your Apothecary, and get a bottle of Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient. You need it as a gentle cooling purgative at this season of the year to cleanse the system and purify the blood. It creates a natural appetite, invigorates and gives tone to the stomach and nerves to the liver. It prevents bilious attacks, sick headache, sour stomach, and like complaints. Sold by all druggists.



TRADE MARK

OF THE

MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY.

To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods, of whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company.

The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are full six yards in each piece, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. Office of the Company, No. 95 Chambers Street, New York.

BEST FARMING LANDS in the WORLD

FOR SALE BY THE

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD CO.,

In Tracts to suit Purchasers, AT LOW PRICES.

THE ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY HAVE FOR SALE,

900,000 ACRES of the best Farming Lands in the Country.

The road extends from Dunleith, in the north-western part of the State, to Cairo, in the extreme southern part, with a branch from Centralia, one hundred and thirteen miles north of Cairo, to Chicago, on the shores of Lake Michigan—altogether a length of 704 miles—and the land which is offered for sale is situated upon either side of the track, in no instance at a greater distance than fifteen miles.

State of Illinois.

The rapid development of Illinois, its steady increase in population and wealth, and its capacity to produce cheap food, are matters for wonder and admiration. The United States Commissioner of Agriculture estimates the amounts of the principal crops of 1864, for the whole country, as follows: Indian corn, 620,481,493 bushels; wheat, 160,695,853 bushels; oats, 176,620,964 bushels; of which the farms of Illinois yielded 138,356,135 bushels of Indian corn; 33,971,173 bushels of wheat; and 24,272,761 bushels of oats—in reality more than one-fourth of the corn, more than one-fifth of the wheat, and almost one-seventh of the oats produced in all the United States.

Grain—Stock Raising.

Pre-eminently the first in the list of grain-exporting States, Illinois is also the great cattle State of the Union. Its fertile prairies are well adapted by nature to the raising of cattle, sheep, horses and mules; and in the important interest of pork packing, it is far in advance of every other State. The seeding of these prairie lands to tame grasses for pasturage or hay, offers to farmers with capital the most profitable results. The hay crop of Illinois in 1864 is estimated at 2,166,725 tons, which is more than half a million tons larger than the crop of any other State, excepting only New York.

Inducements to Settlers.

The attention of persons, whose limited means forbid the purchase of a homestead in the older States, is particularly invited to these lands. Within ten years the Illinois Central Railroad Company has sold 1,400,000 acres, to more than 20,000 actual settlers: and during the last year 264,422 acres—a larger aggregate of sales than in any one year since the opening of the road. The farms are sold in tracts of forty or eighty acres, suited to the settler with limited capital, or in larger tracts, as may be required by the capitalist and stock raiser. The soil is of unsurpassed fertility; the climate is healthy; taxes are low; churches and schools are becoming abundant throughout the length and breadth of the State; and communication with all the great markets is made easy through railroads, canals and rivers.

PRICES AND TERMS OF PAYMENT.

The price of lands varies from $5 to $15 and upwards per acre, and they are sold on short credit, or for cash. A deduction of ten per cent. from the short credit price is made to those who buy for cash.

EXAMPLES:

Forty acres at $10 per acre, on credit; the principal can be paid on any one of the seven years, at six per cent. interest, in advance, each year.

	INTEREST.	PRINCIPAL.		INTEREST.	PRINCIPAL.
Cash Payment.....	$10 00	$400 00	Payment in two years.....	$8 00	100 00
Payment in one year.....	11 80	100 00	Two years.....		100 00

The Same Land may be Purchased for $360 Cash.

Full information, with plans, tables of rates, showing the exact location of Lands, will be furnished on application, in person or by letter, to

LAND COMMISSIONER, Illinois Central R. R. Co., Chicago, Illinois.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED, carefully recommend to the notice of the friends of the Christian Commission the offer of E. & H. T. Anthony & Co. to devote to this object 75 per cent. of their retail sales of Albums, Stereoscopic Views, and Photographs, for the fortnight commencing April 3d, as set forth in their advertisement.

GEO. H. STUART, Pres. U. S. Christian Commission.
J. T. DURYEA,
H. DYER, Secretary N. Y. Christian Com.
MORRIS K. JESUP,
THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
W. E. DODGE, Chairmen N. Y. Branch.

(ADVERTISEMENT.)

THE CHRISTIAN COMMISSION.

NOTICE TO EVERY BODY. TWO WEEKS FOR THE SICK AND WOUNDED SOLDIERS. During the fortnight commencing April 3d we will devote 75 per cent. of all the retail sales at our counter of Albums, Stereoscopic Views, and Card Photographs, and also remittances by mail for the same, where so specified, to the relief of our sick and wounded soldiers, through the instrumentality of the Christian Commission.

Orders by mail for this object, bearing date any time previous to May 1, will be received, and the 75 per cent. paid over. The acknowledgment of the Treasurer of the Christian Commission will be sent when required. The goods will be sold at our usual printed catalogue prices.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 Broadway, New York.
Three Doors from St. Nicholas Hotel.

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS OF THE WAR,

OBTAINED AT GREAT EXPENSE, AND FORMING A COMPLETE PANORAMIC HISTORY

OF THE GREAT UNION CONTEST.

Bull Run,	Dutch Gap,	Strawberry Plain,
Yorktown,	Pontoon Trains,	Deep Bottom,
Gettysburg,	Hanover Junction,	Belle Plain,
Fair Oaks,	Locknut Mountain,	Monitors,
Savage Station,	Chickahominy,	Chattanooga,
Fredericksburg,	City Points,	Fort Morgan,
Suffolk,	Nashville,	Atlanta,
&c., &c.	&c., &c.	&c., &c.

Every body is interested in these memorable scenes. Just published by E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO., 501 Broadway, New York.

Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS will cure any sore-shot or bayonet wounds. None should be without them.

Spring Clothing for Men and Boys.

LARGE STOCK.
PRICES REDUCED.
ABBOTT & HALL, 214 BROADWAY,
Under St. Nicholas Hotel.

"Electric" Self-adjusting enamelled white, $3, $5, $7, and $9 per doz.; specimens, 50c., 75c., $1. Snow-white, linen-finished, linen-stiffened, $1 25. Sold in Nobsville New York. $1. Ladies' "Illusion-embroidered" Steel Collars, $1 50; Cuffs, $1 50. Gents' steel Cuffs, $2. Mailed on receipt of price and "size." JENNERET, 78 Nassau St., N.Y. Box 5986.

PARR'S TOOL CHESTS.

Of all sizes. Fitted with complete sets of tools, sharpened and set, ready for use, and packed in cases ready for shipping. Containing from 9 to 128 different articles, and ranging in price from $6 to $120, according to size. Adapted to the use of mechanics, farmers, amateurs, youths and boys.

Parr's Garden Chests.

Fitted with the most approved Gardening Implements in ordinary use. The articles required by a large family, such as grafting-saw, tree-scraper, hoes, rake, &c., are all made to fit into an improved cover-jointed handle, placed in lengths to fit in the chest.

Parr's Horticultural Chests.

A larger size of the above, with drawers and partitions, to contain seeds, &c.

Parr's Children's Garden Sets.

Consisting of hoe, rake, spade, and garden fork, with long handle.

These articles are the very best, and are for sale by all respectable dealers in Hardware, Yankee Notions, Agricultural Implements, and Seeds, the attention of whom is called to the immense demand for these goods.

Send for illustrated circular to the manufacturers.

JAMES & PARKELLEN, Buffalo, N. Y.

BENJ. F. KENDALL,

BROKER IN

PETROLEUM STOCKS,

No. 52 Wall Street, N. Y.

NAVY PRIZE CLAIMS CASHED

Or COLLECTED on LITERAL and DRY Terms, and settlement of MILITARY ACCOUNTS guaranteed to be effected in the shortest time. Prize lists furnished as soon as received. REED & SWIFT, 199 Broadway, New York City.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS Unsurpassed by any in the country. See catalogue of Philadelphia Photographic Co., 720 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

EXCELSIOR

PHOTOGRAPHIC ESTABLISHMENT,

P. F. WHITING, 87 Fulton St., New York.

A CARD.—To the Editor: DEAR SIR,—With your permission I wish to say to the readers of your paper that I will send, by return mail, to all who wish it (free), a Recipe, with full directions for making and using a simple Vegetable Balm that will effectually remove in ten days, Pimples, Blotches, Tan, Freckles, and all Impurities of the Skin, leaving the same soft, clear, smooth, and beautiful. I also send the same to those having bald heads, or heads of loose, simple directions and information that will enable them to start a full growth of luxuriant hair, without a mustache in less than thirty days. All applications answered by return mail without charge. Respectfully yours, THOS. F. CHAPMAN, Chemist, 831 Broadway, New York.

STAMMERING

Cured by Bates' Patent Appliances. For descriptive pamphlet, &c., address H. C. L. MOORE, 371 W. 23d St., N.Y.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. IX.—No. 435.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

THE MURDER OF THE PRESIDENT.

THE Fourteenth of April is a dark day in our country's calendar. On that day four years ago the national flag was for the first time lowered at the bidding of traitors. Upon that day, after a desperate conflict with treason for four long, weary years—a conflict in which the nation had so far triumphed that she breathed again in the joyous prospect of coming peace—her chosen leader was stricken down by the foul hand of the cowardly assassin. Exultation that had known no bounds was exchanged for boundless grief. The recoil upon which had been inscribed all sort of violence possible to the most malignant treason that ever sought to poison a nation's heart that been almost written full. But not quite full. Murder had run out its category of possible degrees against helpless loyalists in the South, against women and children whose homes had been burned down over their heads, and against our unfortunate prisoners, who had been tortured and literally starved to death. But there still remained one victim for its last rude stroke—one victim for whom, it was whispered in rebel journals South and North, there was still reserved the dagger of a Brutus. Beaten on every field of recognized warfare, treason outdid its very self, and killed our President.

The man who lent himself to traitors for this vile purpose was JOHN WILKES BOOTH, who told himself, it may be, partly for the pieces of silver, but chiefly for the infamous notoriety attaching to such an act. There was an ancient villain who deliberately purposed to perpetuate the memory of his name among men by an act of awful sacrilege—a sacrilege so striking as never to be forgotten—and he burned the temple of the Ephesian DIANA. EROSTRATUS gained his end, and has been remembered accordingly. A memory far more detestable is in store for JOHN WILKES BOOTH, who dared, by the commission of an infinitely greater sacrilege, to bring a whole people to tears.

He was the third son born in America of the eminent English tragedian JUNIUS BRUTUS BOOTH. There were three brothers, JUNIUS BRUTUS, JUN., EDWIN, and JOHN WILKES, all of whom inherited a predilection for the stage. EDWIN, however, is the only one of these who has attained a very eminent position as an actor, and he is probably surpassed by no living man. In justice to him it is proper here to state that he is true and loyal, and exacts our sincerest sympathy. The elder BOOTH, father of these three actors, died thirteen years ago. He passed the quieter portion of his life upon his farm, in Harford County, some thirty miles from Baltimore. JOHN WILKES BOOTH, the murderer, was born in 1839, and is now only twenty-six years of age. He went upon the stage at the early age of seventeen, simply as JOHN WILKES. As stock actor he gained a fair reputation, and afterward assuming his full name, he began a more ambitious career. But, partly on account of his dissolute habits, he never achieved a marked success. He performed chiefly in the South and West. He has appeared but few times before a New York audience. In person he bears considerable resemblance to his father. His eyes are dark and large; his hair of the same color, inclined to curl; his features finely moulded; his form tall, and his address pleasing. He abandoned his profession recently on account of a bronchial affection. It is said that he has frequently threatened to kill President LINCOLN. His companions have been violent Secessionists, and there are doubtless many others involved to a greater or less degree in his crime. The attempt to assassinate Secretary SEWARD was made probably by an accomplice. It is supposed that Secretary STANTON and ANDREW JOHNSON were to have been added to the list of victims. The latter, at least, received on Friday a card from BOOTH, but was not at home.

Those who were acquainted with BOOTH's movements on the fatal Friday say that his manner was restless. He knew that the President and his party intended to be present at FORD's Theatre in the evening. He asked an acquaintance if he should attend the performance, remarking that if he did he would see some unusually fine acting. It was the general expectation that General GRANT would form one of the President's party, and there are many who suppose that a blow was intended for him as well as the President. The latter had passed the day in the usual manner. In the morning his son, Capt. ROBERT LINCOLN, breakfasted with him.—The Captain had just returned from the capitulation of LEE, and the President listened with great interest to his narration of the detailed circumstances. After breakfast he conversed for an hour with Speaker COLFAX about his future policy as to the rebellion which he was about to submit to his Cabinet. At 11 o'clock the Cabinet met. Both the President and General GRANT were present. Having spent the afternoon with Governor OGLESBY, Senator YATES, and other leading citizens of his State, he went to the theatre in the evening with MRS. LINCOLN, in order to unite in the general expression of popular joy for our late victories. The party consisted of MRS. Senator HARRIS and daughter, and Major HENRY RATHBONE, of Albany. They arrived at ten minutes before nine o'clock, and occupied a private box overlooking the stage. The play for the evening was The American Cousin.

BOOTH came upon the ground at about 10 o'clock. He left his horse in charge at the rear of the theatre, and made his way to the President's box. This box is a double one, in the second tier at the left of the stage. When occupied by the Presidential party the separating partition is removed, and the two boxes are thus thrown into one. We give an accurate plan of the box on page 259.—According to Major RATHBONE'S statement, the assassin must have made his preparations in the most deliberate manner beforehand. Of this fact there are at least four proofs, as we shall see: Stealthily approaching the dark passage-way leading to the box, BOOTH, after having effected an entrance, closed the hall-door, and then, taking a piece of board which he had prepared for the occasion, placed one end of it in an indentation excavated in the wall, about four feet from the floor, and the other against the moulding of the door-panel a few inches higher. He thus made it impossible for any one to enter from without; and securing himself against intrusion in that direction, he turned to the doors of the box. There were two of these. Here also the villain had carefully provided beforehand the means by which he might, unnoticed himself, observe the position of the parties inside. With a gimlet, or small bit, he had bored a hole in the door-panel, which he afterward reamed out with his knife, so as to leave it a little larger than a buck-shot on the inside, while on the other side it was sufficiently large to give his eye a wide range. To secure against the doors being locked (they both had spring-locks), he had loosened the screws with which the bolt-haps were fastened. In regard to the next stage of BOOTH'S movements there is some degree of uncertainty. He had been noticed as he passed through the dress-circle by a Mr. FERGUSON, who was sitting on the opposite side of the theatre. This man knew BOOTH, and recognized him. He had been talking with him a short time before. FERGUSON states that when BOOTH reached the door of the orchestra leading from the dress-circle to the boxes he halted, "took off his hat, and, holding it in his left hand, leaned against the door with his right hand." After remaining thus for the space of half a minute, "he stepped down one step, put his hand on the door of the little corridor leading to the box, bent his knee against it," when the door opened and BOOTH entered. After his entrance to the corridor he was of course invisible to FERGUSON, and, before the fatal shot, was probably seen by no one but the sentry at the door of the corridor. The latter is said to have passed on the plea that the President had sent for him. What passed before the shot is only conjectured. He made his observations, doubtless, through the aperture in the door provided for that purpose. And here we come upon another proof of a deliberately-prepared plan. The very seats in the box had been arranged to suit his purpose, either by himself or, as is more likely, by some statesman of the theatre in complicity with him. The President sat in the left-hand corner of the box, nearest the audience, in an easy arm-chair. Next him, on the right, sat Mrs. LINCOLN. Some distance to the right of both Miss HARRIS was seated, with Major RATHBONE at her left and a little in the rear of Mrs. LINCOLN. BOOTH rapidly surveyed the situation. The play had reached the second scene of the third act. Mrs. LINCOLN, intent on the play, was leaning forward, with one hand resting on her husband's knee. The President was leaning more to the hand, and with the other was adjusting a portion of the drapery, his face wearing a pleasant smile as it was partially turned to the audience. As to the act of assassination, there are two conflicting statements. According to one, BOOTH fired through the door at the left, which was closed. But this seems to have been unnecessary; and it is far more probable that he entered rapidly through the door at the right, and the next moment fired. The ball entered just behind the President's left ear, and though not producing instant death completely obliterated all consciousness.

Major RATHBONE hearing the report, saw the assassin about six feet distant from the President, and encountered him; but BOOTH shook off his grasp. The latter had dropped his weapon—an ordinary single-shotpistol—and had it not been for a tering knife, with which he inflicted a wound upon the Major; and then, resting his left hand upon the box, he vaulted over easily to the stage, eight or nine feet below. As he passed between the folds of the flag decorating the box, the spur, which he wore on the right heel, caught the drapery and brought it down. He crouched as he fell, falling upon one knee, but quickly gained an upright position, and staggered in a theatrical manner across the stage, brandishing his knife, and shouting, "Sic semper tyrannis!" He made his exit by the "tormentor" on the opposite side of the stage, passing Miss KEENE as he went out. The villain succeeded in making his escape without arrest. In this he was probably assisted by accomplices and by MOSBY's guerillas.

The scene was immediately removed to the house of Mr. PETERSON, opposite the theatre, where he died at twenty-two minutes past seven the next morning, never having recovered his consciousness since the fatal shot. In his last hours he was attended by his wife and his son Robert, and by prominent members of his Cabinet. His death has plunged the nation into deepest mourning, but his spirit still animates the people for whom he died.

A DIRGE.

Down the starry flag
Amid a sovereign people's lamentation
For him the honored ruler of the nation;
Lower the starry flag!

Let the great bells be toll'd
Slowly and mournfully in every steeple,
Let them tell the bereavement the sorrow of the people;
Let the great bells be toll'd!

Lower the starry flag,
And let the sombre, sorrowing anthem, pealing,
Sound from the careers choir to frotted ceiling;
Lower the starry flag!

Let the great bells be toll'd,
And let the mournful organ music, rolling,
Tune with the bells in every steeple tolling;
Let the great bells be toll'd!

Lower the starry flag;
The nation's favored chief in death is sleeping,
And for our loss our eyes are wet with weeping;
Lower the starry flag!

Let the great bells be toll'd;
His honest, manly heart has ceased its beating,
His lips no more shall speak the kindly greeting;
Let the great bells be toll'd!

Lower the starry flag;
No more shall sound his voice in scorn of error,
Filling the traitor's heart with fear and terror;
Lower the starry flag!

Let the great bells be toll'd;
He reverenced the gift which God has given,
Freedom to all, the priceless boon of Heaven,
Let the great bells be toll'd!

Lower the starry flag;
His dearest hopes were wedded with the nation,
He valued more than all the land's salvation;
Lower the starry flag!

Let the great bells be toll'd;
His name shall live on History's brightest pages,
His voice shall sound through time's remotest ages;
Let the great bells be toll'd!

A NATION'S GRIEF.

AH! Grief doth follow fast on Victory!
The victors' shout is lost in silence, deep—
No deep for our poor human utterance.
The jubilant flags that caly yesterday
Were the bright heralds of a nation's gain,
Now droop at half-mast for her woeful loss.
Our foremost Hero fallen, sore at heart we lie
Prostrate, in tears, at our dear Lincoln's grave!

The dust of our great Leader, kissed to rest,
And folded to our hearts, is there intrusted.
Beyond the breath of scandal, in sweet peace.
Wounded with his wound, our hearts receive
The mantle of his spirit as it falls.
His words remain to us our sacred Law:
Do we not hear them the Dead's Capital?—
"Malice toward none, with charity for all!"?

The blow at Sumter touched us not so much
With grief, or awe of treason, as this last—
This traitorous thrust of all at our dear head,
Which with spent rage the baffled serpent aimed.
It is the world's old story, told again,
That they who bruise the serpent's accursed head
Must bear, even as Christ did, its last foul sting.
Taking the Saviour's Passion with His Crown!

* * * * *

* "With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphans; to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and a lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations."—Last Words of President Lincoln's Second Inaugural.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1865.

Abraham Lincoln.

GREATER love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. ABRAHAM LINCOLN has done that. He has sealed his service to his country by the last sacrifice. Others may have encountered the great sorrow which Christendom reveres, the man who had no thought, no wish, no hope but the salvation of his country, laid down his life. How many and many a heart that throbbed with inexpressible grief as the tragedy was told would gladly have been stilled forever if his might have been last on. Such was his good, so loved and trusted, his death is a personal blow to every faithful American household; nor will any life be more remembered, more loved, or name be longer and more tenderly beloved by this nation, than those of ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

On the 22d of February, 1861, as he raised the American flag over Independence Hall, in Philadelphia, he spoke of the sentiment in the Declaration of Independence which gave liberty to only the common race. "I have never," he said, "to the world for all future time." Then, with a solemnity which the menacing future justified, and with a simple directness which events revealed, he added, "But if this country can not be saved without giving up that principle, I was about to say I would rather be assassinated upon this platform sooner than it." The country has been saved by cleaving to that principle, and he has been assassinated for not surrendering it.

Called to the chief conduct of public affairs at a time of the greatest peril, he came almost unknown, but he brought to his great office a rarer combination of the qualities of the country than the most noted statesmen of all parties, and that sure instinct of the wiser popular will which made the people the best leaders for a people about to maintain their own government in a civil war. Himself a child of the people, he lived and died their friend. His heart beat responsive to theirs. He knew their wants, their character, their powers, and knowing their will often better than they knew it themselves, he executed it with the sincerity of their speedy approval. No American statesman ever believed more heartily than he the necessary truth of the democratic and republican principle of absolute equality before the laws, or trusted with ampler confidence the American system of government. But he loved liberty too sincerely for passion or declamation. It was the strong, sturdy, Anglo-Saxon affection, not the Celtic frenzy.

With an infinite patience, and a dauntless tenacity, he was a man of profound principles but of no theories. This, with his insight and intuitive appreciation of the practicable in every case, made him a consummate practical statesman. He saw further and deeper than others because he saw that in the fundamental upon which he was cast little could be wholly seen. Experience so vindicated his patriotic sagacity that he acquired a curious ascendency in the public confidence; so that if good men differed from his opinion they were inclined to doubt their own. Principle was fixed as a star, but policy must be swayed by the current. While many would have dared the fierce fury of the gale and have sunk the ship at once, he knew that there was a time to stretch every inch of canvas and a time to lay to. He was not afraid of "drifting." In statesmanship prudence counts for more than daring. Thus it happened that some who urged him at the beginning of the war to the boldest measures, and excused what they called his practical faithlessness by his probable weakness, lived to feel the marrow of their bones melt with fear, and to beg him to solicit terms that would have destroyed the nation. But wiser than passion, more faithful than fury, serene in his devotion to the equal rights of men without which he knew there could henceforth be no peace in this country, he tranquilly persisted, enduring the impatience of what seemed to some his painful delays and to others his lawless haste; and so, trusting God and his own true heart, he fulfilled his great task so well that he did not even tenderly lamented than any ruler in history.

His political career, from his entrance into the Illinois Legislature to his last speech upon the Louisiana plan of reconstruction, is calmly consistent bot in the lofty humanity of its aim and the good sense of its method, and our condition is the justification of his life. For the most malignant party opposition in our history crumbled before his spotless fidelity; and in his death it is not only that loses a head, but a country that deplores a father. The good sense, the good humor, the good heart of ABRAHAM LINCOLN naturally united the Democrats that despised the "sentimentality of abolitionism," and the abolitionism that abhorred the sneering indifference to "sentimentality," in a practical patriotism that has saved the country.

No one who personally knew him but will now feel that the deep, furrowed sadness of his face seemed to foretell his fate. The genial gentleness of his manner, his homely simplicity, the cheerful humor that never failed are now seen to have been the tender light that played around the rugged heights of his strong and noble nature. It is small consolation that he dies at the moment of the war when he could best be spared, for no nation is ever ready for the loss of such a friend. But it is something to remember that he lived to see the slave-chain breaking. Like Moses he had marched with it through the wilderness. From the height of patriotic vision he beheld the golden fields of Canaan, and entered the glory and glory out of sight. He beheld and blessed God, but was not to enter in. And we with bowed heads and aching hearts move forward to the promised land.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON.

No President has entered upon the duties of his office under circumstances so painful as those which surround President JOHNSON. The pause between the death of Mr. LINCOLN and the indication of the probable course of his successor is profoundly solemn. But there can be no question in every true American heart, and that is, the most inflexible determination to support President JOHNSON, who is now the lawful head of the nation emerging from terrible civil war, and entering upon the solemn duty of pacification.

Andrew Johnson, like his predecessor, is emphatically a man of the people. He has been for many years in public life, and when the war began he was universally hailed as one of the most and unflinching patriots. His political association with the leaders of the Southern policy, his position as a Senator from that State, implicated him, in the opinion of the conspirators as an invaluable ally, if he could be seduced to treason. If we are not misinformed, John C. Breckinridge counted much this result, and how he failed—how Andrew Johnson upon the floor of the Senate denounced treason and traitors—is already history. His fidelity was meant be was one of the firmest friends of the Government, and most ardent supporters of the late Administration. His views upon the causes were peculiarly his friendly; and when the news of Roscrans's victory at Mill Spring reached the President at midnight, he immediately sent his secretary to tell the good news to Mr. Johnson.

He was appointed Military Governor of Tennessee upon the national occupation of that State, and for three years he has stood at the exposed point at the front, a faithful sentry. Formerly a slaveholder, and familiar with the public opinion of the border, he early saw the necessity of the emancipation war policy; and although in his addresses at the beginning of the war he spoke of it as still uncertain and prospective, his views accorded with those of the country, and when the policy was declared he supported it with the sincerity of earnest conviction.

His provisional administration of government in Tennessee, which was for some time debatable ground, was firm and faithful. By the necessity of the case he was the object of the envenomed hostility of the rebels and the bitterest opposition of the enemies of the Administration. The most serious charge of his exercise of arbitrary power was the severe oath as a qualification for voting which Governor Johnson insisted upon as the test of loyal election. When the remonstrants appealed to President Lincoln, he replied that he was very sure Governor Johnson would do what was necessary and right. And while the opposition at the North was still loudly denouncing, Jefferson Davis, in one of his furious speeches in Georgia, gave the fall of Atlanta, declared that there were thirty thousand men in Tennessee eager to take up arms the moment the rebel army appeared in the State. It was to prevent those thirty thousand from doing by their votes what they were ready to do by their arms that the oath was imposed. Jefferson Davis furnished the amplest justification for the action of Governor Johnson.* President Lincoln was reproached for the too conciliatory character of his "Border State policy." Let it not be forgotten that at the time when he was thought to be too much influenced by it he appointed Mr. Johnson Governor of Tennessee. That Governor Johnson's course in the State was approved by the unconditional loyal men there is shown by the adoption of the new free constitution and the opening of the new state under the administration of Governor Brownlow.

Of a more ardent temperament than Mr. Lincoln, whose passionless patience was sublime, Mr. Johnson has had a much sharper personal experience of the atrocious spirit of this rebellion. He has seen and felt the horrors of which we have only heard. The grave charge of treason is vividly present to his mind and memory, and his feeling toward the leaders who are mostly responsible for this wasting war is one of stern hostility.

But the Governor of Tennessee in a most critical period of civil war is President of the United States at a time when the war in the field is ending and the peace of a whole country is to be secured. What is the great truth that confronts him at the opening of his new career? It is that the policy of his predecessor had been so approved by the mind and heart of the country, had so disarmed hostility and melted prejudice, that the spirit of that policy has almost the sanctity of prescription.

President Johnson will so interpret it we have the fullest confidence. That what every loyal man sees, so strong and devoted a patriot as he will fail to see, is not credible. That the successor of Abraham Lincoln will adopt a policy of vengeance is impossible. Of the leading traitors, as he said a fortnight since, he thinks that the punishment should be that which the Constitution imposes. "And on the other hand," he added, "to the people who have been deluded amidst I would extend leniency and humanity, and an invitation to return to the allegiance they owe to the country." These are not the words of passion, but of humanity and justice. They express what is doubtless the conviction of the great multitude of loyal citizens of the country. With a modest appeal for the support and assistance of the gentlemen who were the advisers of Mr. Lincoln, and with calm reliance upon God and the people, he addresses himself to his vast responsibilities amidst the tears and prayers and confidence of his country.

MR. SEWARD.

THE bloody assault upon Secretary SEWARD, a civilian, by blow struck at a man of sixty-five lying in his bed with a broken arm, has shown the country how precious to it is the life of a man who has been bitterly denounced by some of his former political friends since the war began. Before the shot was fired at Sumter, Mr. SEWARD tried by some form of negotiation to prevent the outbreak of civil war. He was then —does Mr. HORACE GREELEY remember?—assailed with insinuations of treachery. Will Mr. HORACE GREELEY inform us how it was treacherous to try to prevent the war by negotiation with intending rebels, if, while the war was raging, it was patriotic to urge negotiations for peace? Will he tell us what whether it was more disloyal to the Union to recognize American citizens not yet in rebellion, or utter any but plain thousands who had already thrown men in blood and torture to call them "eminent Confederates?" Will he tech us why SEWARD was to be held up to public suspicion because he communicated with Judge CAMPBELL and recommended Mr. HARVIE as Minister to Portugal, while Mr. GREELEY and all the loyal press and pulpit of the country were denouncing Mr. BLAIR and Mr. LINCOLN for a man who does his fighting by sending criminals from Canada to burn down theatres and hotels in New York full of women and children, —"a distinguished American" of the other party in our civil war?

For years Mr. SEWARD, as Secretary of State, has defended this country from one of the most constantly threatening perils, that of foreign war. His name in England is not behind. But seconded by his faithful statesman, Mr. ADAMS, he has maintained there the honor of the American name, and persistently asserted the unlimitated sovereignty of the Government of the United States. In France, with the cool, clear, upright man who so fitly represented the sagacity and honesty of popular Government, he has managed our relations with a skill that has protected us from most serious complications in Mexico. Engaged with the most unscrupulous and secret of modern diplomatists, Louis Napoleon, he has with admirable delicacy of skill prevented his interference in our domestic affairs. His dispatches have been free from bluster or timidity. They all show, what his life illustrates, a perfect serenity of faith in the final success of free institutions and the strength of a popular Government.

Like every man in the country, Mr. SEWARD has been taught by the war. None of us are the same. The views of every man have been modified. The course of many organs of public opinion—of the New York Tribune, for instance —is wonderful and incredible to contemplate. There have been times when Mr. SEWARD was thought by some to be a positive hindrance to the war, a nightmare in the Cabinet. The Senate, with questionable friendship to the country, upon one occasion is understood to have asked his removal. But the President could ill spare so calm a counselor and so adroit a statesman. That was often differed is beyond dispute, but the President knew the sagacity and experience of the Secretary, and the Secretary said the President was the best man he ever knew.

Such was the confidence and mutual respect of the relation between them that the country will regard Mr. SEWARD's continuance in the Cabinet as a sign of the perpetuity of the spirit of President LINCOLN's policy. Meanwhile, that he and his son, the able and courteous Assistant Secretary, lie grievously smitten by the blow that wrings the heart of the nation, render solicitude will wait upon their recovery. WILLIAM HENRY SEWARD has too faithfully and conspicuously served human liberty not to have earned a blow from the assassin hand of slavery. The younger generation of American citizens who, in their first manhood, followed his bugle-call into the ranks of those who strove against the influence and power whose dying throes have struck life from the President and joy from a triumphing nation, will not forget how valiant and beneficent his service has been, nor suffer the name identified with the truest political instruction of this country to be long obscured by the clouds of calumny.

GREAT PAN IS DEAD.

THE NEW YORK Tribune, in a late issue, after reprinting the infamous rebel offer of a reward of a million of dollars for the assassination of Mr. LINCOLN, Mr. JOHNSON, and Mr. SEWARD, says: "Such facts and the correspondence and editorials of the rebel journals countenance the popular presumption that the late murderous outrages in Washington were incidents of a comprehensive plot wherein the rebel leaders were privy. The burglarious raid on St. Albans, the attempts simultaneously to fire our great hotels, and other acts wholly out of the pale of civilized warfare, tend to strengthen this conviction."

In the next column the Editor speaks of the men who plotted the raid and the arson as "certain distinguished Americans" of the other "party to our civil war."

Does not the editor of the Tribune see that nothing can more profoundly demoralize the public mind than to call the men who plot arson and assassins "distinguished Americans"? ABRAHAM LINCOLN and GEORGE WASHINGTON were distinguished Americans. Has the editor no other epithet for GEORGE N. SANDERS or JACOB THOMPSON and CLEMENT C. CLAY? Is there no such thing as crime? Are there no criminals? Is the assassin of the President a man impelled by "the conflict of ideas" to a mistaken act? Is there no treason? Are there no traitors? Does the editor of the Tribune loyally suppose that because it is not his wish nor the duty of the American people to visit the penalty of treason upon every man as the South who has been in rebellion, it is therefore the duty of wise and honest men to invite JEFFERSON DAVIS and WIGFALL into the Senate of the United States, or ROBERT E. LEE, BEAUREGARD, and JOE JOHNSTON into the army?

The Editor of the Tribune may bow down to the ground and grovel before "eminent Confederates," but it is not from them that the pacification of the South is to proceed. The first step in peace is to emunciate the people of the South from their servile degradation beneath the class of "gentlemen" which has first deluded and then ruined them." How can it be done if we affect respect which no honest man can feel? If there is one suffering Union man in Alabama who has been outlawed and hunted and starved, who has lain all day concealed in swamps and woods, and at night has stolen out and crept for food to the faithful slaves upon the plantations—who has seen his house destroyed, his children murdered, his wife dishonored—who has endured every extremity of suffering, and still believed in God and the flag of his country—and who now, following the President's liberating march, has come safely to our lines at Mobile—if there be one such man, who knows that his cruel agony and the waste and desolation of his land have come from "the leaders" of his section, and see that when they are wanted in battle it is the Editor of the New York Tribune who hastens to fall prostrate before the meanest of them and salute them as "distinguished Americans" and "eminent Confederates," it is easy to believe that such a man should be overwhelmed with dismay as he contemplates the hopeless postponement of pacification which such a spectacle reveals.

Exactly that base subservience to the arrogance of a slaveholding class which has enabled that class to plunge and betray the nation and their States is reproduced in the tone of the editor of the Tribune when speaking of it. Is JEFFERSON DAVIS a "distinguished American?" Is he anymore so than AARON BURR and BENEDICT ARNOLD? No more despite such fawning more than those it is intended to propitiate. It is not by such men as JACOB THOMPSON and CLEMENT C. CLAY and HUNTER and BENJAMIN and SEMMES, it is by men unknown and poor, by men who have seen what comes of following the counsels of the "leaders," by men who have been tried by blood and fire in this sharp war that peace is to come out of the South. The men whom the editor of the Tribune calls by names that justly belong only to our best and dearest are the assassins of the nation and of human liberty. They would have wrought upon the nation the same evil that was done upon the President. They would have murdered the country in its own innocent blood. Not from them comes regeneration and peace. Let them go.

But from the long-abused, the blinded, the down-trodden, the forgotten, the despised—from the real people of the South, whom ruin and ease and luxury and cultivation and idleness and all worldly gifts and graces sitting in high places, dragged with sophistries and scorned with blandishments, and threatened with terrors, and besotted with prejudice, and degraded with ignorance, and ground into slavery—these, all of them, white and black as God made them, are the seed of the new South, long pressed into the ground, and now about to sprout and grow and blossom JEFFERSON DAVIS and his associate Old things have passed away. The Editor of the Tribune is still flattering the priests whose power has gone. Great Pan is dead. Why should one of the earliest Christians swing incense before him?

THE FLAG ON SUMTER.

THE old flag floats again on Sumter! Four years ago the hope was that it would float over all the American people. To-day the vow is fulfilled. The hand of him who defended it against the assault of treason, of him who saluted it when as he marched his little band away, now, with all the strength of an aroused and regenerated nation supporting him, raises it once more on its ancient staff. Men have been still alone on undimmed in our hearts now shine tranquilly in triumph, and salute the earth and sky with the thunder of cannon.

To be called to be the orator of a nation upon such a day was an honor which might have oppressed any man. To have spoken as he did was to make it a memory worthily, adequately, grandly, is the glory of one man. It will not be questioned that Mr. BEECHER did so. His voice is of the race of Burke and Webster in eloquence. It is in the highest degree picturesque and powerful. Certainly it was peculiarly fit in that a man, the only inspiration of the eternal truth that has achieved the victory, should hail, in the name of equal liberty, the opening of the era which is to come.

Even amidst the wail of our sorrow its voice will be heard and its tone will satisfy. Even in our heart's grief we can feel the solemn thrill of triumph that the flag which fell in weakness is raised in glory and power.

THE FOLLY OF CRIME.

EVERY stupendous crime is an enormous blunder. The blow that has shocked the nation into exasperation by killing ABRAHAM LINCOLN the rebels have murdered their best friend. His death can not change the event of the war. It has only injured the very cause of the country more closely than ever, and disposed them to a less lenient policy toward the rebellion. Whatever the intention or hope of the assassin, whether the result of a murdered plot or the act of a band of ruffians, whether it were dictated by the rebel chiefs or offered to their cause as a voluntary assistance by the hand that struck the blow, the effect is the same—a more intense and inflexible vow of the nation that the rebellion shall be suppressed and its cause exterminated.

There is no crime so abhorrent to the world as the assassination of a ruler. It is the crime when he is unworthy, the method of his death at once ameliorates the impression of his life. But when he is a good and wise man, when he is a soldier and beloved, the deed is too monstrous for words. There is but one assassin whom history mentions with toleration and even applause, and that is CHARLOTTE CORDAY. But her act was a mistake. It ended the life of a monster, but it did not help the people, and she who might have lived to succor and save was the victim of MARAT, became, after his death, MARAT'S victim. All other assassins, too, have more harmed their cause than helped it. Their place of justification are always confounded by the event. That plea, where it has any dignity whatever, is the riddance of the world of a bad or dangerous man whose life can not be legally taken. It is to punish a despot—to bring low a tyrant. But the heart recoils whatever the excuse, the instinct of mankind curses the assassin.

In our own grievous affliction there is one lesson which European and American public opinion would do well to consider. Party malignity in the Free States during the war has not scrupled to defame the character of MR. LINCOLN. He has been denounced as a despot, as a usurper, as a man who arbitrarily annulled the Constitution, as a magistrate under whose administration all the securities of liberty, property, and even life, were deliberately disregarded and imperiled. Political hostility has been inflamed into hate by the assertion that he was responsible for the war, and that he had opened all the yawning graves and tumbled the bloody victims in. This has been done directly and indirectly, openly and cunningly. In a time of necessarily profound and painful excitement to carry a party point, the political opponents of MR. LINCOLN have said or insinuated or implied that he disregarded the laws and had made himself an autocrat. If any dangerous plot has been exposed, these organs of public opinion had asserted it as an invention of the Administration. If theatres and hotels full of men, women, and children were to be wantonly fired, the friends of the Administration were accused of seeking up an excitement. If bloody riots and massacres occurred, they were extenuated and called "risings of the people," as if in probable consequence, and as if the oppression of the Government had brought them upon itself.

This appeal has been made in various ways and in different degrees. A gross conception intimated that there was danger that the elections would be overborne by Administration bayonets. Judge CONKLING, formerly of the Court of Appeals in this State, addressing a crowd in Union Square, declared that if a candidate for the Presidency should be defrauded of his election by military interference he would be borne into the White House by the hands of the people. Of the Administration thus accused of the basest conceivable crimes ABRAHAM LINCOLN was the head. If there were a military despotism in the country, as was declared, he was the despot. If there were a tyranny, he was the tyrant.

Is it surprising that somebody should have believed all this, that somebody should have said that the country is in ruin and the war criminal to slay the tyrant, and that working himself up to the due frenzy he should strike the blow? When it was struck, when those kind eyes that never looked sternly upon a human being closed forever, and the assassin sprang forward and cried, Sic semper tyrannis, was it strange that a gloomy gratification should be felt and not scrupled to teach that he was a tyrant who had annulled the law?

The lesson is terrible. Let us hope that even party-spirit may be tempered by this result of its natural consequence.

A SUGGESTION FOR A MONUMENT.

IT is very possible that the great affection of the people of the United States for their late President will lead to a general desire to erect some national monument to his memory. Should this be so, there is one suggestion which will doubtless occur to many besides ourselves. It is that no mere marble column or memorial pile shall be reared, but that the heart-offerings of the people shall be devoted to the erection of a military hospital, to be called the LINCOLN HOSPITAL, for soldiers and sailors—a retreat for the wounded and permanently invalid veterans of the war. And when the happier days that are coming, the wards shall be relieved of the lingering monuments of the contest, the foundation would remain for the public benefit. The soldiers and sailors had no more tender and faithful friend than ABRAHAM LINCOLN. He never forgot them, and he did his utmost to pay to them in his public addresses the homage which his heart constantly cherished. To a man of his broad and generous humanity no monument could be so appropriate as a Hospital.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

OUR SUCCESSES IN NORTH CAROLINA.—GENERAL STONEMAN captured Salisbury, North Carolina, on the 12th inst., securing 1165 prisoners, 19 pieces of artillery, 1000 small-arms, and eight stands of colors. The plunder found there was enormous, embracing 1,000,000 rounds of ammunition, 7000 shells, 90,000 pounds of powder, 75,000 suits of clothing, 35,000 army blankets, with large quantities of linen, salt, sugar, rice, wheat, and 700 bales of cotton. All that was not immediately available was destroyed. Stoneman's raid in East Tennessee and North Carolina has been one of the most important and destructive of the war. He has burned half a hundred important bridges, destroyed about 100 miles of track, captured trains, immense stores, and played the mischief generally with exemplary energy.

The next day after the capture of Salisbury Sherman and Schofield, with their forces, met little resistance. Governor Vance was taken by our cavalry in the mountains. By the 15th Raleigh was occupied by Johnston to surrender the State, but the power was already withdrawn. It is reported that Jeff Davis has joined Johnston at Hillsborough, and was still with him.

CAPTURE OF MOBILE.

Mobile was captured by the national forces on the 12th of April.

On the 20th of March the Sixteenth Corps, under General A. J. Smith, left Danphin on twenty transports, accompanied by gun-boats, and proceeded up a run of Mobile Bay to the mouth of Fish River, where the troops were landed on Dauphin Island. The Thirteenth Corps, under General Granger, left Fort Morgan, and on the 21st effected a landing on the left of Spanish Fort, and on the left wing on Mobile Bay. Three days afterward this corps was followed by General Gibbon, with 6000 recruits. On the 25th the Federal line was pushed forward so as to extend from Mobile Bay on the bay to Bare Fork on the Fish River. The first point of attack was Spanish Fort, which is directly opposite Mobile, and which is the head and strongest of the defenses of that city. It guards the eastern channel of the bay. On the 27th the bombardment commenced. In the mean time the Monitors and gun-boats were advancing through the obstructions. They had succeeded so far that the Monitors Milwaukee, Winnebago, Kickapoo, and the Monitor ram Osage moved in line to attack at 2 P.M. An hour afterward a torpedo exploded under the Milwaukee, and she instantly filled and sank in eleven feet of water. There were no casualties. Then was exploded another, a light and the next day. At about 2 o'clock P.M. on the 29th a torpedo struck the port bow of the Osage and exploded, tearing away 20 feet of her timbers, killing two men and wounding several others.

We give on page 265 an engraving illustrating the nature of the torpedoes found in the Bay. Those given in the Article on page 258 are split in longitudinal sections. The slightest pressure causes explosion.

The fall of April was attended with events brought to bear upon Spanish Fort. Twenty-four forts guns were got into half a mile of the work, while the infantry artillery batteries were still nearer. Two gun-boats joined in the tremendous cannonade. The result was that the fort surrendered a little after midnight. Fort Alexandria followed, and the fall of these gave us the key to Spanish Forte Tracy and Huger, in his rear, at the mouth of Fish River, and the Blakeley works. The whole line of works had been abandoned. The Monitors then went boldly to work to remove the obstructions, and without opposition reached the city.

Shortly after the capture of Spanish Fort, intelligence of the capture and the fall of Richmond was sent to the rebel forces in command, with orders to attack the Federals.

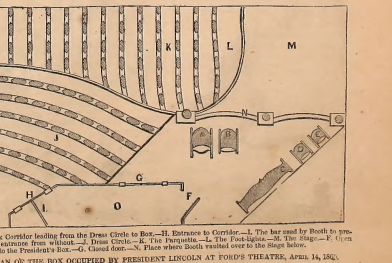
Several batteries of artillery, and large quantities of ammunition were taken with the fort, and 1500 prisoners. One ton in the whole affair was much less than could have been expected, and was unlooked for.

Seven hundred prisoners were taken with Spanish Fort, and were escorted by the national troops on the 12th.

In the mean time General Wilson, with a formidable force of cavalry, had entered Selma on Sunday night with 10 miles northwest and northeast of Selma. On the afternoon of April 2 Selma was captured, with 20 guns, and all the immense Government works, arsenals, rolling-mills, and foundries, and this place was destroyed. It is probable that Montgomery was also captured, but later than the capture of Selma we have no details.

MORNING IN RICHMOND.

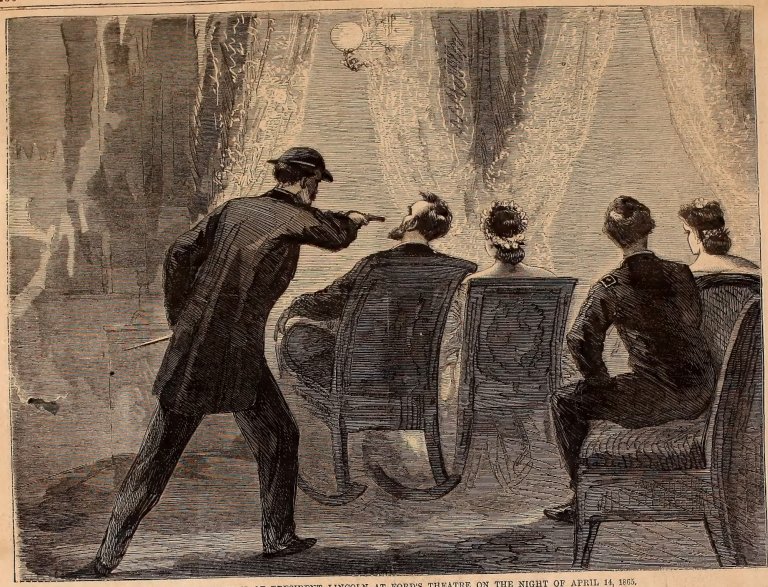
Roger A. Pryor stated in Petersburg that he believed that Richmond was doomed to the mortification of pass, and regretted his death more than any military mishap of the war. He said the large planters themselves at the head of a movement for a town meeting to deprive the less enlightened and public grounds. General Lee at first refused to hear the details of the murder. A Mr. Bolts and several gentlemen waited upon him on Sunday night with the particulars. He said that when he dispossess of himself of the command of the rebel forces he kept in mind President Lincoln's benignity, and surrendered as much to the latter's generosity as to Grant's military. The General said that he regretted Mr. Lincoln's death as much as any man in the South, and believed him to be the epitome of magnanimity and good faith.



ARREST OF SEWARD'S ASSASSIN.

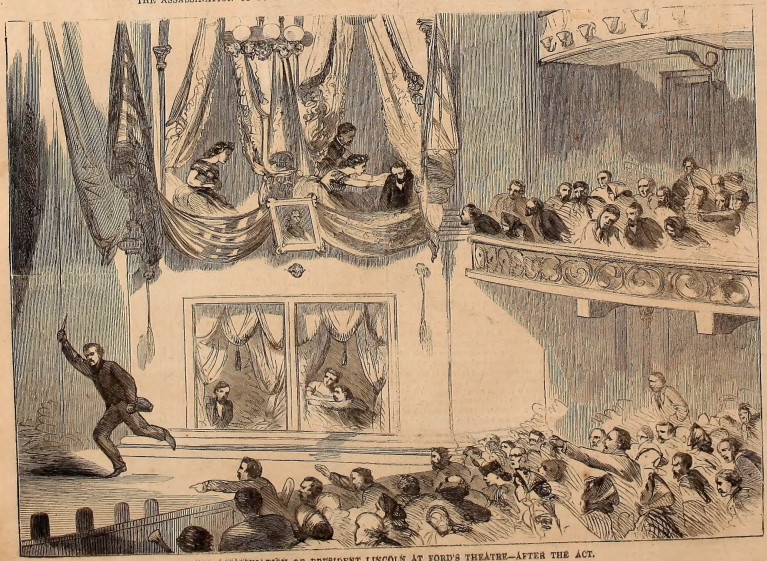
A man was arrested on the 19th in Baltimore who is supposed to have been the assassin of Secretary Seward. He was identified as such by the negro servant and Mrs Fanny Seward.

FOREIGN NEWS.

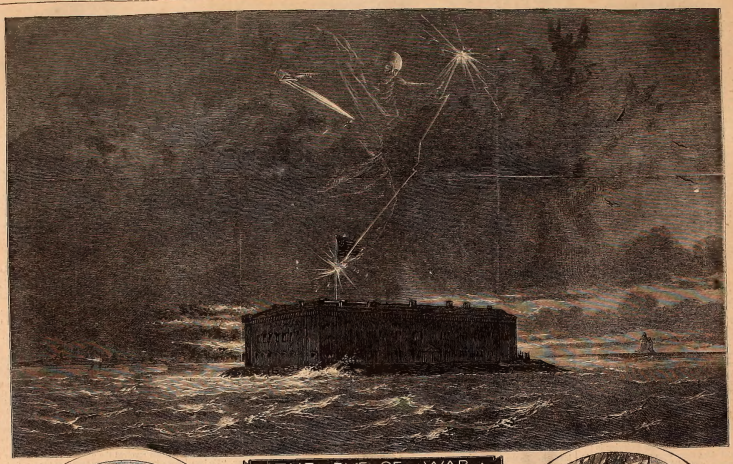


THE REBEL RAM "STONEWALL."

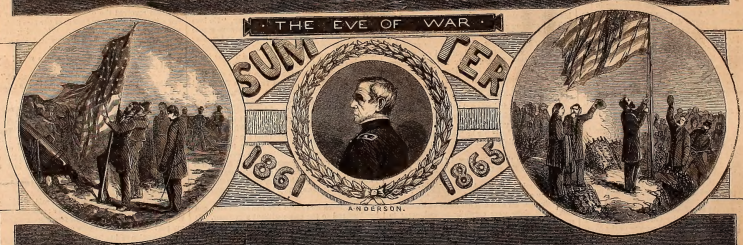
The rebel ram Stonewall left Lisbon, Portugal, on the 18th of March, having been ordered away by the Portuguese authorities. The extraordinary despatch and discourtesy were forbidden to leave until twenty-four hours should have elapsed. Three tow vessels, about four hours after the Stonewall left, wrapped another and moved toward the bar. The commander of the Belem Tower ran first under them, considerably injuring the Stonewall. The captains stated that they were only changing their anchorage-grounds, and our consul at Lisbon has demanded that the Governor of Belem Tower should be removed, which demand has been conceded.



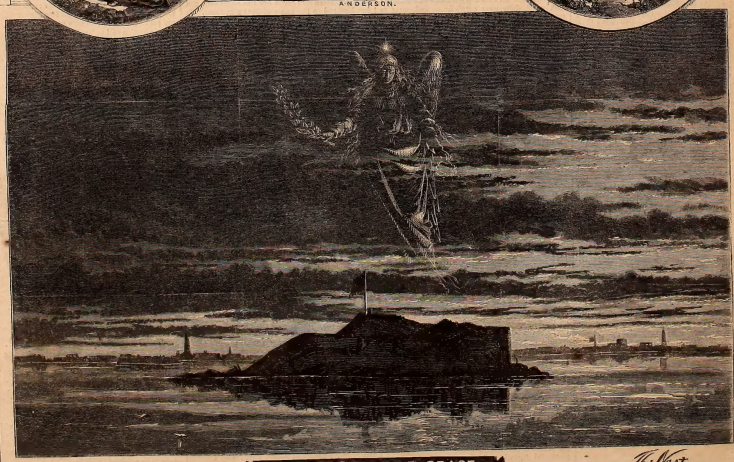
O. Dark Corridor leading from the Dress Circle to Box.—H. Entrance to Corridor.—I. The bar used by Booth to prevent entrance from without.—J. Dress Circle.—K. The Parquette.—L. The Foot-lights.—M. The Stage.—F. Open door to the President's Box.—G. Closed door.—N. Place where Booth vaulted over to the Stage below.



PLAN OF THE BOX OCCUPIED BY PRESIDENT LINCOLN AT FORD'S THEATRE, APRIL 14, 1865.



THE ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN AT FORD'S THEATRE ON THE NIGHT OF APRIL 14, 1865.



THE ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN AT FORD'S THEATRE—AFTER THE ACT.

THE EVE OF WAR.

THE DAWN OF PEACE.

Th. Nast.

HOME AND FRIENDS.

Oh! there's a power to make each hour
As sweet as Heaven designed it;
Nor need we roam to bring it home,
Though few there be that find it.
We seek too high for things close by,
And lose what Nature found us;
For life hath here no charms so dear
As home and friends around us.

We oft destroy the present joy
For future hopes—and praise them;
While ever as sweet bloom at our feet
If we'd but stoop to raise them!
For things afar still sweeter are
When pleasure's bright spell hath bound us;
But soon we're taught that earth hath naught
Like home and friends around us.

The friends that speed in time of need,
When Hope's last reed is shaken,
Do show us still, that, come what will,
We are not quite forsaken.
Though all were night, if but the light
From friendship's altar crowned us,
'Twould prove the bliss of earth was this—
Our home and friends around us.

THE BLACK SHEEP.

"Bad bad black sheep,
Have you got any wool?"

SOME one of our old Colonial ancestors was silly enough to bring over from England a heraldic "bear with a pole in his hand, and called it "The Family Coat of Arms." It became obsolete with our independence, and we have never chosen another; were we to do so, I am certain it would be a Black Sheep.

I have no idea of sending you a "wool-gathering," but am going to tell you a simple story to stir your patriotism if it has gone to sleep.

I have told you of the women of the Revolution who took up the cause in a resting when their husbands, brothers, and sons had gone to fight the battles of freedom; and the story of Hitty "Down East," to which was laid on the altar of her country: but I have never told you of our greatgrandmother Dimock. The story is an heir-loom in the family, and we are proud of it.

When the clouds of war were gathering in the old Colonial days there were men living in the Georgia whose hearts did not beat in unison with the noble band of patriots who stood ready to achieve nationality. Many of these were with a tory spirit spoke their sentiments openly, and retired from the country before the bursting of the storm. Others, whose interests were adverse to their principles, waited to watch and betray. New England had its quota of both. Their names have never flowed sweetly in story or song, for which reason (it may be) a belief is springing up that the New England of Revolutionary days was a unit for freedom.

Among the Tories of that era—as the abettors of the Mother Government were called—was a thriving landholder in a well-known district of Connecticut. He was not a native of the country, but in early life had fancied England with a band of adventurers youth, to try his fortunes in the New World. Successful beyond his anticipations even, he purchased broad acres, stocked them liberally, and retired to rural life. His wife was a New Englander of the old Massachusetts stamp, but unfortunately died before the Colonists were called upon to take sides with the Old country or the New. She left a daughter namesake, an only child.

Mary Mather Russel promised to grow up as beautiful as her mother, as frank and intelligent too. Notwithstanding her father was over all altogether popular among the residents of the neighborhood, his child, like her mother, was a general favorite. In the daughter of their nearest neighbor she found a playmate and companion. Hitty Dimock was an only daughter like herself, petted and half-spoiled. The two girls were inseparable.

Farmer Dimock had four sons, and their sister Hitty quizzed it over them as only daughters are privileged. They were worshiped their sovereign, however, and submitted to most of her whims and caprices. They were affirmed that "Mary Russel helped her to put on airs, and that both were as proud as Lucifer."

It was for this same haughty pair that the farmer's boys gathered and stored away their wild forest nuts, and assorted the red-cheeked winter apples; for in the long evenings Mary and Hitty had their spinning and knitting matches. Sometimes the other girls of the district joined them, and the large, square room was then ablaze with light, and buzzing and whirling with industry. Mothers and grandmothers gazed with pride on the graceful spinners, while their own hands plied the busy reel which supplied them with rolls. Little boys and girls sat by, picking the tangled wool with their fingers, warming and preparing it for the manywiry cards. It was the older boys who cracked the nuts, and filled the home-made pewter flagons with cider, and brought the apples they had laid up so carefully in autumn. What pleasant games of forfeit succeeded when the work was done! Oh, the winter evenings of the olden time were not bad, although so many of their hours were devoted to useful toil!

From such peaceful avocations the rural dwellers of New England were aroused by the passage of the "Boston Port Bill," when the watch-word of Liberty rang like a clarion through the land. There was no longer time for dalliance; every man and boy must awaken to duty. It is by such ordeals the steel of manhood is most satisfactorily tested; and never was weather stuff disclosed than among the yeomanry of "His Majesty's Colonies in North America."

But, as we have just remarked, there were men of diverse opinions all over the land. Farmer Russel was one of them, and from the first had ranged himself with the royalists. The men, especially the young men of the vicinity, were indignant, and stigmatized him as the "Old Tory," and indulged in other epithets such as enthusiastic young men are prone to give vent to. Farmer Dimock's boys were among the foremost of these, and even went so far as to say if he betrayed their cause, they would "ride him on a rail," or "duck him in the millpond;" and that was long before the days of railroads, and the popularity of Lynch law.

Such threats boded no good for the English landowner. But an important rumor soon caused a lull in the angry excitement—a rumor that Farmer Russel had sold his estate and was going to England. Nothing more was to be said or done until the report was verified or contradicted.

Before many days the notice for a public vendue was posted on every sign-board and shop-door around the town. All of the stock and household stuff of neighbor Russel was advertised for sale on the premises.

Hittie Dimock looked grave and sorry, and would not allow her brothers to hurl any more epithets at their departing neighbor. Her infancy almost the playmate of Mary, had been her most intimate friend, and the thought of parting from her was very painful. They had spent much time together that winter and spring, and Hittie believed her friend as a sister as well as herself.

One stormy winter day, when weather-bound at Mary's, Farmer Russel's hired man had brought into the house a splendid black lamb, which he said, its mother had stamped upon and nearly killed. He rubbed it and wrapped it in an old sheep-skin, with the gibe "keep it still." It was the last unfeeling remark in the world. No wonder the mother should disown it, and contribute to its death. The little black beast came to know no friend but Mary.

It was a hardy little thing, however, and grew active, and in her playful gambols would break more and more fondly cherished of its kind. The girls called it Dido, and made a great pet of the homely lamb.

All the men far and near attended the vendue; for it was well known the Russel stock and household stuff were the best in the country. Even neighbor Dimock petitioned for a stuffed rocking-chair which had belonged to the invalid wife of the Tory, and which had been the occasion of a number china fruit-dishes, and Hittie the black sheep. Her brothers hooted at the idea, and declared they would not have it on the harboring a Tory. Then she appealed to her father, who said he would not like to have a black sheep in the flock. So Hittie was disappointed.

That evening grandmother was delighted with her rocking-chair; Mrs. Dimock had her new china for arrange on the shelves, and the farmer armed with Mary's side-saddle—a beautiful embroidered affair sent from England only the year before. She was pleased with it, but evidently had not forgotten her warning request.

"Who bought the cosset?" she asked her father at length.

"I don't know as 'twas put up. Nobody would make such a fuss for a girl's pet lamb."

"I guess it is going back to England, with the other black sheep," said her brother Jimmy, with the idea of our Hittie's wanting such an outlandish pet!"

It is possible that Hittie cared for her own way more than for the pet; she did not like to be defeated.

The Russels were to take their departure from the colony early the next week. Mary had retained nothing but her own and her mother's wardrobe; that, indeed, was considerably reduced, as it was to spend the remaining days with Hittie Dimock, taking with her, as a parting gift, the black lamb.

Now the Tory maiden fancied the present would not have been one-half as acceptable to Hittie as that grotesque-looking lamb; and she promised to protect it at all hazards.

"I keep Dido to remember me," Mary said; "and don't allow those bad brothers of yours to tease her and call her names."

These last words were spoken expressly for the ears of one of those same brothers, supposed to be Mary's favorite.

"I'll tell you what I'll do, now, Miss Mary," said Hittie Dimock; "I'll be the black sheep myself around the critter's neck, and make a colonial messenger of her. A few of them best suits would be sure to make a handsome present."

The gigls pouted; but Willie was bound to have his say. The presence of Majesty would not have checked him.

Mary and Hittie had a tearful parting, and promised to be good friends always, just as though nothing had occurred to separate them. "I have never told you," Mary said, sobbing, "but my father is an American. This is my native land, and I would gladly remain and share her fate."

Willie heard the words and treasured them in his heart.

Farmer Russel was not the only royalist who forsook the country in her hour of trial. Every steamer departing for England carried its quota; and none regretted them; for the false who remained hung like an incubus on the patriot cause.

Dido was no favorite with any person or thing on the farm but Hittie. Willie tried to befriend her; but never was there a more mischievous creature in house or garden, and Hittie would keep her from going when and where she pleased. The grandmother's new wall of fence fell a victim to the agility of a dog; and many secret plans were made by the father and Jimmy to put her out of the way. But either the thought of Hittie's displeasure or the memory of Mary Russel was Dido's protection.

Meantime events of startling importance were transpiring all over the land. A Continental Congress was convened at Philadelphia, and agreed upon a public declaration of rights, recommending non-intercourse with the mother country until the grievances of the colonies should be redressed. The provincial Assembly of Massachusetts drew up a plan for the immediate defense of the province, and enlisted an army of twelve thousand men to act in any emergency.

Not until April of the succeeding year did that emergency arise. Then the tidings of the battle of Lexington flew through the land, and there was a general uprising for freedom. Troops from the neighboring colonies went pouring into Boston, and the war of the Revolution was fairly inaugurated.

Farmer Dimock's two eldest sons were among the first volunteers from Connecticut. They were sent away with words of encouragement and blessing, while the hearts that loved them were wellnigh breaking. Poor Willie never returned. He perished with many other brave New England youth in that stormy march to Quebec, and was laid on the banks of the Kennebec. His father went and took his fallen son's place in the ranks, leaving his two young boys with their mother and sister to perform the labor of the farm. Let those who now murmur at the fee exacted from them be called upon to forego in the maintenance of our Government through its present hour of darkness, and civil war, back to the out of its purchase, and blush for shame at the contrast!

The women of the Revolution were fitted to be the wives of heroic men. When necessity urged the morning found them in the field, the evening at the spinning-wheel and loom, at work for the aged and little ones at home, as well as for the suffering soldiers in the field. No women of any age deserve a brighter page in the history than those of the American Revolution.

Hittie Dimock proved one of the model maidens of the times. From the moment she sent away with cheerful words her two brothers and her young friend to the field of battle she rose to the full height and purpose of womanhood. Early and late she wrought patiently and joyfully in the midst of trial and discouragement, encouraging serenely to the end. In her zeal for the cause, and in her many labors for the absent ones, she never forgot her love for her childish playmate Mary Russel; and her deep indignation often wandered over the ocean to her distant home. Only once since she left the colony had she heard from her friend; and two years after her arrival in England. What had befallen her since she vainly strove to learn. Did she remember her and love them still? Would she drop a tear if ever she heard of Willie's death? And would she ever return to answer the questions which found no certain answer in her heart.

Mary's pet was still tenderly cared for, notwithstanding it was the most unsightly creature in the world. Not another sheep on the place would eat from the same rack with Dido, who butted and beat them with her head, as if to say, "Do not touch or was lost." Only to Hittie she was always gentle and docile, following her in the fields, and sleeping at her outer door. In the winter she remained in a solitary outshed, never contented in the barnyard or shelter with the rest of the flock.

It was nearly three years since Willie and Jimmy went away; more than two since Willie had fallen in the battle of Quebec. Farmer Dimock, who had joined the army the subsequent spring, was captured at the battle of Long Island, and, if living, was still a prisoner. Another trial had been added to their sum of suffering. When the last autumn's grain was harvested and the winter crops secured, David, the eldest son, was left at the boy of fifteen, told his mother one evening there was a fresh call for men. General Gates had gained Burgoyne, and a few more men would finish the work. Couldn't they get along the next year with little Eben, and let him go with the others?

Mrs. Dimock had given her two eldest sons and her husband to the cause without a murmur; but had never occurred to her that her two youngest might be demanded, and she was silent.

Eben, who had been standing by from the grandmother and sister to pare, overheard his brother's words.

"You'll have to persuade mother," he said, in a low tone, to Hittie. "She hates to let David go, but he's plenty old enough to keep step and handle a gun. It will be a year or two before I can do it, I suppose. But I'm no coward, Hittie! I'll go as soon as I am enough. I'd like to punish them fellows that got father."

Hittie knew it would be better to let her mother relate, as her participation was equal to any active requirement. The aged grandmother took off her spectacles and wiped her eyes as she surveyed the little group, thinking of the time when Mary and the home-circle was unbroken.

The boys went to bed that night with David's question unanswered. After they were gone their mother went to her press, took down a thick, heavy great-coat or pelisse of her own, examined it carefully, and then said,

"David's clothes are not quite warm enough for the army. I think I could make him a new suit out of this? A shawl will be thick enough for me."

Hittie answered affirmatively, and for a few days every one was at work for the boy-soldier, who went away as bravely as a man. That was four months before the poor fellow was having a tough winter at Valley Forge.

Hittie was thinking of all these things one snowy day toward the close of February, as she sat drearily drawing the thread from her distaff, while her foot appeared to be beating time to her thoughts. Grandmother was nodding over her knitting-work, and her mother at work in the loom which had been permanently placed in a chamber to the main kitchen below. Little Eben was threshing at the barn, and as his light strokes reached his mother's ears, the thought what vigorous arms had flung the flail in the happy years gone by. How the mother's heart yearned then for her absent ones, and for her poor lost Willie, who would come to his home no more!

The storm increased and began to blow wildly. It sounded in her ear-like requiems, and she left her loom and drew near the fire, which crackled and blazed defiance at the cold.

"Eben will want something to eat soon," she said, as she stirred the pot of bean-soup in the corner. "The days are not long enough yet for regular dinners, but boys growing are hungry. I'm afraid the others don't always get enough."

"Some one knocks," said Hittie. Or maybe it was only the wind rattling the door. I forgot it is hooked on the inside."

She went and unfastened it. A ragged soldier stood before her, and asked a night's shelter from the storm.

"I need'e, if you wish," she said. "Don't wait a minute longer in the cold. Come in."

"Oh, Hittie! don't you know me?"

"Jimmy! Jimmy! Jimmy! My poor brother! it you? Come in, quickly!"

The next moment the half-naked soldier was weeping in the fond embrace of mother and sister, and for sorrow too, that he had returned alone.

It was long before his grandmother's aged eyes could be made to believe the thin, famished-looking youth before her was their own sturdy boy. "Willie was more slender," she said. "She had not expected him to endure hardship well; but Jimmy was like his grandfather, and this could not be Jimmy."

While he was eating a dish of hot warm soup his mother unbound the rags from his travel-sore feet and washed them; then drew on new, warm socks, and a pair of his father's half-worn boots, better than he had seen for months. The clothing they had sent him from home in autumn had never reached him, and Government had been nothing for the soldiers that winter but furnish them with blankets, and enough of those.

"Never mind; we will make you another set of clothes before you go again," Hittie said, cheerfully. "Some good soldier, I hope, got the other suit. She We have just commenced making the summer cloth."

"I have to leave you in the morning, Hittie. My regiment broke camp yesterday, and is on its way to New Jersey to be ready for some early movement. I got leave to hasten home with orders to be in New London to-morrow night."

"What a shame for his words cast over their joy! And now, instead of sitting down to question him and enjoy those few brief hours, they had to contrive for how they could make him more comfortable before he went away. There was not a yard of cloth in the house except a few yards of white flannel, which was sent to Hittie last in autumn and hurried without dyeing or fulling, as the men had all gone to the war. Their neighbors were no better off than themselves, and there was none in the market. What was to be done? What could they do for Jimmy?

Hittie revolved the question in her mind for a few minutes, then every feature of her face flushed with new light and merriment. Whispering some matter to Eben, she went off in a moment, she said, "Do you remember Dido, Jimmy?"

"Remember the black imp?—to be sure I do. What became of the creature?"

"She's alive and well, and has turned patriot."

What mischief was in Hittie's mind no one could tell.

Eben's orders were to lead Dido into the backcellar, which he did not accomplish without difficulty. He also stamped at him, butted him with her hard head, and tried her best to bite his knees, while he gripped-sooner than the cord loosed her. But Eben's will was as strong as hers, and he conquered her at last, and found Hittie awaiting them in the cellar, with a huge pair of shears in her hand.

At sight of her mistress, Dido's more lamb-like nature suddenly returned.

"Fie, Dido! Bad sheep!" she said, rubbing her woolly nose. "You have never made any sacrifice for your country; but your time has come now, my pet! Lie down and give us your coat!"

At a motion of her hand the creature lay down, and Hittie commenced shearing the long, coarse wool from her back.

"There, take this, Eben," she said, when she had sheared a little bunch; "carry it to grandmother and ask her to card it before I come up. Then, my boy, you may go and tell your folks to send Cousin Sallie and her mother here this afternoon, to help get Jimmy ready to go away in the morning. They'll want to see him also before he goes. Come in, John."

It did not take Hittie long to cut the wool from Dido's body, which was all she wished. She then took a heavy blanket and sewed it carefully around her, to protect her from the cold of the night. She chattered merry, "You shall have some sweet turnips for your supper, and a straw bed to lie upon, pet!" She laid her black wool at her grandmother's feet, examined the rolls she had carded, and brought the great wheel near the fire.

It is hardly necessary finished drawing in your web this morning, mother; for now we can send Jimmy away in the morning with a new suit of long-cloth, as my father used to call it. I have a white flannel suit, at least."

"The child must be crazy," said her grandmother, resting her cards with astonishment.

"Crazy with joy, then, grandmother! These rolls run beautifully, you see. Guess the whim you know! Please have me some more ready soon!"

A hearty laugh burst from Jimmy, who now comprehended his sister's movements perfectly. The ring of it did Hittie's heart good.

"Jimmy," she said, "have you forgotten how to quiz? Don't you remember how grandmother used to make us quiz for her when we wanted to be off nutting? Wasn't it a shame? But you and I need to run wheel, though."

Hittie's tongue buzzed as fast as her wheel. When she had spun enough to fill a single roll, she called on her mother to wind it, fill her shuttle, and begin the fabric. It was a long time since they had all wrought with such cheerful hearts; there was no time to think or speak of the morrow.

Aunt Sallie and her daughter both came with Eben, and another pair of cards and another wheel gave fresh impetus to the work. Before dark the carding and spinning was done, and the web almost ready to be cut from the loom.

Cousin Sallie finished the work while her aunt and Hittie prepared the evening meal; her mother meanwhile was measuring Jimmy for the round jacket and loose trousers, which she said could easily be made before morning.

A pleasant night they made of it, while the stormy wind whistled without. The boys cracked nuts and parched corn, and Jimmy told camp-stories until long after midnight. Then his mother urged him to bed, reminding every thing should be ready for him in time in the morning.

When she first light shone in the east, Mrs. Dimock stole softly into the bedroom where her sons were sleeping and awakened little Eben.

"You must get up now," she whispered, "and feed old Dick if you are going with Jimmy. It is clear as a bell, and good sleighing too; and Hittie has her porridge being ready for you both."

Eben needed not a second bidding. The soldier did not awake, but slept like one to whom a soft home bed was a luxury. He stooped down and kissed him, leaving a warm tear on his forehead.

An hour later, when the breakfast was steaming hot by the kitchen fire, Hittie carried the new warm garments to her brother and found him awake.

"Dido has given you her coat, Jimmy, and you are under obligations to speak well of her hereafter. Didn't I tell you she was a patriot?"

Jimmy promised the black sheep should have a pension at the close of the war, and never again be called a Tory.

The sleigh was loaded with oats for Dolly and sundry good things for the boys; for Eben insisted on going all the way to New London and seeing Jimmy with his regiment. He had never been so far from home, but was a brave lad, and they had no fear for him. Aunt Sallie had a bundle of warm socks for the boy, and Hittie had another little parcel marked for some person whose name has not appeared in this story, but which made sure as one of the older branches of our genealogical tree.

At the first sound of the sleigh-bells Dido broke loose from the cellar, and stood there like a proud mistress on the steps, watching the boys' departure. Never had she looked so comical as in her checkered blanket, and never was Hittie more pleased than when Jimmy patted her black head and called her "a sheep worth having."

A few years later and the father reached home after his long imprisonment. Hunger and frost had reduced the strong man to the helplessness of infancy. He was a cripple for life.

Neither Jimmy nor David quit the army for a single day until they saw the stars and Stripes waving in the hands of their beloved Commander-in-Chief. Then they obtained a furlough for a few days only, and at its expiration went back and remained until the Colonial army was disbanded.

Dido outlived the war, and became gentle and tractable in her old age. From the hour she relieved her wister coat to the returned soldier she became an object of consideration in the family, and was treated with especial favor. And when Hittie left her father's house for a new home, proudly in the little train that accompanied her walked the black ex-queen. One of her children, as well as herself, became the children's pet after her death: and so through two or three generations until the present time there has always been a family pride and a family fondness for a black sheep.

MY HOME IN CLOUDLAND.

I've a home in cloudland,
The risen run of golden sand;
And tall and straight the dark pines stand
Round my home in cloudland.

The roses are blowing;
The fountains are flowing;
'Tis always midsummer in cloudland.

No dews e'er weeping,
No shadows ever creeping
Near my home in cloudland.

I've a guest in cloudland,
One true knight at my command,
Who'd gird at Death for my white hand,
And dwells with me in cloudland.
Soft music is playing,
And we two go straying,
Deep in the sweet bow'rs of cloudland.

Where elf chimes are ringing,
Strange melody flinging,
Around my home in cloudland.

OUR NEW HOUSE.

"EUREKA! I have found it!" I cried, as I entered the house.

"Found what?" queried Mrs. Dobbs.

"The house, my dear. The very house we want."

"Oh! have you?" exclaimed my wife, with an intensity of emphasis that sufficiently explained her appreciation of the horror of house-hunting in April.

"I am so glad! It relieves my mind of more anxiety than you think. Where is it?"

"Here, in the paper." And I pulled the morning paper from my pocket, where I had carried it all day, and struck it open triumphantly with one hand through the paper.

"Oh!—Annie!"

I despair of conveying in print a clear idea of the expression my wife put into the utterance of those two words. It was the cry of a deceived and wounded spirit. Mrs. Dobbs's face looked almost ghastly. It seemed as if the light was all struck out of it as the result of sudden grief.

"Yes, in the paper," I went on, feigning not to perceive the havoc I had created in the sensitive breast of woman. "An advertisement, you know. What a blessed institution the advertising system is!"

"Well, read it."

I read it.

"TO RENT.—A snug, cozy house in the suburbs, handy to a line of horse-cars. Will be let to a careful tenant at fifteen dollars per month. Apply at No. —. That Street, Take a Black Street car."

"Now then!" I cried, exultant.

"Ridiculous!" said Mrs. Dobb.

"Ridiculous, Susan! Not a bit of it. I believe that house to be a prize. I'll go at once and see it. There'll be a hundred applicants for it."

Mrs. Dobb smiled incredulously.

"And so cheap too!" said I. "Fifteen dollars a month! Did you ever hear of such a thing?"

But Mrs. Dobb was by her nature favorably impressed with my new enterprise. She grasped the point long and earnestly with me, reminding me that cheap things were invariably dearest in the end; and at last, in the fervor of discussion, I did a very rash thing.

I agreed with Mrs. Dobb that if, on visiting the house I had in view, it did not prove every way desirable, I would release her from all further trouble regarding a house. I would do the house hunting this year myself.

I may say briefly that I bitterly repented of my promise afterward. The house was a worthless affair. And then I had to go out on a house-hunt.

I need not recount my sorrowful experience. To those who know what house-hunting is I could tell nothing new; and to those who do not I have only to express the kindly hope that they never will. I had doors banged in my face by irascible landlords, and declared their carpets were being ruined; I was asked what my name was; what my business was; how many children I had; where I lived; in fact, I never left a house favorably situated in the same number of hours before since I was examined by a life-insurance physician. One aged man asked me if I was a total abstinence man, but he had no house to rent. At night I came home wearied and worn, and no nearer my object than when I began.

"This is unprofitable business, Susan," said I to Mrs. Dobbs, on the fifth day. "—"

"But what will you do, James? Stay here?"

"No; we can't stay here at the advanced rent."

"Then what will you do?"

"I'll go to a house-agent. I ought to have thought of that in the first place."

I called on a agent the next day, and had some conversation with him.

"If you will tell me about what sum you wish to pay for a house, Mr.—"

"Dobb is my name, sir."

"Mr. Dobb, I have no doubt I can suit you with a T."

I named a sum a little in advance of what I have paid the past owner for the house I now occupy; and the agent replied:

"There is a house in one of the most genteel and agreeable neighborhoods in the city, which is to be vacated on the first of May, which I can let you have at the price you name, and it is really a treasure at the price. It has all the modern, with a cozy and inclosed piazza in front, overrun with vines in summer, and is two stories high. I can recommend it to you as desirable in the extreme. I would not say as to admit of no criticism, and I promise you, and I give my reputation on the event, that you will find it quite to your liking. The rent is not low, to be sure, as things go; but the neighborhood is one of the most desirable in the city, and the owner for the past year by a very careful tenant, to whom no objection is entertained that I can learn except that he has children."

"So have I children," I said, very decisively four of them; and I intend that they shall occupy the same house with me during the next twelve months, at all hazards. So if that is the objection I believe we can dispose of it forever."

"Ah, yes," said the agent, blandly. "It is only an objection of principle, however. The owner is opposed to having children in the house, which children on principle. The house to which I refer forms the only exception to his rule. I have no doubt he could be induced to make the same exception in your favor, Sir."

"But if for me, why not for his present tenant?" I asked.

"Oh, he would for his present tenant, he told me; but the gentleman refuses to pay the increased rent, I am informed, and has left the premises hence.

Some further conversation followed. I was shown a plan of the offered house, and its various excellences were explained to me. In short, I was convinced it was an excellent residence; and after my weary experience in house-hunting I felt quite a glow of satisfaction at the prospect of return on such comparatively reasonable terms. I engaged the house at once.

"Have a lease prepared to-day," said I to the agent, "and to-morrow I will call and sign it."

Mrs. Dobb was overjoyed when I told her all about it that day at dinner. It was plain to see that we had secured a good home for the coming year.

"But, James," said my wife, "you haven't told me where the house is situated."

"Well, dear, I didn't," said I. "Upon my word I never thought to ask! I'll do so after dinner."

I did. The agent said it was in Sutcha Street.

"Is it?" said I. "Well, that's pleasant. We shouldn't have far to move then, shouldn't we? for I live in Sutcha Street now—and a delightful street it is! What did you say was the number?"

"The number is nor-reuse."

"Seventeen!" I cried, in astonishment.

"Yes, Sir."

"Between Bolivar Street and Gulliver Street?"

"Yes, Sir."

"West side?"

"Yes. You know the house, perhaps?"

"I should think I ought to!" was my response, in a hysterical tone; "I've lived in it for the past year."

Yes. I had rented my own house, at a comfortable advance on last year's figure. When I told Mrs. Dobb about it she laughed till she cried.

I went roaming over the house, examining its merits critically, and scrutinizing the rooms with quite a new and peculiar interest.

"It is a good house, Susan, at any rate. That we know."

"It is, James. I am very well satisfied. To be sure the kitchen is rather small, and there is more room up stairs than we really need; but I don't believe we could be better suited on the whole."

"And then, my dear wife," cried I, in a tone of exultation, "think what an escape from the horrors of the first of May! No exorbitant charges to draymen—no broken mirrors and scratched furniture—no shivering and shaking on some bleak day in the cold! Instead of flitting we are going to have a restaurant for dinner en famille. We can be as happy next first of May as the shepherds of Arcadia. We'll have a regular merry-making in the back-yard if it don't rain."

INTERESTING ITEMS.

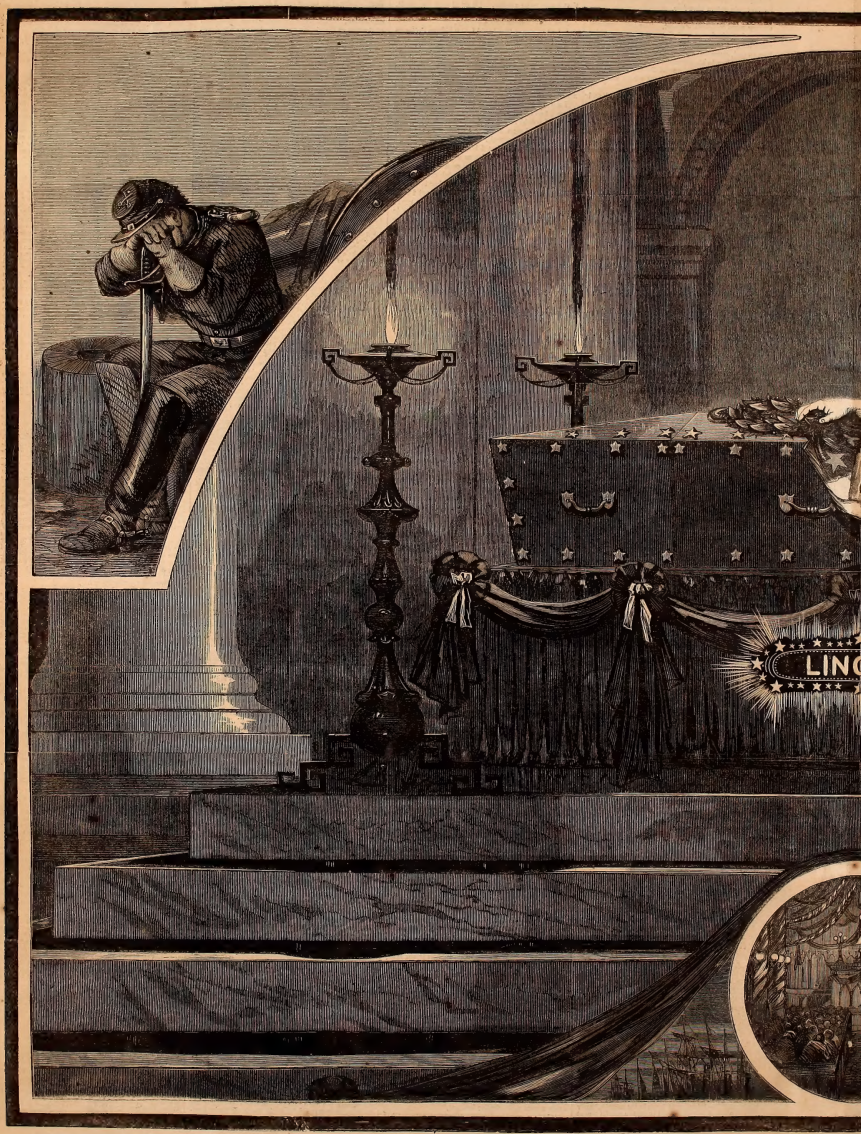
"PARSLEY PIER.—The founder of the Peel family and the father of the first baronet kept a fine kitchen garden in his country-seat, Drayton Manor, for the purpose of carrying out his ideas in the improvement of horticulture. This man, Sir Robert Peel's grandfather, was long concealed in the private house of Mr. Haworth, at Brookhouse, near Blackburn, because he would not, as a Tory, be engaged in some mysterious wickedness. In the course of his residence at Drayton he introduced many improvements in the printing of the cottons; in connection with which he took a deep interest. In Peel-square, Peel, ingenious manufacturer was in his kitchen one day, making some experiments in printing on handkerchiefs, and rather small pieces, when his only daughter, then a girl, entered Mrs. Wilkes, the mother of the present member for Manchester, brought him in from their garden of herbs a sprig of parsley. 'Here, papa,' said she, 'is a piece of parsley (girl says Sir Laurence) that she could discern beauty in its leaves, and has carried it in her pocket-handkerchief as a present for a gentle art of a fly. She pointed out and praised the delicate beauty of the shading, by the hints of the remarkable family to which she belonged, naturally to the eye. The father looked at the sprig and the leaves with a very pretty pattern. Her father took it from her hand, looked at it in astonishment, gave it back to her taste, and said he would make a trial of it. She, delighted not to be fault-proof of her discernment, ran off to her play. Then he took her aside with all the alacrity of a girl of fourteen. A stroke damped on the cotton was then the result, and the next-piste of families of their degree—was taken down from the shelf, and the parsley was printed upon it. Success was the lead, and from this impression were taken. This was called by the family 'parsley pattern,' and from that girl who invented it. It became one of the most popular impressions ever printed, and was in one period so widely known and so universally used as the 'Willow pattern' of crockery ware. It may be said that it had no small share in laying the foundation of the fortunes of the Peel family. It was the first one every where spoken of as the Parsley-leaf pattern, and alteration lessening its size, it became the favorite pattern for handkerchiefs, because generally known by the nickname of 'Parsley Pier.'

MY MOTTOES!—Some gentlemen passing through the village of Dobbs Ferry, Saturday, 'put up' at the hotel themselves, about nine o'clock at night, some time ago, had their carriages brought to the door, and went to bed early. On going in to ascertain what is was they found a large placard hanging over the bar, on his face, and commanded unless over a recently-made grave. Thinking that he was very much in a hurry to get to bed, and that was how he came to be there. He said he was afraid to go home, and begged them to be quiet, for if they were not he would be sent to bed. "And where does your sister live?" asked one of the party. "In Dumbarton—in the house on the top of Dumbarton—nearly four miles off! How came you to be separated?" "Why, you see," said the boy, "when the poor little fellow, "because my mother's gone and died, and I'm going to live with my sister. I've never been before, and his seeking a refuge at her grave in his sorrow, and having taken the grave to be that of his mother, hitherto been his natural protector, he had evidently cried himself asleep.

STRANGE FREAK OF MARRIAGE.—The lovers of "romantic adventures" and strange "coincidences" will be entertained by a perusal of the following narrative, which appears in a Vienna newspaper:

"Very recently, in the village of Flumbridge, in this country, two similar incidents occurred which will excite high lively interest. In one case, the party was composed of a Mr. Jones, a rich manufacturer, and his wife, a Miss Jones, etc. They proceeded on foot from the house of the bride's father, a man named Upjohn, living in Upton, toward the chapel of Flumbridge, where the priest was awaiting them to perform the ceremony of the marriage. The bride was, as is usual in such cases, conducted by the bride's father and his guests half-way to the church, when the bridegroom, thinking perhaps that the bride was getting too much attention, left the party, and became impatient. Consequently, the 'best man' was ordered away. A scuffle ensued, in the which the 'best man' was thrown by a cool into a ditch. The bride took the part of the 'best man,' and refused to go with the bridegroom. She said she would not marry him, but would have her 'best man' for her husband. The 'best man' rose back to the side of the bride, related what had happened, and, as had been suggested by the bridegroom, they proceeded to take the place of the 'jealous' bridegroom. The father of the girl agreed to the change, and the ceremony was performed. Returning to Upton, got a license, came back to Flumbridge, and were married. The bridegroom, disappointed, was married to her former pugilistic and jealous courtier. The next case is that of Count Gustavus Corbell, who, in 1859, was married to her 'best man' of the preceding day. The reported case, failing to secure the consent of his bride for one, determined to seek compensation for damages sustained, and proceeded to Flumbridge, to the bride's house and took an inventory of all his effects as a preparatory step to proceeding to the Court of Chancery, which he has directed an attorney to institute for £500 damages.

Now, for the second episode. On the same day, memorable in the local annals of Flumbridge, in the first church another bridegroom, name Kaus, was conveying a young bride, named Lydia, to the same chapel, and at the same place, when they were met by an old lover, named Conway, whose passion for the fair Lydia was not extinguished by her marriage. Conway, in a fit of jealousy, burned so fiercely that he leaped off the car, whispered a few words to the bride, which had the effect of fixing her eyes on her. Proving false to her husband elect, she went away with Conway, to whom she was married the next day."



It is a singular fact that the bride who sells, or rather gives away herself for a title, or in exchange for money, or the bride on whose fair finger is placed the golden ring, which is the token of love, are the observers and the followers of the primitive customs connected with marriage. The bride has a right to the bride in a country, and is the ancient spirit of wooing and wedding, which made of the wife the property of the husband. In our day it assumes the second form of rupture is, perhaps, to be traced. A man appears in Flushing with his bride, and declares to marks that she is "taking a husband." The term "best man" is of the same origin, and is not only used in a wife us; but it there originally implied the friend of the bridegroom who was to assist him in the fight, and who could effectually wield the heaviest weapon against all assailants who might attempt to rescue the bride. In a word, it suggested that the throwing an old shoe after the wedded couple as they departed from the bride's old home is not, as it is now interpreted, for luck, but a remnant of a marriage ceremony of olden times, when the inhabitants of the district from which the bride was taken flung missiles at the betrothed, in order to cause him to desist from carrying off their sister or friend. The latter ceremony—for it is now only a mere, but still a lively, ceremony—is common among some of the hill-people of Hindostan, and among the Arabs of the desert, and is of real significance to a bride with the rigs which the bridegroom plainly poses over her head. The ceremony has probably been handed to us, but some mysterious nervous connection with the heart.

HOW NATURE WORKS.—"YES, yes," says a modern writer, "nature balances all things admirably, and has put the sense and every individual of earth on a par. Then that have more than their share of one thing commonly have less of another. Where there is great strength there ain't apt to be much gumption. A handsome man in a general way ain't much of a man. A beautiful bird seldom sings. Them that has genius have no common sense. A father with one child is rich, they say, while he with him a fool dies poor. The world is like a hand most all on 'em. Some on 'em is rich, dry, with no flesh, the most part is bony, doughy, and undelicious; the middle is not much to look at, but is good to eat, and is the best which flavor the whole."

FAST AND SLOW SPEAKING.—Movement is as important in elocution as in music. The effect of the finest piece of music will be lost, if one of object or other of terror than the composer intended. Indeed, if the alteration of time be considerable, the music is nearly spoiled. In like manner the grandest poem or the most eloquent speech, delivered with decidedly wrong time, will not be understood and appreciate the words which he does hear. While fast speaking depending on some fine qualities, is usually but partially understood through its indistinct utterance, the slow speaker is generally understood in advance. The reader's mind must suffer, because from his rapid utterance the words have not distinct ideas affected by them, are pronounced with fresh wind; and, consequently, they will often be almost meaningless. Distinctness of utterance, therefore, which is most important, and apt to cause rattling of blood and nervous excitement. On the other hand, the fault of the slow speaker is wearying to listen to, especially if his voice is not of good compass and power. He is a very good, though not a great, but he becomes a tedious bore in the long run. Between the two, the fast speaker is the most endurable, because he is the most natural. The slow speaker is tremendously slow delivery of the sermon. Some persons who have been accustomed to hear sermons delivered with their delivery very slow by too many and too long pauses between the words, have come to the conclusion that it is the speaker; indeed, it may be necessary for one who, like Mr. Beecher, has a voice of great power, to speak in every syllable, by which the delivery becomes extremely slow, and is very injurious to the health, and causes great exhaustion.

OUR FEAR.—We are afraid of too much crime in the community. We are afraid of the Fenian organization; we, I mean, for of course the chemists know their instinct and understanding. We are afraid of the secret power of influence, of one-stroke or of treachery, according to the nature of the fear; but we are afraid. We are afraid of one or the other. The Methodists are afraid that the Catholics are increasing in numbers, and the Catholics that the crying generations yet unborn will have to go supperless to bed because there will be no meat in the world. There are some who talk learned fear about a second deluge, and others who are afraid that we are to be the consequent swimming over of the waters in the Polar basin—and there are those who are afraid of the bear in the zoological garden who quake at a possible collision with a comet, when they are afraid of the dark, and afraid of the sound of bells, and will be collapsed and lifeless, like a log in space, when they hear the noise alarm of fire engines from fire, and the stopping up of volcanic vent-holes, when we shall be blown up through the roof of the house—the—Heaven knows where!—perhaps as far as Jupiter, or, it may be, Saturn. Some people are afraid that they have not prepared some for the Last Day, for which they have not prepared, and some are afraid that they have not, and that, therefore, have called out for a second chance, and that, therefore, that angel will come as cosmos as copper, and then what shall we do for our currency?

THE CHEWING HABIT.—Chewing above many is the man who considers every hour lost which is not spent in resting, or in some way and not occupied with food as if the thinks every moment of her time lost which does not find her employed. Now, it is a fact that the time which is consumed in the act of chewing is not lost, but is gained. The food is not swallowed in the act proper of chewing, but is thoroughly masticated, and so is prepared for the Last Day, for which they have not prepared, and are only driven to bed by physical incapacity to work any longer. Now, it is a fact that the time which is lost by those who do not work at all, is unsatisfying and unrefreshing, and both alike are lost to the world. Chewing is incompatible with an inevitable result, both dying prematurely. Let us then not waste our time. Chewing is a habit which we can adopt in its own until he is fully rested, when, with renewed strength, he can work with his whole time. Soon after the battle of Waterloo, Napoleon said to Bertrand, "Bertrand, I have above many in

LINC

COLN

THE SWALLOWS.

A captive soldier pined for home
Upon a foreign shore;
"O summer birds!" he said, "You've come
To greet my eyes once more;
And even to this burning strand
You carry hope to me.
O, bring you from my native land
No tidings o'er the sea?

"Three years some token have I sought,
As you came fluttering by,
Of that dear valley where I thought
In peace to live and die.
'Tis by the stream that runs so clear
Beneath the lilac trees
Our cottage stands! O you bring from there
No tidings o'er the seas?

"If my be one of you was born
Beneath my native thatch,
And there you saw my mother mourn
And keep my vacant watch;
She dying thinks, 'He comes at last!'
Then weeps fond tears for me,
Why bring you of yearnings past
No tidings o'er the sea?

"And is my sister married, say?
And did a joyful throng
Go forth upon her wedding-day,
With greetings and with song?
Have they returned who went from there
To join the fight with me?
Of all those friends why bring you here
No tidings o'er the sea?

"Perhaps their corpses strew the vale;
Some foreign foe has come,
And marches o'er them to assail
And devastate my home.
The new-made bride her hands must wring,
No mother prays for me,
And I in chains! Why do you bring
No tidings o'er the sea?

THE TORN GLOVE.

I, Reuben Apscomer, linen-draper, of Little Mattseys, a village on the west coast of England, sat in my shop one stormy evening in January, 1852. If in my very humble and very lucky position I ever aided my present circumstances, I should scarcely have been angry, I should even laughed outright at the absurdity, with my education and my prospects, becoming a tradesman! But never mind that now. The fact is that change happened is not my purpose at this moment.

When I arrived at Little Mattseys six months before, I thought, of course, that I should make a living, and in the far-off distance there might be a fortune. Little Mattseys was now on the eve of seeing the last of me, for I was on the verge of bankruptcy.

Surely this state of things was not my fault. I had done all I could. My plate-glass window was the marvel of the neighborhood. My two oil lamps at night excited general admiration. My warehouses of the most extensive character; wildly imaginative in pattern were my stuffs for dresses, gorgeous in their varied colors, astonishing in their cheapness. It was very hard—for what was the result? The result was, the villagers came in a crowd, and stared, and went away again. During the whole six months I took barely five pounds. The people of Little Mattseys were not particular about clothes. There was a little shop in the village which had supplied all their wants from time immemorial. It was a dingy, wretched concern, but the villagers preferred it. They were afraid of me and my grandeur (so I afterward thought), and therefore, on the evening on which I have alluded, I determined on departing to a more hopeful locality.

I had been inspecting my stock, and it lay about in some confusion. The evening being far advanced, I began to roll up the bales preparatory to shutting the shutters.

"No one has been in for the last three days," I said to myself. "If any one were to come now, such a sight it is, he would expect the house to tumble down."

As I thus muttered a customer appeared.

A lady! Mercy on me, a lady! I had not seen a lady since I had been at Little Mattseys; and here on this evening, this miserable evening, when the rain was falling in torrents and the wind had risen to a hurricane, a lady not only presented herself, but entered my shop! I know I looked scared, for, catching my eye as she entered, she drew back, and also seemed embarrassed, not to say alarmed.

"I beg pardon," I murmured, still looking fixedly at my visitor. "I—I really thought—"

What was my surprise when the lady, in evident perturbation, advanced hurriedly, saying in a trembling voice,

"Surely you don't remember—but of course not," in an assured tone, "it could not be. I want a pair of gloves, if you please. You see I have had a misfortune with this one on my left hand," and she exhibited her left glove, split quite across.

"I beg pardon," I began again—being a shy, nervous man, I evidently perplexed my customer's marks in this way; figuratively speaking. I was always on my knees, a position seldom inappropriate to a man with a wife and family, and nothing to keep them upon—"you said something about 'not remembering'—"

"Never mind," she said, pettishly. "Get me the gloves, please."

I had small hope of suiting her. Gloves of her size were not likely to be found in Little Mattseys. However, a pair not so large as to fall off the lady's hands were furnished. She put them on. They were of a most preposterous color to wear on such a night, being pale yellow.

"I am afraid they will be spoiled almost directly," I said, "if you wear them now. Permit me to send them."

She thanked me, but declined—rather snappishly, I fancied. My wonder concerning my customer increased. "Perhaps she is out of her mind, thought I, as I noticed her gazing round in a nervous, uncertain way.

What do you think? She was a shoplifter! There was no mistake about it. I had turned aside to put away the box of gloves, and I saw her deliberately take up a roll of ribbon and furtively move it toward her pocket.

"Did you require some of that ribbon?" I inquired, abruptly.

"No, thank you," she answered, putting it down, and her vacant look as she did so satisfied me that my suspicion was wrong. "I beg pardon, I did not know what I was doing. Do you—can you tell me whether a path over the cliff to Dares House, a path which there used to be years ago, exists now?"

"Yes," I replied; "but Danes House is more than a mile from here, and the walk you speak of is extraordinous, even at the best of times, that I should think it very foolish of any body to follow it on a night like this."

"I thank you," was the only response; and taking her shearning umbrella, and so spoiling her right-hand glove in a moment, the strange lady turned and departed.

"Something odd there," I muttered, proceeding to pack up and put away the numerous articles of stock which I have said were lying about.

I fancy I haven't heard the last of that pair of gloves."

No. I certainly had not, for I had effected a clearance, and extinguished one of the lamps, and was about fixing the same with the other, when my visitor reappeared. She was evidently hurried.

"I beg pardon," she said, "but I must be behind me the torn glove which I took off. ✦ Pray be good enough to seek for it. I want it particularly."

As she spoke I could not help glancing curiously at the new ones she had on. They had changed, through the wet, to an indescribable hue.

I looked about the counter. The fragment was not there. No doubt I had rolled it up in some of the bales. I could not examine them all to-night. I explained the matter to her, and offered to send the glove to her in the morning, any where she might direct.

"Oh, no," she replied; "I will return myself for it. To-day, I mean."

"Really you must excuse me," I said. "I was just closing my shop. I have already put out one of the lamps. Perhaps to-morrow—"

"Will not do," she interrupted. "It won't take long to look through your stock," she observed, seeing symptoms of rebellion in me.

"Longer than I choose to be occupied to-night, madam," I responded, in a pompous tone.

"Then you mean to say you are going to keep the glove," said my curious customer, half menacingly.

"For to-night, madam, of necessity. Its value is no great matter," I remarked, returning her sneer.

"You're poor, perhaps, lat—to me. Believe never mind."

She turned to go; then looking back, she said,

"All I will add of you is, that you find the glove, just to be good enough to put it in the fire."

"Certainly," I replied.

"Well, this is strange," I cogitated, as the door closed. "All this fume and fret about a thing which when I found it was not worth a fig. A decided case of mystery. I'll find that glove in the morning without fail."

Was I dreaming all night? My wife and I lay awake in mortal terror, expecting that we and our shop and its contents would be blown into the sea. In the semi-state of sleep which I did manage to get, awful dreams, in all of which there figured a lady in pale yellow gloves doing various dreadful things, and invariably ending up her antics by trying to strangle me with what appeared to be an extra glove, but of enormous dimensions, say half a yard long. Some ghastly hours passed, and I have been attended with tragic results; for I was thoroughly unstrung, and taught by a sharp sense that my wife, of whose throat, to my unspeakable horror, I found I had a firm grip, evidently with the intention of making myself a widower in a very short time.

Morning found me as usual in my shop, looking for the customer who never came. Early in early hour there dropped in a neighbor who dearly loved a gossip, and who generally favored me with a morning visit, gossiping, I fancy, that my time was not pressingly occupied.

"Always busy—always busy, Mr. Apscombe," laughed the neighbor, rubbing his hands as he came in. "Why, you must be making your fortune, sir."

"I can't be said to be losing one, for I never had one, Mr. Shurcocks; but I tell you what, little Mattseys won't be very much longer for people live here without any garments, I suppose, for they never seem to buy any."

"Now you are how plenty of customers, Mr. Apscombe. Why, even last evening, you know, when every other shop in the village was shut up, you were attending a customer. I was passing, and saw you."

Shurcocks was a regular Paul Pry, and as he spoke with evident curiosity (for no doubt the circumstance had seemed odd to him), I was not disposed to communicate particulars.

"Quite true," I replied. "Some one did by chance come in, though it was late. But any news, Mr. Shurcocks?—we all know you are the man for news. There is nothing in the village which can be hid from you."

Shurcocks bowed. He evidently took my sneer as a high compliment.

"True," he said, "they can't conceal much from me. They are seldom so foolish as to try. By-the-by, as I came along I saw Smith's little boy calling at the inn. I wonder what that can have been for? Very odd! However, I'll look in at Smith's as I go back. They'll readily tell me, or I shall quickly learn; put in which way you please. But I say, friend Apscombe, you ask me whether there's any news. Yes, there is news, very important news. What do you think of an awful murder and an appalling suicide, eh?"

"Mercy on me! you don't mean—"

"Well, it is not quite that, but something of that kind might have happened. You know Mr. Risdale, of Danes House, and all about his daughter, of course?"

"I am aware there is such a person as Mr. Risdale, of Danes House, but was not aware he had a daughter."

Shurcocks cast up his eyes, and looked as though he would faint.

"Is it possible!" he exclaimed, feebly. "And yet you are alive, Mr. Apscombe!"

"Well—yes—I believe so," I replied, smilingly. "Even the most brutish ignorance on vital points is not incompatible with existence, Mr. Shurcocks."

"Oh, forgive me, sir," he said. "Only it seems so strange to me, you know. But never mind. This is the story. Mr. Risdale, who is a widower, has only daughter. She is, or was years back, run away from him and married without his consent. Now you do know this, I suppose—Risdale has an awful temper."

"So I have heard."

"I say, friend Apscombe." This in a most confidential tone.

"Yes."

"Did you ever hear any thing about the late Mrs. Risdale? Eh, now—don't be afraid to speak out. There's nobody here, you know."

"Sees not the use of the lamps, and—" No, I never heard any thing about her, except I think I recollect something relative to her going away and dying in some unhealthy clime."

"Ah yes, that's what was said; but there were whispers—and even now, Apscombe' (ex always erased—Apscombe—or "Mr." after the interchange of a few sentences), "there are whispers—about the divorce—about—a—in—one frightful night it was—just such a night as last night—the very sort of night—eh—for such a discovery—eh—bones—human remains—lying in brown paper—eh—and put in a drawer—eh!"

As, instead of growing pale at this ghastly revelation, I was heard to respond to smile heartily, Mr. Shurcocks, with a stern frown, proceeded—

"But no matter. Not a word has ever been uttered, and it is best so, perhaps, until last night. Risdale was not a likely man to forgive, and his daughter, who was just like him in disposition, was not the woman to put up with insults. But last night—I am told on the highest authority" (I may as well say here, Shurcocks's authority I subsequently heard was Mr. Risdale's cook, who had gathered particulars from the cook, who was on very friendly terms with the footman), "the story is about to be cleared up. Quite late, a person dressed as a lady, who obtained access to Mr. Risdale on the plea that she came on business connected with—The lady was with Mr. Risdale half an hour, during which loud talking was distinctly audible. Then the lady rushed from the room and left the house, and shortly afterward Mr. Risdale's bell rung; and on the footman answering it, his master ordered him, in a most furious tone, to send a message to the police. In the most overpowering excitement, to bring instantly—some brandy-and-water."

"Most wonderful! And then I suppose another marvel followed?"

"Eh! What do you expect now?"

"Why, that when the brandy-and-water came, Mr. Risdale drank it."

"Nothing of the sort, Apscombe, if you're going to turn the thing into ridicule, I've done;" and he took up his hat, offended.

"Nay, Mr. Shurcocks, never mind me; I'm all attention. Well?"

"Oh, I hardly know that I have any thing more to say, sir."

"Curious," I murmured, pondering the probability of my customer and Mr. Risdale's daughter having the same person.

"What's curious?" inquired Shurcocks, eagerly. "Oh, nothing."

"Yes, but you must mean something. You thought of something. I don't want to learn what was in your mind, but I will know."

"What is the lady's name, Shurcocks?"

"Sanity."

"Thank you. That's all."

"All!"

"Nothing more."

"Good-morning, Mr. Apscombe;" and he took his hat; "this is not quite the way in which to treat a friend, Mr. Apscombe. It's not at all the way—leaving the thing in the middle—I shall find out." And away he went, in a fume.

Directly he was gone I began to search diligently for the torn glove.

"It was Mrs. Santley who came here, of course," I said to myself. "and I should like to know the mystery of the glove, the loss of which made her so uneasy. The article was soon found, and inside it, pushed up toward the fingers, after the fashion of ladies, I discovered a portion of an old envelope, on one side of which were pencil memoranda of the name of another lady, and on the other the following address: "Mrs. Julia Santley, Clarence Cottage, Carville." The mystery was now explained. Mrs. Santley, wishing her visit to remain a secret, was vexed at the loss of this piece of paper, which she had inadvertently left in the torn glove.

In the afternoon in came Shurcocks again. He had forgotten his displeasure. He was big with news. Mysteriously approaching me, he whispered hoarsely—

"He's raving mad, Sir."

"Mr. Risdale?"

"Yes, it's all out now. He has admitted that he behaved like a brute to his daughter last night. I guess she's in distress or something of the sort, and came to ask help, and he tantamount to turned her out of the room. But Risdale is an old man now, between seventy and eighty, and a reaction has set in this morning, and he's horrified at the recollection of his conduct, and would give any thing to see her again; but she has refused to address, and no one has any notion where she lives. Yes, he's raving, Sir. Our two doctors are with him, and our rector and his curate; for Risdale is worth thirty thousand pounds at the least, and must not be neglected."

The information was much desired by the unhappy old gentleman I no doubt possessed through the torn glove; and when Shurcocks was gone I determined to set Mr. Risdale myself, to set for Danes House. On my arrival there I found great excitement and confusion prevailing. I was flatly refused admission.

"You don't know what's happened, Mr. Apscomb," said the footman, a civil fellow, whom I knew slightly. "The body of Mr. Risdale's daughter has just been washed ashore and brought here. So you can guess master's not fit to see any one."

"Is it possible!" I exclaimed, in horror.

"There's just a chance of a mistake," continued the footman, "but not much. Lor, you would've, it's been so knocked about that no one in the world could say what it was; but from the clothes, and the dress too, agreeing with those of a lady who came last night, and now turns out to have been Mr. Sentley (but you were no name, and suffered no one to see her face), none of us have any doubt about it. My master is certain of it, but the poor squire is quite beside himself, and hardly understands any thing."

"What is the end, then?—that Mrs. Santley comes to justice?"

"No one knows. It seems that there was a set to-do between her and her father, and as no one of her set was present she left in a passion. She neither said where she came from nor where she was going. Mist like she came by railway, and was going back there by the walk across the cliffs, a mad thing to do such a night, fell over."

"Well, I must have been very near all along the coast," I remarked. "James, could you let me see the body? It is not curiosity. I have a good reason."

At first he refused, but ultimately consented, if he should find no one in the room. He left me for a minute, and then returning, beckoned.

I followed him into a darkened bedchamber, and there, lay—

Yes, they were right. Figure and dress were the same. The features were all but obliterated, but the hair, of a strong reddish color, remained. But you will readily guess where, after taking in these main particulars, my eyes traveled. Above and on the hand. The torn glove was not there. I was satisfied. They were not my Clare. The corpse was not that of Mrs. Santley.

I was wrong in what followed. Yet I acted to the best of my judgment. If I have since received my discovery a great trouble might have been averted. Even now, after the lapse of several years, I am not sure of determination I formed at that time. But we are poor, short-sighted mortals, all.

Scarcely away, I resolved to say nothing, but to immediately set out for Marvills, a place about seven miles distant. The railway for the poor place as Little Mattseys then was, yet, as it lay in the route between two large towns, it possessed a railway station, and I could take me there. I would find out Mrs. Santley, and bring her back myself.

My project was soon carried out, and I quickly I was at Marvills. You need not tell me, good friend reader, that among all the places on the west coast of which Little Mattseys was the last to be found. It will not injure the interest of my narrative, such as it is, if for a sufficient reason I christen the two places specially. I was found Clarence Cottage, and Mrs. Santley was at home.

A few glances convinced me of the state of things. Clarence Cottage was a poor cottage. The door-knocker was thickly muffled. Yes, as usual, there was the combination of poverty and sickness. Mrs. Santley had been confined. At Having told her my mission, she at once said it was she who, very ill, had travelled at a long and cold distance which had befallen her husband, had, after two years' silence, resolved to ask her father's forgiveness, and followed by a violent attack of the husband's disorder which had come on the preceding afternoon, had made her journey without further delay to Little Mattseys, careless of wind and weather. Of her failure in her object I had already heard.

"And now, Mrs. Santley, there is not a moment to lose. Will you kindly tell me if you could then accompany me to Little Mattseys?"

She rather looked back at first, but when I urged upon her the condition in which I left her father, and my assurance, not only of her being heartily welcomed, but probably finding a change in appearance alone would save his life, she consented, and, with her husband's sanction, departed with me.

It was quite evening, and the weather, though not so boisterous as it had been the previous evening, was very bad. My companion and I were rejoiced as we neared our destination. We reached the last station before Little Mattseys. Here we seemed to stop a long while, and something evidently was wrong. Presently it transpired that an accident had occurred to a train on the down line, coming from Little Mattseys, and we were informed that we could proceed no farther.

"Is it a bad accident?" I inquired, with some anxiety, of the station-master.

"I am afraid it is—very," was the reply; "but it has only just happened, and all is confusion. But here come some of the poor sufferers."

As he spoke a ghastly spectacle came in view. Lighted by torch-bearers, there approached along the line four or five parties carrying stretchers. The waiting-room of the station had been roughly made ready to receive them, and all the doctors in the place were in attendance. The passengers who had just alighted huddled together in the booking office.

"Two dead, I am told," was whispered.

"And several injured."

Suddenly I caught sight of one of my neighbors at Little Mateseys.

"What! you were in this unfortunate train, Mr. Brown?"

"Yes, and I am thankful to say uninjured; but there's a sad sight in there, Mr. Apscombe. You heard, I dare say, of some fuss there was in Little Mateseys this morning?"

"Come aside for a moment," I said, and he complied.

"With reference to Mr. Risdale and the supposed death of his daughter, you mean?"

"Yes. Well, inquiry was made at the railway station, which led to the conclusion that the body discovered was not that of Mrs. Santley after all, for that Mrs. Santley had left by train the previous evening for Marvile. No sooner was this communicated to the sad squire than he jumped up and declared he would go to Marvile by the next train; and he started."Int—

"I can guess. It was the train which met with the accident, and—"

"Poor Mr. Risdale is in that room either dying or dead. I saw him dug out from under carriages."

Oh my miserable folly! But for my absurd reticence this, in all likelihood, would not have happened. I might have calmed the poor old gentleman with the full particulars which I could have given. His daughter might have been sent for, and—

But regrets were useless. I had to tell the dismal tale to my companion, and assuredly I stood with her beside her almost expiring parent.

Thankful, however, am I to say that Mr. Risdale, though fatally injured, rallied, and was enabled to be taken home, and lived some days. But they were days well employed, days in which returned affection, and, I trust again expressed, for which his daughter's mind all recollection of previous unkindness.

All Mr. Risdale's property, which before his reconciliation with his daughter he had left to a distant relative, was bequeathed to Mrs. Santley. She and her husband soon came to reside at Danes House, and very good friends have they been to me. I am still at Little Mateseys, which is now become a place of some importance. My business flourishes, and I am making money. But here comes somebody to interrupt me as I draw this brief record to a close. It is past usual business hours. Who can it be?

"Good-evening, Apscombe, good-evening. Eh, busy writing? And several pages too! Bless me, I'm surised author, I suppose. Yet it's no concern of mine; and my motto is, 'Let every body mind his own business,' and not interfere with other people's. However, you may as well tell me, Apscombe, what it is all about? What! you won't? Good-night, Mr. Apscombe; when next I—Ishaw! I never mind, it isn't worth a word, because of course I shall find out."

You, reader, have found out who that is.

THE ELIXIR OF SPRING.

Nor in the bloom and music
That haunt the south wind's breath,
For the bloom may fade at midnight,
And the music be stilled in death;
Not in the bursting fragrance
Of lily or of rose,
For their beauty may be nipped and chilled
By the frost of a single hour;

But in my darling's heart,
Nestled in sunlight there,
Spring's spirit dwells apart
From Heaven and earth and air!
Purer than vernal fragrance,
Brighter than vernal skies—
In my darling's truth and beauty
There's spring that never dies!

MY FIRST PATIENT.

A "SENSATION" STORY.

I AM sitting in my consulting-room in a dingy home in Gloomsbury. The neighborhood is fashionable, being in the immediate vicinity of a mews, and having a strange odor of stone and stabling about it. My consulting-room is so called, locum tenendis, because no one has yet thought fit to consult me in it—that is, no one to speak of, because an elderly female did once plunge into my apartment with her little boy, who had overeaten himself, alleging that the unhappy cub "had overbalanced his heart, poor dear," a diagnosis which did not seem to me, off for a time perplexed me.

I am a surgeon, and have been two years a qualified practitioner. But as yet, save the elderly lady referred to, I have had no patients. My door-lamp is the brightest, and burns the bluest of any in the neighborhood. My brass-plate is the largest and the handsomest. I have been called out of church on an average four times every Sunday; the policeman regularly hammers at my door, in a manner to disturb the whole street, in the midst hours of the night; paragraphs in the Piccadilly Peeper, the local organ of the district, have regularly set forth the imaginary accidents that I have attended with my usual "promptitude and kindliness of heart," but it has been all to no purpose. I am sure I pay rates for my country, but my country will not be liked. My practice in anatomy is still confined to the dissection of my daily nutrition chop; and in despair I had given pills to all my servants, including my boy in buttons, till they struck for board wages, with an increase contingent on the consumption of draughts and powders; and I had serious thoughts of taking one of my own medicine myself. My last card fa ul. A case of measles and a prize cozy, with an inj tion, "For Proficiency in Pathology," framed in the full view of the street of the fashionable, only tempted thieves and no patients; and a policeman called to suggest that I was not to be so lavish of my plate. Poor fellow! he little knew all were dummies. I had written paragraphs in the Lancet on "Hydrocephalus" and "Asphyxia," and had even serious thoughts of writing a book, and was considering sitting solitary in my room, musing on the bitterness of solitudinary things, especially of aloes and other drastics, when a rap came at the door. A dun, by Jove!—a tax-gatherer, the true Prospective which never ebbs, I thought. I listened; a lady's voice! The rascal Jack had opened the front-door to her, as if he knew it was a dun, and a moment after speared, grinning: "A patient, Sir." "A what?" I said, half beside myself. "A lady, Sir! a tenth dress!"

I thrust the novel I had been reading—"The Three Spaniels"—under the desk-cushion, put my hair, opened my lancet-case, and, after waiting the customary professional two which tradition has established—to convince a patient of the presence of one's engagements—my first patient was ushered in. She was closely veiled, petite rather than tall, young, graceful, stylish—I was prepared to take an affidavit on all these points before the President of the College of Surgeons, if need had been—and I saw at once, to my immense relief, in the exercise of my profession, a powder or a saline mixture, a pill night and morning, with a draught at bedtime, would be sufficient. I could hope.

When seated, a voice, sweet and melodious—I have subsequently ascertained it is extraordinarily so—said, "You will perhaps be surprised at my calling on you alone?

I was, indeed; but gracefully conveying that a multitude of beautiful patients in waiting was the normal routine of my daily experience, the fair patient continued:

"I have called on you on a matter of the most imminent importance."

I bowed again.

"I have the happiness and good fortune to be married to one of the best fellows in the world. He is seriously ill—I fear dangerously; the medical man we have engaged is unremitting in his attentions, but he seems very much alarmed at the dark as to the nature of the complaint, and, indeed, seems so far overwhelmed with the character and severity of the malady as to be unable to cope with it. I have consulted my own fears rather than his wishes, and have come to you, thinking additional advice could be advantageously had. I am a stranger in London—a stranger, without a few grievous ashes my husband's family; and I think the gravest indiscretion to be married without the consent of his relatives, who are bitterly arrayed against me; and I am sure from my own feelings, that if my love for me was said with an air of the most tender and pathetic simplicity; and, as if to convince me of the fact—he had been hitherto engaged to no one previously—with the most natural and graceful action in the world, lifted her veil.

I am a timid superstitious, nor imaginative; but I was startled. I had, as I have already said, been reading "The Three Spaniels," and here was the heroine of the book. Here was a lady, quite as beautiful, quite as petite, quite as young, with the same identical "feather" flaxen curls, the same dazzling blue eyes, the same tiny mouth, the same quiet and subdued manner and sweet voice. I involuntarily looked back, half expecting to see a pistol, a poisoner, a bigamist—all great criminals are pretty in modern novels. I felt agitated; and my fears were calmed when the water outside the door tone in the world, she suggested that I should accompany her in her carriage which was waiting for her house.

I ventured to ask the symptoms of my future patient. The lady explained—with downcast, tearful eyes red, partial paralysis of the extremities, excessive nervous irritability."

I saw at once the chronic arsenical poisoning of the worst. I suggested, "the irritability accompanied by prostration, with impaired respiration." And, as I expected, the answers were affirmative. I saw at once—poisoning by arsenic. I, said I to myself, am called on to lull suspicion when it is too late. Yet, it is too true, this is another beautiful demon—here is the same petrel form, the same grace, the same expression, nervous color, the same shower of radiant curls. She is very beautiful; and by all the experience set forth in that source of life, the novel-reading, but is about to become guilty of murder or arson at least.

The carriage stopped at a handsome house in a handsome square in the West End. I sprang the patient asleep. My worst suspicions were realized—fever, exfoliation of the cuticle of the tongue, the shrinking of the eyes into the head, excessive diuresis—I will expose the machinations of this vile creature, unmask this villainy, defeat the cunning of this horrid crime. But how? "Madam," I said, with promptitude, "this is a serious case—a very serious case. I must watch it—consult with—I will stay here to-night." Awed by my manner, and perhaps alarmed by the evidence of my sagacity, the unconscious lady led me to a bed—I would watch; and I saw in imagination a cruel edifice—a trial at the Old Bailey or in Westminster Hall—a verdict—a sentence—a dreadful fervor. The thought was perhaps selfish; but criminals must be punished and Justice must have its course.

I had read in a French book about a great criminal was detected in the act of murdering his wife by the unconscious husband, who had watched and seen the reflection of the assassin stilling the cries of his victim with a pillow. I determined to see to it that the same occurred.

I placed the mirror in such a way as to command the head of the bed; and having, with the consent of the patient, who seemed passive in the hands of his fiendish wife—strange fatuity—made the necessary dispositions for my watch, I placed myself in an arm-chair. I sat for some time musing on the terrible effects of the poisoning by small doses, administered by a cunning hand. I saw in imagination the cruel and ruthless assassin stealthily encroaching, as a serpent envelops its victim in its folds, on the life of her husband, and the effects of torture conscious to its designs. I thought of the terrible sufferings—the protracted agony—the gradual prostration of the victim—the gloating cruelty of the poisoner, an hour by hour she watched and measured the fading strength of her prey, and the trembling—I suppose I fell asleep.

I was awoke suddenly by the door opening stealthily, noiselessly. Ah! it is true—my worst suspicions were realized. I did not move. A figure—I did in a lower dress entered. The looking-glass before me covered the head of the bed; the figure fell within its angle of incidence. I saw at once it was the guilty wife. She still noiselessly moved toward the bed of the bed. She addressed some remark to her victim. He was awake; and I saw at once, from a table close by a number and a vase of antique form, from which, still noiselessly, she poured a draught. I saw it all in an instant—the looking-glass revealed every movement. She raised the goblet—the unhappy husband raised himself on his elbow. He was about to drink.

"Stay, demon!" I said, in a voice of thunder, addressing the lady: "would you poison your husband? Stay—drink not of the accursed draught—it is poison!" The lady gave a shriek, and the glass fell upon the floor.

I heard him say, sustaining the fluid. I examined and tasted. It was—toast and water!

I received my cause next morning from a brother practitioner. The patient was a M.P., engaged—from his popular manners, a taste for literature, and philanthropic and social charisma—in public dinners in the whitebait season, particularly those held at Greenwich. He was suffering from bilious remittent indigestion, caused by his immaterial duties in that respect. His young wife, with a perhaps pardonable anxiety, had overrated the severity of the complaint, and I had been misled by novels into believing that pretty women are generally demons. I am wiser now; but this was my first and last patient.

MORAL.—Do not accept spasmodic pictures in morbid fiction as the criterion of nature. Don't take what you see in a looking-glass to be a fact, or more than partial evidence of the truth and reality of what you hear. Above all, do not suppose that women are wicked because they are pretty.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

A BONNET without a face is like the grand-stand without a race.

NOVEL ECONOMY.—A new system of economy is reported to have been discovered by a resident of the Jockey Club. He noticed a poor man with a wooden leg one day without, and the next day with a pair of legs. The next day he saw the supposed legs, but he had changed the wooden leg from the right to the left leg. Surprised at the deception, he went up to the man, and exclaimed, "You have only one leg, and you have two leg on the yesterday!" "Yes," replied the man, "economy, Monsieur," was the response, "with dignity," "I never said I was." I was a novel economy for wooden legs, as it saves not only trowsers, and I change the leg to prevent one leg of the trowsers wearing out before the other."

A purse without money is like the comb without the hair.

The Paris papers have an anecdote of two well-known French artists who traveled last autumn in Scotland. They got up at a wayside inn for the night, finde la maison, when the use of soap was clearly for the curious of the place, and regarded by a somewhat suspicious landlord with a thing of entanglement and astonishingly inclined. Supper was, however, brought in by the landlord's pretty and consisted of roast beef and plum-pudding. Fortunately for the artists, they were familiar with the dish on hand and breaking his hair with the other over the beef, the former handed the next Adonis the fork. F——, the worse-struck, but said nought, and left Dame to the fork and proceeded to the basin, believing what she ate beef was the custom of the place, and B—— made his dinner entirely off the pudding, the latter saying dried to-morrow's breakfast, and went to bed cheerfully. He found in the kitchen, late, considerable difficulty upon his, ever his hair, and the soap. The proof of the purpose to which it had been applied was the next morning when the landlord's pretty daughter had been detected in, having nothing handier, and that it belonged to the artists. Not without considerable merriment on the part of the one has not been able to keep the secret from his Parisian friends, who would may not see the joke of it, if he's round to-day."

The New York ladies are giving at a fearful rate. Red hair is the object.

Some people are there are, imitate men. Notice, that if one of the flock drinks, the rest follow.

What breed of sheep does the ram Stonewall belong to? —Why, the mutton-d, of course.

TO LET.—The Town of Nassau, in the Island of New Providence, Bahamas, belonged by the late Rev. Mr Dill & Davis as a blockade-running port. It would make a splendid Watering Place for the Gulf of the North. Will be let low, the late occupants retiring from business. Immediate Possession. Apply to Downing Street, London, agents for Mr. Victoria Guelph.

THE WORST LOCK OUT.—Wed-lock. Oh, you naughty boy!

WHO'S EASTING?—Nobody.

ASTRONOMICAL.—We are audited to state positively that all the jokes relating to crinoline are not used up. For instance, they do bullet wear such extraordinary things as crinoline!—Because all the heavenly bodies are in the milky way.

NO DOUBT OF IT.—As one of our deputy-sheriffs, a day or two since, was speaking of taking a man to prison, he said he was going to escort him to a lady. "What, take a lady to jail!" said one of the company. "Oh no, not that kind of a lady," was the reply. "But," a lady quickly rejoined, "you would have been glad to have taken one to-day."

FOR SMALL HOUSEKEEPERS.—Life without a great is like meat without a bone.

A Joke without a little is like beer without malt.

DAN. "Jos, what drink do the rebels dislike very much?"

JOS. "I don't know, Dan."

DAN. "Don't you know? Why, meat" (Gen. Meade).

JOS. "Well now what other drink do they dislike?"

DAN. "I can't guess."

JOS. "Why, Sherry, Dan" (Sheridan).

AN ARTFUL SITUATION.—A hoarder.

STERN CHASER.—The "Arms" of the Law.

MANY a young man would like to be Neptune, just to have such a number of snacks upon his face.

PROVERBS MADE LITERAL.

It's a long lane which takes you three hours and a half to get to the end of.

The early bird is generally wide awake.

A wise child knows its alphabet.

A virtuous woman is a useful commodity.

Look before you sweat you see something.

He who sees two aides to every human matter.

Early to bed and early to rise is all very well in theory, but it won't do in practice.

HEARING.—Sambo, giving an account of his sea-voyage, says: "All de passengers was now heavin', and as if that wasn't enough, de captain, gave orders for de ship to heave to, and she did heave, too.

A rather amusing contretemps occurred a few Sundays since in a Presbyterian church near one of the upper town Licensaries. The incumbent, anxious to raise funds for some pious object, had, during the morning, a wooden spoon of the ing-horn poem as a "pickpocket," and being also unable to find the number of his clerical assistant, thought he would write his appeal, get it printed, and placed in the pews on the following Sunday. The whole affair went to the printer's, and told the sexton to get the bills on Saturday night, and to place them in the pews. On Saturday night the sexton sent his son to the printer's office, where he met his fate. "Sir!" of the establishment was puzzled. The youth handed a bundle of bills to the sexton's son, for which money duly distributed in the pews. The astonishment of the congregation and the horror of the clergyman the next morning on finding every pew in the church contained copies of an announcement of the entertainments at the next Assembly Room of a clever female singer, and the fun during the morning week may be better imagined than described. The whole affair was finally the work of the "devil," who carelessly gave the bills to the boy in the hills of the black entertainer in place of those of the printer.

THE FORCE OF EXAMPLE.—It is said that the majority of the literary members of the French will, by imitating "play the Dickens" with that club.

BOOTS OF CONTENTION.—Knocks and Jaw.

A woman's grief is very short. If she loses her husband she gives only for a month.

A blind man, like a newspaper, needs a leading article.

NAUTICAL MORNING.—Sea-weeds.

A WITTY ARCHBISHOP.—A gentleman having bought a table at an auction did not, as he ought to have done, cause to have it taken away. The auctioneer sent to him to be the most un-com-fort-table man he ever sold any thing to.

A few days preceding Garnet's death he made a joke of the very illness with which he was suffering. His physician, coming one morning, observed that he clearly coughed very lusty. "That is very strange," said he, "for I have been practicing all night."

A SUGGESTION.—Never jo in with your friend when he abuses his home or his wife, unless the one is about to be sold, and the other is to be married.

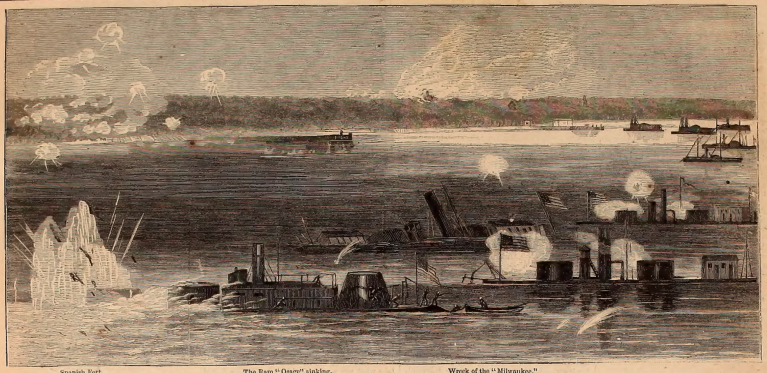
Even a pig on the spit has the consolation of thinking that things may take a turn.

Why may carpenters reasonably believe there to be such thing as stone?—Because they never saw it.

The voyage from Ireland here is long one, but it never easy enough to be a lifeboat to Ireland.

EMPLOYMENT FOR WOMEN.—Matchmaking.

DO YOU GIVE IT UP?



A hundred and one by fifty divide,
And sort let a cipher be duly applied,
Then the answer you would right divide,
You will find that the whole makes but one out of nine.
Chorus. Don't you think so? Don't you think so?

What moral sentence does a weather-cock suggest?
Let it ask your leave Dicky in answer at quest.

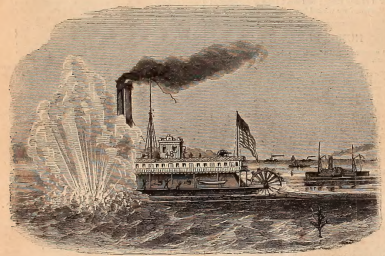
What is most like a cock-robin cock robbing?
A hen stealing.



PARIS FASHIONS FOR APRIL.

THE latest novelty worthy of remark among the Modes is necessary to the introduction of a new style of dress, shown upon two of the figures in our illustration on page 209; but the dresses must be seen to be understood, and a description of them, as they may be said to be wardrobes in themselves—the same garment being capable of presenting two, or even three, different aspects. The dresses depicted in our engraving are readily transformed by folding lapels, buttoned or looped according to the formation of the bodice. The first figure is a dress design on the body and skirt, merely to explain the principle. The second figure is the complete transformation of an almost plain dress into one of ample style and effect. The variety of application of this principle is endless; a wide-sleeved coat in a few instants be converted into a dinner dress, and vice versa, and thus save considerable time and trouble by avoiding the inconvenience of re-dressing. It is not necessarily much more expensive than an ordinary dress; and, when the advantages of a double or triple wear be taken into consideration, it is reasonable to suppose that the innovation will be well patronized. Although we have only simulated distinctions of color in our illustration, the fact is that a dress may be made in any of Spanish Fort. The Ram "Osage" sinking. Wreck of the "Milwaukee."

THE SIEGE OF MOBILE—WRECK OF THE "OSAGE" AND THE MONITOR "MILWAUKEE."

DESTRUCTION OF THE TIN-CLAD No. 48, APRIL 1, 1865.

60-lb. Charge. 100-lb. Charge.

MUSHROOM ANCHOR TORPEDOES.

LANDING OF THE NATIONAL FORCES AT THE MOUTH OF FISH RIVER, BELOW MOBILE, MARCH 23D, 24TH, AND 28TH, 1865.

SHERMAN'S ARMY—THE THIRD DIVISION OF THE FOURTEENTH CORPS CROSSING JUNIPER CREEK, MARCH 9, 1865.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR APRIL, 1865.—[SEE PAGE 267.]

HARPER & BROTHERS

Have just published, from early proof-sheets, by exclusive arrangement, an elegant library edition, uniformly with the Author's Works, on Superfine Calendered Paper, 8vo, Cloth, $2 50.

First Volume of the

HISTORY OF JULIUS CÆSAR.

BY HIS IMPERIAL MAJESTY

NAPOLEON III.

The Atlas, containing Maps to accompany the Volume, will be ready shortly, and may be had by Purchasers of this Edition without extra charge.

PUBLISHED BY HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

☞ HARPER & BROTHERS will send the above Work by Mail, postage free, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $5 50.

"The Greatest of Living Captains."—London Times.

Just Published,

Headley's Life of

Gen'l. W. T. Sherman.

Being an authentic and reliable Record of his early Life, and Remarkable Career, forming the 4th vol. of the Library of Modern American Heroes.

For Youth. 1 vol. 12mo., 368 pages, and 4 Illustrations. Price $1 50. Now ready, uniform with the above, Headley's Lives of Gen. Grant, Gen. Mitchell, and Capt. Ericsson.

For sale by all booksellers. Published by W. H. APPLETON, Bookseller and Publisher, 17 and 19 Grand St., N. Y.

"IT'S ALL UP IN DIXIE."

The last song by Henry Tucker, author of "When this Cruel War is Over."

Price 30 cents. An immense edition already sold in two days. Third edition now ready. Copies sent by mail.

Also just published, Dan Bryant's new Song, "Sticking Pie." Price 30 cents. WM. A. POND & CO.,

No. 547 Broadway, New York.

FAIRY ALBUMS.

For holding 40 Pictures, $1 25; 80 Pictures, $1 50. Trade supplied. Books, Pictures, Albums, etc. Send stamp for mammoth catalogue. W. C. WEMYSS, 625 Broadway, N. Y.

J. WILKES BOOTH.

Photographs, 25 cts. W. C. WEMYSS, 625 Broadway, N. Y.

NEW POCKET ALBUMS, holding 16 Pictures, the BEST CHEAP ALBUM in the market. Price only 75 cts. Photographs of Gens. Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Thomas, Hancock, Presidents Lincoln, Mrs. Lincoln, &c., &c., only 15 cts. each. Catalogues sent free. G.W. TOMLINSON, Publisher, 121 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A powerful stimulant. Rich perfect vegetable. It produces a full set of whiskers or Mustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face, without injury to the skin. Any person using this Ongount, and finding it not as represented (by inclosing one of the feet), can have their money refunded them at any time within 3 months from day of purchase. Price $1 per Pott, sealed and post-paid, to any address, on receipt of Money.

A. C. CLARK,

P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

AGENTS, COME and EXAMINE

An Invention urgently needed by every body, or somebody, sent free by mail for 60 cts., which retails for $2 easily. Address R. L. WOLCOTT, No. 170 Chatham Square, N. Y.

Prize Stationery Packets.

Splendid Steel Engravings and Photograph Card Pictures.

We want agents everywhere to sell our goods, which will pay 500 per cent. profit, and our stationery Packets contain good paper and envelopes and a fine assortment of Jewelry. GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES given as premiums to agents. Circular sent free with sample packet, together with elections and full particulars to agents, sent on receipt of 25 cents.

HASKINS & CO., 56 Deekman St., New York.

THE May Number of DEMOREST'S ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY, with splendid STEEL ENGRAVING OF FASHION, the model Parlor Magazine, with Spring and Summer fashions, and other extraordinary attractions and novelties, containing splendid views of Central Park, Mercury Statue, original stories, Sketches, Music, full-size Patterns, &c., &c. Now ready. 15 cents. Yearly, $2 00, with a valuable premium. Published by W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, 473 Broadway, N. Y.

Specimen copies sent free on receipt of Price.

Love on the Brain.

Kisses, Blisses, hearts, darts, arrowsin pain,

Every body's troubled once with Love on the Brain.

A real live, side-splitting, love-sick song that pleases every body. Words by MR. M. A. KIDDER, Author of Victory at Last. Published by WM. JENNINGS DEMOREST, 473 Broadway St., N. Y., and sold by all the Music dealers. Sent free on receipt of the Price, 30 cts.

WHY SQUANDER MONEY on useless articles climbing to our hair, when you can purchase E. Stockton Wolfe's preparation for the purpose for $2, which will cure the hair of male or female immediately, and will last 6 months? Prepared and manufactured laboratory, N. Y. city. Address me at my residence. E. Stockton Wolfe, Jersey City, N. J.

FREE TO ALL.

CURIOUS, Soldiers, Everybody, should send their address, and receive a beautiful illustrated paper containing the choicest literature of the day. SENT GRATIS.

CHARLES K. HACKLEY, 81 Nassau St., N. Y.

UPHAM'S PIMPLE BANISHER

Removes Pimples on the Face, Freckles, Moth &c. It also refines the skin and beautifies the complexion. No dollar's complaints attended it. Price 25 cents. Mailed to any address, for 75 cents, by S. C. UPHAM, 28 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE JAPANESE HAIR STAIN

Colors the Hair, Whiskers, and Mustache

of a beautiful dark or brown. It contains no injurious preparations. Color will not fade or wash out. Only 50 cents a box. Mailed to any address, for 75 cents, by S. C. UPHAM, 28 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Important Announcement.

GREAT SALE of WATCHES, CHAINS, DIAMOND RINGS, &C. One Million Dollars Worth!

TO BE DISPOSED OF AT

ONE DOLLAR EACH!

Without regard to value!! Not to be paid for until you know what you are receive!!!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES!

All to be sold at One Dollar Each!!

300 Blade Bones, sets of	20 cts	to $150
150 " " with Bells and Castters	30	200
500 Silver Forged Table Coffee Urns	75	500
500 " Chasing Dishes	50	100
1000 " Tea Pots	50	100
2500 " Syrup Cups with Salvers	50	50
2500 " Cream Pitchers	50	50
3500 " Castors	15	50
5000 " Fine Silver Cake Baskets	50	100
5000 Dozen Silver Tea Spoons, per dozen	3	10
10,000 " Table Spoons and forks, per dozen	5	20
200 Gents' Gold Hunting-Case Watches	20	40
250 Ladies' Gold and Enamelled-Case do.	15	30
300 Gents' Hunting-Case Silver Watches	10	20
200 Diamond Rings	50	100
5,000 Gold Vest and Neck Chains	4	8
5,000 Gold Oval Band Bracelets	4	8
5,000 Jet and Gold Bracelets	4	8
5,000 Chatelaine Chains and Gard Chains	5	20
1,000 Solitaire and Cluster Rings	5	10
5,000 Coral, Opal, and Emerald Brooches	4	8
5,000 Music, plain, and Enamelled Lockets, Drops	4	8
7,500 Gents' Gold and Enamel Ear Drops	4	8
4,000 California Diamond Breast-Pins	5	10
5,000 Gold and Vest Chain Slides	3	10
4,000 Fob and Vest Ribbon Slides	3	10
5,000 Sets of Gents' Gilt Sleeve Buttons, Studs, and Shirt Pins	4	8
3,000 Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc.	4	8
10,000 Miniature Lockets	2 50	10
4,000 " Pocket Knives	5	10
5,000 Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, etc.	3	8
5,000 Gold Pens	4	8
5,000 Chased Gold Rings	4	8
5,000 Stone and Cameo Rings	2 50	8
10,000 California Diamond Rings	5	20
7,500 Jet and Gold Ear Drops	4	8
6,000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Cameo, Pearl, Coral, Gold Stone, &c.	4	15
10,000 Gold Pens, Silver Extension-Holders and Pencils	4	10
10,000 Gold Pens and Gold-Mounted Holders	5	20
5,000 Gold Pens and Gold-Mounted Holders	10	30
5,000 Ladies' Gilt and Jet Buckles	5	15
5,000 Ladies' Gilt and Jet Belt Buckles	5	15

ARRANDALE & CO.: Manufacturers' Agents, No. 167 Broadway, New York, under the Astor House. A list of goods will be sold for One Dollar Each.

In consequence of the recent stagnation of trade in the manufacturing districts of England, through the war having cut off the supply of cotton, a large quantity of valuable Jewelry, originally intended for the English market, has been sent to this country for sale, and WILL BE SOLD AT ANY SACRIFICE!

Under these circumstances ARRANDALE & CO., acting as Agents for the principal European Manufacturers, have received the entire Stock now Custom-House subject to the following regulations:

Certificates of the various articles are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and, when ordered, are taken out without choice, and sold for one dollar each, without giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the certificate you will be informed what it represents, and then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may therefore get a Gold Hunting-Case Watch, or any Set of Jewelry on our list for ONE DOLLAR.

Send 25 cents for Certificate.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for forwarding the certificates, which we will send on receipt of 25 cents each, 25 cents each, which must be enclosed when the Certificate is sent to us. Five certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; one hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—We want agents in every regiment, and in every town and county in the country, and those to whom we each will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to One Dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps.

ARRANDALE & CO.,

No. 167 Broadway, New York.

What the "Press" say of us.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION.—A rare opportunity is offered for obtaining a variety of Watches, Jewelry, Silver Ware, &c., by Messrs. Arrandale & Co., at No. 167 Broadway, New York. A certificate, which represents the article, and all are offered at one dollar each. The distribution is to be made by mixing the certificates, and selecting a certain article, enclosed in an envelope, and not selected as to the article you are solicited to buy, but as to the article, which will certainly be worth more than that amount, and probably many times that amount, under this of investing a dollar.—Sunday Times, N. Y. City, Feb. 19, 1865.

MESSRS. ARRANDALE & Co. have long been personally known as to their standing, and as to be very worthy of public confidence.—N. Y. Scottish Americus Journal, Feb. 18, 1865.

We have inspected at the office of Arrandale & Co.'s Agency the splendid assortment of Jewelry, the large assortment of fashionable and valuable jewelry of the newest designs, the large and very great quantity of silver ware, and understand that the whole of these newly-imported articles are to be sold at one dollar each, thus affording a great advantage to buyers, and affording extensive employment to the trade. We know the firm in question to be very respectable and thoroughly worthy of public confidence, and recommend it to friends to trust advertisement.—N. Y. Albion, Sept. 3, 1864.

By MESSRS. ARRANDALE & CO.'s arrangement the advantages must be on the side of the customer, for he has every chance of getting the certificate, indicating a prize. He knows what he will get for his dollar beforehand, and he is not obliged to buy the article unless it suits him.—N. Y. Herald, Sept. 8, 1864.

JEWELRY FOR LADIES.—The most eligible and profitable employment we have heard of for ladies is the sale of Jewelry. Messrs. Arrandale & Co. (Gift Distributors of Arrandale & Co. A lady of our acquaintance has been very successful in this line, and not only is filling her own purse, but also in doing a good turn to those to whom she sold the certificate, which she received from our advertising column. Gentlemen can also be thus engaged.—N. Y. Evening Mail, August 31, 1864.

In our columns the reader will find an advertisement of Arrandale & Co., dealers in watches, jewelry, silverware. In payment of that advertisement we have received a watch, which is a very good one, and is warranted in saying that, both in finish and quality, they have conducted their business liberally. They intend not to be just what they had been represented.—True Democrat (Lockport, N.Y.), August 31, 1864.

The British Whig of Kingston, C. W., say, Nov. 28, 1864, one of our lady subscribers became an agent for Arrandale & Co., and by request brought some twenty articles, out as prizes for her agency, to the office for inspection, and without hesitation we can state that each and every one of the parties who took the articles out of the recipients, and none of them six times.

The Watches are Gentlemen's and Ladies' Gold and Tea Spoons, Gold Watches, Ladies' Chains, Pins, Rings, Studs, Sets, &c., and are sent by Arrandale & Co. to the value of $1 each.—Angelica Reporter, N. Y. State, Feb. 15, 1865.

$10 A DAY MADE by any one. Send stamp for circulars. J. W. STEPHENS, 329 Broadway, N. Y.

LANGENHEIM'S IMPROVED MAGIC LANTERN AND PICTURES. Stereopticon and dissolving views actually colored. Superb Pictures and complete apparatus, &c., &c. For catalogues and information, apply to W. LANGENHEIM, P. O. Box 2370, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Drum-Beat, a collection of 53 patriotic songs and quartettes as sung by our army on their victorious march, including "Marching Along," "John Brown," "Tramp! Tramp! the Boys are Marching," "We will and Retreat say More," "Up with the Star and Bars," "Rally round the Flag," "Battle Hymn," "Welcome Sherman Home," &c., &c. Sent by mail on receipt of 40 cts. S. T. Gordon, 102 Broadway, N. Y.

Watson's Metallic Artificial Legs—Light, cost, cheapest, most durable, and most natural ever invented. Price $75 to $100. Send for circular.

J. W. WESTON, 491 Broadway, N. Y.

JEWELRY! JEWELRY!

$200,000 Worth of

Watches, Chains, and Fine Jewelry, all to be sold for $1 each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you have got, and then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Certificates will be sent for a gold watch, diamond ring, or any set of jewelry on our list for $1, and all articles will be sent by mail or express, and there are no blanks. Five certificates will be sent for $1; 13 for $2; 35 for $5; and 100 for $15. Descriptive circulars and those who act as agents. Catalogues, containing full list and particulars with the certificate. Address

FORWARDING AGENCY COMPANY,

No. 167 Broadway, Arrandale Hotel, New York City.

$1. WHISKERS. $1.

For One Dollar I will send, sealed and post-paid, the "Grecian Compound," highly perfumed, which I warrant to force a heavy growth of hair on the smoothest face in five weeks, or upon bald heads in eight weeks, without staining or injury to the skin. Address in confidence, or money refunded. Descriptive circulars mailed for 3cts. Address R. SANFORD, Lansingburgh, N. Y.

SHULTS' CURLIQUE. For curling the Hair. Price by mail $1. Warranted. Address

C. P. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

$1. WHISKERS. $1.

For One Dollar I will send, sealed and post-paid, the "Grecian Compound," highly perfumed, which I warrant to force a heavy growth of hair on the smoothest face in five weeks, or upon bald heads in eight weeks, without staining or injury to the skin. Address in confidence, or money refunded. Descriptive circulars mailed for 3cts. Address R. SANFORD, Lansingburgh, N. Y.

The Brazilian Hair Curlie.

One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair into wavy ringlets or heavy massive curls. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of 50 cts. Address

S. S. CHASE, Lisbon, N. Y.

Shults' Ongent warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED. Business light, pleasant, and honorable. Those now engaged are realizing from $15 to $30 per day at profit. Send stamp for Circular. Address P. O. Drawer 32, Troy, New York.

YOUNG MAN,

Would you like to get a fine beard or mustache? If so, use The Prussian Compound, prepared by the celebrated Dr. La Ville of Paris. Warranted to force a heavy growth of hair upon the smoothest face in six weeks without stain or injury to the skin. Sent, post-paid, to any address on receipt of $1. Address

P. O. Drawer 259, Osbego, N. Y.

PORTABLE

PRINTING OFFICES

For Merchants, Druggists, Hospitals, small Job Printers, &c. Address ADAMS PRESS CO., 35 Ann St., New York. Specimen Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., Six Cents.

SOMETHING NEW FOR AGENTS.

Soldiers and Sailors wanted in every county for Prospectus. Address LAP. E. MANCHES, 469 Broadway, N.Y.

"How 'tis Done." Whiskers in 6 weeks. Gambling exposed. Fortune-telling. Ventriloquism, &c. 100 great secrets. Every boy his own amusement. Sent for 25 cts.

Weston's Metallic Artificial Legs—Light, cost, cheapest, most durable, and most natural ever invented. Price $75 to $100. Send for circular.

J. W. WESTON, 491 Broadway, N. Y.

JEWELRY! JEWELRY!

$200,000 Worth of

Watches, Chains, and Fine Jewelry, all to be sold for $1 each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you have got, and then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Certificates will be sent for a gold watch, diamond ring, or any set of jewelry on our list for $1, and all articles will be sent by mail or express, and there are no blanks. Five certificates will be sent for $1; 13 for $2; 35 for $5; and 100 for $15. Descriptive circulars and those who act as agents. Catalogues, containing full list and particulars with the certificate. Address

FORWARDING AGENCY COMPANY,

No. 167 Broadway, Arrandale Hotel, New York City.

$10 A DAY MADE by any one. Send stamp for circulars. J. W. STEPHENS, 329 Broadway, N. Y.

LANGENHEIM'S IMPROVED MAGIC LANTERN AND PICTURES. Stereopticon and dissolving views actually colored. Superb Pictures and complete apparatus, &c., &c. For catalogues and information, apply to W. LANGENHEIM, P. O. Box 2370, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Drum-Beat, a collection of 53 patriotic songs and quartettes as sung by our army on their victorious march, including "Marching Along," "John Brown," "Tramp! Tramp! the Boys are Marching," "We will and Retreat say More," "Up with the Star and Bars," "Rally round the Flag," "Battle Hymn," "Welcome Sherman Home," &c., &c. Sent by mail on receipt of 40 cts. S. T. Gordon, 102 Broadway, N. Y.

Dr. Poland's

WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

THE GREAT AND POPULAR REMEDY FOR

Colds, Coughs, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Croup, and Whooping-Cough.

Cures Gravel and all Kidney Diseases.

There has been many severe cases in Boston and vicinity cured by the WHITE PINE COMPOUND, which can be proved to, and hundreds of cases of KIDNEY complaints, CURED ENTIRELY by taking the White Pine Compound, have been reported by Druggists.

Among all the popular medicines offered for sale, no one has ever obtained a more just claim than the White Pine Compound. This medicine was first made as late as the spring of 1856, and was used by one of the most celebrated who was afflicted with an inflammation of the throat. A cure was effected by it. This induced others to apply for the same remedy, and every one using it received a great benefit. The article, was then brought before the public, and from that time to when it was called White Pine Compound. During that month it was advertised for the first time.

Some time in 1856 an individual, who purchased a bottle for a friend, was not only cured of the cough, but also of a severe kidney complaint of ten years' endurance. This being truly a discovery, this man was mentioned in a skilful physician, who replied in substance that the bark of White Pine was one of the best diuretic known, provided its astringency could be counteracted. If the other articles entering into the Compound would effect this, a fortune was in the Medicine! The fortune has not yet been realized, but the hundreds of cures effected by the Compound, in the most aggravated cases of Kidney diseases, including Diabetes, proves it to be a wonderful Medicine for such ailments. A large number of proprietors have since started White Pine Medicines.

Dr. Poland's White Pine Compound is so good for kidney inflammation, it is also a wonderful curative in Rheumatism and Lung diseases. It is strengthening, and always inflammation that hoarseness and soreness are removed and if a cough commences, a few doses will check it, so the originator where relied in very severe cases has not failed in a single case, and is now offered to the public by four hours.

There is a very natural reason for this. The bark, and even the leaves or "needles," of White Pine, contain exhilarating properties. The Indians who inhabit the bark of White Pine in treating diseases long before the settlement of America by Europeans.

A wash of the bark, steeped in water, is exceedingly useful in relieving inflammation and cleansing old sores. In fine, the virtues of White Pine Bark are known everywhere, and Dr. Poland, Boston, has succeeded in the White Pine Compound was so favorably received as the public.

The past year has given a great opportunity to test the virtues of the WHITE PINE COMPOUND, and it has an unusual time for Colds and Coughs, and very large quantities of the White Pine Compound have been sold and used with the happiest effects. It speaks well for the confidence that the people living where it is prepared as with its merits.

TESTIMONIALS

A very large number of important testimonials have already been received from Physicians, Clergymen, Apothecaries, and indeed from all classes in society, speaking in the most flattering terms of Dr. Poland's White Pine Compound.

Dr. Nichols, of Northfield, Vt., says:

"I have for years regarded your remedy as the very efficacious not only in coughs and other pulmonary affections, but also in affections of the kidneys, and in fact in diseases of the other kindred organs."

Rev. J. B. Romney, of Romney, N. H., writes:

"I have for years regarded your remedy as the very best. I can truly say that I regard it as the best medicine for coughs, colds, &c., that I have ever used, and have recommended for a cold, and it works charmingly."

Rev. P. H. Sweetser, of South Reading, writes:

"Having had occasion to test the value of your valuable medicinal properties of the White Pine, I was prepared, on seeing your advertisement of your White Pine Compound, to give the medicine a trial. It has been used by members of my family for several years, and has never failed to relieve, in some cases of serious kidney difficulties with excellent results. Several of our friends have also received much benefit from the Compound. We intended to keep it always on hand.

From JAMES J. HOYT.

BRADFORD, N. H., Sept. 1860.

DR. POLAND.—In the fall of 1857 I took a very violent cold, which settled on my lungs, causing a severe pain in my side, and raising blood. I was also very badly afflicted with Kidney Complaint. I obtained the Kidney Remedy. For the three years past I have been very much troubled with my lungs and lungs, choking up of the throat on lonesome night, with a bad cough after raising blood; I felt that my constitution must be short unless I got relief. The Spring I was induced to try your White Pine Compound, though very little was said about it. To my astonishment, before I had taken two bottles, my cough was better for the first time trouble also, and I was nights without choking up and raising so much. I have taken nearly three bottles, and feel that I am well from it.

I would say, that my father's family is inclined to consumption, my father, mother, and sister having died of it.

From STEPHEN BARTLETT.

BRADFORD, N. H., July, 1860.

DR. POLAND.—I had been afflicted with Kidney Complaint for a long time, and had a bad cough of ten years' standing, when your agent called and left a sample bottle. No one of my acquaintance expected I would get any benefit from it, but the bottle of your White Pine Compound have cured me of both the cough and Kidney Complaint. I was told by many that I was in consumption, and was so badly afflicted with a cough that she sat up only about two hours in a night for a month, and thought she was going in a quick consumption. She took only one bottle of your Compound, and it cured her. She is just as well now as ever she was.

The White Pine Compound, advertised at length in our columns, is not only up to the standard, but it is a highly approved medicine. Dr. J. W. Poland, the inventor, has the confidence of those who have tried his medicine. It will be enjoyed while laboring soulfully many years as a Physician of great ability, and a thorough student. He has made experiments which issued in his medical discovery.—Boston Saturday and Reflector.

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND,

GEORGE W. SWETT, M.D.,

Proprietor

Will be manufactured in future at the NEW ENGLAND BOTANICMEDFOT, 109 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

Under the supervision of REV. J. W. POLAND, M.D.

DR. SWETT will attend to the preparation of the Compound, to whom all orders should be addressed.

Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers in Medicine every where.

Price 75 Cents per Bottle.

U.S.7-30 LOAN.

By authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, the undersigned has assumed the General Subscription Agency for the sale of United States Treasury Notes, bearing seven and three-tenths per cent. interest, per annum, known as the Seven-Thirty Loan.

These Notes are issued under date of June 15th, 1865, and are payable three years from that time, in currency, or are convertible at the option of the holder into

U. S. 5-20 SIX PER CENT. GOLD-BEARING BONDS.

These bonds are worth a premium which increases the actual profit on the 7-30 loan, and its computation from State and Municipal taxation adds from one to three per cent. more, according to the rate levied on other property. The interest is payable in currency coupons, which are detached from each note, which may be cut off and sold to any bank or banker.

The interest amounts to

One Cent per Day on a	$50 Note.
Two Cents "	$100 "
Ten "	$500 "
20 "	$1000 "
1 Dollar "	$2000 "

Notes of all the denominations named will be promptly furnished upon receipt of subscriptions, and the notes forwarded at once. The interest to 15th June next will be paid in advance.

THE ONLY LOAN IN MARKET

now offered by the Government, and it is confidently expected that its superior advantages will make it the

GREAT POPULAR LOAN OF THE PEOPLE.

Less than 300,000,000 of the Loan authorized by the last Congress are now on the market. This amount, at the rate at which it is being absorbed, will not be subscribed for within four months, when the notes will undoubtedly command a premium, as has uniformly been the case on other subscriptions to the Loans.

In order that citizens of every town and section of the country may be afforded facilities for taking the Loan, the National Banks, State Banks and Private Bankers throughout the country have generally agreed to receive subscriptions at par. Subscribers will select their own agents, in whom they have confidence, and will not be able to be responsible for the delivery of the notes for which they receive orders.

JAY COOKE,
SUBSCRIPTION AGENT, Philadelphia.

March 25, 1865.

PLAYING CARDS.

The American Card Company's New Union Playing Cards, National Emblems.

They are the prettiest card made, and suit the popular idea. The cards are EAGLES, SHIELDS, STARS, and PEACE. Consists in place of KING, QUEEN or KNAVE, Goddess of Liberty and Major-Gen. Scott.

All the games can be played as readily as with cards bearing foreign emblems. Each pack is put up in a slip cover and case, and then in dozen boxes for the trade.

In order that all dealers may have an opportunity to sell these cards, a sample box of twelve packs will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of Five Dollars. Address

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
No. 14 Chambers Street, New York.

GOLD PENS retailing at wholesale prices. Pens, 50c.; 75c.; $1; in silver, $1 to $3, sent by mail. Send stamp for circular. GEO. F. HAWKES, Manufacturer, 64 Nassau Street, New York. Also Pencils.

Brandreth's Pills.

Which are known to be the most reliable purgative while they are harmless for the tenderest age or weakest frame. In full dose, most active and searching in their operation, during the lamest recesses of the body; carrying all impurities to the bowels, from whence they are expelled, thus curing the most life-threatening disease, and are the greatest cures experience has proved their innocence as well as their strength to restore health.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. See upon it B. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING,
NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicines.

PRICES REDUCED.

Gold,	New Styles,
Opaque,	1865.
Transparent,	Square Lace,
Green and	Nottingham
Blue	Lace,
Holland.	Leno Lace,
Bray's	Muslin,
Shades,	Bobinet,
Fixtures,	Rope,
and all	Terry Cloth,
other	Japanese Cloth,
goods in	Damask,
approved	Brocatelle,
styles.	and all other
	Trimmings.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Unguent will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1.—sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of an order. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 195 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Look here, Boys! My Golden Compound will force a beautiful set of whiskers to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days, or money refunded in every case. Price One Dollar, or 3 packages for Two Dollars, by mail. Address DR. FRANKLIN, Colliersa, Illinois.

PINEAPPLE CIDER.

DR. TALBOT'S CONCENTRATED MEDICAL PINEAPPLE CIDER is a preventive of sickness.

The experience that Dr. Talbot has had for the last 26 years convinces him that it is time the public had an article offered that will prevent sickness. The article offered is Dr. Talbot's MEDICATED PINEAPPLE CIDER, designed for all classes.

Old and Young. It is not new to the Doctor, but it is entirely new to the public. One quart bottle will last a person a year. This is rules of a new mode of doctoring: nevertheless it will Save Millions from being sick. Is it not better to pay nine dollars a year to keep from being sick than to pay ten or twenty dollars in doctors' bills, and as much more in loss of time and the suffering consequent on being sick? To prevent sickness, see as follows:

Add one teaspoonful of Medicated Pineapple Cider to tumbler of cold water, and drink the first thing after you get up in the morning, and you will never be sick. Keep it—it will increase the strength, and give

Vigor and Action to the system. A celebrated New York merchant, who has made a thorough trial of the Pineapple Cider, assures Dr. Talbot that he has gained ten pounds of flesh in one month at the first trial. He continues to take as above directed, and finds it very beneficial. It says it is for proved an entire

Preventive to Sickness in his case. Also another well-known gentleman in New York has used the Medicated Pineapple Cider for a month, and says he has been sick one day during that time.

The Wonderful Preparation will increase the strength, give vigor and tone to the system, and regulate digestion. When taken internally, for pains or all kinds—Rheumatism, Cholera, Cholera Infantum, Pains in the Chest, Heartburn, Coughs, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Sprains, Bruises, Sores, Burns, Scalds, etc., etc., acts nothing and quieting effect on the system is most astonishing.

The Cider is an eminent tonic, and will exert great success in treating Fevers, Dyspepsia, Nervous Affections, Loss of Appetite, Weakness, Loss of the Heart's Chronic Diarrhœa, Colic, Dysentery, and Diseases of the Stomach and Bowels. It is also highly recommended by physicians to delicate females, and as an excellent remedy for Suppressed Menses, Whites, Female Weakness, Sciatica, Nephritic Affections, Rheumatism, etc., etc. It never fails to relieve Nervous Tremor, Restlessness, Disturbed Sleep, etc. American herbs have used this article with great success to heighten tone and speed health.

It imparts a cheerfulness to the disposition, and brilliancy to the complexion.

To travelers, especially, it is of incalculable value, and by persons exposed to a sudden change of climate in which the water is likely to vary in quality and tendency. It removes every trace of impurity from the water and renders it agreeable and healthful.

PRICES:

TEN DOLLARS PER DOZEN, CONTAINING ONE GALLON
THREE DOLLARS PER BOTTLE (FULL QUART).
ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE (FULL PINT).
ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE (FULL HALF-PINT).

One quart bottle, two pint bottles, or four half-pint bottles sent free by express on receipt of price. For sale every where. One quart bottle mailed free on receipt of 50 cents postage.

I have deposited $10 worth of the above article to the "Northwestern Sanitary Commission and Soldiers' Home Fair," which opens May 30th, to be for the benefit of the Soldiers. R. T. BARDITT, Sole Agent.

No. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, and 74 Washington Street, New York.

BOUND VOLUMES
OF
Harper's Weekly,

From the commencement, will be furnished, free of carriage, on receipt of the price, viz.:

Cloth Binding ..... $7 00 per Volume.
Half Morocco ..... 10 00 "
Each Volume contains One Year.
HARPER & BROTHERS,
Franklin Square, New York.

O'DOR! O'DOR!

DR. BRIGGS'

GOLDEN O'DOR

Will force a beautiful set of whiskers or mustache on the smoothest face in from five to eight weeks, without stain or injury to the skin, or hair on bald head in eight weeks (AND NO HUMBUG). I receive recommendations most every day from persons that have used it and found it genuine. Testimonials of thousands. I will send Dr Briggs' Golden O'Dor, by mail, sealed and post paid in U.S. (Warranted). Send orders to DR. C. BRIGGS,
Druver 6308, Chicago, Ill.

BARD & BROTHER'S (Established 1849)

GOLD PENS,

PEN AND PENCIL CASES. The manufacturer of BARD & WILSON'S PATENT ANGULAR NIB GOLD PENS. 482 B. BARD AND 25 JOHN STREET, Leno, N. Y. Repointing, 50 cents. Send for a Circular.

Beard! Beard! While attached to the British Legation at Constantinople, discovered by a native Greek a composition for producing a luxuriant beard in from 5 to 6 weeks. It was made known to the Queen and several English and French, and now introducing it in America. Will fill and guarantee. It is no humbug, and if not satisfactory, the price will be refunded. Address

F. COOK, Chemist, Box 5643, N. Y.

BASHFULNESS. How to overcome it. See PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, Jan. No. 29 cts. FOWLER & WELLS, Broadway, New York.

A Series of $100 Prize Puzzles

Are now being published in the popular MERRYMAN'S MONTHLY, the best, largest, and cheapest Comic Magazine in the world. Price, Fifteen Cents. Sold by all News Depots. Price 15 cents. Twenty extra cash prizes are given in addition to the great $100 prize each month. Three different numbers (including the last), as specimen, post-paid, for 50 cents. No prize puzzles in other work. AGENEY & CO., 109 Nassau Street, New York.

Make the figure with three strokes of the pencil, without erasing any lines or going over them. Full solution in MERRYMAN. Soldiers, send your address, and numbers, post-paid. The most popular periodical in the army.

Howard's "Improved"

SWEAT-PROOF Soldier's Money-Belt.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by enclosing $1.50 or $3.00, according to the quality desired. Improved English knee Money Belt, for soldiers and sailors, $1.75 and $2. Large discount to dealers. HOWARD BELT CO., 438 Broadway, N. Y.

DR. SCOTT'S ELECTRIC HAIR AND FLESH BRUSHES and cures more ruptures than any other means. Send for circular. Also, electric shocking belts, bandages, crutches, &c. No. 4 ANN STREET. Established 39 years.

$8 OFFICER'S $10 WATCH.

Our whole stock of Imported Watches, being of rich and novel designs, are now offered to officers at reduced prices. Single Watches at Wholesale rates.

AN ELEGANT WATCH in Fine Gold Plated Double Cases Richly Engraved, Turned Centre, Curved Balance, Breguet, English Full Plate Jeweled Movements, adjusted Regulator, Spring Detent, Hunting Bands, and Fine Jeweled White Dial, a serviceable article in running order, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and a Gent's Handsome Vest Chain, and a beautiful MINIATURE GOLD LOCKET, to match, with Double Cases, Dial, and Glass for Two Likenesses. Sent by mail to any part of the army or country for only $10.

A NEAT SILVER WATCH, with Gold Plated Hunting Cases, in Heavy Double Cases, Small Size, same as the above, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and Handsome Vest Chain, Engraved Double Case Locket, etc. Sent by mail to any part of the army or country for only $8.

The Imperial Watch.

Containing a Rare and Wonderful Combination of Mechanical Effects, containing within its cases and attached to its machinery a beautiful and correct working Tuning-Instrument, and a richly adapted Miniature Compass in miniature, rare in Dial, and a Reliable Calendar, indicating day of month, week, etc., in Case, rendering this Watch a perfect STEAM, HEAT, AND TIME INDICATOR. The Beautiful Movement of this valuable Watch is encased in Finely Finished Double Hunting, Maple Sparing D. Lion Case, the outer case being of Solid 18-carat Gold, inner cases of Solid Gold Composition, Richly Engraved Top and Bottom, Key, Case, Locket, and Fancy Vest Chain, Genuine English Imported Jeweled Action, M. J. Tobias' Patent Lever, Patent Regulator, Patent Spiral Balance, Independent Actions, Fine White Dials, Polished Steel Hands, Key, Case, etc., complete, and a Handsome Vest Chain, for the Price of Ordinary Watches. Sent to any part of the country by mail, post-paid, for $20. Every Watch Guaranteed to be a Reliable Timekeeper. Price per single one, as a sample to be sent, to any part of the army or country, $30. CAUTION.—Beware of Counterfeits. Sole Importers, 167 Nassau St., N. Y. Established 1853.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials
AND
IMPORTERS OF PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS.
501 BROADWAY,
Is addition to their extensive stock of PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, have now on hand a full assortment of
STEREOSCOPES & STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS,
Including the most interesting subjects, including War Scenes, American and Foreign Cities and Landscapes, Groups, Statuary Busts, &c., &c. Catalogues sent on receipt of stamp. Views sent by Express with privilege of examination on receipt of $1 each, or $10 per dozen.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS.

We were the first to introduce these into the United States, and we continue to manufacture everything of quality, keeping in price from 50 cents to $50 each. Gold and Silver Stamping done on the premises. Albums sent by Express with privilege of examination on receipt of $1 each, and $10 per dozen.

FINE ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER.

GOLD PHOTOGRAPHIC FRAMES.

Our Catalogue can be had on receipt of stamp. Sent by Express with privilege of examination on receipt of $1 each. Discount to the trade.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Also at their Manufactory, Nos. 591 Broadway, 122 Fifth Avenue, 263 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, and 308 Penn Avenue, Pittsburgh.

Great Closing Sale!!

$650,000 WORTH of Watches, Chains, and Fine Jewelry, all to be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 20 cents for a Certificate, which will name the article you will receive for $1. Then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Among the many fine articles are a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any Set of Jewelry on our list. Don't delay, as this Sale will be for a short time only. Watch's worth, as there are no blanks. Six Certificates will be sent for $1. Twelve for $2. Thirty for $5. Fifty for One Hundred for $12. Great inducements offered those who act as agents. Circulars and Certificates full Sale and particulars mailed free. Address

GREAT LAKES ASSOCIATION,
285 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

P.O., Drawer 12.

Whiskers! Mustaches!!—The celebrated HIMALAYA COMPOUND is warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Mustaches in a few weeks. An English remedy, which does no injury to the skin. Sent post paid, for $1. Address DR. BERNARD & CO., Brooklyn P. O., N. Y.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union Troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 59 Broadway, New York, charged low. Try it.

MERWIN & BRAY FIRE-ARMS CO.'S
Belt and Pocket Size Cartridge Revolvers.

carries a ball 42-100 calibre (larger than Navy), and can be used with either fixed or loose ammunition. The Pocket size carries a ball 30-100 calibre (same as Colt's Army).

These Pistols are loaded and discharged with only four motions, a degree of simplicity never yet attained in any other arm. A full round may be loaded and discharged in thirty seconds. The Cartridges have been adopted exclusively by the U. S. Revenue Service. Testimonials of their efficiency as Belt Pistols from officers in the Army, also from civilians. Printed circulars (with illustrated cuts) sent free. Agents for mail when required.

MERWIN & BRAY are also sole proprietors of the Bolted Breech-Loading Rifle and Musket. These arms need no comment. Their high character for Military and Sporting purposes is so well established. Circulars sent free, giving all needful information.

Address orders to MERWIN & BRAY,
No. 262 Broadway, New York.

P.S.—IMPORTANT.—These Rifles can be used with either fixed or loose ammunition.

"The West Indian Hair Curler."

Warranted to curl the most straight and soft hair, on the first application, into short ringlets or waving moderate curls. Sent to any address on receipt of $1. Address

F. H. HEDDERTON & CO.,
Box 6051, New York Post-Office.

ARCANA WATCH.

An Elegant Novelty in Watches.

The cases of this watch are an entirely new invention, composed of a rich silver metals, combined, richly engraved and plashined, producing an exact imitation of 18-carat gold, called Arcana, which will always keep it color. They are as beautiful, and durable as solid gold, and are affected in one-eighth the cost. The movements are finished, set in ruby jewel and shield for name, with patent protection, and engraved in the same manner as solid gold. Gold Hunting Levers, and are really handsome and destined to be, and are at present the admiration of every body. The movement is manufactured by the well-known St. Imier Watch Company of Europe, and are superbly finished, having engraved patent, fancy curved bridges, adjusting screws, compensation gold balance, imported ruby jeweled action, with fine dial, and skeleton hands, and is altogether a perfect timekeeper. These watches are of three different sizes, the smallest being for ladies, and are all hunting cases. The price of the watch complete is ready for $15. A single one sent in an elegant morocco case for $25. We will send them by express for more than one. We are the sole agents for this watch in the United States, and here are genuine which do not bear our trade-mark.

Address DEVAUGH & CO., Importers,
No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

Printing-Presses for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 38×51. Price $1500.

One Adams Press, Bed 25×30, $900.

Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

ENVELOPES AND NOTE PAPER.

At wholesale prices, sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of the price.

1000 cuff letter envelopes, extra thick..... $4 00
500 white note envelopes, double thick..... 2 00
One ream super thick note paper..... 3 00
One box (500) new style Magenta envelopes..... 4 00
One ream very thick first-class note..... 4 00
1000 Canary color letter envelopes..... 4 00

Samples sent if requested.

G. S. HASKINS & CO., Stationers and Envelope Manufacturers, 36 Beekman Street, New York.

Army and Memorial Badges.

B. T. HAYWARD, 369 Broadway.

The above cut represents one side of a Memorial Badge of our lamented President. The opposite side is a true medallion likeness of him. I will send a sample for 75 cents, and with the name engraved, for $1.

Also, the NEW RICHMOND MEDAL. On the opposite side of the medal is a true likeness of Jeff. Davis. I will send a sample of this medal without the top bar for 75 cents, and with the bar, for $1. Either in gold, silver, with your name, regiment, and company handsomely engraved thereon, for $2 each.

Also, I have all the NEW CORPS BADGES of the army ready. I will send a sample, with your name, regiment, and company handsomely engraved thereon, on the receipt of $1.50; and for $2 or $3 I will send a genuine 18-carat gold enameled Corps Badge for either corps or division.

Badges of every description made to order.

I want an Agent in every regiment, hospital, and Department of the Army and Navy, to whom regular inducements are offered. Send for wholesale Illustrated Circular.

B. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler, 369 Broadway, N.Y.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE FOR APRIL, 1865.

Important to Subscribers.

Subscribers to the MAGAZINE are WEEKLY will please remember that their subscriptions are in advance of Account. The figures on the direction-label following the name show when the Account with the Subscription EXPIRES, as noted on our books. Every Subscriber should examine his label, and if the figures are not properly dated for the remittance sent, he can obtain the correction by addressing a letter to the Publishers stating in which the New Subscription should commence; they will then send a receipt and correct the error if one has occurred. It is desirable that a thousand should be received in from TEN BEFORE the 1st of April, in order to prevent delay, in order that our books may be kept properly adjusted. Attention to this will obviate the necessity of the few errors which annoy both Publishers and Subscribers.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $4 00
An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $9 00.

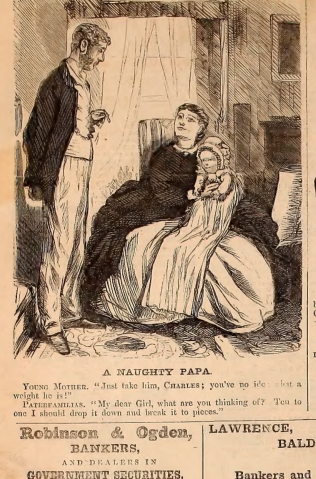
The Publishers will accept a limited number of Fifty-Dollar Advertisements in the MAGAZINE, at the following low rates: one quarter of a page, each Number, $75; one half, $125; whole page, $250. The circulation of HARPER'S MAGAZINE is believed to be larger than that of any similar publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation nearly 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY

TERMS.

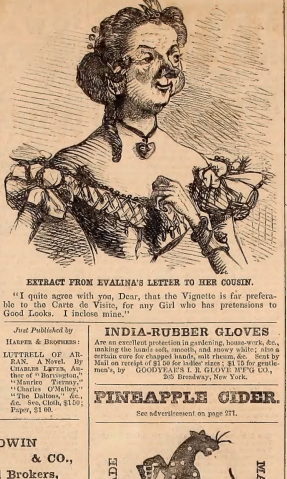


One Copy for One Year 4 00
One Copy for Three Months 1 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00. Payment invariably in advance.

THE BOUND VOLUME OF HARPER'S WEEKLY for the Year 1864, with over 1000 Illustrations. 832 pages, 4to, substantially bound in Cloth. Price $7 00.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—One Dollar per line for inside, and Two Dollars per line for outside. Liberal terms to wholesale Advertisements each insertion.



HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

A NAUGHTY PAPA.

YOUNG MOTHER. "Just take him, CHARLES; you've no idea what a weight he is!"

PATERFAMILIAS. "My dear Girl, what are you thinking of? Ten to one I should drop it down mid hewit it to pieces."

EXTRACT FROM EVALINA'S LETTER TO HER COUSIN.

"I quite agree with you, Dear, that the Vignette is far preferable to the Carte de Visite, for any Girl who has pretensions to Good Looks. I inclose mine."

Just Published by
HARPER & BROTHERS:

LUTTRELL OF ARRAN. A Novel. By Charles Lever. Author of "Barrington," "Martin Poynay," "Charles O'Malley," "The Dalton," &c., &c. 8vo. Cloth, $1 50; Paper, 75 cts.

INDIA-RUBBER GLOVES

Are an excellent protection in gardening, house-work, &c., making the hands soft, smooth, and snowy white; also a certain cure for chapped hands, salt rheum, &c. Sent by Mail on receipt of $1 50 for ladies' sizes; $1 75 for gentlemen's, by GOODYEAR'S I. R. GLOVE MFG'G CO., 205 Broadway, New York.

PINEAPPLE CIDER.

See advertisement on page 271.

Kittle's Patent Spring Mattresses.
FOLDING BOX AND SPRING-BRACE BORDER.

Under-beds, sickroom and Steffed. Good upholstered and best hair tops. Spring mattresses, perfect in comfort, durability, and economy. Wooden mattresses greatly improved at light expense, being easily turned over, &c. Every thing to complete and furnish a room. The place to buy is where a thing is made. S. P. KITTLE & CO., 150 Chatham Street, New York.

ASK ANY NEWSDEALER FOR DAWLEY'S TEN-PENNY NOVEL, No. 8.—PRICE TEN CENTS.
DEALL THE PIRATE SPY.
Also, the 75-cent Life of
LIEUT.-GEN. U. S. GRANT.
T. B. DAWLEY, Publisher, 13 and 15 Park Row, N. Y.

"Electro" Self-Acljusting enameled white, $5, $6, $7, and $9 per doz.; specimens, 50c., 75c., $1. Snow-white, linen-finished, ribbon-stitched, $1 25. Soluble Nork Tie, $1. Ladies' "illusion-embroidered" Steel Collars, $1 50; Cuffs, $1 50. Gents' steel Cuffs, $2. Mailed on receipt of price and "size." JEANERET, 78 Nassau St., N. Y. Box 3804.

DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO., 479 Broadway, below Broome St.
Sing Song Chinese Porcelain;
ALSO PARIAN, FRENCH CHINA, GLASS, &c.
French Dinner Sets.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS. Unsurpassed by any in the market. Send for catalogue of Philadelphia, Cincinnati, and Old Countries' Views. PHILLIPS & CO., 721 Broadway, N. Y.

BENJ. F. KENDALL,
BROKER IN
PETROLEUM STOCKS,
No. 52 Wall Street, N. Y.

TICKS, SCAB, VERMIN.
SheepWashTobacco
Should be used by all Farmers on their
SHEEP, ANIMALS, AND PLANTS.
For sale by JAS. P. LEVIN, Agent South Down Co., 23 Central Wharf, Boston.
" " H. ALLEN & CO., 170 & 172 Water St., New York.
" " DUDLEY & STAFFORD, 69 Dickman St.
" " HAINES & FIELD, 7 Courtland St.; and SHIFFLING, GEITNER & CO., 58 and 60 Courtland St.

CHILLS AND FEVER can only be effectually cured by Holloway's Pills. They act directly on the Liver, and contain no minerals.

GREAT ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

THE DOLLAR WEEKLY MIRROR AND JOURNAL OF AGRICULTURE, published at Manchester, New Hampshire, has a larger circulation than any other paper in the State. One-quarter of the paper is devoted to Agriculture wholly, and is edited by Hon. CHARLES B. FOSTER and S. C. WELLS. Is devoted to News, Politics, and Education, and is edited by Hon. B. CLARKE, the proprietor. Also contains a great family and farming paper, being published in a city only second in cotton manufacturing interests in the United States, and has a wide circulation in all other manufacturing towns and villages in the United States. Subscription, $1 50 a year in advance.

Only a few pages is devoted to advertising. Terms: Ten cents a line for each insertion. One column, $21 per week, one time, twenty-five dollars.

Address to New York Times, Tribune, Wilkes' Spirit, and to Agriculturist; to Gov. Fenton of New York, and General Rucs, State Canal Commissioner.

JOHN B. CLARKE,
Address Manchester, New Hampshire.

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad Street,
(Two Doors from Wall.)
New York.

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks.
Bonds and Gold will receive our PERSONAL attention.

ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

FISK & HATCH.
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

UNCLAIMED MONEY.—70,000 PERSONS WANTED TO CLAIM MONEY, ESTATES, &c., which have been advertised since 1704. Fee to search for name in Registry, $3. Genealogies traced. All letters must be prepaid. GUN & CO., Unclaimed Money and Property Registry, No. 11 Charlotte Street, London (W.C.), England.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.
Magnifying small objects 500 times. MAILED FREE everywhere for 50 CENTS, or THREE FOR $1.00.
Address F. C. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

Great Imperial Watch.
See Cately Brothers' Advertisement on page 271.

Free to Every Body.
SOLDIERS, SAILORS, FATHERS, MECHANICS, and EVERY BODY throughout the country will receive, free, by mail, a First-Class, Interesting NEWSPAPER, by sending their address to Editor of "ARMY AND HOME JOURNAL," 40 AND Street, New York.

From Commander Cushing (Hero of the Albemarle):
"Having carried one with me to sea, I can say that it is the most complete and convenient article for the soldier or sailor that has ever come under my notice."
Price, $2 50, sent free of postage.
D. B. BROOKS & BROTHER, Salem, MASS.

VERMILYE & CO.,
No. 44 WALL STREET,
BANKERS,
And Dealers in all Classes of
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

POLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 676 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Repairing done at low cost to order and repaired goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $30 each.

GOLD PENS.
The JOHNSON PEN is acknowledged by all who have used them to be the best pen for the long journey of any in use. They are made of 14 carats fine gold, and warranted for one year (written guarantee when required). Price, in solid silver extension cases, $1 75; ebony stick holders, $1 75; rubber reverse holders, $2 50; telescopic extension cases, $2 50; duplex silver cases, $4 00; ebony holders and morocco boxes, $1 50. Pens repointed, 50 cents each. Pens sent by mail, postage paid. Send for Circulars.
E. S. JOHNSON, Manufacturing and Office,
15 Maiden Lane, New York City.

LAWRENCE, BALDWIN & CO.,
Bankers and Brokers,
No. 70 Wall Street, New York.
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES, PETROLEUM,
And all kinds of Stocks, Bonds, &c., bought and sold on commission at the regular Stock, Petroleum, and Mining Boards.
Interest allowed on deposits.

TUTT'S the gentle and breath of sweetness secured by Carmell, Mack & Co.'s Farmodenta Tooth-Paste.

Calenberg & Vaupel's PIANO-FORTES,
99 and 101 Bleecker Street, 54 Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

ARMY and NAVY AGENCY.
Pensions, Bounties, Pay, Prize Money, together with all claims of the army and navy promptly procured. Correspondence promptly answered. L. BROWN & Co., 37 Park Pl., N.Y.

DALLEY'S MAGICAL PAIN EXTRACTOR
This invaluable salve is a certain cure for PILES, CORNS, UTERS, BRUISES, FORES, and RHEUMATISM. Relieves BURNS PAINS in five minutes. No one should be without it. It saves DOCTORS' BILLS. 25 Cents a Box. Sent free by mail, on receipt of 37 Cents. Depot 25 Liberty St., New York.

Officers, Soldiers, and Citizens!
GENUINE GOLD RINGS.
All the Army Corps Rings to 16-cent gold ostemped and warranted) at $3 and $5 each. Also 100 other styles of every size, plain, enameled, and fancy, at from $2 to $10 each. Sent by mail. Send stamp for Circular.
Address E. P. BEACH, 13 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $10
A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever, Cap, small size, white enameled dial, cut bands, "English Movements," and correct time-keeper, with an accurate "Miniature Calendar," indicating the "Day of the Week, Month, &c.," in back case.
A single one sent free by mail to any address at $10, with a BEAUTIFUL VEST CHAIN FOR ONLY $16.
A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, with "Miniature Calendar," &c., specially adapted to the ARMY. Sent free by mail, to any address, for only $7.
English and American Levers from $25 up. Good Watches of all descriptions low.
Address CHAS. F. NORTON & CO., Sole Importers, 33 & 40 Ann Street, New York.

TARRANT'S EFFERVESCENT SELTZER APERIENT is the most delightful curative agent known for all spring and summer complaints, such as bilious affections, sour stomach, hangover and loss of appetite, dizziness, sick headache, costiveness, febrile diseases, &c. Sold by all apothecaries.

CARPET WARP,
FIRST AND SECOND QUALITY;
Wrapping Twine made of Paper.
Twine and Paper. H. A. HAIVEN, 94 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

Without Spectacles, Doctor, or Medicine. Pamphlet mailed, free, on receipt of ten cents. Address
E. B. FOOTE, M. D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

TRADE MARK
OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY.
To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods, of whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are full six yards in each piece, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. Office of the Company, No. 69 Chambers Street, New York.

"Ye sweet to know there is an eye will mark
Your coming, and grow brighter when you come."
These lines might have been written with poetic foresight of which a Hundred Thousand children testify is expected with such enthusiasm as surely agitates the juvenile breast. It is published monthly, and contains the most delightful variety of TALES, SKETCHES, POETRY, GAMES, PUZZLES, etc., and is embellished with a multitude of BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS by the BEST ARTISTS. TERMS, $2 00 a year; a large discount to clubs. A specimen number will be sent on receipt of 10 cents by the publishers.

Our Young Folks
TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston, MASS.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

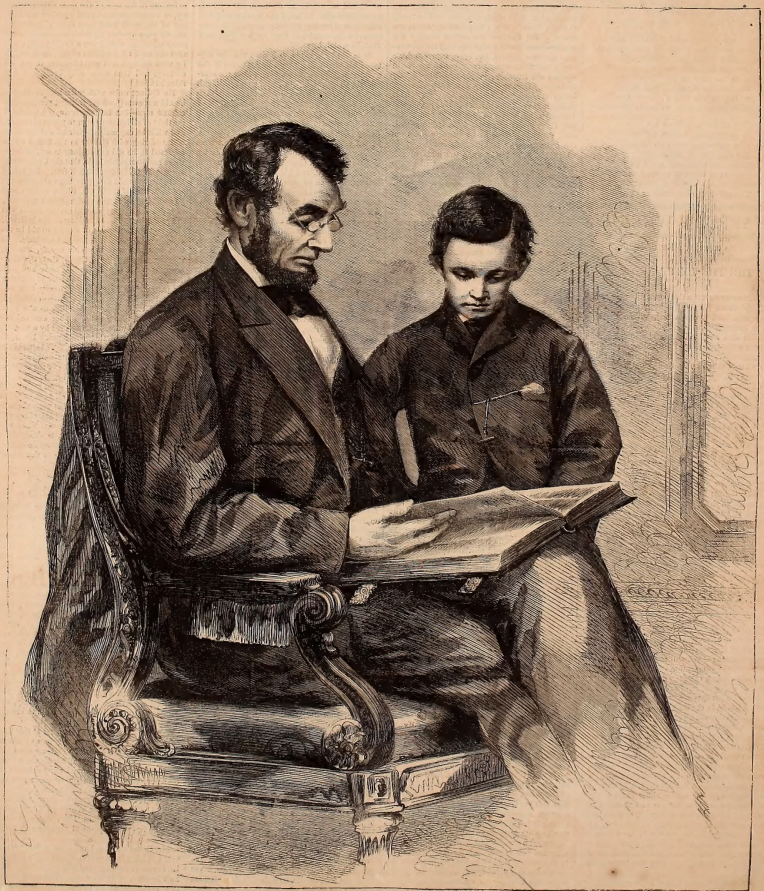
ALL NEW YORK STATE BOUNTIES PAYABLE.

Apply, by letter or in person, at the UNITED STATES ARMY AGENCY, 64 Bleecker Street, New York City, opposite the Pay Department.

For the settlement of all just claims of any nature against the Government, apply as above.

VINELAND LANDS.
To all Wanting Farms.

Large and thriving settlement, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, producing large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty, and fifty acre tracts, at from $25 to $35 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools, and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post-Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.



From Report of Solon Robinson, Agricultural Editor of The Tribune: "It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position and available condition for pleasant farming that we know of this side of the Western prairies.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. IX.—No. 436.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 6, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN AT HOME.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.]

FUNERAL ODE.

When raging earthquakes bury towns,
Or fierce volcanoes lash their manes
Of boundless, fiery ruin round
The groaning hills and shrieking plains,
The world may fitting emblems find
To speak the horror of its heart,
In cities crazed, in banners furled,
And all the solemn show of art.

But when a Human Hand is turned
Into a ruthless demon-power,
And smites a nation in its Chief,
Eyes at his triumph's careening hour,
What emblems shall Man fitting find,
What types sad, grand enough to show
The horror shaking continents,
And their infinity of woe?

Alas! alas! we wildly feel
There should be still some outward sign,
And so we furl the shining flag
And darkly cloud the glowing shrine.
How vain! At last the Nation lifts
Its naked hands to Heaven, and owns
The impotence of every type
Before the awful Throne of Thrones:

Then silent stands and thinks of him
The swerveless God, the calmly Great:
In wonder would the reason pierce
Of their Beloved's mystic fate.
Was he too dear an Idol here?
Too merciful for this dread time?
Did Heaven now will a sterner hand,
With justice mailed, to guard the chime?

O God of Nations, if we sin
In questioning, forgive, for we
Are by our woe driven on to seek
The meaning of Eternity!
Forgive, and bless, and make us feel
That Thou wilt still love, watch, save all,
Though even the best of rulers die,
Though earth should sink and planets fall!

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, MAY 6, 1865.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE REBEL CHIEFS.

In his sermon upon the Sunday morning after his return from Charleston the Rev. Mr. Beecher said it was a fact, which rested upon authenticated, that before the war began by the shot at Sumter the chief conspirators took a military officer of the United States, now living, into their secret council, and said that they knew that the South had never been oppressed; that it had always governed the country; and that the denunciation of the agitation of the Slavery question, and of the injustice of Northern tariffs, etc., was merely the method by which they dragged the people of the South into their plans. For the two sections, they said, can no longer live together, and we mean that they shall be separated.

These are the men whom President Johnson describes as leaders. These are they whose tender mercies he and the faithful Union men of the Border and of the South have experienced. These are the chiefs whom he has in mind when he says that treason is a crime which is justly punishable by the laws. These are the leaders, of whom John C. Breckinridge is one, who doubtless dictated the terms of Sherman's extraordinary convention with Johnston. They are men whom Andrew Johnson has known all his life—their spirit, their purpose, their cruel despotism, their guilty ambition—and he says steadily, upon every occasion, holding them full in his eye, that he does not think the enormity of the crime should permit the penalty.

From this opinion, which he reiterates, we gather at least one conclusion. The men hitherto known as political leaders at the South, the chiefs of the rebellion that has wet the land with innocent blood, will not be allowed to tamper with the government of the country. The men who, upon the plea of the supreme sovereignty of States, have arrayed the people of the South against those of the North, now that they are defeated in the field, will not be suffered to continue their work in the Legislature. President Johnson is clearly of opinion that the American people are not disposed to surrender to arts what they have refused to arms. He does not believe that the rebel leaders are less rebellious because they are balked. He knows that the cause to which they are devoted is a perpetual rebellion against the Union and Government, and the spirit which inspires them a necessary treason to man and God. Every speech he has made is a warning to those leaders, and an encouragement to the men they have betrayed. For those who have been deceived are the men of the class from which the President himself sprang, and his hostility to the betrayers is based upon long and bitter knowledge.

President Johnson can do this country no better service than by persuading all of the ordinal truth that the regeneration of the South is not to come from men like David Hunter, Wigfall, Benjamin, Slidell, Mason, and their fellow-conspirators and "eminent contrabrates," but will proceed from the mass of the Southern people white and black. The slaveholding class is not large. The actual pecuniary and political interest of the mass of the population in slavery has been very slight. They have been influenced by it as a prejudice, not a palpable advantage. The great proprietors of the South, who owned the land and the slaves, and who monopolized political power, have always purposely kept the poorer class of whites ignorant. They were painfully degraded. The faithful reports of the best observers for many years have shown us how and their condition was. And this class will be kept down while slavery endured. So long as their color was itself a symbol of superiority, and being wretched and poor they could yet claim to belong, though but in name, to the ruling class, and despise a servile race, so long they were content to eat clay and submit to a condition against which every man having the name of American ought instinctively to protest.

But when slavery goes, when contact with Northern men in the army and with Southern people what their rights are, they will be ready to claim them. When they find by actual experience that Yankees are neither savages nor brutes—when they perceive that they are not cowards nor base tinkers, but brave men who have overpowered the utmost resources of the South —when the Southern people have been basely and cruelly they have been deceived by the men whom they trusted, and that they have been fighting David's battle, Absalom's, Aaron Toombs's, and Jacob Thompson's, and Clement Clay's, but have not been fighting their own, then the two will be associated friends in the long bondage of blindness and ignorance which slavery imposes upon the mass of any slaveholding community, and they will be the men who will be the first to be thoroughly loyal and always faithful to the country, by whom the South will be regenerated.

It is because the speeches of President Johnson we find the indications of this wholesome disbelief in the rebel chiefs and this cordial faith in the multitude that we regard them as peculiarly significant. He is clearly also of opinion that those who are good enough to fight for the Government are good enough to vote for it; and that a black man is more entitled to the fact in an American citizen than a black face. If the measures of the policy now foreshadowed shall be as temperate and wise as its spirit is true the work that Abraham Lincoln wisely began Andrew Johnson will wisely finish.

GENERAL SHERMAN.

The convention of General Sherman with the rebel General Johnston is not the least of the astonishing events of the last four years. The rebellion had failed. Its chief army was disbanded. Its military chief had surrendered. Its civil chief was a fugitive. Its capital had fallen. Its last sea-port was gone. The sudden dispersion of its offensive force had been marvelous, when the Governors of eight of the Carolinas, the soldier who had led his army through the rebel section from the Ohio to the coast, the Lieutenant who had just returned from an interview with his superior at City Point, and who knew as every body in the country knew that the idea of an armistice had been steadily rejected by the chief and the Government, who knew that when President Lincoln went to Hampton Roads to meet the rebel commissioners he went only to instruct Grant not to suspend military operations for a moment, who knew that General Grant himself while corresponding with Lee was still fighting him, and who knew all this and all the terms upon which Johnston's superior had just surrendered to his own superior officer, suddenly puts the military, civil, and shadowy in the political and diplomatic, fails as signally and sadly as before he had gloriously triumphed.

General Sherman not only treats with the rebel General Johnston, but with "high officials"—that is to say, with the conspirators who have formed what was called "the Confederate Government." He has not only done this when ratified, the terms will secure peace from the Potomac to the Rio Grande. Ratified by whom? He has already done so. He has in connection with Johnston: "Not being fully empowered by our respective principals to fulfill these terms," etc. They are to be referred to the principals—that is, by the Government of the United States and the "Confederate Government."

General Sherman could not have surprised his country more if he had surrendered his army to Johnston, and the first emotion of every loyal man was that he with so many explanations of conduct apparently inexplicable. In the absence of such assistance we must seek the solution in what we already know.

General Sherman had lived long in Louisiana when the war began. He has been constantly in the remote field of operations, far from the knowledge of current opinion, and he has shown a peculiar hostility to newspapers and correspondents. But his profound sympathy with the moral sentiment which animated the patriotism of the Northern States. He probably held the Southern view of slavery, although he did not hesitate to say, while opposed to the arming of colored men, that whoever was worthy to carry a musket in defense of the Government was not unworthy to cast a ballot. He has, however, always taken a purely military view of the rebellion. His demand has constantly been merely that the insurgents should lay down their arms; and he said last autumn that the war had but just begun. By this we understood him to mean that the spirit of rebellion was so desperate that it would prevent the possibility of peace so long as any considerable number of rebels remained in arms.

It was a necessary result of such opinions that he should hesitate or cease to disband the military forces was a result to be bought of the rebellion at almost any price. We must assume that his experience in Georgia and the Carolinas had confirmed this view. But it still remains inexplicable why he should suppose that the rebel leaders had favorable terms for his country with the miscellaneous army of Johnston as General Grant had, as he knew, already made with the veterans of Lee; or why he should suppose that he had any such responsibility what he knew the Government had refused to allow his superior to do under circumstances a thousand-fold more unpromising than those in which he stood.

It is hardly possible to believe that he supposed his convention would be approved by the Government. Such a supposition, even for the Leader of President Lincoln; and equally difficult to perceive how any man of ordinary common sense could anticipate that such terms as these in his arrangement. But the painful event vindicates the wisdom of President Lincoln in refusing from the beginning to allow the Generals in the field to decide the questions that were really political. He disapproved all such action in the instances of Generals Fremont, Hunter, and McClellan. In the last official act in the first term was an express instruction to General Grant to confine himself to military operations. General Sherman knew that this was the undeviating policy of the Government. He has yet to explain why he utterly disregarded it.

That he had no personal political advantage in view the country will hesitate to believe. That some vision of being the great final Pacificator for a moment bewildered an impetuous and impetuous mind is not improbable. But that he utterly misunderstands the scope of the war in which he has been so conspicuous and achieved a military success unparalleled, neither the spirit nor the purpose nor the character of the "high officials" who have been now for four years in arms, and for thirty years by the most unscrupulous and appalling debauchery of the national mind and heart, seeking to destroy the Government of his country—this humiliating proposal to the Government is the final and painful proof. That the best of soldiers may be the worst of statesmen is easily credible; but it is lamentable that the truth illustrated by a man of whom we were all so proud as we were of General Sherman.

THE TRUEST MOURNERS.

While the nation mourns, and cities are solemnly tapestried with the signs of sorrow, and the funeral bells toll across the land, and the tolling bells and minute-guns and slow pealing dirges; while orators and societies and communities speak their grief in impassioned eloquence or in sober narrative of a life devoted in every heart-beat to the common welfare—there is one class of mourners who have never or rarely repulsed, yet whose grief for Abraham Lincoln is profounder and more universal than all.

To the unhappy race upon whose equal unalienable rights themselves this nation had so long trampled—upon our dusky brothers for whom God has so long asked of us in vain while he has plainly intimated that we were not our brothers' keepers, the death that bereaves us all falls with an overwhelming and appalling force. The hand of Him who holds the nations in the hollow of his hand, their sympathizer, their friend, their deliverer, their emancipator, their friend, their friend, has struck them as he struck the representation of that liberty for which they had wept and watched, hoping against hope, praying in the very extremity of despair, and learning with patience so sublime that far prosperity beguiled us into the meanness of saying that their long endurance of oppression proved that God had created them to be oppressed.

The warm imagination of this people cherished Abraham Lincoln as more than mortal. Like Ossa and Pelion his kindly figure doubtless seems to them again possible. It is a sorrow beyond any words, beyond any comfort, except the slow conviction of time that the work he did for them was not his work; that he was but the minister of the nation; and that Abraham Lincoln emancipated them because the American people had declared they should be free. Yet none the less, as the terrible tale is whispered all over the region where for four years a black face has been the sure sign of a true friend, the nameless and inconceivable fear will paralyze that people. Of the operations of Government, of the tides and currents of public opinion, of the grateful sympathy of a nation, they can know little, but they know that Abraham Lincoln was the name of the power that was lifting them from darkness into light, from death into life, from a hopeless past into a jubilant future, and the shock of our sorrow can not reveal to us, even in kind, the depth and reality of theirs.

And when the story of his life is told, it will be seen that it was one long act of unswerved service to these last of the little ones. It was clearly from the beginning that the danger to his country lay out of sight—that it lay deep down in the condition of the master and slave in the classes. He saw that the national peril lay in the demoralization of the conscience of the country, wrought by a growing inhumanity and injustice. He once said and that all prosperity was delusive which was founded upon immorality; and in a part of the country where the prejudice against the colored race was fiercest, where political disgrace seemed to await the man who persistently pleaded their cause, he never failed to declare in the face of the most subtle sophistry, of the coarsest and most injurious ribaldry, and of the most passionate denunciation, that slavery was, beneath all other considerations, a political question; that it was a wretched error; and that not until all the lights of truth and morality were extinguished could it cease to vex the country, and then cease only because it had ruined it.

He did not unite with "the abolitionists" he did not even plead for political equality for colored men—but he unswervingly proclaimed the right of all innocent men to personal liberty; and while he expressly disclaimed any intention of interfering with slavery in the States which tolerated it, he did not hesitate to say, with incisive and irresistible logic, that the Union could not endure half free and half slave, and that he hoped that slavery would disappear from the country. He knew that if it did not, liberty would; and the unfolded scroll of the eternal moral mystery, of which the country showed that at last it was aware by electing him President. He believed, also, that the extinction of slavery would be accomplished by legal and peaceful methods. In that he was mistaken. This simple, homely, sagacious man, who declared that the Government could not endure half slave and half free, was called to be the minister of securing its permanence by making it wholly free, and the statesman whom slavery could never deceived, who had exposed its immorality, as the clear calm eye of the old philosopher exposed the serpent in the woman's form, died by a stealthy blow from the desperate, dying hand that death justifies every word of his life. The shot of the assassin completed the absolute extirpation of the barbarous system which the pride of the rebels at Sumter four years before had begun.

We are all grateful to the gold man whom we are burying, but if we had all been Carolina slaves what speechless woe, what eternal gratitude, would ours be! As time passes they will learn that their cause is also ours. They will see that slavery not liberty, is dead. For the work in which he was but the minister of the people, the people will fulfill to the utmost with a sacred devotion.

RICHARD COBDEN.

The English Liberals bewail in the death of Richard Cobden one of the great Englishmen; even the London Times confesses that his eminent moral and intellectual qualities put the Emperor Louis Napoleon orders his bust to be placed in the gallery at Versailles. Yet he held no office; he had retired to be made a baronet; but he was known to the world for the sincerity of his life and character, and for the devotion of noble powers to the welfare of his country.

Richard Cobden was born to be a self-made man, which means simply that he used his opportunities, and had the happy gift of knowing what to do and how to use them. So he was like Mr. Lincoln. There are plenty of poor boys, sons of small farmers in England, like Richard Cobden, or of poor Western settlers in America, like Abraham Lincoln, who are thrown upon the world, and after a desperate struggle succeed in living respectable lives. But it is a peculiar and characteristic energy, and purity of purpose which enables them to become what Lincoln and Cobden were.

It is the great fortune of England at this time that she never had an abler group of liberal leaders. They are a distinct body from the Whig chiefs. In the days of Sir Francis Burdett the folly of the radical party defeated its best purposes. But the liberal leaders of today, such men as Richard Cobden, John Stuart Mill, John Bright, with their numerous allies, belittle both the Whig and Tory giants. They represent what is noblest, best, and most humane in English political thought and progress.

Mr. Cobden's signal and most illustrious service was his advocacy of free trade. In 1839 he led the movement for establishing the Anti-Corn Law League, and after a tremendous and incessant agitation, which was sometimes unscrupulous, as the anti-slavery agitation had exasperated the commercial interest in England

SIR ROBERT PEEL, the Prime Minister, yielded to the inevitable logic of the reformers, and brought in the bill repealing the duties upon imported corn, which was approved on the 26th of June, 1846. It was one of the greatest political triumphs in history. It reversed the traditional and cherished policy of a nation, and the result was achieved by solid argument. The grateful nation enriched Mr. COBDEN as a recognition of his patriotic service. But his political independence was never disturbed. He never courted a majority. His constituents approved his war with Russia. He opposed it. England made war upon China. MR. COBDEN, with the majority in Parliament, voted to censure Lord PALMERSTON, and his constituents refused to re-elect him.

Like all the English liberals, MR. COBDEN has been one of our firmest and truest friends during the rebellion. He had been twice in this country and understood our politics. Still better, he understood the eternal law that prevents injustice in an enlightened people from being permanently profitable; and although not of a sanguine temperament, and knowing the confidence of the country and the spirit of the rebellion, he was conscious of the terrible task before us, yet he sincerely believed it would be accomplished.

Counsel did not live to hear of the fall of Richmond, nor of the surrender of LEE, nor of the final sealing of the coast by the occupation of Mobile. But he did live to see the resurrection of a system which, as a political economist, he knew to be disastrous to any nation, tottering and falling, and the great principles of equal justice before the laws, which, as a statesman, he knew to be the only sure foundation of states, ascending to its complete victory. Happily for him he died before he heard that the wise and patient and practical statesman, who was the characteristic product of institutions which Cobden struggled with all his heart, had suddenly rested from his labors amidst the tears of a nation. The two men lived for the same great purpose. The true interests of the people of England and of America have lost two of their noblest friends in ABRAHAM LINCOLN and RICHARD COBDEN.

THE PRESIDENT'S FUNERAL IN NEW YORK.

ALL the beautiful day on Tuesday, when the dearly beloved President was borne through the great city, it was impossible not to feel that, however profound and tender all the emotions might be, no oration could be so eloquent as the spectacle of the vast population, hushed and bareheaded, under the bright spring sky gazing upon his coffin. It was one of the most imposing and touching pageants ever seen. From windows and house-tops and balconies, from trees and public and door-steps, the multitude looked silently on, themselves a striking part of the scene they admired. The broad street was clear, and on both the walks the crowd was solid. The pressure at times was frightful, but the throng was mainly good-humored; and when the head of the cortège approached the reverent silence was profoundly impressive. Nothing was heard as it passed but the regular footfall of the troops, the dull roll of the muffled drums, and the occasional tolling of a bell far away. The sober aspect of the people all the day, the wailing peals of minor music from the hundred bands, the bands draped with mourning, the innumerable flags bound with black and hanging at half-mast, the profuse and accumulated signs of a great sorrow, have made the day forever memorable to all who looked on.

As the solemn and stately car went by, holding proudly up, under the canopy and among the flowers, the silver-fringed coffin of the martyr, his own words over the dead at Gettysburg were the most fitting: "The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here." For his great work here was the noble use of qualities without which no public man can be sincerely lamented nor any state safe. ABRAHAM LINCOLN triumphed by his honesty, by his fidelity, by his magnanimity, by his patriotism, by his modernism. His greatness was his eminence in the characteristics which our public men have most wanted. He was called slow and doubtful, a man unequal to be pushed and pulled while his steadfastness was sublime. He moved toward his purpose as surely as the year unfolds from spring to summer. There were cold days, and clouds, and showers, and sometimes frosts, but the blossom is steadily opening into the flower, and the flower ripening into the fruit, and ever the air is softer and kinder. It was so with him, and so the popular trust in him grew. No man imagined what a hold he had upon the national heart until the election. The revolution was startling. It was an involuntary tribute to character without parallel. And how much closer even than then the bond that bound him to the people this truly grieving country shows.

The oration in Union Square by MR. BANCROFT was noble. Its lofty tone, its masterly comprehensiveness, its sincere eloquence, and the nervous purity of its style, distinguish it among all the fine addresses which the melancholy event has inspired. It seems to us that MR. BANCROFT has never surpassed this brief, heroic, and dignified discourse. Now that could have chosen no fitter orator to bid the great, good President hail and farewell.

Across the land then, home to the prairies, which will greet his coming with all their flowery splendor, passes our chief and best. Along the way he came four years ago, to do a work harder than WASHINGTON'S—to return, and the work is done. As he left his home he asked his neighbors, who knew and loved him, to pray for him in his arduous and unknown task. Home he comes again, and with prayers and tears and stricken hearts they receive him, whom we all know and love now. Home he comes again, dead, but dead forever. And from the height, the clouds of our present sorrow behold the serene triumph of his life, stronger by his strength, purer by his wisdom, more faithful by his fidelity, more magnanimous by his marvelous magnanimity, turn again to serve his honored memory by continuing his work in his own spirit.

NAPOLEON'S JULIUS CÆSAR.

THE first volume of LOUIS NAPOLEON'S "History of Julius Cæsar" is published in London some library form and also in a convenient popular edition by the HARPERS. This volume ends with CÆSAR'S election as Consul and the exile of CICERO.

LOUIS NAPOLEON is too conspicuous a man to be an unknown author. Even if his work were very poor it would be universally read. But written as it is with ample preparation, and to maintain a proposition which his life is endeavoring to secure, it has a valuable interest. When in the nineteenth century of Christianity an emperor elaborately defines and defends the imperialism of the last age of Paganism as a final and necessary law of human society, every thoughtful man will wish to know what he has to say. Besides, a man who passes from the ridiculous plebiscite of Rome and Strasbourg to the terrible realities of the coup d'état and leaps from lodgings in Leicester Square to the Tuileries, arrives at Julius CÆSAR as proof of some kind, and if he professes also to have principles, it is certainly worth while to know what they are.

The work is very carefully written. It opens with a rapid survey of Roman history before the birth of CÆSAR, that the stage may be properly set for the entrance of the leading figure. The reflections are sometimes excellent, sometimes utterly commonplace and amusing. The danger to any state of the Napoleonic principle which would hold the Past unchanged is very well and pointedly set forth. Indeed the author's implication, if not his argument, is, that CICERO, CATO, and POMPEY were right in their creeds, by refusing to bend, forced CÆSAR to break. If the conservatives had yielded to the necessity of reform by which CÆSAR lived, he would not have been compelled to overthrow it. This, also, is NIEBUHR'S view. But it is the old dispute.

OF course LOUIS NAPOLEON rejects the theory of personal motives in CÆSAR. He was simply the purest patriot, the noblest Roman of them all. Yet the author's impartiality is not always happily surpasses that of MERIVALE—a most conscientious and painstaking historian, who uses less color in his portraits than any recent writer of history. The Frenchman's view, however, contrasts strangely with that of the thorough Englishman, DR. ARNOLD, in which LEGIUS CASSIUS was only a robber and murderer upon a great scale. MERIVALE calls CÆSAR "the greatest name in history." ARNOLD says: "Never did any man succeed so long in imposing a great story with so little provocation." NIEBUHR says: "Had he lived in a republican age he would never have thought of setting himself above the law; but he belonged to a period when he had no choice between being either the savior or the hammer." LOUIS NAPOLEON says: "The historical evidence does not permit us to CÆSAR, CHARLEMAGNE, and NAPOLEON, it is to trace out to peoples the path they ought to follow; to stamp with the seal of their genius a new era; and to accomplish in a few years the labor of many centuries."

But when Providence raises up men like OLIVER CROMWELL what does it "trace out"? When MARTIN LUTHER comes what are "peoples" to do? If they are to follow the man who is strong enough to break through, what are they to do with one who should be able to upset a BONAPARTE? These are questions which are not answered in this handsome volume.

IN STATE.

BENEATH the vast and vaulted dome
That copes the Capitol, he lies;
In a dreary, starless night;
The stars in their eternal home
Seem like the sad ethereal eyes
Of seraphs, filled with tender light.

The Capitol is wrapped in mist;
Strangely the shadows come and go;
The dome seems floating into air,
Upborne by unseen hands, I wist—
In solemn state he lies below,
His pure hands folded as in prayer.

He lies in solemn state, alone—
Alone with only silence there—
Alone with lofty hopes that rise
Almost the very coping stone;
Yet not alone, for all the air
Is filled with tender thoughts of him.

And all night long the marble floors
Have echoed to the gentle tread
Of blessed and immortal feet;
And through the open corridors
The mighty and illustrious dead
Have thronged all night his face to greet.

And they have bent, full-browed with pain,
And gazed through their celestial tears
Upon the face so dear to them—
Upon the man whose heart was fain
Above all hearts these latter years
To be like his of Bethlehem.

And so our heads are bowed with grief
Because we loved him, and because
That yesterday, this great man stood
Of many states the perfect chief,
Dispensing justice and the laws,
And mindful of the public good.

Alas! it is a dreary night;
For he we loved so much now lies
Beneath the vast and vaulted dome;
And in his eyes there is no light—
No light in those eyes we love
Which kindliness had made her home.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

THE public ought to know that the Catafalque upon which the President's body lay in state at the City Hall was erected by MR. J. W. A. STRICKLAND, at the expense of MR. A. T. STEWART.

The Funeral Car was built by MR. CHARLES METTAM; MR. P. RELYEA was undertaker-in-chief.

We are ourselves indebted to Aldermen OTIWELL and RYERS for courtesies to our artist upon this melancholy occasion.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE SITUATION.

OUR NEW FREEDMEN'S BUREAU, shown, has given a most explicit declaration of his policy in his speech to the Indiana delegation. It is the policy of the Union, and the policy which President LINCOLN revered. Responsible treason is the highest treason. The utmost leniency is to be exercised toward the masses of the Southern people. The character of Mayor FERNANDO WOOD will at the same time it is to be impossible for any State to hold slaves. MR. JOHNSON declares himself opposed to confiscation, or to any undue centralization of power. President JOHNSON'S theory as to what constitutes a State is precisely that of his predecessor. There has been no dissolution, but simply a usurpation of power—like a temporary paralysis. In the restoration of legitimate authority it must, of course, be the function of Congress, and no enemy, that shall control. The State is to be nursed in its weakness by Loyal States, and watched by traitors.

There is no longer an organized rebellion in the United States. The capture of JEFF. DAVIS and the Cabinet, reported to have given up the cause. The rebel President is said to have fled to Texas.

On the 15th of February an agreement for a suspension of hostilities and a general truce of which a basis of peace was entered into between General Sherman and Johnston. The terms of the negotiation was Chapel Hill, a few miles from Raleigh. According to the memorandum agreed upon the rebel armies are to be collected, are to be disbanded, and being conducted to their several States, and there to deposit their arms in the State arsenal, and to file an agreement to cease from acts of war, and abide the decision of the Federal Executive authorities. The Executive of the United States should recognize the Executive and State Governments of their officers and Legislatures taking the oath prescribed in the Constitution, and where conflicting claims arise of all States were to be guaranteed their political rights and franchises, as well as their main feature of their domestic documents.

It has been General's proceeding in the matter was not approved by the Government, because it was an exercise of political power which General Sherman was a practical acknowledgment of the rebel Government, and superseded the Federal Government.

General Sherman was ordered to resume hostilities immediately, and to inform General Lee that negotiations given by the late President to the Federal Authority, which was not pruned by MR. LINCOLN, have been set at the Cabinet. That night the 81 of March, were agreed to by General Sherman and Johnston, and were returned to General Grant for approval by the commanders.

On the night of the 24 of March, President Lincoln and his Cabinet were in consultation, what answer General Grant was to give to General Lee's letter informing him that General Lee had "solicited an interview in order to make an arrangement for terms of peace.

The letter of General Lee was published in a letter of DAVIS to the rebel Congress.

General Grant's telegram was submitted to MR. LINCOLN, who, after considering the matter, took up his pen and wrote with his own hand the following telegram which he submitted to the Secretary of State and Secretary of War. It was then dated, addressed, and signed by the Secretary of War, and telegraphed to General Grant:

"WASHINGTON, March 3, 1865—11 P.M.

"Lieutenant General Grant:

"The President directs me to say to you that he wishes you to have no conference with General Lee, unless it be for the mere action of General Lee's army, or on some other purely military matter. He instructs me to say that you are not to decide, discuss, or confer upon any political question. Such questions the President holds in his own hands, and will submit them to no military conference or convention. Meantime you are to press to the utmost your military advantages.

"EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War."

General Grant arrived at Raleigh on the 24th of April.

THE CAPTURE OF MACON.

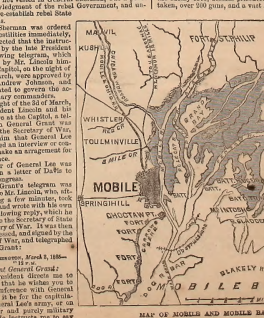
A dispatch from General Sherman states that "Wilson held Macon on the 20th, with Hewell Cobb, G. W. Smith, and others, as prisoners, but they claimed the benefit of the armistice, and he has telegraphed to me through the rebel lines for orders. I have answered him that he may draw out of Macon and hold his command for further orders, unless he has reason to believe the rebels are changing the status to our prejudice."

THE CAPTURE OF MOBILE.

The campaign which was laid out a few weeks ago for the complete suppression of the rebellion in the Western States and the Gulf of Mexico has been successfully accomplished. After Hood's defeat before Nashville General Thomas detached to the War Department that he would not, on account of the state of the roads and for other reasons, be able to start immediately upon another campaign. But he offered to co-operate with General Canby by sending to the latter not over half of his infantry force and almost all his cavalry—the former under the command of General A. J. Smith, the latter under General Wilson. Canby's topkick Eastport, Mississippi, and arrived at New Orleans on the 23d of February. Having arrived within sixty miles of New Orleans until March 13, the command was reorganized and Wilson's movements awaited. General Canby's army was then at Mobile Point, near Fort Morgan, and General Sheridan at Pensacola. All these bodies were in readiness to move by March 20.

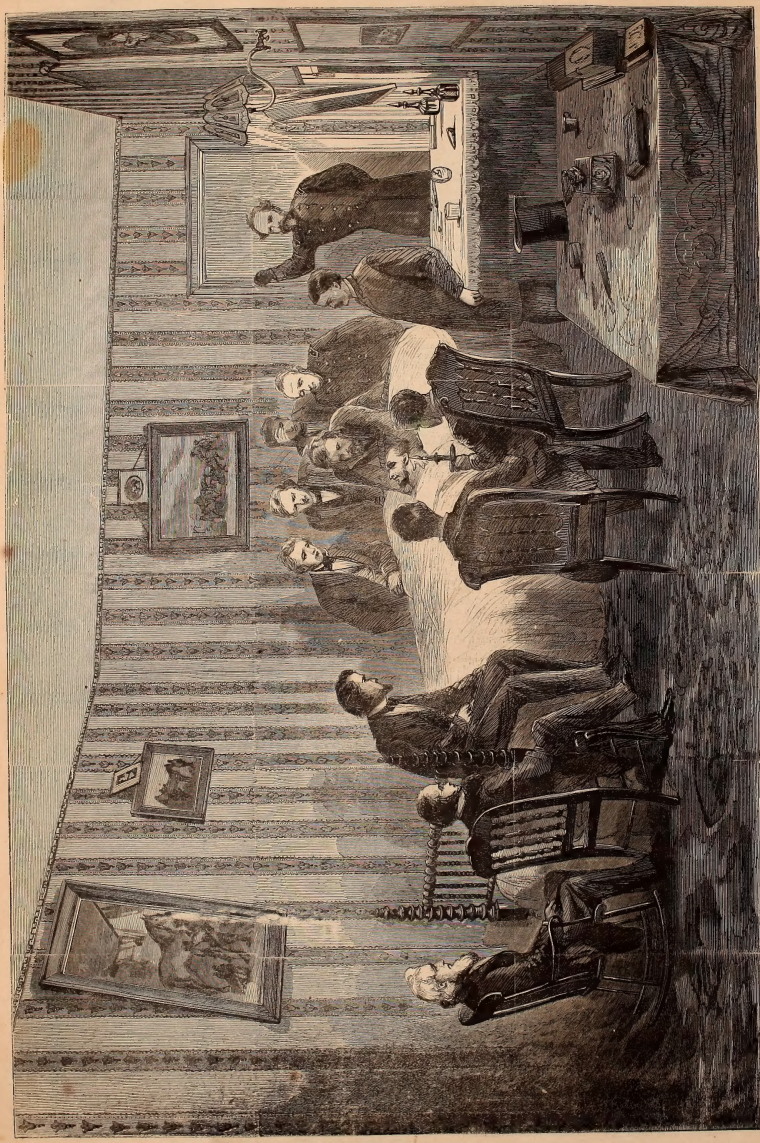
General Canby sent more important information concerning Spanish Fort from MR. Madder, who built the fort, and who came into our lines about the 1st of March. Smith and Granger joined on the 21st at Barker's Mill, on Fish River—the former moving by water, the latter by land. Steele was coming up from Pensacola, and Wilson, with his cavalry, was marching from Eastport. On the 26th Granger appeared before Spanish Fort, and Smith moved up to within three miles of Fort Blakely. The next day's good portion of the latter's command was withdrawn to operate against Spanish Fort. Meanwhile Steele's division was left to threaten Blakely until Steele should arrive.

On the 27th of March Canby issued to his army the list of the nations provided. In this exigency General Beebe was sent with his brigade to the mouth of the Perdido to fleet on Red River—succeeded in forming wharves and landing supplies from the bay. The Pensacola correspondent says that if General Bailey had kept a diary a glance at its pages would show "that during one week he had to load four fights, a hundred wrangles, elapsed the faces of three drunkard's, and nearly killed that devil with four coats three hundred members of the Ninety-seventh colored."



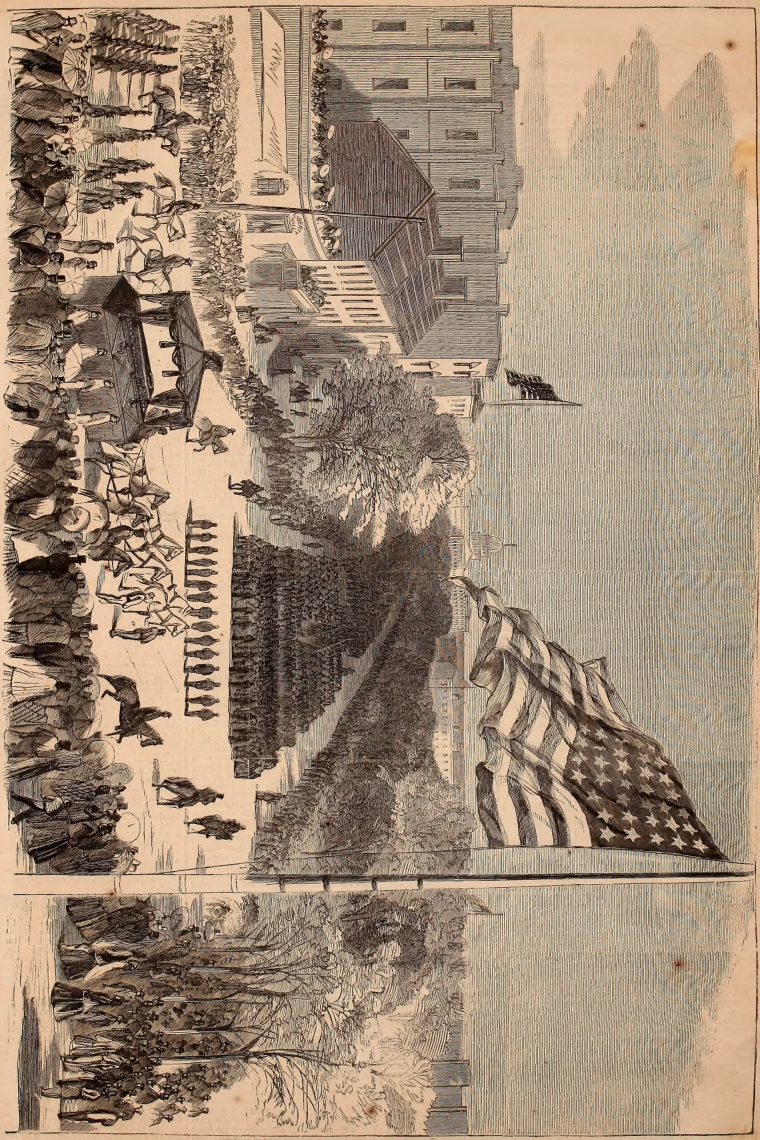
Blakely command arrived on the 2d of April, having cut the Mobile and Montgomery Railroad, near Pollard, capturing a train of cars loaded to Mobile, and Spidon and killing the rebel General Clanton, inflicting a loss of 500 men besides capturing the Steele rebel flag. Gen. Garrard's division against Fort Blakely, which was now fully invested with the exception of a gap in the rear through which runs the Bayou Minnette. Up to this time our loss had been about 700.

On the 8th eight heavy Parrott guns were brought to bear on the rebel gunboats, and under cover of a cannonade from one hundred pieces of artillery an assault was made on Spanish Fort. Gibbon's brigade, Hawley's, consisting of the Eighth Iowa, the Eighty-first, One Hundred and Eighth, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Illinois, bore the brunt of the assault, and succeeded just after dark in getting inside of a portion of the enemy's works on the left. Here a fight ensued, and 300 of the enemy were captured. The assault was not made all along the line as it should have been, and then it happened that Spanish Fort was not one of the points of the line which he had gained. That night the enemy evacuated Spanish Fort, and escaped in a steam across the bay to Mobile.



But Fort Blakely still remained. Blakely is a small town above the mouth of Blakely River, about four and one half miles north of Spanish Fort, and twelve miles from Mobile. The river at this point is narrow, and each south, and were under the command of the rebel General Liddell, but the main force was under General Maury by assault. It was a most gallant affair. Garrard's division, the Nineteenth corps, was in the lead, pressed and driven after terrible entanglements—entanglements fatal to how to 1,200 prisoners were taken in the fort, and captured over 100 men with their commander, the rebel General Thom. The fort was a very large work; Winslow's division got over torpedoes and through a storm of bullets, and by seven o'clock the fort was ours. Among the prisoners including Generals Liddell, Thomas, Cockerill—32 pieces of artillery, 4000 stand of small-arms, 16 battle-flags, and a vast amount of ammunition. Our loss here was about 1000.

Spanish Fort was then evacuated, and the transports escaped up the Alabama River. On the night of the 10th the rebels began to evacuate Mobile, which was occupied by our forces on the 12th. The guns captured amounted to 192—192 guns were taken in the fort. The total number of prisoners exceed 6000. Colonel INGRAHAM, of the Twenty-fifth Iowa, was killed.



Another action in the campaign is about over; that of the enemy has been taken prisoners. Seventeen forts were taken, over 200 guns, and a vast amount of cotton.

MAP OF MOBILE AND MOBILE BAY.

SCENE AT THE DEATH-BED OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FUNERAL PROCESSION IN WASHINGTON CITY.—[See Page 278.]

GATHERING HEART'S-EASE.

I WENT to gather heart's-ease
When the bright sun sank to rest,
Dewing all his sheaves of sunlight
To his garner in the west.
When the blossoms and the leaves,
Losing all their golden glow,
In the slowly gathering twilight,
Faintly flutter'd to and fro.

All the ground was starred with May-blooms,
Every where they met my eye;
But I went to gather heart's-ease,
So I pass'd all others by.
Oh! my heart was ne'er so joyous
As it was in those glad hours
When I gather'd light and careless
Near the wood-side gath'ring flowers.

Then I gave them all to you, dear,
And I looked up in your face,
And I wonder'd I could fancy
Aught more fair had any grace.
Then it was I gather'd heart's-ease,
Then it was, dear heart, I found
That the gloom of the May-blooms
Did not lie upon the ground.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FUNERAL.

NEVER was King or Emperor honored with such obsequies as those with which our Republic has laid to rest its greatest hero. It was not the pomp of the procession, not the splendor of the funereal rites, that gave character to the touching ceremony, but the infinite tenderness and love of a great people. It was the sorrow in every heart that moved each outward expression of affection. It was the universal grief as keenly draped our streets. Not only the mansions of the rich, but the squalid hovels of the poor put on the habit of mourning. The reward which the Republic gives to its faithful servants is not alone that the people have raised them to the seat of honor, but that when they fall in their country's cause their principal monument is the people's love.

The funeral ceremony proper took place at Washington on the 19th of April, at the White House. The remains of the President lay in the Green Room, in a metallic coffin. On each side of the coffin were four silver handles, with stars between, a vein of gold pervading it around the whole case in a serpentine form. This rested upon a canopied catafalque, and was decorated with wreaths of moss and evergreen, with white flowers and lilies intermingled. Around the catafalque, at noon, were gathered the family of the President, the officiating clergy, the delegation from New York City, the heads of Bureaus, representatives of the Sanitary and Christian Commissions, the Governors of several States, the Assistant Secretaries, a large number of Congressmen, officers of the Supreme Court, and the Diplomatic Corps.

Reverend Dr. Gurley opened the services by reading from the Episcopal service of the Dead. This was followed by an eloquent and affecting prayer by Bishop Simpson of the Methodist Episcopal Church. This portion of the service was most touching. At the close of his fervent appeal to the throne of Grace the Bishop repeated the Lord's Prayer, in which the whole audience joined as with one voice. The effect was sublime beyond any power of words to express, and the whole audience was melted to tears under its effect. Reverend Dr. Gurney, the pastor of the church which the President and his family were in the habit of attending, preached the funeral discourse. The service was closed with prayer by Reverend Dr. Hall, chaplain of the Senate.

The procession started from the White House at P.M., and headed up Pennsylvania Avenue to the Capitol amidst the tolling of bells and the firing of minute-guns. The funeral car was carried up the steps of the Capitol, beneath the vast dome, where, six weeks before, the President had delivered his second Inaugural, and into the Rotunda, where the bier was removed from the car to the catafalque, where a second service was read. Here the procession dispersed, leaving the remains of the President in the Rotunda, where they were open to view the next day.

A little before seven o'clock on the morning of the 21st the remains were escorted to the depôt of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. Lieutenant-General Grant's funeral escort immediately after the hearse. At ten o'clock the train arrived at Baltimore, and the coffin was laid in the Exchange for three or four hours, while the guards started for Harrisburg, where it arrived in the evening. The next morning (the 22d) the cortège proceeded to Philadelphia, where the body was laid in Independence Hall and exposed to the view of thousands.

On the 24th New York city received the remains of the President. The scene upon the route from the ferry-landing at the foot of Dashroose Street, and at the City Hall, where the body was laid in state, was inexpressibly solemn and impressive. Early in the morning crowds of people gathered in the City Hall Park, and waited there for hours in order to obtain a view of the features of their departed hero. But the scene was only exceeded in solemnity by the procession of the following day, the largest that ever thronged the streets of the great capital. It started at one o'clock P.M., proceeding up Broadway to Fourteenth Street, through Fourteenth Street to Fifth Avenue, and thence through Thirty-fourth Street to the Harlem River Railroad Depôt on the way to Springfield, Illinois, where the President is to be buried.

Among the many tributes to President LINCOLN one of the best was that paid by HENRY WARD BEECHER in a discourse delivered on the 23d. The following extract we quote as appropriate to the funeral cere ony:

"And now the martyr is moving in triumphal march, r ighter than when alive. The nation rises up at every stage of his coming. Cities and States are his pall-bearers, and the cannon speaks the hours with solemn expression. Dead, dead, dead, he yet speaketh. IS WASHINGTON dead? Is HAMDEN dead? Is DAVID dead? Is any man that was ever fit to live dead? Disenthralled of flesh, risen to the unobstructed sphere where passion never comes, he begins his illimitable work. His life has now grafted upon the infinite, and will be fruitful, so no earthly life can be. Pass on, thou that hast overcome! Your sorrows, all the sharp pains; your bells and bands and muffled drums sound triumph in his ears. Wail and weep here; God makes it echo joy and triumph there. It was on! Four years ago, oh illicrus, we took from thy midst an untried man, and from among the people; we gave him him to you a mighty conqueror. Not thine any more, but the nations'; not ours, but the world's. Give him place, oh ye prairies! In the midst of this great continent his dust shall rest, a sacred treasure to myriads who shall pilgrim to that shrine to kindle anew their zeal and patriotism. Let the mighty that move over the mighty places of the West chant his requiem! Ye people, behold the martyr whom blood, as so many of the noblest worth, pleads for fidelity, for law, for liberty!"

DARK WHITE.

"I NOVE her up, beautiful as she looks; and oh! she a real lady, Mr. Dark—pity she her father's child." So whispered old Dark White to her neighbor, as, setting down her basket of clothes, piled high like the much new-ladies now in vogue, she drew forth, she stood, arms a-kimbo, on the stoop of the many-storied tenement-house where she dwelt, and gazed after a coloring object away through the vapory mist of a soft spring sunset.

The blue black hair had fallen back, showing a face of fifty-five or sixty, tanned by sun and wind, and with some gray hairs in the locks about the forehead, but comely and pleasant. It was the countenance of a woman she might have been ere toil and time had laid their hands upon her. And as long as the curtain of her eyes was up, and between the motherly, her arms a-kimbo, her black eyes glittering, drinking in the picture with an ecstasy not to be accounted for by the mere fact that the original was lovely as was the lady who reclined upon the scarlet cushions. When it was quite gone she picked up the basket, and muttered to herself that she dwelt with a step which as yet had nothing in it age or decrepitude. "Oh, I'm chaw crazy about Miss Hamilton," she said to herself as she ascended the stairs, "and I'm tired, too, but I must all wear me life out for any lady's white dresses. She'll have a stroke soon day sitting in the sun kapin' the very color off them, and I'll have a stroke, too, by the crayther! An' she ridin' past without a look or a nod. Done her up! Much she cares for that, Dark White!"

But whether the lady cared or no, poor Dark, up in her garret-room, was busy for her self as for Miss Hamilton, and that to the end. That grew strong when other people's clothes were in the tub or on the board; but when the mistress's own—as was the case the post writes his tenderest sonnet for his lady's ear—as the musician's song is sweetest when his lady-love is present, and affection "will not do up" Miss Hamilton's white robes and dainty frills and sleeves to a more perfect pitch of misery than when the object of her affections was not in her way of showing adoration. Now, with her charcoal at a ruddy glow, she set to work ironing, polishing the lace with a bit of bone, and folding and crimping and fluting with artistic care.

"There ain't a lady in the land, young or nicer," she muttered, indulging in her inveterate habit of talking to herself. "And there ain't a lady more a lady." I seen many a princess and many a queen, but ladies whisper. Oh, she's as pretty as a picture, jest as pretty!"

If Dark White loved beauty it seemed a pity she should not have more of it about her. Her garret home was high and bleak. The paint, such as it had been, was worn away from the window-sash casings. Without that window glimpses of chimney-pots, and an occasional cat or two, and the sky-light on second floor, and the stairs, which were rather three and a half, for the ceiling sloped low on one side, leading to narrow feet between its termination and the floor; two strips of rag-carpet, a black bureau, on which reposed an old Bible, on the boards of which was recorded the birth of Dark White—Dorcas being the original name of the washer-woman, though custom had converted it into "Dark"—and four chairs. Add to these a few two candlesticks, and something in a frame which casual observers always took at first sight to be a bronze jug, but which connoisseurs set down as a paper profile of the late Mr. White, cordwainer, and you have the entire contents of Dark's apartment which, in addition to being attained by the most break-neck flights of stairs ever manufactured, was unsavingly high in the matter of rent. Yet Dark had lived there ten long years, for two reasons: firstly, there was in the back-yard what the laundress called "a good drying-ground," and secondly, there a few blocks distant from the aristocratic region where the Hamiltons' mansion reared its marble walls. To hear that, to see the lamps lighted, the roll past in her carriage, to go softly out after night and hear the sound of music from the glowing rose-light from the windows, and now and then when it was warm to distinguish through those open casements the voice of Charlotte Hamilton, were pleasures the old woman would have relinquished much for. If ever humble heart shrined an idol the heart of old Dark White so enshrined the beautiful child. It had been so since the latter was a child. Twice a week for eighteen long years Dark had opened the servants' door of the great house with a familiar hand, and with her basket of linen poised on one hip toiled slowly up the velvet-covered stairs and tapped at a door. Then waiting and listening she would hear the cry, "Come in, Dark!" and a glow would pass over her face as though lamplight had fallen on it for an instant.

At first the voice that cried, "Come in, Dark!" was the voice of a young child just able to talk. Then it was a girl's voice. Now it was a woman's, musical and mellow. Always it was just as sweet to poor Dark's ear. To-night as the clock struck ten the white drift was polished and the basket brimful. And Dark looked out of her window.

"Not to-night," she said, "and I'll take 'em over now. I'd like to see her afore I sleep. It makes me feel good."

And tying on her hood she took up her burden and departed. Down the clean but shabby street, along a better one, and then suddenly into the magnificent avenue where the stone-walls and the porch columns were half draped by clinging festoons of green and blooming purple blossom. The Hamiltons' house was the handsomest of all. And as Dark crept in at the servants' door she wondered, as she had every day, at its splendor. She was a little afraid to set her foot on the rich coverings of hall and stairs, they were so different from the bare planks of the house she lived in. But she was used to. But they must be trodden to reach Miss Hamilton's room, so she went on and on, and tapped upon the panels of the boudoir with her soaked and sopsy knuckles. There was no answer. Dark listened and sighed. "She out here," she said. "She's just gone somewhere's, well, I'll leave the things and go, only 'twould ha' been good to see her." And opening the door she entered. As she did so a young lady turned with a start from the mantle against which she leaned with a letter clutched in her hand and scrutinized it very like tears in her eyes.

"Oh, Dark, I didn't hear you!" she said, hurriedly; "you've brought the things home?"

"Yes, Miss," said old Dark, "and I've done 'em up lovely, though I say it that shouldn't. See how straight and purty the frills and sleeves lie. I have such luck with your things always —more'n with most folks."

"You love to work with them, Dark—that's the reason," said the young lady. And then she looked ardently into the distance, and tears came into her heart eyes. Dark, thinking of something beside the linen in that basket. The old woman watched her intently; her fingers twitch themselves together; her eyes grew anxious. At last she spoke. "Miss Lotty—"

The young lady looked up and said, "Dark!—I, Dark."

"Oh, Miss Lotty, I'm a makin' bold; but you haven't any one to help you done yon yo for the hold of your life; and, poor washer-woman as I am, I'm fond o' you. And when you was a child me and you were friends. I have told me your troubles, I've mended dolls for you, and I've washed their things, and I've seen the time when you've put your arm round my neck and said, 'Dear Dark!'—I, have; and I can't help, Miss Lotty, when there's tears in your eyes, and you're so pale, askin' you to tell old Dark what's up, and begin to cry, and let to do something if I can."

A flush passed over the girl's face, and then tears burst forth unchecked, and she sobbed outright for a moment.

"I am in trouble grief, Dark," she said. "At least I fancy I am; but it's all nonsense, I dare say. No real trouble—nothing you could understand. But I wouldn't care to pass awake to-night. I think Dr. Jalap would call me hysterical; but thank you—you're a good soul, Dark." These words were said before she had choked down her sobs and dried her eyes, and now she stood tall and straight before old Dark and tried to smile. "It was a visit of Mr. Charles Fowler, Dark. You don't know him? I can do?" she said.

"No, Dark. As I told you, it is nothing you could understand."

Old Dark turned to go. She gave one step toward the door, and then turned back, quickly. A little snow-white hand with rose-tinted finger-tips, and pressed it to her lips. "Good-night, Miss Lotty," she said, "and stand between you and grief. Good-night!" Then with her empty basket she went home, and there, by the dim candlelight, stood before the old paper profile, which looked to strangers like a bronze jug, the profile of the late Silas White, shoemaker, and prayed with it intently. "Ah! that's all," said the old woman, might understand more than some thinks she can. It's a little love affair, the same thing as mine, I'll bear, how the time goes! I was young once, though I wasn't as lady-like!" And then she put her hands on her face and cried.

But Charlotte Hamilton never slept at all. Up and down the splendid boudoir she paced all night long with the letter in her hand. A hasty note unbound; her bosom heaving beneath the folds of lace and muslin which veiled it. Over and over again she read the words, scanned and clenched her jeweled fingers until the almond-shaped nails cut into the soft palm. Until once she sobbed aloud.

"Charley, I can not, can not give you up!"

When the gay dawn broke she sat down beside her rosewood desk to write. Thrice she began, thrice rent the paper into fragments and laid down her pen.

At last these words remained upon a snowy sheet which she folded and placed within an envelope directed to "Charles Gordon:"

"If you think my actions words without pain you are mistaken. If you think my heart is changed you err; but I am powerless to help it. You must know, Yes, read, Charles; I have no choice. Yet in that cruel, cruel letter which you have received I have no part. If he has said to you, as I know he has, that Miss Hamilton has no right to stop, that you are beneath me, believe that I would have felt honored by your love. If he has told you also that I will soon become the wife of another man, he has pronounced his sentence upon his own and upon my love and obedience. I will neither vex against his will the man I love, nor at his bidding can whom I detest. Farewell, Charles, it is hard to bid you forget me; but for both of us to remember will be too sharp a pain, and so I write the words—forget me and be happy.

"CHARLOTTE HAMILTON."

The letter was sent; and that night, when the long rows of lamps glittered like jewels along the stately avenue, Dark White crept up the broad staircase once again, and stood in Miss Hamilton's room.

She was dressing for a ball, and the white robes she wore by choice rather than silks or velvets, and the pearls in her black hair and about her rounded wrists and at her throat, made her look like a bride. Dark told her so; and at that she laughed a little bitterly. "And when you are married," said Dark (if it's in the grandest church in New York), "I'll come to see it; and I'll think, standing there, I done her up, and as long as I've got two hands I'll keep a doin' of her up, if she'll but-let me. But I didn't come for that Miss Lotty. I've a message."

"A message, Dark—from whom?"

Dark looked up from the glass, and stood with her hands full of the long ropes of pearls she was binding in her hair.

"From a gentleman in sailor's clothes, Miss Lotty —a tall gentleman with light hair—not like a sailor in his looks at all. No doubt I don't understand it. If you please, it's many things a poor old body like me needn't understand. But he asked me did I know Miss Hamilton. Says I, 'I do, Sir. I've done her up these ten years and more.' Says he, 'Then I have a letter for her that must go safe. Can you give it to her yourself, and no else knowing of it?' Says I, 'Ay, can, I, Sir.' So he gave me this,"—and from under her shawl she drew a tiny note—"and he said I was to remember it was a handsome one Miss, and young and brave and good, I'm sure, and very sad, Miss, like as if his heart was broke a-most."

Charlotte Hamilton caught the note from the wrinkled fingers of the washer-woman, and, as she did so, dropped the ropes of pearls upon the floor. Dark stooped and picked them up, and reached them a step forward to the light, but that Dark stooped and picked them up.

Her face, the lines again and again, and then crouched down lower and lower, and hid her face in the cushions of the footstool.

Old Dark, in her patched calico and black hood, bent over her. "Miss Lotty! oh, Miss Lotty, dear! I think thinks she understands. I know my heart, rich or poor, Miss Lotty; and he's one to have heart's love given him."

Then Charlotte Hamilton lifted her tear-stained face and looked at Dark.

"Did you ever wish to be rich, to find a house like this, Dark, and a high family?—did you ever envy great folks, Dark?" she said.

"The Lord forgive me! many and many's the time, Miss Lotty."

"Oh, Dark, never do it again! I wish I were the poorest girl in the world. I wish I had your daughter, helping you over the tubs day after day; for all this wealth, and style, and grand family-name have brought me only life and happiness. Because I am Miss Hamilton I must be wretched!"

And then, without any apparent reason, Dark White broke out to talking from head to foot to bring her hands and moan, and panted out, breathlessly, "Oh! Miss Lotty, dear, don't say that, or you won't break my heart. It's a wonderful thing to be poor. It is, indeed, Miss Lotty."

She was so troubled, so woeful, that Charlotte Hamilton ceased to weep. Love grief so strange. Two hours afterward the heiress was moving through the dance in her white robes and glistening pearls, and no one guessed that the poor washer-woman over the wealthy lover on whose shoulder her white hand rested. It was the snare of the fowler. But with no eye upon her save that of God and his holy angels, sobbed softly by her attic window, and besought her Lord to help sorrow.

So Charles Gordon was far upon the sea, with every prospect sacrificed, and no thought but to do as he was told. And Miss Hamilton moved through society as decorously as ever; and dressed as well, and smiled as much, and sang as often. And Dark's great wash was the worst it ever was.

And Dark White the washer-woman only knew that it was so—not Mr. Hamilton: not Percy Miles, of the everlasting smile and the eternal fashion-plate costume, who came a-wooing under the father's favor; not Arrowood society, which was the look-out for gossip. But at last there came a time when the calm was broken. Percy Miles withdrew offer of his hand and heart, and was refused. That day Mr. Hamilton called Charlotte to his study.

He was pale and stern. He laid the letter she had written on the table, and said,

"Charlotte, I have not sent this yet; I will not. Think again."

"I have thought," she said. "I will never marry him."

"Not if I command you to do so?"

"You will not, Sir, for I could not obey you. I your command—and here lies my heart and—"

"I refused the man I loved. I will live and die single at your bidding, but I can marry no one else."

Then Mr. Hamilton, rising, took her hand in his. All her life long she never forgot his look or his voice.

"Charlotte," he said, "I owe you a duty. I beg you to marry this gentleman—not for my sake—for your own. Percy Miles will be ruined by your husband's refusal. For a moment Charlotte stood stunned and bewildered; then she put her arms about her father's neck.

"Papa," she said, "I will stay with you, share your poverty, work for you if I can, but never marry Percy Miles, not though he were a king."

The old man only untwined her arms from his neck.

"I have warned you," he said. "Oh, girl, girl, you little know how low Percy Miles stoops when he offers you his hand!"

"Poverty can not lower John Hamilton's daughter," said Charlotte, proudly. "You have taught me that, papa."

"John Hamilton's daughter!" he repeated, with a sort of sneer. "Ah, well, I have done my duty. I have warned you. Do as you please."

And standing beside her, he watched her re-seal

the note, and saw her give it into the servant's hand; then turning from her, begged to be left alone. As Miss Hamilton crossed the threshold she looked back, and saw him for the last time writing already beside his desk. The next morning he was gone. He had taken passage in a vessel that sailed at dawn for Europe, and left the storm to break upon the heads of others.

In a few hours the world knew that John Hamilton was a ruined man; that the fair pain many others were involved; and that for years he had been playing a bold game, which, being lost, made him almost infamous.

And while the wonder engrossed the thoughts of others Charlotte sat alone with the letter he had written her upon her knee, believing she had gone mad; for there she read these words:

"Remembering our last meeting, you can not say that I have not done my duty." As you have seen so you must reap. I should be happier could I know that your life would be passed in comfort and affluence. Were the name of Hamilton one to be proud of I would leave you that. As it is, you may be glad to know it is not yours. Your own is humbler and more honest. You will learn the truth from the papers I shall leave. There was never any deep love between us. But you have been dutiful. God bless you! We may meet in the next world—never here.

And as yet Charlotte had not dared to open the sealed packet where the secret lay. Not Charlotte Hamilton? No; she was she had a horror fell upon her, and she felt her blood freezing in her veins.

And as she bowed her head beneath the blow which had fallen and the unseen stroke yet hanging over her it had not yet struck her heart. White stole in and came and knelt beside her. She looked at the letter on her knee, and at the sealed packet, and asked a question with her eyes. And the proud girl turned to her poor comforter.

"Oh, Dark," she sobbed, "I am bewildered; I dare not read those papers! I am afraid of what he who have known me so long—the real truth: was poor papa mad when he wrote this, or am I not his daughter?"

Old Dark began to rock herself to and fro.

"He had his senses, Miss Lotty," she said. "I know it's all true, my dearey—all true."

"Who am I, Dark, if not Miss Hamilton?"

"It's in those papers, Miss Lotty."

"Tell me; I can not read. Oh, my brain!"

"Oh! it's hard to tell, Miss Lotty, and to see you sorrow before, and many years before it, as you haven't the gift of talking like a lady could, and I don't know where to begin. There was a woman once—a young woman Dun, Miss Lotty—and she had and tried to be honest and to do her duty to her God and her husband. They were poor folk, Miss—he not a bit of a gentleman—considering of each other, clinging together like as if they had no other friends; and they lived in a little place all alone. So when he took sick of a fever that seemed to burn his life up by slow inches his wife felt the hell would win by there on the bed, and they set the Lord not to leave her behind if he was took. But it seemed the Lord refused to listen, and the very day he was buried her lord and love, she felt as the world—a little girl, that never rightly saw her father, though the mother made them take her and show her the dead face in its coffin—felt as if even the baby might remember.

"So you see, being but a poor shoemaker, after the funeral there was nothing left. And she was ill—the mother, you know, a long while; and it seemed like they would starve to death. And so there came to the neighborhood a lady and gentleman, Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton, and they heard of her, and they did kindly by her and by the child. And the lady took a fancy to the baby—she'd never had none of her own—and so one day both came to the woman and asked her to give the child to them. And she cried out, 'No, quite wild like, and begged for baby to be hurt. But that only made her cover. They told her she was poor and could hardly earn bread, and that with them the child would be brought up with help.

"And you do wrong to put your own feelings between her and her good,' says the lady. 'And the poor woman says—says she, 'I will be silent,' and prayed God to help her. But she wouldn't take money—oh no, that was like selling her child.

"So they wrote out papers and the child was given, promising sewer to claim the girl; and the child was taken to Mrs. Hamilton's, and a hired nurse took care of it, and it grew up beautiful and strong, and a lady—that poor shoemaker's child. And its poor mother saw it changing so, and thanked Heaven she had done what she had. But oh—but oh, she never thought of this, and I can't tell you her name!"

"Open them papers—her name is at the bottom, and oh, don't hate her—don't hate her! She's poor and in her punishment, but she's been kind to you all her life."

She put the package, with its red seal, on Charlotte's knee.

The girl took it slowly up, opened it, and waited, with her hand covering the name. Then she forced herself to read the line written in blotted characters—"Dorcas White."

The old woman watched her. She never stirred. Her head was bowed down, her cheek white. Poor Dark trembled. She shrank back trembling, and hid her face in her apron. Suddenly a word dropped into the silence—one word. Old Dark looked up; she dreamed it. She lifted up her eyes. Her daughter stood there with outstretched arms, and on them she said again, "mother!" And the two women wept upon each other's bosoms.

For a few moments only; for at last Dark lifted her face, radiant with joy, and said, gently, "The story isn't done yet, dearey. There's more to tell."

"More, mother!"

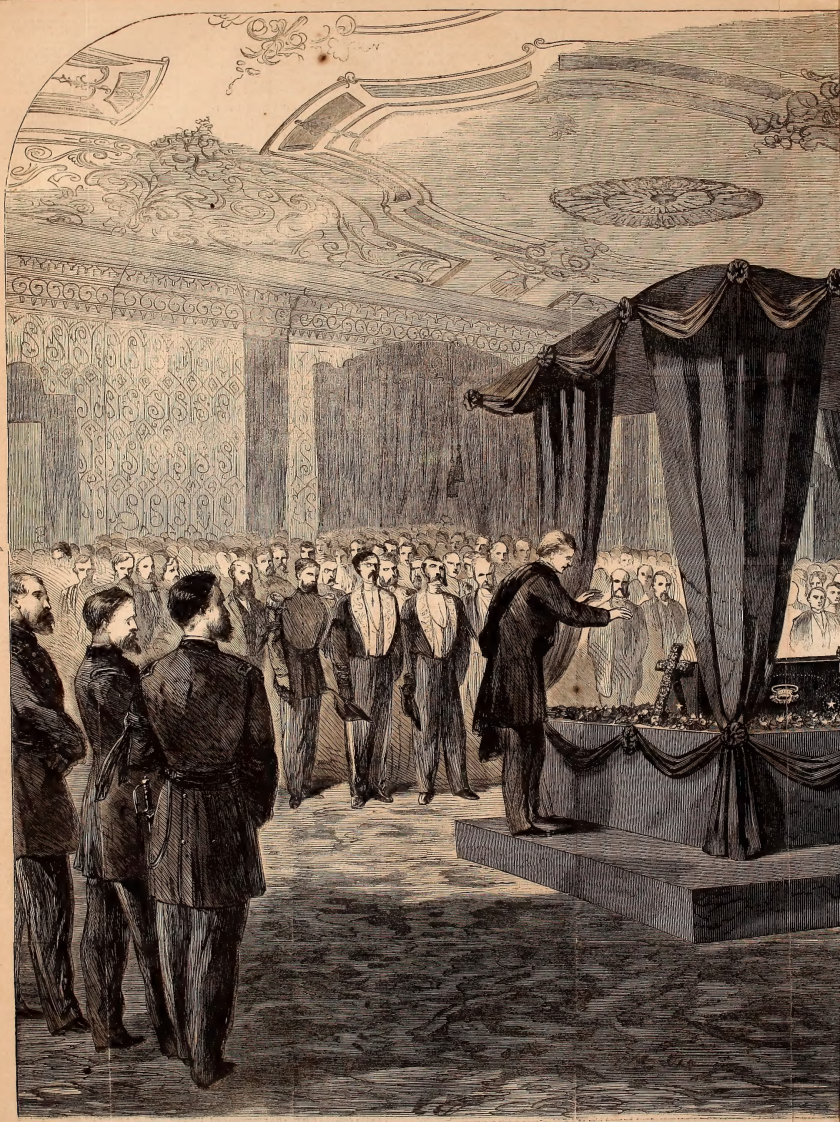
"Yes, dearey. It begins to-day. I don't have many visitors, but I had one this morning. He came up my stairs and rapped. I knowed him at once, though he's browner than he was six months ago, and more sailor-like. Says he, all breathless and pale, 'Let me come in and sit down. I want to talk to you.' I said, 'And welcome, Sir.' And we talked about you, dearey. Oh, my pet, there's many things Dark doesn't understand, but this ain't one of 'em. You're dearer to him than all the world. He's true and brave. He'd heard half the story, and I told him the rest—my part, you know. Oh, dearey, I saw you cry one night for him, and he cried for you to-day. The tears were in his blue eyes. Will you see him now?"

Passing for an answer she left the room. In another moment a step smote the stair with a glad ring, and Charles Gordon stood upon the threshold.

All the girl's proud blood rushed into her face. She put out her hand to stop him. "Stay!" she said. "Remember I am no longer Miss Hamilton. I am the daughter of a ruined man, a bankrupt maker; the daughter of humble, ignorant Dorcas White." She tried to go on, but beneath the love-light in his blue eyes her pride failed her. The proud color died away, and sobbing forth, "Oh, Charley, I am so happy!" she fell upon her in his arms.

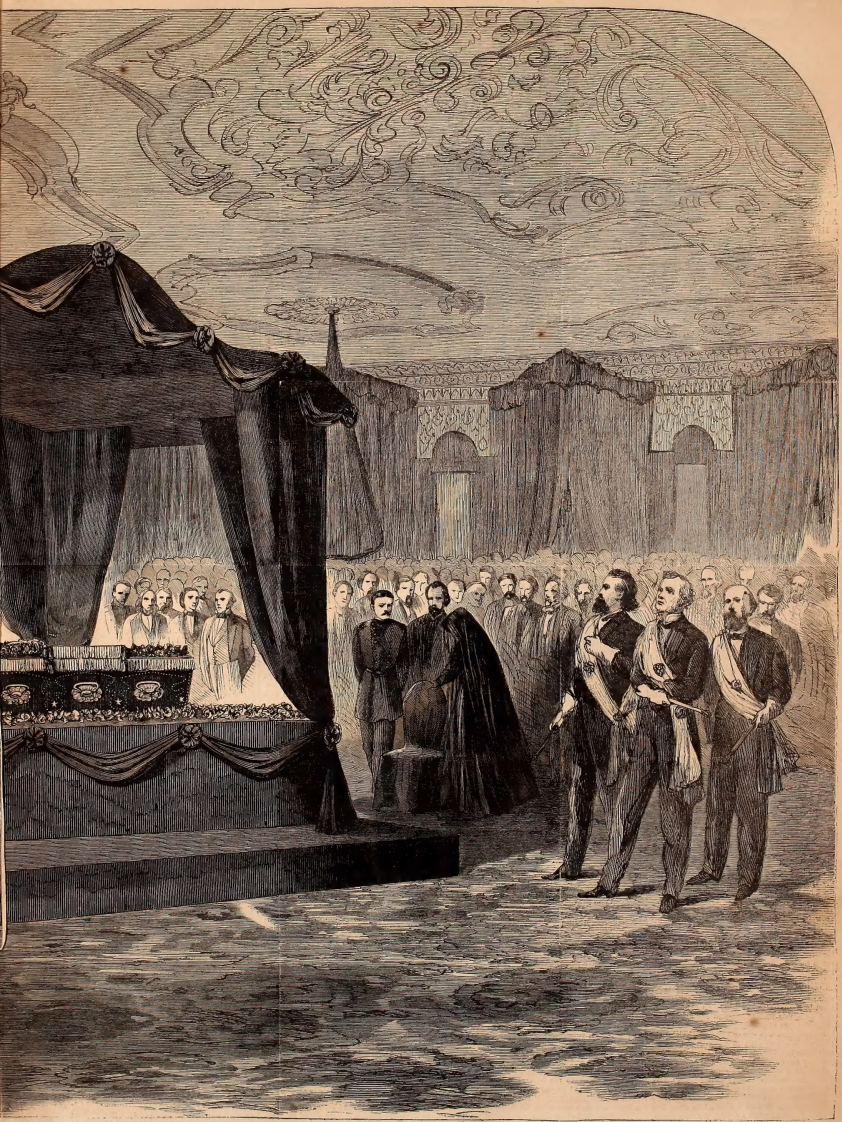
And so it came to pass that one day there was a humble wedding in a church as humble; and that within a quiet cottage home, where Love reigned paramount, Old Dame ended her quiet life, honored and cherished; and, ere she closed her eyes, had, with her wrinkled hands, heaped many a basket high with snow-white lines for successive babies who called Lottie mother.

A SAILOR'S YARN.



THE Captain's wife and daughter generally accompanied him on his voyages, and whether was one of those sweet creatures that one can not see without admiring, and can not admire without loving. Too many such women are lost to the world—wanting opportunities which circumstances gave me of meeting and conversing with her, that it was not long before I began to feel a more than ordinary pleasure and interest in her society. But I soon discovered the hopelessness of my feelings beyond esteem for her virtues, and regretted that I should, as I had not been above a week at sea, when I saw tokens of reciprocal attachment between her and Trucbold. Nothing particular occurred during our voyage. One afternoon, as I was walking on the deck, Truebold came up to me in a state of great excitation, and told me that the Captain had just ordered him out of the cabin.

I asked him what he meant.



After a few minutes he told me that he and the Captain's daughter had long cherished an affection for each other; and that he had applied to the Captain's permission to marry her when we arrived again in port. On hearing which the Captain had flown into a violent passion, and ordered him off the deck, never to enter his cabin in future, and swore to dash to pieces any one who spoke to him again.

In the mean time the Captain had called his daughter into his cabin, and told her—with a threat of military confinement on bread and water—however, under any circumstances, to allow any communication to take place between her and Truebold, unless in his own presence. She replied that, not knowing the inflexible nature of her father to think lightly of his threats—for some time tried to obey.

For the first week or two I was a witness to the painful injunctions of the Captain were, to all appearance, strictly observed by his daughter and Truebold. But the effects of so terrible a struggle in her heart were soon evident; and, in spite of all that both the Captain and I could say to persuade either their daughter, her spirit sunk, the ruddy tinge disappeared from her cheeks, and she gradually drooped, till at last she was confined to her bed—an earthly existence seemed all but broken. In all his anxiety for her—for the Captain really loved his daughter—he was deeply

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FUNERAL—SERVICE AT

HE WHITE HOUSE, APRIL 19, 1865.—[SEE PAGE 278.]

DESERTED.

THE river flow'd past with the light on its breast,
And the weeds went eddying by,
And the round red sun sank down in the west
When my love bring loving lips to my lips were press'd
Under the evening sky.

Now weeping alone by the river I stray,
For my love he has left me this many a day,
Left me to droop and die!

As the river flow'd then the river flows still,
In ripple and foam and spray,
On by the church, and round by the hill,
And under the sluice of the old burnt mill,
And out to the fading day.

But I no more, no more, for delight grows cold
When the song is sung, and the tale is told,
And the heart is given away!

Oh, river, run far! Oh, river, run fast!
Oh, weeds, float out to the sea!
For the sun has gone down on my beautiful past,
And the hopes that like breed on the waters I cast
Have drifted away like thee!
So the dream it is fled, and the day it is done,
And my lips still murmur the name of one
Who will never come back to me!

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY.

BY AMELIA B EDWARDS.

Author of "Barbara's History," &c.

PROLOGUE.—A.D. 1760.

JACOB TREFALDEN, merchant and alderman of London, lay dying in an upper chamber of his house in Basinghall Street, toward evening on the third day of April, Anno Domini seventeen hundred and sixty.

It was growing rapidly dusk. The great house was full of gloom, and silence, and the shadow of death. Two physicians occupied two easy-chairs by the fire in the sick man's chamber. They were both notabilities in their day. The one was Sir John Pringle, Physician Extraordinary to the King, a brave and skilful man, who had smelt powder at Dettingen, and won the soldiers' hearts by his indomitable coolness under fire. The other was Doctor Archen Ward, commonly called "Spot Ward" from his abicund face; and immortalized by Hogarth in that somewhat bitter picture called The Consulting C Underlakers.

These gentlemen did little in the way of conversation. When they spoke at all, it was in a whisper. Now and then they compared their watches with the glass-piece on the mantelshelf. Now and then they glanced toward the bed where, propped almost upright with pillows, an old man was sinking peacefully out of life. His eyes was sunken. His breathing was slow and stertorous. He had been smitten down that day at noon by a stroke of apoplexy; was rescued then from 'Change in a dying state; and had not spoken since. His housekeeper crouched by his bedside, silent and awe-struck. His three sons and his lawyer waited in the drawing-room below. They all knew that he had not two more hours to live.

In the room time the dusk thickened, and the evening mildew grew more and more oppressive. A chariot rumbled past from time to time, or a news-vender trudged by, hawking the London Gazette, and proclaiming the sentence just passed on Lord George Sackville. Sometimes a neighbor's foot-boy came to the door with a civil inquiry,—a little knot of passengers loitered on the opposite pavement, and glanced up, whisperingly, at the curtained windows. By-and-by even these ceased to come and go. A few oil-lamps were lighted at intervals along the dingy thoroughfare, and the stars and the watchmen came out together.

"In the name of Heaven," said Captain Trefalden, "let us have lights!" and rang the drawing-room bell.

Candles were brought, and the heavy damask curtains were drawn. Captain Trefalden took up the Gazette; Frederick Trefalden looked at himself in a glass, arranged the folds of his cravat, yawned, took snuff, and contemplated the symmetry of his legs; William Trefalden drew a little table to the fire, and began diligently turning over the leaves of the last Idler. There were other papers and books on the table as well—among them a little volume entitled "Rasselas," from the learned pen of Mr. Samuel Johnson (he was not yet LL.D.), and the two first volumes of "Tristram Shandy," works by that ingenious gentleman, the Reverend Laurence Sterne. Both works were already popular, though published only a few months before.

These three brothers were curiously alike, and curiously unlike. They all resembled their father; they were all fine men; and they were all good-looking. Old Jacob was a Cornish man, had been lithe and athwart in his youth, and stood five feet eleven without his shoes. Captain Trefalden was not so fair; Frederick Trefalden was not so tall; William Trefalden was neither so fair, nor so tall, nor so handsome; and yet they were all like him, and like each other.

Captain Jacob was the eldest. His father had intended him for his own business, but, somehow or another, the lad never took kindly to indigo. He preferred scarlet—especially scarlet turned up with buff—and he went into the army. Having led a roving, irregular youth, sown his wild oats in various congenial European soils, and fought gallantly at Dettingen, Fontenoy, Laffeldt, and Minden, he had now, at forty years of age, committed the unpeaksable folly of marrying for neither rank nor money, but only for love. His father had threatened to disinherit Captain Trefalden for this misdeed, and for five months past had forbidden him the house. His brothers were even more indignant than their father—or had seemed to be so. In short, this was the first occasion on which the worthy officer had set foot in Basinghall Street for many a long day; and all three gentlemen were naturally somewhat outstrained and silent.

Frederick, the second son, was thirty-six; William, thirty. Frederick hated indigo almost as cordially as his brother Jacob; William had scarcely a thought that was not dyed in it. Frederick was an airy, idle, chocolate-drinking, snuff-taking, card-playing, ridotto-haunting man of pleasure. William was a cool, methodical, ambitious man of business. Each of the three had ever cared much for the other two. It was not in the nature of things that much affection should exist between them. Their temperaments and pursuits were radically unlike. They had lost their mother while they were yet boys. They had no sister. She died in the sweet womanly home-links had all been wanting to bind their hearts together.

And now the brothers were met under their father's roof this memorable third evening in April; and in the dark chamber overhead lay ready beyond all help from human skill, that father lay dying. They were all thinking the same thing in the silence of their hearts, and in those thoughts there was neither prayer nor sadness. Poor old man! He was immensely rich—he was palpably destitute of the one loved him; and he was worth Half a Million.

Mr. Frederick Trefalden took out his watch, swore a fashionable oath, and declared that he was famishing.

"Have something to eat, brother Fred?" suggested the captain; and he rang the bell again, and ordered refreshmeps to be taken into the dining-room.

The two younger Trefaldens exchanged glances and a covert smile. Their elder brother was fairly predictable in the matter of a meal seem! Well, well, Lawyer Beavington is there, and the will has yet to be read.

At nine o'clock Mr. Fred and the captain go down together; for the latter has ridden up from Hounslow, and will not object to join his brother in a mutton chop and a modest bumper of claret." Mr. Will, like a sober citizen, had dined at two o'clock, and only desires that a dish of tea may be sent to him in the study.

If any thing could be more dismal than that gloomy drawing-room it was the still gloomier room underneath below. The walls were paneled with dark oak, richly carved. The chimney-piece was a ponderous structure of black and yellow marble. The hangings were of mulberry-colored damask. A portrait of the master of the house, painted when he was young by Sir James Thornhill, hung over the fire-place. Seen by the feeble glimmer of a couple of wax-lights, this picture had an air of mysterious interest about the place which was infinitely depressing. The very viands might have reminded these gentlemen of Belshazzar's feast. Above all, the great veal pasty which lay in state in the middle of the board. They were both hungry, however, and did full justice to the latter.

The captain took his place at the head of the table, and plunged his knife gallantly into the heart of the pasty.

"If thou hast as good a stomach, Fred, as myself," said he, "thou wilt not mind the loss of the fence of the good things before him, "I'll warrant thee we'll sack this fortress handsomely."

The fine gentleman shrugged his shoulders somewhat contemptuously.

"I detest such coarse dishes," said he. "I dined with Sir Francis Dashwood over at the Hammums. We had a ragout of young chicks, not a week out of the shell, and some à-la-mode beef that melted in one's very breath away," brother Jacob."

"I'll eat out of this pasty as of an octagon in Christendom," said the captain.

Mr. Horace Walpole and Mrs. Clive were at dinner at the house of the latter, when that unnamed the bean; "and the drollest part of the story is that Sir Harry and I adjourned in the evening to Mrs. Cornelys' in Soho Square! There I somehow supping in the very next box to Mr. Horace and Mrs. Kitty again!"

"I'll have a glass of this pasty as of an octagon in Christendom," said the captain.

Mr. Horace Walpole and Mrs. Clive were at dinner at the house of the latter, when that unnamed the bean; "and the drollest part of the story is that Sir Harry and I adjourned in the evening to Mrs. Cornelys' in Soho Square! There I somehow supping in the very next box to Mr. Horace and Mrs. Kitty again!"

"Ay, indeed," replied the captain, thoughtfully.

"But he never knew how to enjoy his money."

"Never."

"To live in a place like this, for instance," said the latter, looking round the room, "in Basinghall Street—faugh! And to keep such a cook; and never to have set up his chariot! 'Sdeath, Sir, he and I know better what to do with his guineas!"

"I should think so, brother Fred, I should think so," replied the captain, with a touch of sadness in his voice. "Twas a dull life—poor old gentleman! Methinks you and I might have helped to make it gayer."

"Curse me if I know how!" ejaculated Mr. Fred.

"By sticking to the business—by living at home—by doing like young Will yonder," replied the elder brother. "That boy hath been a better son than you or me, brother Fred."

Mr. Fred looked very grave indeed. "Will hath an old head on young shoulders," said he. "Harkee, Jacob, hast any notion how the old man has left his money?"

"No more than this glass of claret," replied the captain.

They were both silent. A footstep went by in the hall. They listened; they looked at each other; they filled their glasses again. The same thought was uppermost in the mind of each.

"The fairest thing, Fred," said the honest captain, "would be, if twere left to us, share and share alike."

"Share and share alike!" echoed Mr. Fred, with a sounding oath. "Nay; the old man was too proud of his fortune to do that, brother Jacob. My own notion of this matter is— Hush! Any one listening?"

Captain Trefalden rose, glanced into the hall, closed the door, and resumed his seat.

"Not a soul. Well?"

"Well, my own notion is, that we younger sons shall have a matter of sixty or eighty thousand apiece—the rest, as the head of the family, will take the bulk."

"It may be, Fred," mused the captain, complacently.

"And that bulk," continued Mr. Fred, "will be some three hundred and forty thousand pounds."

"I shall have to ask thee, Fred, how to spend it," said the captain, smiling.

"That thou shalt spend it like a prince. Thou shalt buy an estate in Kent, and a townhouse in Soho; thou shalt have horses, chariots, lackeys, liveries, wines, a pack of hounds, a box at the Italian Opera—"

"Which I understand a word of," interrupted the captain.

"A French cook, a private chaplain, a black footboy, a villa handsome for thy wife, and for thyself the prettiest mistress—"

"Hold, Fred," interposed the captain again. "None of the last, I beseech thee. My days of gallantry are over."

"But, my dear brother, no man of quality—"

"I'm not a man of quality," said the other, "I'm a simple soldier, and the son of a plain city merchant."

"Well, then, no man of parts and fortune—"

"The fortune's not mine yet, Fred," said the captain, shaking his head at his parts, why I think the less said of them the better. I'm no scholar, and that thou knowest as well as myself. Hark! Lawyer Beavington. Come in."

The door opened, and a bronzed upright man, with something of a military bearing, came in. He held his hat and cane in his hand and saluted the brothers courteously. It was Sir John Pringle.

"Gentlemen," he said, gravely, "I grieve to be the bearer of sad tidings."

The brothers rose in silence. Captain Trefalden changed color.

"Is he—is he dead?" he faltered.

The physician bowed his head.

Captain Trefalden turned his face away. Frederick Trefalden took out his handkerchief and cautiously wiped away a tear—which was not there.

"Dr. Ward is gone," said Sir John, after a brief pause, "to break his respects and condolences. Gentlemen, I wish you a good-evening."

"You will take a glass of claret, Sir John?" said Mr. Fred, pressing forward to the table. But almost before he could say the words the physician had bowed a civil negative, and was gone. Mr. Fred shrugged his shoulders, filled the glass and drank, and emptied it.

"Zounds, brother," said he, "'tis of no use to be melancholy. Remember thou'rt now the head of the family. Let us go up stairs and read the will."

In the mean time William Trefalden, like a methodical young man of business, had been up to his father's room to find his father's keys, and had taken from his pocket-book to fetch his father's deed-box out from the iron safe. When Mr. Fred and the captain came into the room they found Lawyer Beavington with his spectacles on, and the box before him.

"Gentlemen," he said, with calm impressive, "be pleased to sit."

So the brothers drew their chairs to the table and sat down; and they all somewhat agitated.

The man of law unlocked the box.

It was full of papers, leases, transfers, debentures, mortgages, bills of exchange, and so forth. These had all to be taken out, opened, and laid aside before the will turned up. That important document was at the very bottom like hope at the bottom of Pandora's casket.

"Tis not a long will," observed Mr. Beavington, with a preparatory cough.

As he unfolded it a slip of paper fell out.

"A memorandum, apparently, in your excellent father's hand," said he, glancing through it. "Hm—ha—refers to the amount of his personal estate, and generally. Need any ideas of the extent of the property?"

"Twas thought my father owned half a million," replied Mr. Fred, eagerly.

"More than that," said the youngest son, with a shake of the head.

"Then I'll read this. The memorandum runs thus: "Upon a rough calculation, I believe I may estimate my present estate at about five hundred and twenty-five thousand pounds. (Dated) January the first, Anno Leonini seventeen hundred and sixty. Jacob Trefalden." A goodly fortune, gentlemen—a goodly fortune!"

The three brothers drew a deep breath of satisfaction.

"Five hundred and twenty-five thousand pounds!" repeated the captain. "Prythee, Mr. Beavington, proceed to the will."

The lawyer folded up the memorandum very slowly, drew the candles nearer, wiped his spectacles, and began:

"In the name of God, AMEN. I JACOB TREFALDEN, citizen in the town of Redruth in the County of Cornwall and now a Citizen of London, Merchant (a Widower) being at present in good health of Body, and of sound and disposing Mind and Memory, for which I bless God. Do this eleventh day of January one thousand seven hundred and sixty make and ordain this my last Will and Testament in manner and form following (that is to say) IMPRIMIS I DESIRE to be interred in my Family Vault by the side of my lately deceased wife and with as little Pomp and ceremony as may be. ITEM I give to each of my Executors hereinafter named as shall act under this my Will Five Hundred pounds Sterling each to be paid to or retained by them within six Calendar Months after my decease. I GIVE to my three sons Jacob, Frederick and William Five Thousand pounds Sterling each. I GIVE—"

"Stay! Five thou— Please to read that again, Mr. Beavington," interrupted Captain Trefalden.

"Five Thousand pounds Sterling each," repeated the lawyer. "The amount is quite plain. But have patience, gentlemen. We are but at the preliminaries. This five thousand each hath, doubtless, some special purpose. The main business is to come."

"Very possibly—very possibly, Mr. Beavington," replied the Captain. "I am all attention."

"ITEM I GIVE to my Cashier Edward Prescott Five Hundred pounds Sterling. I GIVE to my other clerks One Hundred pounds Sterling each. AND I GIVE to my Household Servants Two Hundred pounds Sterling to be divided among them in equal shares. All which last-mentioned Legacies I direct shall be paid within three Calendar Months next after my decease. I GIVE to the Minister for the time being of the Parish in which I shall happen to reside immediately previous to my decease One Hundred pounds Sterling and to be paid to them within One Calendar Month after that event shall happen and be by them forthwith distributed in such manner and proportion as they shall think proper among the poor Widows and Orphans of the Parish respectively. ITEM, I do hereby direct and appoint that my Executors shall as soon as possible after my decease set apart so much of my Property which consists entirely of Personal Estate, and is chiefly invested in the Government Stocks and Funds of this Kingdom as will be sufficient to realize property as shall be equal in value to the sum of Five Hundred Thousand pounds Sterling—"

"Ha! now for it!" exclaimed Mr. Fred, breathlessly.

"—the sum of Five Hundred Thousand pounds Sterling," continued the lawyer, "which I give to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London for the time being and their successors forever IN TRUST for the purposes hereinafter expressed and I desire that as to this Gift they shall be called THE ALDERMEN'S TRUSTEES' and that the amount of my Funded Property so to be set apart shall immediately afterwards be transfered to them accordingly."

The lawyer paused to clear his glasses. The brothers looked blankly in each other's faces.

"Good God! Mr. Beavington," gasped Captain Trefalden, "what does this mean?"

"Do not alarm, Sir, I have no more notion than yourself," replied the lawyer. "The will is none of my making."

"Who drew it up?" asked Mr. Will, peremptorily.

"Not I, Sir. Your father hath gone to some stranger for this business. But perchance when we know more—"

"Know, Sir; go on," said Mr. Fred and Mr. Will together.

The lawyer continued:

"AND I hereby declare my Will to be that my said Trustees shall receive the annual Income of the said Trust Fund, and lay out and invest such Income in their names in the Purchase of Government Securities, and repeat such receipts and investments from time to time in the nature of Compound Interest during the space of One Hundred years from the date of my decease, and that such accumulations shall continue and be increased until the same, with the original Trust Fund, shall amount to, and become in the aggregate, one clear principal sum of NINE MILLION POUNDS Sterling and upwards, AND I DESIRE that the same entire Principal Sum shall then be distributed by, or be considered as, divided into two equal parts, AND I GIVE One equal half part thereof unto the direct Heir Male of the Eldest Son of my Eldest Son, in total exclusion of the younger Branches of my Family and their descendants. AND as to the other equal half part of the said entire Principal Sum, I DIRECT my said Trustees to dispose of the same in such manner following (that is to say) IN the first place, in purchasing within the liberties of the City of London a piece of Freehold Ground of sufficient magnitude, and erecting thereon, under the superintendence of some eminent Architect, a Handsome and Substantial Building, with all suitable Offices, to be called "THE LONDON TREFALDEN RENEVOLENT INSTITUTION."

"AND in the next place, in affording pecuniary aid and permanent support to decayed Tradesmen, Mercantile Men, Ship Brokers, Stock Brokers, Poor Clergymen, and Members of the Medical and Medical Profession, and the Widows and Orphans of each of those Classes respectively, and, if thought fit, to advance Loans without Interest to honest but unfortunate Husbands. With full power to receive into the Institution a limited number of poor and deserving Persons being Widows and Orphans of Citizens of London, and to maintain, clothe, and educate them so long as the Trustees shall think proper.

"AND in order that such Institution may be properly established and may be managed and supported in a satisfactory manner, I request my said Trustees to prepare a scheme for the permanent Establishment and support thereof, and to submit the same to the Master of the Rolls for his approval. PROVIDED ALWAYS that in case there shall be no such Male Heir in the direct line from the Eldest Son of my Eldest Son Thom I direct my said Trustees to apply the first mentioned half of the said entire principal sum in founding lesser Institutions of a similar kind to the above in Manchester, Liverpool, Bristol and Birmingham for the Benefit of the several classes of persons above enumerated and all which Institutions it is my Will shall be governed by the same Laws and Regulations as the original Institution so as near thereto as circumstance will permit. ITEM I GIVE all the rest and residue of my Funded Property Ready Money and Securities for Money Merchandize and Personal Pictures Plate Furniture and all other my Property not otherwise disposed of by this my Will (but subject to the payment of my Debts Legacies Funerals and Testamentary expenses) UNTO my said three Sons in equal shares and in case any dispute shall arise between them as to the division thereof the matter shall be referred to my Executors whose decision shall be final. LASTLY I APPOINT my friends Richard Morton, Erasmus Brooke, Daniel Shuttleworth, and Arthur Mackenzie all of London Merchants Merchants, to be the Executors of this my Will. IN WITNESS whereof I the said Jacob Trefalden have hereunto set my hand and seal the day and year first above written.

"JACOB TREFALDEN.

"Signed sealed published and declared by the above-named Jacob Trefalden as and for his last Will and Testament in the presence of us who at his request in his presence have subscribed our Names as Witnesses thereunto.

"NATHAN MURRAY.

"ALEXANDER LLOYD."

Mr. Beavington laid down the will, and took off his glasses. The brothers sat staring at him like men of stone. William Trefalden was the first to speak.

"I shall dispute this will," he said, looking very pale, but speaking in a firm, low tone. "It is illegal."

"It is a—d, unnatural, infamous swindle," stammered Mr. Fred, starting from his seat, and shaking his clenched fist at the open document. "If I had known what a cursed old fool——"

"Hush, Sir, hush, I entreat," interposed the lawyer. "Let us not speak of the dead."

"Zounds! Mr. Beavington, we'll respect the dead," said Captain Trefalden, bringing his hand down his heavy double ivory. "He'll be hanged if we'll respect the dead! If it costs me every penny of the paltry five thousand, I'll fight this matter out. I'll have justice."

"Patience, brother Jacob—patience, brother Fred," said the youngest Trefalden. "I tell you both the will is illegal."

"How so, Sir?" asked the lawyer, briskly. "How so?"

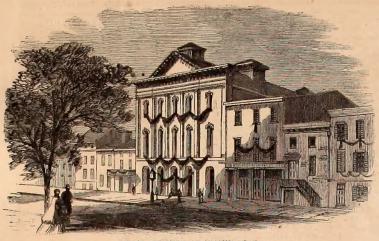
"By the Mortmain Act passed but a few years since—"

"In seventeen hundred and thirty-six, statute nine of his present Majesty King George the Second," interposed Mr. Beavington.

"—giving permission to money or land to be given in trust for the benefit of any charitable uses whatever."

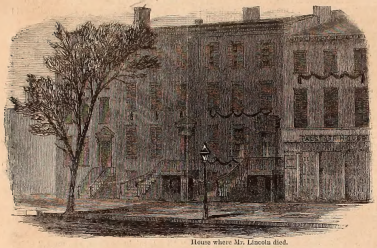
The lawyer nodded approvingly.

"Very true, very true, very well remembered, Mr. Will," he said, rubbing his hands; "but you forget one thing."



"What do I forget?"

"That a statute of London may, by the custom of London, devise Land situate in London in Mortmain; but he can not devise Land out of the city of London, and for that quotation I can give you chapter and verse, Mr. Will."



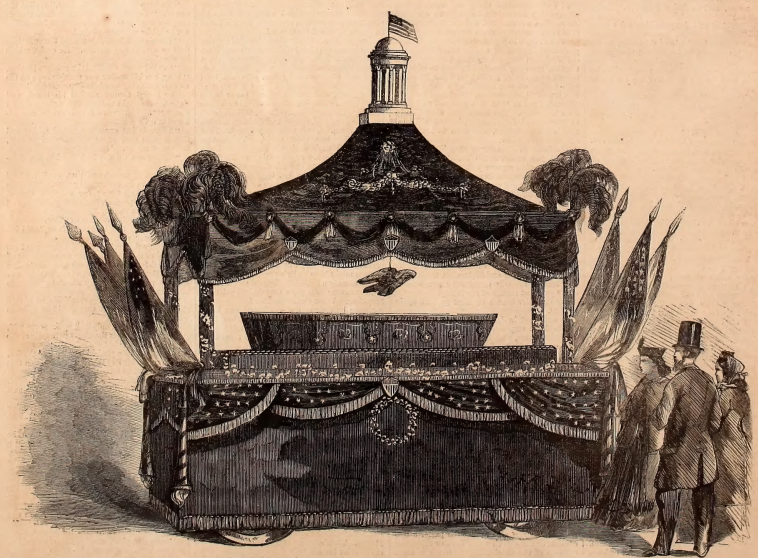
Mr. Will put his hand to his head with a smothered oath.

"Then, by Heavens!" said he, tremulously, "'tis all over."

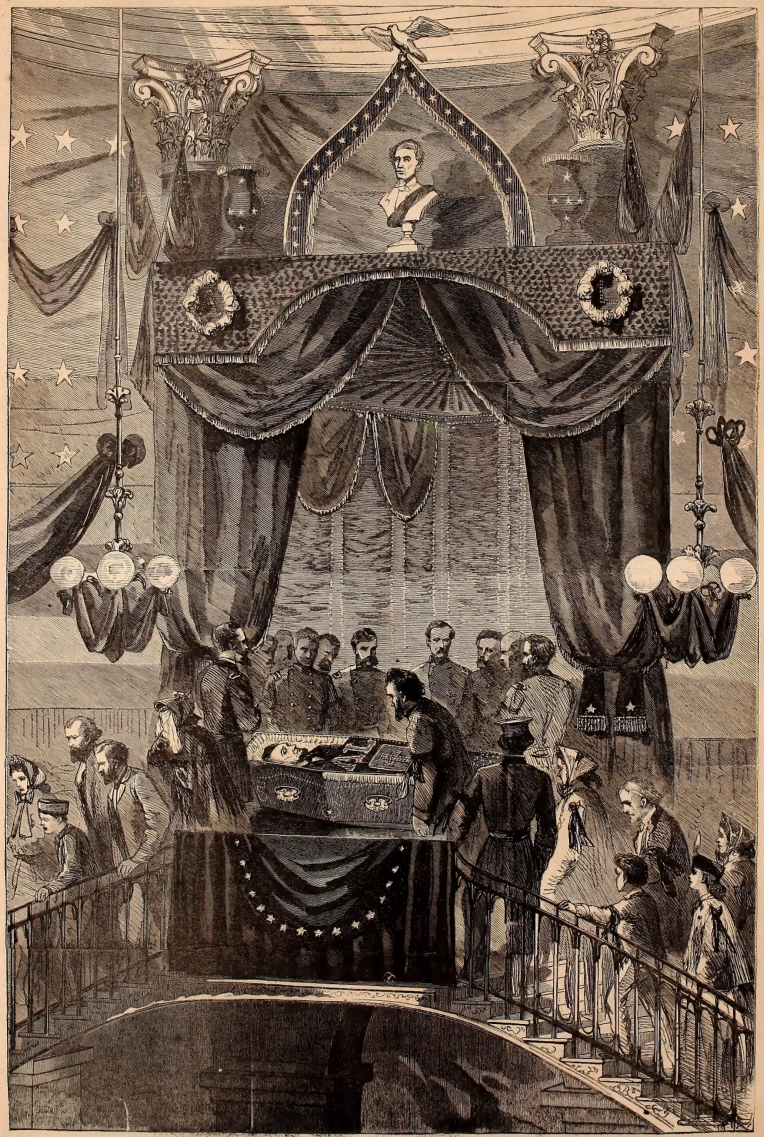
It was all over, indeed. Mr. Fred had spoken truly of the pride which Jacob Trefalden took in his fortune. Great as it was, he could not build it up higher, and sank its foundations yet more broadly and deeply. To leave a colossal inheritance to a son whose heir, and to found a charity which should perpetuate his name through all time, were the two projects nearest and dearest to the old man's heart. He had brooded over them, matured them, exulted in them secretly for many a past year. The marriage of Edward Trefalden in November, 1764, only hastened matters, and legalized a forgone conclusion. Well was it for Jacob Trefalden's inheritance that he chose his heir, and founded

FORD'S THEATRE AT WASHINGTON.

House where Mr. Lincoln died.



VIEW OF A PORTION OF 10TH STREET, OPPOSITE FORD'S THEATRE.



SECRETARY SEWARD'S ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION, APRIL 14, 1865.—THE ASSASSIN TURNING UPON MR. FREDERICK SEWARD AT THE DOOR OF THE SICK-ROOM.

...pipes, their peace, and their liberty for nothing. Poor Martin always looked very guilty if any allusion happened to be made to this subject.

Matters went on thus for seven years, and then, to the amazement of the village and the delight of the brothers, Madame Marie made her husband the happy father of a fine boy. Such a glorious baby was never seen. He had fair hair and blue eyes, and his father's nose; and they christened him Saxon; and the bells were rung; and the heir to the great fortune was born at last!

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FUNERAL—THE CATAFALQUE USED IN THE PROCESSION IN NEW YORK CITY.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FUNERAL—CITIZENS VIEWING THE BODY AT THE CITY HALL, NEW YORK.

DO NOT WASTE YOUR MONEY buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOLD PENS, which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the BEST IN THE WORLD.

Avoid the shameless Upstarts, whose lack of brains compels them to attempt IMITATION, even to the advertisement. If you want the full value of your money, call at A. MORDEN, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

FAIRY ALBUMS.

For holding 40 Pictures, $2 25; 60 Pictures, $3 00. Trade Cards supplied. Stereoscopic Pictures, Albums, etc. Stamp stating for pamphlet of catalogues. W. C. WEMYSS, 376 Broadway, N.Y.

J. WELLES BOOTH.

Photographs, 25 cts. W. C. WEMYSS, 376 Broadway, N.Y.

PLAYING CARDS.

The American Card Company's New Union Playing Cards, National Emblems.

They are the prettiest card made, and suit the popular idea. The suits are EAGLES, SHIELDS, STARS, and FLAGS. Colored in Red and Blue, Gummed or Ungummed for Quoits, and MADE FOR LUCK.

All the games can be played as readily as with cards bearing foreign emblems. Each pack is put up in an elegant card case, and is the prettiest game for parties.

In order that all dealers may have an opportunity to sell these cards a limited number of twelve packs will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of Five Dollars. Address

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
No. 14 Chambers Street, New York.

Great Closing Sale!!

$650,000 WORTH of Watches, Chains, and Fine Jewelry, all to be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 20 cents for Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1. Then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any Set of Jewelry as well as for One Dollar, and in no case can they get less than a Dollar's worth. Agents are wanted. Six Certificates will be sent for $1, Thirteen for $2, Thirty-five for $5, One Hundred for $10. Great inducements offered those who act as Agents. Catalogues containing full lists and particulars mailed free. Address

JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,
285 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

P.O., Drawer 12.

Whiskers! Mustaches!!—The celebrated HIMALAYA CASTOR OIL is warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in two weeks. An English patent article, which does not stain to the skin. Sent by mail for $1. Address Dr. H. DE FORREST, Albany, New York.

LADIES' LETTER.

Five Anatomical Engravings.

Has information never before published.

By an Experienced Nurse and Female Physician.

Sent free in a Sealed Envelope for Ten Cents.

Address MRS. DR. KEWLEE, Boulder Co., N. Y.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, will be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 45 Broadway. Suttlers charged low rates.

ENVELOPES AND NOTE PAPER.

At wholesale prices, sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of the price.

1000 Buff letter envelopes, extra thick.....$4 00
1000 Buff letter envelopes, double thick..... 3 00
One ream super thick white paper and envelopes..... 2 50
One box Gilt edge note paper and envelopes..... 2 50
One ream very thick fine-class note..... 4 00
1000 Cameo super letter envelopes.....

Samples sent if requested.

G. S. LEAVITT & CO., Stationers and Envelope Manufacturers, 36 Beekman Street, New York.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials
AND DEALERS IN
501 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

LARGEST ASSORTMENT OF PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS, &c., IN THE WORLD.

Also, Stereoscopes for the Stereoscopic Views.

STEREOSCOPES & STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS,

Of those we have an immense assortment, including War Scenes of American and Foreign Cities and Landscapes, Groups, Statuary, etc., etc. Also, Everything Stereoscopic, for public or private exhibitions. Our catalogue will be sent free to any one on receipt of stamp.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS,

We were the first to introduce them into this country, and we manufacture immense quantities. Our assortment is the largest in the world. Over 150 styles. ALBUMS have the reputation of being superior to those of any other manufacturers. They will be sent by mail, FREE, on receipt of price.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.

Our Catalogue contains over 1,000 different subjects, which additions are continually being made) of Portraits of Eminent Americans, etc., viz.:

300 Major-Generals, 100 Lieut.-Generals, and Statesmen,
200 Brig.-Generals, 800 Other Officers, 120 Divines
100 Admirals, 200 Capt's of the Navy, 100 Authoresses,
50 Actresses, 8,000 Copies of Works of Art.

Including representations of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statuary, etc. Catalogues and any number of Photographs sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of price. All sent to the receipt of $100, and sent by mail, FREE.

Photographers and others ordering goods C. O. D. will please remit twenty cents of the amount, to pay return charges.

E&H The prices and quality of goods cannot fail to please.

Soldiers' Card Albums for 15 Pictures, 75 cents.

O'DOR! O'DOR!

DR. BRIGGS'

GOLDEN O'DOR

Will force a beautiful set of whiskers or mustache on the smoothest face from five to eight weeks without a stain or injury to the skin, or hair on bald head in eight weeks (AND NO HUMBUG). I receive recommendations most every day from persons that have used it and found it genuine. Testimonials of thousands. Don't waste Dr. Briggs's Golden O'Dor by mail, sealed and post paid, $1 (Warranted). Send orders to DR. C. BRIGGS,
Drawer 6926, Chicago, Ill.

YOUNG MAN,

Would you sport a fine beard or mustache? If so, use The Prussian Compound, prepared by the celebrated Dr. Wm. of Paris. Warranted to force a heavy growth of hair upon any smooth face in six weeks without stain or injury to the skin. Sent, post-paid, by mail, on receipt of $1. Address

S. CHASE,
P. O. Drawer 159, Cohoes, N. Y.

PRICE REDUCED TO SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS.

The Convex Reflector Lantern.

For burning Kerosene or Coal Oil without Chimney.

Patented in America and Europe.

Without exception, the Cheapest, Most Convenient, Safest, and very best HAND LANTERN in use.

Price 75 cts. SOLD BY THE TRADE GENERALLY.

It gives a pure white light—WITHOUT CHIMNEY.

It stands QUICK MOTIONS in any direction.

The best Lantern for Stables, Yards, and Outdoor Use.

Address ARCHER & PANCOAST,
Manufacturers of
GAS FIXTURES, LAMPS, AND CHANDELIERS, &c., &c.,
No. 9, 11, 13, 15, and 21 Mercer St., New York.

PORTABLE PRINTING OFFICES

For Merchants, Druggists, Hospitals, small Job Printers, &c. Address ADAMS PRESS CO., 30 Ann St., New York; Specimen Books of Type, Cuts, &c., 25 cents.

Weston's Metallic Artificial Legs.—Lightest, cheapest, most durable, and most natural ever invented. Price $75 to $100. Send for pamphlet.
J. W. WESTON, 491 Broadway, N. Y.

LANGENHEIM'S IMPROVED MAGIC LANTERN AND PICTURES.—Superior to anything given or artistically colored. Superior lantern and complete apparatus, &c., &c. Descriptive circulars mailed free.
W. LANGENHEIM, P. O. Box 1579, Philadelphia, Pa.

ARCANA WATCH.

An Elegant Novelty in Watches.

The cases of this watch are so entirely new invention, composed of six different metals combined, and together so hard, that, after years of use, with a limitation of 18-carat gold, called Arcana, which will always keep its color, and which, when the watch is sold as solid gold, and as afforded at one-eighth the price, it will be beautifully decorated, with jewel and dial to match the case, with patent pendulum, and engraved movement, and all the combination and improvements, and are really handsome and desirable, and in case at an instant's notice of a dollar purchaser. These watches are manufactured by the well-known St. John Watch Company, and are of the same quality of movement as their engraved goldets, have curved bridges, adjusting regulator, with patent lever, the most improved ruby pin-seat action, with fine dial, and skeleton hands, and is warranted a good timekeeper. The cases are made in three different sizes, the smallest being for ladies, and are all hunting cases. Sent by express to any part of the world or sent by express for $15. A single case sent in an elegant morocco case for $20. Also, a fine assortment of Jewelry for gents. We are the sole agents for this watch in the United States, and none are genuine unless purchased of us. Beware of imitations.

Address DEVAUDH & CO., Importers,
No. 16 Maiden Lane, New York.

GREAT PRIZE DISTRIBUTION
THE
NEW YORK GIFT ASSOCIATION,
599 Broadway, New York.

Capital, $50,000. Each Gift Guaranteed in Cash.

12 Elegant Rosewood Pianos, worth from $250 00 to 500 00
12 Melodeons, Finest Manufacture, worth from 150 00 to 250 00
150 Music Boxes..... 15 00 to 45 00
150 Sheet Iron-covering Patent Safes..... 15 00 to 35 00
100 Silver Fruit and Cake Baskets..... 15 00 to 35 00
100 Sets of Silver Tea and Table Spoons..... 15 00 to 35 00
100 Gold Hunting-Case Watches..... 75 00 to 150 00
125 Diamond Rings..... 40 00 to 100 00
200 Gold Watches..... 60 00 to 100 00
300 Ladies' Gold Watches..... 40 00 to 75 00
500 Silver Watches..... 25 00 to 50 00
1,000 Diamond Pins, Ear-drops, Necklaces, Bracelets, Studs, Gold pens, Gold coral, jet and gold, Florentine Mosaic, Ivs, ivs, and tortoise-shell combs, Gold pencils, vest and neck chains, plain and chased gold rings, gold thimbles, lockets, new style gold bangles, gold seals and pencils, fancy work boxes, gold pens with gold and silver extension holders, and a large assortment of fine jewelry, of every description, of the best make and latest styles, valued at $50,000. All to be sold for a dollar each or not to be paid for until you know what you will receive. Distributed by sealed envelopes.

Certificates, naming each article and its value, are placed in sealed envelopes, which are well mixed. After these envelopes, containing the certificate or order for some article worth at least $1, are sold, they are opened at the office, or sent by mail to any address, without regard to choice, on receipt of 25 cts. In drawing the certificate the purchaser will see what article it draws, and its value, which may be from $1 to $500, and at the office he can, if he prefers the article named, or can choose any other one article on our list of the same value. No blanks. Every purchaser gets value. Parties dealing with us may depend on having prompt returns. All articles drawn will be immediately sent to any address by return mail or express. Either satisfactory guarantee. We will mail, free, certificates for $1, 13 for $3. Agents wanted. Send a stamp for a circular. All letters should be addressed to

T. BENTON & CO., Box 5561 Post-Office, N. Y.

Army and Memorial Badges.

B. T. HAYWARD, 208 Broadway.

The above cut represents one side of a Memorial Badge of solid gold enamel. These new engaged are rotating three medallion likeness of him. I will send a sample for 75 cents. Agents wanted everywhere.

Also, the NEW RICHMOND MEDAL. On the opposite side of the above, with the top bar made of pure coin silver. I will send a sample of this medal without the top bar for 75 cents, and with the top bar made of pure coin silver, with your name, regiment, and company handsomely engraved thereon, for $3.

Also, I have all the NEW CORPS BADGES of the army ready. I will send a sample, with your name, regiment, and company handsomely engraved thereon, on the receipt of $1 50; and for $5 or $6 I will send a genuine Locard gold enameled Corps Ring for either corps or division.

Badges of every description made to order.

I want an Agent in every regiment, hospital, and Department of the army. Send for special inducements are offered. Send for wholesale Illustrated Circular.

B. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELRY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, AND OTHER JEWELRY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GEM'S PINS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, ETC.,

Worth $500,000

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get Jewelry of true commercial value. Full and particulars; also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Mourning Badges.

WE MOURN
THE NATION'S LOSS.

AND

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

April 15, 1865.

The beautiful badge, printed on white satin, draped in mourning, with splendid gilt pin attached (with likeness), will be sent by mail, post-paid, for 60 cents. Sent by the 100, postpaid, $35. Badges without pins, $25 50 per 100. Address B. W. HITCHCOCK,
No. 14 Chambers Street, New York.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—If you will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without injury to the skin. Price 50 cents, sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of an order. Dr. S. GRAHAM, No. 109 Nassau Street, N. Y.

THE ASSASSIN. Card Photographs of J. Wilkes Booth, the assassin taken from life by Frederick), sent postpaid for 25 cents. Address CHAS. SEYMOUR, Holland, N. Y.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONQUENT.—A powerful stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in 30 days upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Every packet using this Onquent, and proving it not as represented (by informing me of the fact, etc.), have their money returned them at any time within 3 months from day of purchase. Price $1. Sent, sealed and post-paid, to any address, on receipt of the money.

Address A. C. CLARK,
P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

FREE TO ALL.

Citizens, Soldiers, Everybody, should send their address, and receive a large Illustrated Paper replete with the choicest literature of the day. Send GRATIS.

CHARLES E. HALLETT, 61 Nassau St., N. Y.

UPHAM'S PIMPLE BANISHER

Removes Pimples on the Face, Freckles, &c. It also softens the skin and beautifies the complexion. When its use is complete without it. Price 50 cents. Mailed to any address, for 75 cents, by S. C. UPHAM, 195 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE JAPANESE HAIR STAIN

Colors the Hair, Whiskers, and Mustache

A beautiful book or brown. It consists of only one preparation. Color will not fall or wash off. Only 50 cents a box. Mailed to any address, for 75 cents, by S. C. UPHAM, 195 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

SHULTS' CURLIQUE. For curling the Hair. Price by mail $1. Warranted. Address

SHULTS' WHISKERS, Troy, N. Y.

$1 WHISKERS $1.

For One Dollar. I will send, sealed and post-paid, the "Grecian Compound," highly perfumed, which I warrant to force a heavy growth of whiskers or mustache, even in five weeks, or open bald heads in eight weeks, without stain or injury to the skin. Entire satisfaction given, or money refunded. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address E. L. RAYMOND, Box 4,200, New York City.

The Brazilian Hair Curler.

One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair into wavy ringlets or heavy massive curls. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of $1. Address

S. S. CHASE, Cohoes, N. Y.

Shults' Onguent warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks. Sent, post-paid, for 50 cents. Paid for, 50 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED. Business light, pleasant, and profitable. Those now engaged are realizing from $15 to $20 per day net profit. Send stamp for Circular. Address P. O. Drawer 12, Troy, New York.

ASSASSINATION.

Medals of Abraham Lincoln, 16th President of the U. S., April 14, 1865, in gold and silver plate. Sent by mail, post-paid, 25c. each, or $2 per hundred. One sample free. Address, with return paid and directed envelope, J. S. WILKINSON & Co., 503 Broadway, New York.

Imperishable Memento! Sales Immense!!

MADAME LOUISE,

599 Broadway, N. Y., Sends on receipt 90 certificates, 10 cents each, G. P. HAYWARD, Manufacturing Jeweler, when sold. Send your address on a paid envelope for return.

PINEAPPLE CIDER.

DR. TALBOT'S CONCENTRATED MEDICAL PINEAPPLE CIDER is a preventive of sickness.

The experience that Dr. Talbot has had for the last 25 years convinces him that it is time the public had an article offered that will prevent sickness. The article offered is Dr. Talbot's MEDICATED PINEAPPLE CIDER, prepared for all classes.

Old and Young. It is not new to the Doctor, but it is entirely new to the public. One quart bottle will last a well person a year. This is rather a new medical doctoring; nevertheless it will Save Millions from being sick. Is it not better to pay one dollar than to be from losing sick that to pay ten or twenty dollars in doctors' bills, and as much of the time in the loss of time and the inconvenience of being sick? To prevent sickness, use as follows:

Add one teaspoonful of Medicated Pineapple Cider to a tumbler of cold water, and drink the first thing after you get up in the morning. Do not eat or drink anything for an hour. It will increase the strength, and give

Vigor and Health to the system, as celebrated New York merchant, who has made a thorough trial of the Pineapple Cider, says that he has taken but about one pounds of flesh in one month at the first trial. He continues to use as above directed, and finds it very beneficial; says it has proved an entire Preventative to Sickness in his case. Also another well-known gentleman in New York has used the Medicated Cider constantly for ten years, and has not been sick one day during that time.

This Wonderful Preparation will increase the appetite, give vigor and action to the system, and regulate digestion. When taken internally, for pains of all kinds, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Headache, Cramp, Pains in the Chest, Hysterics, Coughs, Neuralgia, Rheumatic Pains, Dyspepsia, Acidity of the Stomach, Sickness, etc. nothing and quieting effect on the system is most astonishing.

Dr. Wilcox, an eminent physician, said it will cure Consumption in its early stages. Dysentery, Nervous Affections, Loss of Appetite, Weakness, Palpitation of the Heart, Shortness of Breath, Loss of Memory and Diseases of the Stomach and Liver. It is highly recommended and used by physicians to defecate females, and as an excellent remedy for all Female Diseases. Wind in the Stomach, Colic, Nephritic Affections, Rheumatism, etc., etc. It never fails to relieve Sick Headache, Nervousness, Saturated Sleep, etc. American Indians have used this article with great success for many years before their discovery.

It imparts a sheerfulness to the disposition, and brilliancy to the eye and cheek.

To travelers, especially, it is of inestimable value, and should be provided for as a necessity for every trip in which the water is likely to vary in quality and tendency.

Persons can use it in any climate without change, and with the utmost confidence as a timely, efficacious restorative.

PRICES:

THE DOLLARS PER BOTTLE, CONTAINING ONE GALLON.
THREE DOLLARS PER BOTTLE (FULL QUART).
TWO DOLLARS AND A HALF PER BOTTLE (HALF-PINT).
ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE (FULL HALF-PINT).

Sent to any address, by express, on receipt of half-pint bottles sent free by express on receipt of price. For sale every where. Each one enters sample bottle sent free on receipt of 30 cents postage.

Pamphlet giving full worth of the above article to the "Northwestern Sanitary Commission and Soldiers' Home Fund," which opens May 30th, by the Ladies' Committee of the Soldiers.

R. J. BABBITT, Sole Agent,
Nos. 64, 66, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, and 74 Washington Street, New York.

AGENTS, COME and EXAMINE

An Invention urgently needed by every body, or sample sent free by mail for 50 cts., which is a bargain. Try it.

R. L. WOLCOTT, No. 170 Chatham Square, N. Y.

ALBUMS FOR EVERY BODY.

THE CHEAPEST AND BEST ALBUMS, containing 40 Pictures, for 75 cents. Albums of all descriptions, up to $50, sent free by mail or express, on receipt of price.

C. HUGHES,
ALBUM MANUFACTURER,
No. 301 Canal Street.

Photograph cards of President Lincoln, 10 cents each.

CHILDREN'S FINE CARRIAGES.
LOWEST PRICES. MILLIARD, 859 Broadway, New York.

GOLD PENS retailing at wholesale prices. Send for Circular. Fine $3 gilt, 50 cents; ext. coarse, 50 cts. Send for wholesale price list or circular. GEO. F. HAWKES, Manufacturer, 64 Nassau Street, New York. Established 1838.

Look Here, Boys! My Golden Compound will force a beautiful set of whiskers to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days, or money refunded in every case. Price One Dollar, or 8 packages for Two Dollars, by mail. Address DR. J. PARKER, 129 Nassau Street, N. Y.

NEW POCKET ALBUMS, holding 16 Pictures, the cheapest and best ever offered in the market. Sent for only 75 cts. Photographs of Gems Green, Sherman, Sheridan, Thomas, Grant, Farragut, Hooker, Meade, Halleck, &c., &c., only 10 cts. each. Catalogues sent free. G. W. POMEROY, JACKSON, Jackson Co., MICHIGAN. Established 1849.

"The West Indian Hair Curler."

Warranted to curl the most straight and stiff hair, on the first application, into short ringlets or heavy massive curls. Sent to any address on receipt of $1 00. Address Dr. J. PARKER,
P. O. Box 6291, New York Post-Office.

WHY SQUANDER MONEY on useless articles called Wigs? Restorative, when you can get Prof. Wilson's White preparation for that purpose for $3, which will call forth a new growth of permanent hair. Sent by mail, carefully prepared at my chemical laboratory, N. Y. city, on receipt of price by remittance. S. SMITH, Chemist, New York.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK,

Have just Published:

THE HISTORY OF HIS OWN CALUMNY. By His Imperial Majesty NAPOLEON III. Vol. I. 8vo. Cloth, $2 50. (The Atlas containing Maps to accompany the Volume, will be ready shortly, and may be had by Purchasers of the Letter-press Volume at extra charge.)

VAMBERY'S CENTRAL ASIA. Travels in Central Asia. Being the Account of a Journey from Teheran across the Turkoman Desert, on the Eastern Shore of the Caspian, to Khiva, Bokhara, and Samarcand, performed in the Year 1863. By ARMINIUS VAMBERY, Member of the Hungarian Academy of Pesth, by whom he was sent on this Scientific Mission. With Map and Illustrations. 8vo. Cloth, $3 50.

AN ELEGANT LIBRARY EDITION OF VANITY FAIR. Vanity Fair: a Novel without a Hero. By WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY. With Illustrations by the Author, and a Portrait of Becky Sharpe, engraved by Halpin after Lawrence's Picture. A new and elegant Library Edition. In One Volume. 12mo. Cloth, $2 00; Paper Cover, Cloth, $1 50; Half Morocco, $3 75.

CHRISTIANITY AND ATHEISM. By Rev. JOHN MILNOR, Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." 12mo. Cloth, $1 50.

LUTTRELL OF ARRAN. A Novel. By CHARLES LEVER, Author of "Barrington," "Maurice Tiernay," "The Daltons," "Charles O'Malley," &c., &c. 8vo. Cloth, $1 50; Paper, $1 00.

UNCLE SILAS. A Story of Bartram-Haugh. By J. S. LE FANU, Author of "Wylder's Hand," "The House by the Churchyard," &c. 8vo. Cloth, $1 50; Paper, 75 cents.

☞ Sent by mail, postage paid, to any part of the United States on receipt of the price.

U.S.7-30 LOAN.

By authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, the undersigned has assumed the General Subscription Agency for the sale of United States Treasury Notes, bearing seven and three-tenths per cent. interest, per annum, known as the Seven-Thirty Loan.

These Notes are issued under date of June 15th, 1865, and are payable three years from that time, in currency, or are convertible at the option of the holder into

U. S. 5-20 SIX PER CENT. GOLD-BEARING BONDS.

These bonds are worth a premium which increases the actual interest on the 7.30 loan, and its exemption from State and Municipal taxation adds from one to three per cent. more, according to the rate levied on other property.

The interest is payable in currency semi-annually on coupons attached to each note, which may be cut off and sold to any bank or banker.

The interest amounts to

One Cent per Day on a	$50 Note.
Two Cents " "	$100 "
Ten " "	$500 "
20 " "	$1000 "
1 Dollar " "	$2000 "

Notes of all the denominations named will be promptly furnished upon receipt of subscriptions, and the notes forwarded, at once. The interest to 15th June next will be paid in advance. This is now offered by the Government, and it is confidently expected that its superior advantages will make it the

THE ONLY LOAN IN MARKET

GREAT POPULAR LOAN OF THE PEOPLE.

Less than 300,000,000 of the Loan authorized by the last Congress are now on the market. This amount, at the rate at which it is being absorbed, will all be subscribed for within four months, when the notes will undoubtedly command a premium, as has uniformly been the case in closing the subscription of other loans.

In order that citizens of every town and section of the country may be afforded facilities for taking the Loan, the National Banks, State Banks, and Bankers generally throughout the country have generally agreed to receive subscriptions at par. Subscribers will select their own agents, in whom they have confidence, and who only are to be responsible for the delivery of the notes for which they receive orders.

JAY COOKE,
SUBSCRIPTION AGENT, Philadelphia.

March 25, 1865.

Brandreth's Pills.

The Brandreth Pills reduce, lessen, and expel the principle of disease in the exact proportion as they affect that great object they increase the principle of life. Dr. Lobb says: "Brandreth's Pills are a vegetable compound; they temperate, purify, and cleanse the blood; they correct and regulate all the secretions; and, by purgation, discharge the whole mass of morbid matter from the body without creating any debility. If the hundredth of the most enlightened physicians were to unite their individual skill, it could scarcely do so much to cure as a dose or repeated doses of Brandreth's Pills."

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. Sent upon it B. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING,
NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicines.

DR. GLOVER'S LEVER TRUSS relieves and cures more ruptures than any other. It gives perfect ease and comfort. Sent free by mail, circulars, belts, Trusses, &c. No. 4 ANN STREET. Established 30 years.

DR. B. C. PERRY, DERMATOLOGIST,

No. 49 Bond Street, New York.

Treats successfully all diseases of the scalp, loss of hair, and premature blanching. Also, removes moth freckles, tan, pimples, blotches, boils, barber's itch, ringworm, the tetter or eczema of the skin. Consultation hours free. For pamphlet, inclose stamp for circular.

BARD & BROTHERS'S (Established 1845)

GOLD PENS,

PEN AND PENCIL CASES. Also Manufacturer of BARD AND BROTHERS' PATENT ANNULAR GOLD PENS. JAS. D. BARD, Ag't, No. 23 Maiden Lane, N. Y. Repointing, &c. neatly done. Send for a Circular.

MERWIN & BRAY FIRE-ARMS CO.'S
Belt and Pocket Size Cartridge Revolvers.

Size weight and calibre of 32 cal. carries a ball 42-100 calibre charge 18 grains (Colt's and Allen's) and can be used with either fixed or loose ammunition. The Pocket size weighs 12 oz., and carries a ball 30-100 calibre (same as Colt's and Allen's).

These Pistols are loaded and discharged with only four motions—degrees of perfection never attained in any other arm. A full round may be loaded and discharged in thirty seconds. These arms have been adopted and used by the U.S. Revenue Service. Testimonials of their efficiency are daily received from the Army and Navy, also from civilians. Printed circulars (with illustrations), containing price, sent by mail upon application.

MERWIN & BRAY are sole proprietors of the Ballard Breech-Loading Rifle and Carbine. These arms need no comment. Their high character for Military and Sporting purposes is so well established that the Public only wish to know where they may be purchased. These Rifles were used by Captain Crawford on the Plains. They are in competition to the Rifle, under order of the U.S. Government, and the Commission and the State of Kentucky have about Twenty Thousand (20,000) now in active field service, of which the highest testimonials are received.

Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers generally.
Address orders to MERWIN & BRAY,
No. 353 Broadway, New York.

* P.S.—IMPORTANT.—These Rifles can be used with either Kent or loose ammunition.

There have been many severe cases in Boston and vicinity cured by the WHITE PINE COMPOUND, which can be referred to, and hundreds of cases of Kidney complaints, Gravel, Dropsy by taking Dr. Poland's WHITE PINE COMPOUND, have been reported by Druggists.

Among all the popular medicine offered for sale, no one seems to have gained favor like the White Pine Compound. This medicine was first made and sold in the year of 1855, and then merely for one individual who was afflicted with an inflammation of the bowels. A few bottles effected by it. This induced others to apply for the same remedy, and every one using it received a perfect cure. The article, however, was without a name till November following, when it was named the WHITE PINE COMPOUND, which name it was advertised for the first time.

Some time in 1856 an individual, who had purchased a bottle for a hard cough, was not only cured of the cough, but also of a severe kidney complaint of ten years' endurance. This being truly a discovery, the fact was mentioned to a skilful physician, who replied in substance that the Pine of White Pine was one of the best diuretic known, provided its astringency could be counteracted. If the above articles entering into the Compound would effect this, a fortune was in the Medicine. The fortune has not yet been reached; but the hundreds of cures effected by the Compound, in the most aggravated cases of Kidney disease, including Diabetes, prove it to be a wonderful Medicine for such complaints. A trial of this invaluable Remedy now employ it or recommend it for such ills.

But while the WHITE PINE COMPOUND is so useful in Kidney Inflammation, it is also a wonderful curative in all throat and lung diseases. The Pine of which it is made always inflammation that heartsease and screams are relieved if it be taught. Numerous cases have been reported to the originator where relief in very severe cases has been given in one hour, and a cure effected in from one to five days.

There is a very natural reason for this. The bark, and even the leaves of "pectine," of which the cough mixtures are made, contain qualities. The Indians employed the bark of White Pine in treating diseases of the lungs long before the white man knew of its use by Europeans.

The virtues of the Pine, obtained in water, is exceedingly useful in relieving inflammation and cleansing old sores. So too, the virtues of the Pine are also known in every where, and this, doubtless, is one grand reason why the White Pine Compound was so successful in curing at first.

The past year has given a great opportunity to test the virtues of the White Pine Compound. It has been an unusual time for Colds, Coughs, and Throat Diseases. Bottles of the White Pine Compound have been sold and used with the most astonishing success. It is not for Medicine that the people living where it is prepared are high in its praises.

TESTIMONIALS.

A very large number of important testimonials have already been received from Physicians, Clergymen, Apothecaries, and others, all of whom speak in the highest terms of the most flattering terms of the White Pine Compound.

Dr. Poland, of Northfield, N. Hampshire, says:

"I first the White Pine Compound to be very effective in the cure of coughs, colds, and inflammation of the lungs, in affections of the kidneys, debility of the stomach, and all complaints of the

Rev. J. E. Cisse, of Rumney, N. H., writes:

"I have for some time used your White Pine Compound as an invaluable remedy. I can truly say that I never have seen more efficacious and speedy cure in every. I have just taken the Compound for a cold, and it works charmingly."

Hon. P. H. Sweetser, of Bangor, Maine, writes:

"I feel it a pleasure to bear testimony of the valuable medicinal properties of the White Pine Compound, which I have had an opportunity of proving. I have frequently given it to my family for several years for colds and coughs, and in most cases with entire success, having with astonishing results. Several of our friends have also received much benefit from the Compound, and I shall keep it always by my hand."

From JAMES J. HOYT.

BRANDON, N. H., Sept. 1860.

DR. POLAND.—In the fall of 1858 I was taken with a severe cold, which was brought on a very severe cough, pain in side and lungs, and raising blood. I was confined to my bed. I started with that troublesome disease, the Kidney Complaint. For the three years past I have been afflicted with a severe pain in my back and lungs, choking up and raising blood. I commenced with a bad cough and raising blood. I could not say time here must to short unless I soon got relief. Having seen the wonderful effects of your White Pine Compound, I put my faith in it was small. But to my astonishment, after I had taken about half a bottle, my cough was better, the kidney trouble also, and I could rest right without choking up and raising as I had been for almost nearly three bottles, and am feeling like a well man.

I would add, that my family have been subjected to consumption, my father, mother, and two sisters having died of it.

From STEPHEN BARTLETT.

BRANDON, VT., July, 1860.

DR. POLAND.—I had been afflicted with Kidney Complaint for a long time, and had taken a portion of your White Pine Compound, which has done me good. I would give my testimony to the world, and am convinced I should get entirely cured if I could get one bottle of your White Pine Compound have not used one of bottle for a long time. I would also state that a boy, a neighbor of ours, was so afflicted with a cough that he was not able to sleep enough to have her bed made, and we all thought she would die. We commenced giving her your White Pine Compound, and it cured her. She is just as well now as ever she was.

The White Pine Compound, advertised at length in our columns, is not only so to its name inviting, but to a highly approved medicine. Dr. D. B. Poland, having invented the confidence of many who know him—a confidence which he knows will be fully sustained by the virtues of the article of your Compound, and is cured her. She is just as well now as ever she was.

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND,

GEORGE W. SWETT, M.D.,
Proprietor,
WILL be manufactured in future at the
NEW ENGLAND PATENT MEDICINE CO. 100 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.
Under the supervision of
REV. J. W. POLAND, M.D.
DR. SWETT will attend to as business department, to whom all orders should be addressed.
Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers in Medicine every where.
Price 75 Cents per Bottle.

Important Announcement.

GREAT SALE of
WATCHES, CHAINS, DIAMOND RINGS, &C.
One Million Dollars' Worth!
TO BE DISPOSED OF AT
ONE DOLLAR EACH!
Without regard to value!! Not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive!!!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES
All to be sold at One Dollar Each!!

300 Music Boxes, each	.....	$20 to $150
500 Lever " with Bells and Cashmere		20 " 200
500 Silver Teapots and Coffee Urns	.....	20 " 60
1000 Silver Cups	.....	20 " 100
1000 " Ice Pitchers	.....	20 " 50
5000 " Table Cups with Silvers	.....	5 " 20
5000 " Goblets and Drinking Cups	.....	5 " 50
5000 " Castors	.....	10 " 50
5000 " Fruit, Card and Cake Baskets		20 " 50
5000 " Pairs Silver Spoons, per dozen		20 " 50
10,000 " " Table Spoons and Forks, per dozen	.....	20 " 60
250 Gents' Gold Hunting-Case Watches		50 " 150
250 Ladies' Gold and Enamelled Case do.		50 " 150
500 Gents' Hunting-Case Silver Watches		25 " 75
500 Diamond Rings	.....	20 " 100
5,000 Gold Vest and Neck Chains	.....	10 " 50
5,000 Gold Oval Band Bracelets	.....	10 " 50
5,000 Jet and Gold Bracelets	.....	10 " 50
5,000 Gold Engraved Band Chains		20 " 100
7,000 Solitaire and Gold Brooches	.....	10 " 50
5,000 Coral, Gold, Opera Glasses	.....	10 " 50
5,000 Mosaic, Jet, Lava, and Florentine Ear Drops, per pair	.....	10 " 50
7,500 Coral, Opal, and Emerald Ear Drops		5 " 6
5,000 Ladies' Gold and Pearl Pins	.....	2 50 " 8
5,000 Gold Fob and Vest Watch Keys		2 50 " 8
4,000 Gold and Silver Thimbles	.....	2 " 8
5,000 Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c.	.....	2 " 8
5,000 Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc.	.....	2 " 8
10,000 Miniature Lockets	.....	2 50 " 10
4,000 " " Magic Spring	.....	10 " 20
5,000 Gold Toothpick Cases, etc.	.....	2 " 8
5,000 Plain Gold Rings	.....	2 " 10
5,000 Chased Gold Rings	.....	2 " 10
10,000 Stone Set and Signet Rings	.....	2 50 " 10
10,000 Gold Lockets, Plain Engraved	.....	2 " 10
7,500 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Set and Gold	.....	5 " 15
5,000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Coral, Garnet, Pearl, Opal, and other stones	.....	5 " 15
10,000 Gold Pencils, Gold Mounted Holders	.....	2 " 10
5,000 Gold Pens and Gold Extension-Holders		10 " 20
5,000 Gold Lever Pens and Pencils	.....	10 " 20
5,000 Ladies' Gilt and Jet Hair Bars and Balls		5 " 10

ALL GOODS SOLD BY AUTHORIZED Agents, No. 39 Broadway, New York, announces that all of the above list of Goods will be sold for One Dollar Each.

In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the Manufacturing districts of England, through the war having cut off the supply of cotton, a large quantity of valuable Jewelry, originally intended for the English market, has been sent off for sale in this country, and MUST BE SOLD AT ANY SACRIFICE!!

Under these circumstances ARRANDALE & CO., acting as Agents for the English European Manufacturers, have resolved upon a Great Gift Distribution, subject to the following regulations:

Certificates of the various articles are first put into envelopes, sealed, and well mixed, so that no person can tell what certificate he may obtain, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of a certificate you will see what you are to have, and then it is at your option to order the article or not, as you like. Parties who purchase may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any box of Goods in the list for Gold Watch.

Send 25 cents for Certificate.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for forwarding the certificate, paying postage, and doing the business. On receipt of the certificate you will know what certificate is sent for. Five certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; twenty-five for $3; sixty-five for $10; one hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—We want agents in every regiment, and in every town and county in the country, and those acting as such will find it to their interest to send for circulars. Considered by them, provided their remittance amounts to $20. Single letters, 25 cents for every certificate, and remit 25 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps.

No. 167 Broadway, New York.

What the "Press" say of us.

CAUTION! CAUTION!—A new opportunity is offered for obtaining watches, chains, diamond rings, silverware, etc., by means of ARRANDALE & CO., of No. 39 Broadway. They have an immense stock of articles varying in value from one dollar to one dollar each. The distribution is very fairly done.—you agree to take a certificate of a certain amount, which is enveloped, and are not required to pay your dollar unless you are satisfied with the article. You certainly would not be much out if that amount, and may be $50 or $100. An excellent mode this of investing a dollar.—Saturday Press, N. Y. City, Feb. 19, 1865.

Messrs. Arrandale & Co. have long been personally known to us, and we believe them to be every way worthy of public confidence.—The Scottish American Journal, New York, June 11, 1864.

We have inspected at the office of Arrandale & Co.'s Agency for European Manufacturing Jewelry, a large assortment of Gold and Silver Watches, Jewelry of the newest patterns. We also noticed a large quantity of silver plate, all of which will be sold by the whole of these newly-invented articles are to be disposed of on a novel principle, giving every purchaser a chance of obtaining a valuable present on payment to agents. We know the firm in question to be entirely worthy of the responsibility worthy of public confidence, and recommend our friends to read their advertisement.—Boston Watchman and Reflector.

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND,

GEORGE W. SWETT, M.D.,
Proprietor,
WILL be manufactured in future at the
NEW ENGLAND PATENT MEDICINE CO. 100 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.
Under the supervision of
REV. J. W. POLAND, M.D.
DR. SWETT will attend to as business department, to whom all orders should be addressed.
Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers in Medicine every where.
Price 75 Cents per Bottle.

By authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, the undersigned has assumed the General Subscription Agency for the sale of United States Treasury Notes, bearing seven and three-tenths per cent. interest, per annum, known as the Seven-Thirty Loan.

These Notes are issued under date of June 15th, 1865, and are payable three years from that time, in currency, or are convertible at the option of the holder into

U. S. 5-20 SIX PER CENT. GOLD-BEARING BONDS.

These bonds are worth a premium which increases the actual interest on the 7.30 loan, and its exemption from State and Municipal taxation adds from one to three per cent. more, according to the rate levied on other property.

The interest is payable in currency semi-annually on coupons attached to each note, which may be cut off and sold to any bank or banker.

The interest amounts to

One Cent per Day on a	$50 Note.
Two Cents " "	$100 "
Ten " "	$500 "
20 " "	$1000 "
1 Dollar " "	$2000 "

Notes of all the denominations named will be promptly furnished upon receipt of subscriptions, and the notes forwarded, at once. The interest to 15th June next will be paid in advance. This is now offered by the Government, and it is confidently expected that its superior advantages will make it the

THE ONLY LOAN IN MARKET

GREAT POPULAR LOAN OF THE PEOPLE.

Less than 300,000,000 of the Loan authorized by the last Congress are now on the market. This amount, at the rate at which it is being absorbed, will all be subscribed for within four months, when the notes will undoubtedly command a premium, as has uniformly been the case in closing the subscription of other loans.

In order that citizens of every town and section of the country may be afforded facilities for taking the Loan, the National Banks, State Banks, and Bankers generally throughout the country have generally agreed to receive subscriptions at par. Subscribers will select their own agents, in whom they have confidence, and who only are to be responsible for the delivery of the notes for which they receive orders.

JAY COOKE,
SUBSCRIPTION AGENT, Philadelphia.

March 25, 1865.

Brandreth's Pills.

The Brandreth Pills reduce, lessen, and expel the principle of disease in the exact proportion as they affect that great object they increase the principle of life. Dr. Lobb says: "Brandreth's Pills are a vegetable compound; they temperate, purify, and cleanse the blood; they correct and regulate all the secretions; and, by purgation, discharge the whole mass of morbid matter from the body without creating any debility. If the hundredth of the most enlightened physicians were to unite their individual skill, it could scarcely do so much to cure as a dose or repeated doses of Brandreth's Pills."

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. Sent upon it B. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING,
NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicines.

DR. GLOVER'S LEVER TRUSS relieves and cures more ruptures than any other. It gives perfect ease and comfort. Sent free by mail, circulars, belts, Trusses, &c. No. 4 ANN STREET. Established 30 years.

DR. B. C. PERRY, DERMATOLOGIST,

No. 49 Bond Street, New York.

Treats successfully all diseases of the scalp, loss of hair, and premature blanching. Also, removes moth freckles, tan, pimples, blotches, boils, barber's itch, ringworm, the tetter or eczema of the skin. Consultation hours free. For pamphlet, inclose stamp for circular.

BARD & BROTHERS'S (Established 1845)

GOLD PENS,

PEN AND PENCIL CASES. Also Manufacturer of BARD AND BROTHERS' PATENT ANNULAR GOLD PENS. JAS. D. BARD, Ag't, No. 23 Maiden Lane, N. Y. Repointing, &c. neatly done. Send for a Circular.

MERWIN & BRAY FIRE-ARMS CO.'S
Belt and Pocket Size Cartridge Revolvers.

Size weight and calibre of 32 cal. carries a ball 42-100 calibre charge 18 grains (Colt's and Allen's) and can be used with either fixed or loose ammunition. The Pocket size weighs 12 oz., and carries a ball 30-100 calibre (same as Colt's and Allen's).

These Pistols are loaded and discharged with only four motions—degrees of perfection never attained in any other arm. A full round may be loaded and discharged in thirty seconds. These arms have been adopted and used by the U.S. Revenue Service. Testimonials of their efficiency are daily received from the Army and Navy, also from civilians. Printed circulars (with illustrations), containing price, sent by mail upon application.

MERWIN & BRAY are sole proprietors of the Ballard Breech-Loading Rifle and Carbine. These arms need no comment. Their high character for Military and Sporting purposes is so well established that the Public only wish to know where they may be purchased. These Rifles were used by Captain Crawford on the Plains. They are in competition to the Rifle, under order of the U.S. Government, and the Commission and the State of Kentucky have about Twenty Thousand (20,000) now in active field service, of which the highest testimonials are received.

Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers generally.
Address orders to MERWIN & BRAY,
No. 353 Broadway, New York.

* P.S.—IMPORTANT.—These Rifles can be used with either Kent or loose ammunition.

There have been many severe cases in Boston and vicinity cured by the WHITE PINE COMPOUND, which can be referred to, and hundreds of cases of Kidney complaints, Gravel, Dropsy by taking Dr. Poland's WHITE PINE COMPOUND, have been reported by Druggists.

Among all the popular medicine offered for sale, no one seems to have gained favor like the White Pine Compound. This medicine was first made and sold in the year of 1855, and then merely for one individual who was afflicted with an inflammation of the bowels. A few bottles effected by it. This induced others to apply for the same remedy, and every one using it received a perfect cure. The article, however, was without a name till November following, when it was named the WHITE PINE COMPOUND, which name it was advertised for the first time.

Some time in 1856 an individual, who had purchased a bottle for a hard cough, was not only cured of the cough, but also of a severe kidney complaint of ten years' endurance. This being truly a discovery, the fact was mentioned to a skilful physician, who replied in substance that the Pine of White Pine was one of the best diuretic known, provided its astringency could be counteracted. If the above articles entering into the Compound would effect this, a fortune was in the Medicine. The fortune has not yet been reached; but the hundreds of cures effected by the Compound, in the most aggravated cases of Kidney disease, including Diabetes, prove it to be a wonderful Medicine for such complaints. A trial of this invaluable Remedy now employ it or recommend it for such ills.

But while the WHITE PINE COMPOUND is so useful in Kidney Inflammation, it is also a wonderful curative in all throat and lung diseases. The Pine of which it is made always inflammation that heartsease and screams are relieved if it be taught. Numerous cases have been reported to the originator where relief in very severe cases has been given in one hour, and a cure effected in from one to five days.

There is a very natural reason for this. The bark, and even the leaves of "pectine," of which the cough mixtures are made, contain qualities. The Indians employed the bark of White Pine in treating diseases of the lungs long before the white man knew of its use by Europeans.

The virtues of the Pine, obtained in water, is exceedingly useful in relieving inflammation and cleansing old sores. So too, the virtues of the Pine are also known in every where, and this, doubtless, is one grand reason why the White Pine Compound was so successful in curing at first.

The past year has given a great opportunity to test the virtues of the White Pine Compound. It has been an unusual time for Colds, Coughs, and Throat Diseases. Bottles of the White Pine Compound have been sold and used with the most astonishing success. It is not for Medicine that the people living where it is prepared are high in its praises.

TESTIMONIALS.

A very large number of important testimonials have already been received from Physicians, Clergymen, Apothecaries, and others, all of whom speak in the highest terms of the most flattering terms of the White Pine Compound.

Dr. Poland, of Northfield, N. Hampshire, says:

"I first the White Pine Compound to be very effective in the cure of coughs, colds, and inflammation of the lungs, in affections of the kidneys, debility of the stomach, and all complaints of the

Rev. J. E. Cisse, of Rumney, N. H., writes:

"I have for some time used your White Pine Compound as an invaluable remedy. I can truly say that I never have seen more efficacious and speedy cure in every. I have just taken the Compound for a cold, and it works charmingly."

Hon. P. H. Sweetser, of Bangor, Maine, writes:

"I feel it a pleasure to bear testimony of the valuable medicinal properties of the White Pine Compound, which I have had an opportunity of proving. I have frequently given it to my family for several years for colds and coughs, and in most cases with entire success, having with astonishing results. Several of our friends have also received much benefit from the Compound, and I shall keep it always by my hand."

From JAMES J. HOYT.

BRANDON, N. H., Sept. 1860.

DR. POLAND.—In the fall of 1858 I was taken with a severe cold, which was brought on a very severe cough, pain in side and lungs, and raising blood. I was confined to my bed. I started with that troublesome disease, the Kidney Complaint. For the three years past I have been afflicted with a severe pain in my back and lungs, choking up and raising blood. I commenced with a bad cough and raising blood. I could not say time here must to short unless I soon got relief. Having seen the wonderful effects of your White Pine Compound, I put my faith in it was small. But to my astonishment, after I had taken about half a bottle, my cough was better, the kidney trouble also, and I could rest right without choking up and raising as I had been for almost nearly three bottles, and am feeling like a well man.

I would add, that my family have been subjected to consumption, my father, mother, and two sisters having died of it.

From STEPHEN BARTLETT.

BRANDON, VT., July, 1860.

DR. POLAND.—I had been afflicted with Kidney Complaint for a long time, and had taken a portion of your White Pine Compound, which has done me good. I would give my testimony to the world, and am convinced I should get entirely cured if I could get one bottle of your White Pine Compound have not used one of bottle for a long time. I would also state that a boy, a neighbor of ours, was so afflicted with a cough that he was not able to sleep enough to have her bed made, and we all thought she would die. We commenced giving her your White Pine Compound, and it cured her. She is just as well now as ever she was.

The White Pine Compound, advertised at length in our columns, is not only so to its name inviting, but to a highly approved medicine. Dr. D. B. Poland, having invented the confidence of many who know him—a confidence which he knows will be fully sustained by the virtues of the article of your Compound, and is cured her. She is just as well now as ever she was.

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND,

GEORGE W. SWETT, M.D.,
Proprietor,
WILL be manufactured in future at the
NEW ENGLAND PATENT MEDICINE CO. 100 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.
Under the supervision of
REV. J. W. POLAND, M.D.
DR. SWETT will attend to as business department, to whom all orders should be addressed.
Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers in Medicine every where.
Price 75 Cents per Bottle.

GREAT SALE of
WATCHES, CHAINS, DIAMOND RINGS, &C.
One Million Dollars' Worth!
TO BE DISPOSED OF AT
ONE DOLLAR EACH!
Without regard to value!! Not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive!!!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES
All to be sold at One Dollar Each!!

300 Music Boxes, each	.....	$20 to $150
500 Lever " with Bells and Cashmere		20 " 200
500 Silver Teapots and Coffee Urns	.....	20 " 60
1000 Silver Cups	.....	20 " 100
1000 " Ice Pitchers	.....	20 " 50
5000 " Cups with Silvers	.....	5 " 20
5000 " Goblets and Drinking Cups	.....	5 " 50
5000 " Castors	.....	10 " 50
5000 " Fruit, Card and Cake Baskets		20 " 50
5000 " Pairs Silver Spoons, per dozen		20 " 50
10,000 " " Table Spoons and Forks, per dozen	.....	20 " 60
250 Gents' Gold Hunting-Case Watches		50 " 150
250 Ladies' Gold and Enamelled Case do.		50 " 150
500 Gents' Hunting-Case Silver Watches		25 " 75
500 Diamond Rings	.....	20 " 100
5,000 Gold Vest and Neck Chains	.....	10 " 50
5,000 Gold Oval Band Bracelets	.....	10 " 50
5,000 Jet and Gold Bracelets	.....	10 " 50
5,000 Gold Engraved Band Chains		20 " 100
7,000 Solitaire and Gold Brooches	.....	10 " 50
5,000 Coral, Gold, Opera Glasses	.....	10 " 50
5,000 Mosaic, Jet, Lava, and Florentine Ear Drops, per pair	.....	10 " 50
7,500 Coral, Opal, and Emerald Ear Drops		5 " 6
5,000 Ladies' Gold and Pearl Pins	.....	2 50 " 8
5,000 Gold Fob and Vest Watch Keys		2 50 " 8
4,000 Gold and Silver Thimbles	.....	2 " 8
5,000 Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c.	.....	2 " 8
5,000 Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc.	.....	2 " 8
10,000 Miniature Lockets	.....	2 50 " 10
4,000 " " Magic Spring	.....	10 " 20
5,000 Gold Toothpick Cases, etc.	.....	2 " 8
5,000 Plain Gold Rings	.....	2 " 10
5,000 Chased Gold Rings	.....	2 " 10
10,000 Stone Set and Signet Rings	.....	2 50 " 10
10,000 Gold Lockets, Plain Engraved	.....	2 " 10
7,500 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Set and Gold	.....	5 " 15
5,000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Coral, Garnet, Pearl, Opal, and other stones	.....	5 " 15
10,000 Gold Pencils, Gold Mounted Holders	.....	2 " 10
5,000 Gold Pens and Gold Extension-Holders		10 " 20
5,000 Gold Lever Pens and Pencils	.....	10 " 20
5,000 Ladies' Gilt and Jet Hair Bars and Balls		5 " 10

ALL GOODS SOLD BY AUTHORIZED Agents, No. 39 Broadway, New York, announces that all of the above list of Goods will be sold for One Dollar Each.

In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the Manufacturing districts of England, through the war having cut off the supply of cotton, a large quantity of valuable Jewelry, originally intended for the English market, has been sent off for sale in this country, and MUST BE SOLD AT ANY SACRIFICE!!

Under these circumstances ARRANDALE & CO., acting as Agents for the English European Manufacturers, have resolved upon a Great Gift Distribution, subject to the following regulations:

Certificates of the various articles are first put into envelopes, sealed, and well mixed, so that no person can tell what certificate he may obtain, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of a certificate you will see what you are to have, and then it is at your option to order the article or not, as you like. Parties who purchase may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any box of Goods in the list for Gold Watch.

Send 25 cents for Certificate.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for forwarding the certificate, paying postage, and doing the business. On receipt of the certificate you will know what certificate is sent for. Five certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; twenty-five for $3; sixty-five for $10; one hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—We want agents in every regiment, and in every town and county in the country, and those acting as such will find it to their interest to send for circulars. Considered by them, provided their remittance amounts to $20. Single letters, 25 cents for every certificate, and remit 25 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps.

No. 167 Broadway, New York.

What the "Press" say of us.

CAUTION! CAUTION!—A new opportunity is offered for obtaining watches, chains, diamond rings, silverware, etc., by means of ARRANDALE & CO., of No. 39 Broadway. They have an immense stock of articles varying in value from one dollar to one dollar each. The distribution is very fairly done.—you agree to take a certificate of a certain amount, which is enveloped, and are not required to pay your dollar unless you are satisfied with the article. You certainly would not be much out if that amount, and may be $50 or $100. An excellent mode this of investing a dollar.—Saturday Press, N. Y. City, Feb. 19, 1865.

Messrs. Arrandale & Co. have long been personally known to us, and we believe them to be every way worthy of public confidence.—The Scottish American Journal, New York, June 11, 1864.

We have inspected at the office of Arrandale & Co.'s Agency for European Manufacturing Jewelry, a large assortment of Gold and Silver Watches, Jewelry of the newest patterns. We also noticed a large quantity of silver plate, all of which will be sold by the whole of these newly-invented articles are to be disposed of on a novel principle, giving every purchaser a chance of obtaining a valuable present on payment to agents. We know the firm in question to be entirely worthy of the responsibility worthy of public confidence, and recommend our friends to read their advertisement.—Boston Watchman and Reflector.

$8 WATCH. $10

Our whole stock of imported Watches, being of rich and novel designs, are now offered at reduced prices. Single watches at Wholesale rates.

AN ELEGANT WATCH in Fine Gold Plated Double Cases Richly Engraved, Ornamental Centre, Curved Enamel Bridge, English Fork Plain Jeweled Movements, adjusted Regulator, Quick Train, Spade Hands, and Fine Dial, Stem Wind and Dial, a serviceable article in running order, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and a Gentle Ornamental Watch Chain and a beautiful MINIATURE GOLD LOCKET, to match, with Double Cases, Dial, and Glass for Daguerreotype, sent by mail to any part of the army or country for only $10.

WATCH AND CHAIN WARRANTED, equal to any sold for any use, in Heavy Double Cases, Small Size, same as the Locket, Hunting Case, Open Face, complete, and sent by mail, Engraved Double Case Locket, etc. Sent by mail to any part of the army or country for only $8.

The Imperial Watch.

Containing a Rare and Valuable Combination of Mechanical Effects, combining within its cases and attached to it by machinery a beautiful and correct-working THERMOMETER, an accurately adjusted Mariner's Compass in its stations, and in the Dial a Reliable Secret Key, indicating day of month, week, etc., in Cases, rendering the Watch a perfect SENSE, HEAT, and TIME INDICATOR. The beautiful machinery of this valuable Watch is encased in Finely Finished Engraved Hunting Cases, Stem Winding Dials Same the outer cases being of fine 18-Carat Gold, inner cases of Gold Composition, Quick Train, Engraved and Bottom, with Panel for Name, and Fancy Push Spring. Ornamental Dial, Improved Jeweled Action, M. J. Glass Movements, Polished Cap, Self-acting Click, Equal Isochronal Regulation, Fine White Enamel Dial, Gilt Second Cut Hands, and is an Exact Imitation of $100 watch, and must be seen to be appreciated. Sent by mail to any part of the country for $10. Address BANNER, Hinsdale, N. H.

Prize Stationery Packets.

Splendid Steel Engravings and Photograph Card Pictures.

We want agents in every where to sell our goods, which will pay 300 per cent. profit, and our stationery Packets contain good paper and envelopes and a fine assortment of Jewelry. GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES given as premiums to every purchaser. Send stamp for a sample packet, together with circulars and full particulars to agents, sent by return mail.

HASKINS & CO., 36 Beekman St., New York.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE FOR MAY, 1865.

CONTENTS:

WASHOE REVISITED. (First Paper.)
ILLUSTRATIONS.—Sunset in the Sierras.—The Silver Basin at San Francisco.—Dirty Mike.—Quartzose from Fidessa.—Washoe Lake.—A Grand Smash.—Old Charlie.—Dangerous Boulders.—Scene in Gold Cañon.—Mill.—Mouth of Rocks, Lake Tahoe.—Station on the Washoe Road.

CHILDHOOD.

LYMAN BEECHER.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—Lyman Beecher, 1803, aged 28.—The Old Beecher House, New Haven.—Le Beotzia's House.—Yale College, 1824.—Yale College.—East Hampton Church.—Beecher's House at East Hampton.—Beecher's House at Litchfield.—Hanover

NULLUS AIT CÆSAR.

LOUIS (an Ambitious Boy). "Ah ha! mon ami! I sail make 'im so big as you!"

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad Street,
(Two Doors from Wall.)
New York.

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks.
Bonds and Gold will receive our personal attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

FISK & HATCH.
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
No. 36 Wall Street, New York.

Great Imperial Watch.
See Colady Bothers' Advertisement on page 287.

Free to Every Body.
SOLDIERS, SAILORS, FARMERS, MECHANICS, and EVERY ONE throughout the country will receive, free, by mail, a First-Class, Interesting NEWSPAPER, by sending their address to Editors of "ARMY AND HOME JOURNAL," 40 ANN Street, New York.

BROOKS'S PATENT WRITING AND TOILET CASE.
From Commander Cushing (Hero of the Albemarle): "Having worked one with me to sea, I can say that it is the most complete and convenient article for the soldier or sailor that has ever come under my notice."
Price, $1.50, sent free of postage.
D. B. BROOKS & BROTHER, Salem, Mass.

HELMBOLD'S
Concentrated Extract Buchu
IS THE GREAT DIURETIC.
HELMBOLD'S
Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla
IS THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.
Both are prepared according to rules of Pharmacy and Chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

POLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 302 Broadway (between 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $30 each.

TEETH like pearls and breath of sweetness secured by Caswell, Mack & Co.'s Formodonte Tooth Paste.

GOLD PENS.
The JOHNSON PEN is acknowledged by all who have used them to be the best pen for the hand money of any in use. They are made of 14 carats fine gold, and warranted, for one year (unless guarantee when required). Pens on solid silver extension cases, $1 75; along silver holders, $1 75; rubber reverse holders, $2 50; telescopic extension cases, $2 50; duplex silver cases, $4 00; ebony holders and morocco cases, $1 88. Pens remitted, 50 cents each. Pens sent by mail, postage paid. Send for Circular.
E. S. JOHNSON, Manufacturing and Office, 8 JOHNSON Corner, New York City.

LAWRENCE, BALDWIN & CO.,
Bankers and Brokers,
No. 70 Wall Street, New York.
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
PETROLEUM,
And all kinds of Stocks, Bonds, &c., bought and sold on commission at the regular Stock, Petroleum, and Mining Boards.
Interest allowed on deposits.

Calenberg & Vaupel's PIANO-FORTES,
99 and 101 Bleecker Street, 24 Block West of Broadway,
Warranted for Six Years.

SOLDIERS, ATTENTION! Prepare for the worst. Sores, Ulcers, and Wounds are quickly healed by Holloway's Ointment and Pills.

DALLEY'S MAGICAL PAIN EXTRACTOR
This invaluable salve is a certain cure for PILES, CAKED BREAST, BURNS, SCALDS, and RHEUMATISM. Relieves BURNS PAINS in five minutes. No one should be without it. In leave DOCTORS' BILLS. 28 Cents a Box. Sent free by mail on receipt of 27 Cents. Depot 45 Liberty St., New York.

Officers, Soldiers, and Citizens!
GENUINE GOLD RINGS.
All the Army Corps Rings in 16-carat gold (stamped and warranted) at $3 and $5 each. Also 100 other styles of every size, plain, ornamented, and fancy, at from $2 to $10 each. Sent by mail. Send stamp for Circular.
Address P. T. BEACH, 13 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $10
A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH. Double CASES, LEVER, CAP, small size, white enameled dial, COLT numbers, "English Movements," and correct time-keeper, with an accurate "Miniature Calendar," indicating the DAY of the MONTH, Month, &c., on back case.
A single one sent free by mail to any address in a neat CASE, WITH A BEAUTIFUL VELVET CHAIN, for only $10.
A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, with "Miniature Calendar," &c., specially adapted to the ARMY. Sent free by mail, to any address, for only $7.
English and American Levers from $25 up. Good Watches of all descriptions low.
Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Sole Importers, 38 & 40 ANN Street, New York.

CARPET WARP,
FIRST AND SECOND QUALITY;
Wrapping Paper made of Paper.
Twines and Paper. H. A. HARVEY, 64 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

PINEAPPLE CIDER.
See advertisement on page 286.

Without Spectacles, Doctor, or Medicine. Pamphlet mailed free on receipt of two stamps. Address
E. B. FOWLER, M. D., 149 Broadway, New York.

VINELAND LANDS.
To all Wanting Farms.
Large and thriving settlement, mild and healthful climate, 20 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, producing large crops, which can now be seen growing. Tax, twenty, and fifty cents annually. Prices, from $25 to $50 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools, and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post-Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.
From Report of Solon Robinson, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune: "It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming that we know of this side of the Western prairies.

A THING OF BEAUTY
IS A
Joy Forever.
Those who desire brilliancy of complexion must purify and enrich the blood, which HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT SARSAPARILLA invariably does. Recollect, it is no patent medicine. Ask for Helmbold's. Take no other.

VERMILYE & CO.,
No. 44 WALL STREET,
BANKERS,
And Dealers in all Classes of
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

Kittle's Patent Spring Mattresses,
FOLDING BOX AND SPRING-BRACE BORDER.

Under-bed, skeleton and Stuffed. Good upholstered and best hair tops. Spring mattresses, perfect in comfort, durability, and economy. Worn mattresses greatly improved at light expense, being altered over on our plan.
Every thing is complete and furnish a bed. The place to buy is where a thing is made. S. P. KITTLE & CO., 250 Chatham Street, New York.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS
AND
Unprincipled Dealers
Endeavoring to dispose of their own and other preparations on the reputation attained by HELMBOLD'S GENUINE PREPARATIONS.

The Prettiest Gift
To a Young Girl or Youth is a a year's subscription to

Our Young Folks
the newest and ablest Juvenile Magazine, which is conducted by J. T. TROWBRIDGE, GEO. HAMILTON, and LUCY LARCOM, written for by Capt. MAYNE REID, MRS. STOWE, "CHARLESTON," GRACE GREENWOOD, "OLIVER OPTIC," "ARTHY FERNY," and many others of our DEAR WRITERS, and illustrated by the most skilful artists.
Terms, $2 00 per year, with a large discount to clubs. You can get a specimen number by sending 20 cents to TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston, Mass.

"Electric" Self-adjusting enameled white, $1, $5, $7, and 99 per doz.; specimens, 50c., 75c., $1. Snow-white, linen-finished, Bluish-white, $1 25. Suitable Vest-Tie, $1. Ladies' "Illusion-embroidered" Steel Collars, $1 20; Cuffs, $1 50. Genuine steel Cuffs, $2. Mailed on receipt of price and "size." JEANBERT, 78 Nassau St., N. Y. Box 3586.

HELMBOLD'S
EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA
Cleanses and renovates the blood, instils the vigor of health into the system, and purges out the humors that make disease.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS, Unsurpassed by any in the World. Send for catalogue of Philadelphia Photographic Co., 720 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY,
To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods, of whatever name, not bearing this MARK, are spurious imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are full six yards in each piece, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction. Manufactured by the Office of the Company, No. 95 Chambers Street, New York.

To Purify, Enrich the Blood,
AND
Beautify the Complexion,
Use HELMBOLD'S HIGHLY CONCENTRATED FLUID EXTRACT SARSAPARILLA. The bottle equals in strength one gallon of the Syrup or Decoction.

UNCLAIMED MONEY.—30,000 PERSONS WANTED TO CLAIM MONEY, LEGACIES, &c., which have been advertised since 1794. Free to search for name in Registry. $5. Circulars free. All letters must be prepaid. GUY & CO., Unclaimed Money and Property Registry, No. 11 Charlotte Street, London, W. C., England.

LUBIN'S
VIOLETTE
Tooth-Powder.
This new, fragrant, and incomparable article (Lubin's last and best) is superseding all other Tooth-Powders. It has no equal. In Boxes, 25 cts., $1 00 each. Sold by all Druggists.
W. H. WELLS, 74 Chambers St. Agents.
80 Box d'Ingalais, Paris, and 181 Water St., New York.

Why Injure
THE COMPLEXION
BY
Powders and Washes
Which choke or fill up the pores of the skin, and in a short time leave it harsh and dry? It is in the blood, and if you want smooth and rich skin use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA. It gives a brilliancy to the complexion.

BEARDINE.
In three cases of scanty, reluctant growth, the person over forty can back his beard to resists the Beard, Moustache, &c., to a fine and vigorous growth. (Not a dye.) The History and a small sample of this Balsam sent sealed on receipt of return postage.
JOHN RAWLINS, 618 Broadway, New York.

TARRANT'S EFFERVESCENT SELTZER APERIENT is a saline preparation, and is particularly adapted to all cases where a mild and cooling purgative is required. It is the best remedy known for Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Heartburn, Costiveness, Piles, Liver Complaint, and Sour Stomach. Sold by Druggists generally.

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS OF THE WAR,
OBTAINED AT GREAT EXPENSE, AND FORMING
A COMPLETE PHOTOGRAPHIC HISTORY
OF THE GREAT UNION CONFLICT.

Bull Run,	Dutch Gap,	Strawberry Plain,
Yorktown,	Fenton Trains,	Deep Bottom,
Gettysburg,	Hanover Junction,	Bull Plain,
Fair Oaks,	Lookout Mount'n,	Monitors,
Savage Station,	Chickahominy,	Chattanooga,
Fredericksburg,	City Point,	Fort Morgan,
Suffolk,	Nashville,	Atlanta,
Richmond,	Charleston,	Mobile,
Petersburg,	&c., &c.,	&c., &c.
&c., &c.,

Every body is interested in these memorable scenes. Just published by E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 Broadway, New York.
Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.

A CLEAR, SMOOTH SKIN,
AND
BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION,
Follows the use of HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED FLUID EXTRACT SARSAPARILLA. It removes black spots, pimples, and all eruptions of the skin.

WATCHES GIVEN AWAY.
$1. Gold and Silver Watches. $1.
$650,000 worth of Watches, Diamond Pins, Chains, &c., to be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive. Send 25 cents for one certificate, which will inform you what you are to have, and our circular with terms to Agents. We give a Watch free to every Agent. The best chance to make money ever offered. Address A. H. GOWEN & CO., Box 4170, P. O., New York. Office, 36 Beekman Street.

BENJ. F. KENDALL,
BROKER IN
PETROLEUM STOCKS,
No. 52 Wall Street, N. Y.
Not a Few of t!
Worst Disorders
That afflict mankind arise from corruptions of the blood. HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA is a remedy of the utmost value.

STAMMERING
Cured by Bates' Patent Appliances. Unsurpassing pamphlet, &c., address H. T. BATES, 37 W. 23d St., N. Y.

Great Sale
OF WATCHES AND JEWELRY,
BY
A. H. ROWEN & CO.,
(Agents of the Manufacturers.)
No. 36 Beekman Street, New York.
ALL TO BE SOLD FOR ONE DOLLAR EACH.

100 Gold Hunting-Case Watches ..... each	$125 00
100 Gold Watches, " ..... "	75 00
250 Ladies' Gold Watches, " ..... "	50 00
500 Silver Watches, " ..... each	20 00 to 25 00
6,000 Latest style Vest & Neck Ch'ns "	5 00 to 10 00
1,000 Gold Pens and Gold Pencils "	15 00 to 25 00
10,000 Gold Pens and Silver Cases, .. "	5 00 to 8 00

Certificates of Gift, stating what article we propose for $1 each, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered are forwarded promiscuously. Purchaser will not know what article he is getting till after the certificate is opened, and then it is at our option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers can have choice of Watch, Jewelry or any article on our list for ONE DOLLAR EACH.
Certificates will be sent by mail on receipt of the money: one for 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty-two for $5; a splendid gold pen for $3; sixty-five, with a premium worth $10; one hundred, with a premium silver watch, for $15. Agents wanted, to whom we offer special terms. Send 25 cents for one certificate, with circular with terms. Address A. H. ROWEN & CO.,
Box 4170, P. O., New York City.

From the largest Manufacturing Chemists in the World.
I am acquainted with Mr. H. T. HELMBOLD, Manufacturer of Medicinal Preparations. He occupied the drug store opposite my residence, and was successful in conducting the business when others had not been equally so before him. I have been favorably impressed with his character and enterprise.
WILLIAM WEIGHTMAN,
Firm of POWERS & WEIGHTMAN,
Manufacturing Chemists,
Ninth and Brown streets, Philadelphia.

HELMBOLD'S GENUINE PREPARATIONS.
Prepared by H. T. HELMBOLD, Practical and Analytical Chemist, 594 Broadway, New York, and 104 South Tenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. IX.—No. 437.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

PRESIDENT ANDREW JOHNSON.

ANDREW JOHNSON, the seventeenth President of the United States, was born in Raleigh, North Carolina, December 29, 1808. His father died while he was yet scarcely advanced beyond infancy, and the family was thus left in extreme poverty. At ten years of age ANDREW was apprenticed to a tailor. Here a casual circumstance gave direction to his whole after-life. Among his master's customers was an eccentric gentleman who habitually visited the shop and read aloud from books or newspapers to the journeymen. The boy soon learned to read from this gentleman, and after the long day's work was over he regularly devoted two or three hours to study. Upon the expiration of his term of apprenticeship he was seventeen. He then left Raleigh, and pursued his trade for two years at Laurens Court House, South Carolina. Thence he returned to Raleigh, and very soon after moved westward with his mother to Tennessee, and at Greenville again appears as a tailor. Here he married, and his choice of a partner proved exceedingly fortunate for his future prospects. He knew now how to read. But his wife taught him writing and arithmetic.

It was in 1829 that Mr. JOHNSON held his first office—that of Alderman. He was elected Mayor in 1830, and served in that capacity three years. In 1835 he was sent to the State Legislature. His politics were those of the party then known as Democratic. His first speech was against a measure for internal improvement. In 1841 he was elected to the State Senate, and two years afterward representative in Congress. In regard to the admission of Texas into the Union, the Mexican war, the Tariff of 1846, and the Homestead Bill, Mr. JOHNSON took very strong Democratic ground. In 1851 he was chosen Governor of Tennessee, to which office he was re-elected in 1855. In 1857 he was elected to the United States Senate for the full term, which ended in 1863.

Mr. JOHNSON'S record during the revolutionary period out of which we are now passing at first may be said to have fluctuated in certain respects, but it was never for a moment doubtful as to the necessity of the Union. In a speech of his delivered December 19, 1860, while he was defiant against the threat of Southern States to force the Border States into the Confederacy, he also gave some ambiguous utterances as to the inroads which would be offered to any State by the threat of coercion from the North. But in that speech his argument against secession was very strong as affecting Southern interests. He predicted that disunion must destroy slavery; that a hostile or even alien government upon the border of the slaveholding States would be the natural haven of rest to the hunted slave. He said that if one division was allowed others would follow; "and," said he, "rather than see this Union divided into thirty-three petty governments, with a little prince in one, a potentate in another, a little aristocracy in a third, a little democracy in a fourth, and a republic somewhere else—a citizen not being permitted to pass from one State to another without a passport or, a commission from his government—with quarreling and warring among the petty powers, which would result in anarchy—I would rather see this government to-day—I proclaim it here in my place—converted into a consolidated government."

In a speech made March 2, 1861, he said: "Show me those who make war on the Government and fire on its vessels, and I will show you a traitor. If I were President of the United States I would have all such arrested, and, if convicted, by the Eternal God I would have them hung!"

On the 4th of March, 1862, after the capture of Nashville by the National forces, Mr. JOHNSON was appointed by the President Military Governor of Tennessee, with the rank of Brigadier-General. The acceptance of this position necessitated, of course, the resignation of his situation in the Senate. As Military Governor Mr. JOHNSON was both just and firm. If he exacted a very rigorous test-oath from the disloyal, it was because he was convinced that, in justice, all government must be in the interest of loyal men. If he exacted from rich secessionists large sums of money for the support of the poor citizens who had been impoverished by the rebellion, it was because those men were responsible for the poverty which was thus alleviated.

As to Mr. JOHNSON'S future policy, his explicit statements leave us no room for doubt. Against responsible, conscious traitors the law must take its course as against other criminals. They must not only be punished, but impoverished. The problem of restoration is one for loyal men to solve. Except in the abolition of slavery, the States are to retain the character which belonged to them before the war. We are pledged, according to the requirements of the Constitution, to secure to these States a republican form of government. In reply to the question, What constitutes a State? Mr. JOHNSON answers, "Its loyal citizens." It is into the hands of these that the work of reconstruction will be committed.

Mr. JOHNSON comes into power through a most melancholy occurrence, but he has entered upon the duties of his office with a dignity and firmness that elicits at the same time the confidence of the American people. May God spare his life and guide his steps!

There are points in the policy of reconstruction that have hitherto been little discussed, but which must very soon assume important phases. The emancipation of four millions of slaves, it is thought, will but partially effect the work of political regeneration in the South. If the reports which reach us have any truth, it is certain that there is a large class in the South whose prejudice against the sentiments held at the South is as strong as ever before. There are men and women there who will teach their children to hate the name of Northern men. There are politicians of this class who will strive again for power, which they will wield as unscrupulously as they have ever done. A barrier against the possibility of such exercise of power must be set at the very first, or we shall have no tranquil peace for many years. The only remedy is to not simply free but also to enfranchise the negroes.

ANDREW JOHNSON.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY GARDNER, AND PUBLISHED BY PHILP & SOLOMONS, WASHINGTON, D. C.]

Give the negroes a vote and they will immediately be courted by both parties of the South. It may be objected that they will thus become merely the tools of politicians. But it must be remembered that freedom will excite new activities in these black men. They will have leaders of their own; they will have sentiments of their own; and the policy which they will most naturally adopt will be that which will bring them into alliance with the poor loyal whites of the South. Besides, their memories of the past oppression of which they have been the victims, their memory of the part which colored soldiers have played in the war for the Union—all these will bind them to a rarely Democratic policy.

MARCHING HOME.

"The orders for the return of our troops have already gone forth and the columns are beginning to move."

We are marching home at last,
Now the cruel war is past,
And the time of peace draws near;
We are marching home at last,
Now the cruel war is past,
To the homes our hearts hold dear.

With our banners stained and torn,
That through many a fight were borne
Where death rained thick and fast,
Now our glorious work is done,
Now the Union cause is won,
We are marching home at last.

Marching home to those we love;
See the veteran columns move,
Hear the drums and shrill fifes play,
Hear our voices raised in song
As we journey march along
On our homeward way!

With our trusty arms we come,
To the sound of fife and drum,
Now our cruel war is past;
Light of heart and glad are we,
Having served the cause, to be
Marching home at last.

All day long we march till night,
Then beside the camp-fires light,
Underneath the starry dome,
It is sweet to close our eyes,
While the night-wind softly sighs,
On our march toward home;

And in sleep to dream we hear
Friendly voices sounding near,
Bidding welcome as we come,
Till at length the morning breaks,
And the happy dreamer wakes
To the beating of the drum.

Then once more upon the way,
March we on at dawn of day,
Now our cruel war is past;
Light at heart and glad are we,
Having proved the Right, to be
Marching home at last.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1865.

THE REBEL CHIEFS.

THE country is very much obliged to ROBERT E. LEE and BEVERLY TUCKER for an exhibition of the real spirit of the conquered rebel leaders. They are conquered, not converted. ROBERT E. LEE is to-day as utter a rebel as he was on the day when he deliberately resolved to betray the country which had educated him and to fire upon the flag which he had engaged in honor to defend.

Three days after LEE had surrendered the forces which he commanded, while he was still a paroled prisoner, he issued an order to the soldiers of his dispersing army, in which he reminds them that they will take with them "the satisfaction that proceeds from the consciousness of a duty faithfully performed." The duty of which he speaks is armed resistance to the constitutional government of his country. Its faithful performance is the slaughter upon many fields of those resolutely true to their own government. LEE proceeds to say that he bids his troops farewell "with an increasing admiration of your constancy and devotion to your country." What country? The country of which DAVIS and BENJAMIN and SLIDELL and MASON have spoken for the last four years—a certain section of the United States of America called "the South," or "the Confederacy." That is "the country" to which they have been faithful; and for that fidelity, which, if successful, would have destroyed this nation, ROBERT E. LEE declares that he has an increasing admiration.

MR. BEVERLY TUCKER belongs to the third class of rebel chiefs. The first comprises those who fought and at least risked their lives in the field for what they professed to believe. The second consists of those who, like SLIDELL, slipped off to Europe when the fighting began, and finding that naught is every thing and every thing is naught, have been placidly enjoying the money they had made by the trade of politics, while they laughed in their sleeves at the more earnest conspirators whom they had outwitted. The third and infinitely the most contemptible class is composed of those who sneaked into Canada too far to be reached by the military conscriptions of the rebel despotism at Richmond, but close enough to the loyal part of the country to plot thefts, raids, railway slaughters, the burning alive of innocent women and children in theatres and hotels, and to instigate assassination. These three classes were made up of men who had lived by the government which they tried to overthrow, and which they had taken solemn oaths to respect and maintain; and to the third class, as we said, MR. BEVERLY TUCKER belongs.

This man has written a letter, since the surrender of LEE, professing horror that he, a supporter of the rebellion which hunted, hung, starved, and froze thousands of helpless Union men and prisoners, should be suspected of any complicity in the murder of one man. In the same letter TUCKER declares himself a public enemy of the United States, and adds, that before the assassination of MR. LINCOLN, he had asked permission to go to Richmond and assist in the reconstruction of a government to the supreme authority of which he has always been and always shall be opposed.

Such are the vanquished rebel leaders as they describe themselves. The country needs no other proof of their spirit, and no more startling warning of the peril of allowing them the least voice in the political settlement of the nation. There is not one of LEE'S former slaves, the man whom he and his fellow-conspirators, like BEVERLY TUCKER, have outraged and despised —the men who have been as unswervingly true to their country as LEE and TUCKER have been basely false—who is not at this moment a worthier citizen of the United States and fitter to be intrusted with a vote than ROBERT E. LEE, who, in his turn, might have almost heard the groans of the starving, rotting soldiers of the Union upon Belle Isle and in Libby prison, yet who spoke never a word nor lifted a finger for their relief; and who publishes his increasing admiration of the fidelity of traitors to their treason; or than BEVERLY TUCKER, who insolently proclaims his pride that he is a public enemy.

These men are representatives of that class of leaders at the South who inspired and consummated the bloody rebellion. They are silent guns, but loaded still; silent, not spiked or broken, and ready at any favorable moment to open fire again upon the national life and honor. They are the dragon's teeth, which are now in the strong hands of the United States Government and people. That hand may hold them harmless, or it may sow them again, and reap another bloody harvest of armed men. But if the nation is as true as it is strong, it will secure peace by the entire political disfranchisement of such avowed public enemies as ROBERT E. LEE and BEVERLY TUCKER, with all the other ringleaders of the rebellion.

MOBS.

THERE is no excuse for mobs in this country. Actions and words which the law does not condemn, and which the officers of the law are not obliged to regard, can well be disregarded by the public. If a crowd is to create crimes and punish them summarily at its pleasure, there is at the end of civil society. Had we been always faithful to the fundamental principle of our Government, which allows the supreme law to deal with all citizens and offenders, we should hardly have come to civil war.

But for many and many a year we have suffered the mob in this nation to overthrow the guarantees of the Constitution. Freedom of speech is the fundamental condition of popular government, and is expressly secured to every citizen of the United States; but the mob has destroyed it at the South and tried to destroy it at the North, and the fatal blow which the toleration of the mob struck at liberty in every way have failed to perceive. So permanent was mob rule in the slave States, that we had really come to believe not only that the mob condemned slavery there at the peril of his life, but we seemed to suppose that there was nothing to be done. Yet every one knew that if every mob or the Northern mob hunted and burned or hanged for expressing his opinion of slavery was a martyr to the country; and a thoughtful man might have seen that the only hope for free discussion of every question must be protected every where or war would inevitably follow.

Curses like chickens come home to roost. The men who have supported slavery and accused its discussion as an attack upon the rights of slaveholders—the men who, when they might stigmatize the discussion of free trade as an attack upon the rights of manufacturers—the men who have incited and excused the mobs which assail slavery discussion, at the North, are now occasionally reaping what they have sown. But the danger is the same. The mob of Boston which dragged WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON, thirty years ago, for denouncing slavery, and the Philadelphia mob which assaulted a meeting called to express sympathizing with the most infamous traitors, are equally guilty. If MR. GARRISON had not effectually killed MOBS, the right to go uncondemned. If INGERSOLL, whose offense is known, was not arrested by the authorities, no man had a right to molest him.

The mob's position is the same as outrage to the public sentiment is not a crime to be punished until the law orders it; and when it does order it, the mob is not to execute it. The law must execute its will. That a man hopes for the ruin of his country, that he is a foul-mouthed traducer of good men and a base calumniator of the acts and motives of the Government, is reason enough in a time of war for his arrest and imprisonment by the Government, if, in its opinion, he is dangerous to public safety; and reason enough at all times for honest men to shun him. The common sense of the country fully justified the arrest of VALLANDIGHAM by the Government. But if the authorities had suffered him to be at large that should have been the end of any forcible action.

This INGERSOLL is doubtless utterly despicable. But it will not do to allow ten or ten hundred men to beat or assault any person whom they do not like. If he has committed an offense, let him be arrested before a magistrate. He was committed for carrying concealed weapons. That was an offense for which he may properly be punished. But the crowd had no right to beat him with a cane for carrying concealed weapons. The duty of the captain who accosted him was to complain to the magistrate, not to cane the culprit. If the report be correct that the captain struck the first blow, it was the duty of the police to arrest the captain for an assault as well as INGERSOLL for carrying weapons.

There is safety in no other course than in leaving the law to deal with offenders against its authority. But the offenses which are not legal crimes must be punished by public contempt, not by actual force. The country can not now be harmed as it might have been two or three years since by the rebel speeches of men like INGERSOLL. At that time he would properly have been arrested. Let him and his fellows sink into present contempt and future infamy.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S AMNESTY.

By his proclamation of the 8th of December, 1863, President LINCOLN granted a full pardon —with certain exceptions which we will presently state—to all who had been in rebellion, with a full restoration of all rights of property except in slaves and in cases where the rights of third parties had intervened, and upon condition of taking and keeping and keeping inviolate an oath to support and defend the Constitution and the Union under it, and to abide faithfully by all the acts of Congress, and by the proclamations of the President in regard to slaves, so far as they are not repealed or declared void by the Supreme Court.

The persons excepted from this amnesty were all who are or have been civil or diplomatic officers and agents of the rebel Government—all who have left judicial stations under the United States to aid the rebellion—all who are or have been military and naval officers above the rank of colonel in the army or lieutenant in the navy —all who left seats in the United States Congress or resigned commissions in its army or navy, and afterward aided the rebellion—and all who have treated colored or white soldiers and sailors of the United States otherwise than as prisoners of war.

On the 26th of March, 1864, President LINCOLN by proclamation defined that the amnesty was limited to those who were not prisoners of war, but who, being free from any arrest, voluntarily took the oath.

On the 6th of December, 1864, in his last annual Message to Congress, the President said that when he proclaimed the amnesty he stated that the excepted classes might still be within special clemency. "During the year," he continued, "many additional cases of the general proclamation, and many more would, only that the signs of bad faith in some" led to precautions. Special pardons will be granted to persons of the excepted classes. "The door has been for a full year open to all." But he adds, "The time may come, probably will come, when public duty will demand that it be closed, and that in lieu, more vigorous measures than heretofore shall be adopted."

Such measures were not suggested by President LINCOLN, nor have they been adopted. The amnesty remains in full force until it is modified by the same authority. The letter of his chief of staff, General GRANT, in which he speak asserts that "a detachment of the United States Christian Commission consisting of seven" came into Richmond "under" General ROBERT E. LEE. It was unfortunate for these gentlemen that "President JEFFERSON DAVIS, Secretary BENJAMIN, and "General" WIGFALL had left Richmond. Had they remained, this detachment of seven might have completed their homage to abortive and bloody treason by "paying their respects" to the bloody chief traitors—or as the New York Tribune politely calls the rebel agents in Canada, these "distinguished Americans to the other party in our civil war."

The loyal fathers, mothers, sisters, wives, husbands, and sons in this country have generously contributed thousands and thousands of dollars to the United States Christian Commission for the purpose of binding the wounds, soothing the agony, and smoothing the dying pillows of brave and innocent men done to death by the command of ROBERT E. LEE. These contributors have hoped also that they might assuage some of the inconceivable suffering of the poor victims of Andersonville and Belle Isle. The faithful hand and heart of the country have been opened at the entreaty of the Christian Commission; yet, if this story be true, some of the agents of this great beneficence have been eager to lick the boots of the man who caused so much of the sorrow which the charity was intended to relieve.

If these agents were so anxious to pay their respects to somebody at the South there were men enough there whom it might have cured their weary hearts' homage, and whom it was a crime to forget. The Union men who have not fallen in their love of country to the flag which LEE betrayed and sought to dishonor; the slaves whose souls are white with fidelity to the country which had forgotten them; they hearts which have suffered and waited and prayed and believed, through all the malice of DAVIS and amidst the fiery lines of LEE—surely these were the men and women who should have received from the agents of the Christian Commission that respect which they so publicly offered to a man who at red with the innocent blood of his fellow-citizens.

Whether they receive it or not, let us remember that LEE is not magnanimous, or Christian, or great, or admirable, because he fought in a cause which he confesses was not justified in appealing to arms. He is not a hero because he staid behind intrenchments until GRANT forced him out. He is not a gentleman because he lived by the sweat of other men's brows. He is not less guilty of the highest crime against his country because he excuses himself as all traitors do. He is not by his own words as much a rebel to his Government and to humanity now as he was six weeks ago, and if the agents of the Christian Commission would not have "paid their respects" to him then, their homage is still more contemptible now.

MR. EDWIN BOOTH.

SURELY every generous heart will sympathize with the peculiarly crushing blow which has befallen MR. EDWIN BOOTH. A gentleman whose retiring courtesy has universally commanded respect—an actor whose genius and success have delighted his countrymen—a citizen whose private vote was cast for ABRAHAM LINCOLN—a man whose character has made hosts of friends—it is a cruel fate which identifies his name with the national sorrow. "I don't speak to me of glory" said he several months since to a friend who differed from him, "for we can not agree. ABRAHAM LINCOLN will be loved and honored hereafter not less than WASHINGTON."

MR. BOOTH at once, and naturally, withdrew from his present professional engagements. But he should understand that he is not to be ruined by the crimes of any one who bears his name. The powers which he has always so nobly used are not to be lost to us by any offenses but his own. When the bitterness of the hour has somewhat passed, and the event which now afflicts us can be more calmly contemplated, he will resume his work, we hope, sure of the approval of those whose kind thoughts he most values, and of the public which has so charms and instincts. Meanwhile it is our duty to take care that no taint of prejudice attaches to his name.

"THE NORTHERN WHIG."

IN quoting an admirable article from the Belfast Northern Whig, describing MR. LINCOLN'S singular felicity, we ascribed it to PROFESSOR CAIRNES. But a letter from an Irishman who knows informs us that it is from the pen of MR. HILL, the editor of the paper. We gladly make the correction, as our correspondent suggests, "for the sake of justice, and to prove, too, that we have Irish journals besides those already known on the other side."

Indeed, we have had no clearer eyed or more stalwart champion than MR. HILL'S Northern Whig. Upon the receipt of the news of the fall of Richmond he wrote an admirable article, from which we extract the following striking passages:

"The public writers and speakers who, during the last three years and a half, have occupied themselves in denouncing that the North could never conquer the South are now bound with a very different and much deeper confidence to congratulate it. They establish, in their own measure say satisfaction, that the South, of whose ultimate 'subjugation' they thought meanly and spoke scornfully, can never be held and administered as part of a free republic. It will be, they assure us, the Poland or Hungary on the continent; are we content as to say the Ireland—of America. If the authors of these doleful passages had ever been right in any single point arising out of the rebellion—if they had not blundered from first to last upon the military problem—we should entertain greater confidence than it is possible for us now to feel in their political valetudinarian. On every element of the great theme they have gone wildly astray. They understood neither the material strength nor the moral character of the Northern and Southern populations, nor the social organizations which are divided from each other by Mason and Dixon's line. This ignorance—including a total indifference to the facts of American history and biography—within their political pronunciations so completely as it has reversed her military prophecies.

* * * * * * *

"A Homestead act for the South would bring to Virginia the prosperity of New York, and enable Florida and Alabama to count wealth and men with Ohio and Illinois. To effect this end there will be no need of confiscation. Is the wasteland or abandoned soil of the State bases more suitable for the interest of freedom, than the wasteland to the landless whites, whoare, or were, the strength of the rebellion and the hope of those who count on future disaffection and troubles, that may probably be converted into peaceful and industrious citizens, thus helping to confirm the new order on the basis of the old one, in the overthrow of which they have been blind instruments.

"The highest of a tropical climate lands not worth much with us in fine forecasting the future. No part of the United States has more natural resources; and those States which most nearly approaches them, is the seat of German settlers, employed in that form of industry—the cultivation of cotton—in which we are asked to believe that no European can engage and live. In this instance, and in that of every other, the facts which are adduced disprove the possibility of the reconstruction of the Union on the basis of a homogeneous society, North and South, have no existence out of the imaginations of those whose wishes shape their thoughts."

THE EXHIBITION OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY.

IT is a happy moment in which the doors of the new Academy building are opened. It is a temple of art, and is dedicated in the last days of war to lasting peace. The simple exercises of the opening, the brilliant assembly throughout the beautiful halls, the building of a new company together making a fairer and nobler picture than any hung upon the walls—all combined to make the occasion peculiarly joyous to the hour. The building is entirely satisfactory. It is spacious, solid, convenient, simple in arrangement, admirable in light and ventilation, and very fine and effective. A more striking spectacle than it offered on Thursday evening, April 27, 1865, is seldom seen. To pay and thinking people, the descending and descending the stately staircase, leaning over the railings above it, passing in and out of the lofty halls, and such a scene as New York at this time has painted upon many a canvas; while we, more lucky than the delegates of a canvas, could see the respectful crowd, and hear the music, and catch the breath of flowers, which in the Venetian pictures are only suggested.

The voice of prayer consecrated the peaceful walls. The guild of artists, who were the hosts of the evening, the artists of the building, fitly spoke the welcome by the lips of their honored chief, President HENRYCUCK. The great multitude of lovers and friends of art responded from the tongue of the venerable master of song, the poet BRYANT, and then no more speeches were made—the practice which we hope may be as enduring as the marble walls of the Academy. The occasion will not be forgotten. The opening festival was worthy of the place and the purpose; and we heartily, congratulate the artists of America that, after long wandering, they now have a home. No chief city of the country a home for the exhibition of their works which is itself an illustration both of the progress of art and of the general public interest in its cultivation.

The exhibition—the fortieth annual display of the Academy—is very large, but it seems to us not very good. There are many, there are many lovely pictures, but there are few that are very memorable. The usual run of portraits is fortunately quite reasonable, and the landscapes are various and interesting. But we should gladly have seen more works inspired by the war, which is an epoch of romance, tragedy, and comedy. Mr. BEARD'S "The Night before the Battle" (263) is a solemn and striking picture. The soldiers lie sleeping around the guns; one of the men has just been writing a letter home; the sentry pass along the parapet; the cold moonlight gleams upon a gun which Death, the skeleton, is sighting. It is a picture which makes the spectator glad that peace is come. If, then, you step from this picture to the door, and look across the hall of the staircase, you will see, high over the door of the opposite room, a picture that would richly reward your attention—if you could see it. But you can not. The architect has made that impossible. The Committee have buried a picture in it. By-and-by, when the exhibition is over and the picture is taken down, you will see, I suppose, a charming treatment of a characteristic episode in the war, "General SHERMAN'S March through Georgia—Soldiers arriving at a Plantation" (86), by THOMAS NAST. The work is full of expression in the faces and groups, but we should not know it. There is a party of officers approaching the disdainful ladies of the house, who are standing upon the piazza, which is capitally contrasted with a group of the slaves paying homage to the soldiers; there is a characteristic middle distance of military tents and squads, with all the busy, bustling, surprised movement attendant upon such an arrival; there is the household scene, the mansion within the hall, the gold air, the sluglish river; but you will never know it so long as the picture hangs where it can not be seen. We have the authorities of the Academy to put some bust or baso relievo in that unfortunate niche, and never again to put a picture there.

Beneath it, on each side of the door into the main hall, hang the "Sleeping Storm" (93), by J. F. KENSETT, and "Ullswater" (91), by J. F. KENSETT. Mr. GIFFORD'S landscape is fine. The startled lush that goes before the letter of the boatman is finely indicated, and it is certainly one of his best works, even if it be a little melodramatic. Mr. KENSETT, upon the other side of the door, shows us the very ecstasy of summer beauty among the hills of the English lake region. This is one of the most delightful of KENSETT'S pictures, and he is a happy man who sees it always upon his wall. Mr. KENSETT contributes this year are only four, but they are in his best style. "An October morning" (230) is one of the exquisite scenes in the treatment of which he is unsurpassed.

The poet of humor is accepted by Mr. BIERSTADT'S "Looking down To Semite Valley, California" (486). The general aspect of this picture has been somewhat familiarized to the public eye by a small and exquisite study of the same subject in the exhibition of the Sanitary Fair a year ago. It is a bright picture with a certain freshness of form which is striking, and there is a fine masterly facility in the execution. But the subject seems for some reason inadequate to so large a canvas. Effect is often disproportioned to the size. We speak under correction, however, for we record an impression rather than a judgment. "The late Peletah Perit" (446), by THOMAS HICKS, is one of the best of the artist's full-length portraits. It was painted by a member of the good man whom it represents, for although we never saw him we recognize here the impression which he made upon those who were most familiar with him. In the room at the head of the staircase there are two pictures, "Listeners" (214) and "The Shepherd" (210), by WILLIAM M. HUNT, which, although painted in a manner that we can not like, are full of tenderness and grace. Mr. EASTMAN JOHNSON'S "Christmas Night" (376) is also a very charming little work. It is an interior with portraits, and painted apparently with extreme fidelity but it is sure to confirm the reputation of the artist. Mr. C. P. CRANCH, in Nos. 22, 379, and 393, contributes some excellent landscapes, painted from pure love of the mysterious and romantic city, and with the poetic suggestion that belongs to the subject.

We speak of the pictures briefly, just as we stroll through the rooms, and shall record our impressions of some other works at another time.

FROM THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

AN officer writes to us from Tennessee: "In my present sedentary, unregular life, the weekly newspapers from the great world come but seldom, I want to tell you, if I can, how it seems to me the army—I am certain of the whole army—is behind the flank of the President. In the first place there has been, ever since there began to understand him, a love for the good man now gone to the good man's heaven, little short of idolatry. It was pure and genuine affection, and was the just appreciation of him in his sagacity and honesty such as I verily believe was never before entertained for any man by so large a number. He was the father of the army as him as the chosen leader under whose guidance, peace, and prosperity, the gift of the dear God would come to the people of the land.

"The shock his death has given it is impossible to express. On whom can we now look with confidence, we ask, to carry on this trying hour? they ask. It is not the cry of doubt, or disloyalty, or despair of the republic, but it is the cry of grief, and of the heart's best friend. Their love, their gratitude, their all-embracing confidence and trust can not be transferred to any one. There was a personal attachment to every one of them, and especially to our good colored fellows. I called out my regiment and read them the news. There was a look in the eye among them; and on that day and yesterday, the day of the funeral, there were the silence and sadness of the strongest grief I ever saw.

"_____I see Mr. BRECKER says he would treat JEFFERSON DAVIS as he would treat a criminal. I am with him. But you forget, Mr. BRECKER, that the wasp which you mercifully released had committed no other offense than flying in through the open window. Suppose you had seen it settle down on the breast of your sleeping, unconscious child and thrust its poisoned sting into its heart. I think you would not have killed it on the spot? And JEFF DAVIS is no wasp. More venomous than the cobra di capa, more treacherous than the wolf, more cunning than the serpent, more lying than the devil, he has robbed the land of its children. It may be his last divine purpose to let him live an outcast with the breand of Cain upon him, for in no Christian community can he find a home. But I say kill him as our hands he shall die; so believes the army.

"So believing, and hoping that the end of the rebellion is now near and justice is coming, they will support the administration of ANDREW JOHNSON or of any other man who, as they believe, has at heart the welfare of the republic."

THE LINCOLN HOSPITAL.

IN response to our suggestion that a monument to Mr. LINCOLN should take the form of a hospital for soldiers and sailors, a responsible gentleman writes to the editor that thousands of thirteen acres admirably situated on the harbor of New London, near the mouth of the Thames River. The property will be deeded for purposes named to a board of national trustees on condition that the sum of $100,000 be raised by voluntary contributions to erect a suitable building, and to equip and maintain a hospital. Our correspondent adds: "To insure you that it is not a wild scheme, I have got to get rid of, and that I have no mercenary motive in the matter, I may state that I am not sure that I shall ever see your since the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars in cash, and now hold it at three thousand dollars subscription. The citizens are all interested, neither do I expect to be interested, in any manner whatsoever with any of the adjoining lands or interests."

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY.

WE began in the last Number of the Weekly the publication of the new novel by ARTEMUS B. EDWARDS, author of "Bardeau's History," which was one of the most delightful stories of the last year, "Barbara's History" at once made the reputation of Miss EDWARDS as a skillful and fascinating novelist, and "Half a Million of Money" promises to maintain it. The first number was a prologue, the scene of which was London a hundred years ago. With the Number published to-day the tale properly opens in a clear, sweet, and simple strain which suggests many delightful things. The succeeding number there is a charming picture of a Swiss pastor. We can sincerely commend the opening story as very certain to reward richly the reader's attention. It is not technically a "sensation story," but it is vivid, graphic, and very interesting.

☞ The Portrait of "Mr. Lincoln at Home," published in our last issue, was copied from the admirable Photograph of Mr. A. BERGER, 285 Fulton Street, Brooklyn.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE SITUATION.

GENERAL GRANT reached Raleigh early on Monday morning, April 24. His immediately entered General SHERMAN that the Government at Washington had not ratified the memorandum of agreement between Generals SHERMAN and General JOHNSTON. Notice was sent to the latter that the truce would be removed within forty-eight hours, and a fresh demand was made for surrender. The rebel commissioners were properly committed the whole matter as fully into the hands of General Sherman as if nothing had occurred. The truce had acted in his previous arrangement upon a misunderstanding, having supposed from the terms in which General GRANT stated terms to Lee were approved at the North, and from the impression produced by General WELTZEL to the Virginia Legislature to reconsider at Richmond, that the Government was anxious to conciliate even those who had been prominent actors in the rebellion. General GRANT in a few words set him right in that matter. General JOHNSTON, without any very apparent reluctance, accepted the same terms which he granted to LEE, and on the same day surrendered all the rebel armies north and east of the Chattahoochee River. The rebel armies south and west on the 26th to General SCHOFIELD, who has been appointed commander of the district of South Carolina.

Thus the last organized army east of the Mississippi has been disbanded. The rebel chief civil officers, Governors THOMAS and CLARK have already, by the capture of Mobile and the surrender of General TAYLOR, lost their office important points, finished up the war in their departments. There is no doubt as to the speedy disorganization of the rebel army west of the Mississippi.

Upon the surrender of the rebellion, upon whom much trouble was expected, are giving up their arms. Kirby's men have already surrendered; and though their commander is still at large his whereabouts are known and his capture is only a question of time. Morgan's command at the west is taking the same course.

From the moment the military establishment essential to war the nation is now drifting toward one more suitable to an era of peace. The necessary steps are already taken for the reduction of the army and the curtailment of military expenses. All persons not actually requiring the further medical treatment are to be honorably discharged and paid; officers and soldiers who have been disabled in the war are now on furlough or in parole-camps, and all recruits at rendezvous, especially in the regular army, are to be discharged. The Adjutant-General has been ordered to make up returns of the number in the field and in garrison with a view to their reduction. It will not require a large army to garrison the forts and fortifications of peace at the South. Already a large portion of the present army is to be found in the Southern States. The number of clerks and employés in the Quarter-master's, Engineer's, and Ordnance Bureaus of the Department are to be reduced to the number absolutely necessary for closing business. The Ordnance Bureau will be discharged except those necessary to bring home soldiers, and all unfinished contracts will be cancelled.

The purchase of horses and mules, the purchase of forage, the purchase of quartermaster's and commissary's stores, and all purchases for railroad construction will be stopped. The Commissary General of Subsistence will discontinue the purchase of supplies; the Chief of Ordnance will stop all purchases of arms and ammunition; the Chief of Engineers will stop labor on field fortifications and other works; and the Chief of Topographical Engineers will discontinue some projects for surveys to be made out of the public property in the Southern States, retaining that property in such that may be sold upon advertisement, without prejudice to the country.

On the 29th President JOHNSON issued an order creating the military division of the Mississippi, to consist of all the States east of the Mississippi. This will have a beneficial effect in hastening the work of reorganizing by peaceful pursuits the devastations of a four-years war.

THE "VIRGINIA."

On the evening of Sunday, April 23, our gun-boats at the mouth of Red River captured the rebel ram Webb and sent her up to Mississippi. She made one escape previously, and passed Alexandria. From New Orleans she was chased by the Government steamer Hollyhock, and was soon discovered by the steamer Richmond. She was discovered coming up; so that all chance of her escape was cut off. She was boarded by Lieutenant WOOD, her officers and crew escaped. She was commanded by Captain WEBB, a rebel naval notoriety. The Red River Shreveport, Louisiana, on the Red River, on the 16th of April, with a crew of fifty-two, targeting, and guns, with which it was designed to run her down the Mississippi to the Gulf and to New Orleans.

THE WRECK OF THE "SULTANA."

A terrible calamity, scarcely paralleled in the history of steamboat disasters on the Mississippi, occurred on April 28 to the steamer Sultana eight miles above Memphis. The steamer Sultana, Mason, was on her way from New Orleans to Cairo with 2000 people on board, of whom all but about 500 were paroled prisoners on their way home from the rebel prison at Andersonville. At 2 A.M. the boilers burst with terrific force, and destroyed the officers and engineers of the boat. Nearly 1600 lives were lost, among whom are known to be commissioned officers, Hon. W. D. Snow, member of Congress from ATKINSON, and two Colonels of Illinois regiments.

The scene following the explosion was heart-rending and indescribable. Hundreds of people were blown into the air, and descending into the water, some dead, some with their limbs shattered, others were borne under by the resistless current of the great river, never to rise again. Others were consumed by the scorching flames of the wreck, were unable to reach the woods, and there they perished. Others, unable to swim, were left floating here to their assistance. There were about fifteen women and children on board, but as far as can be ascertained only two or three have been found. Some of the wretched people were thrown into the river as far down as the levee at this city, and this was the first intimation the officers of the town had received of the terrible disaster.

In twenty minutes after the explosion the whole boat was in a sheet of flame. Many men left the steamer at 8:30, took refuge on the bow of the boat while the flames were driving the fire, but the heat soon drove them down the stream, reversing the flames, when the steam came pouring from the boilers, and they were clinging to the boat.

There is suspicion on the part of some that a torpedo must have been placed in the coal and that the explosion was not accidental.

NEWS ITEMS.

Stephen R. Mallory, rebel Secretary of the Navy, surrendered himself at Fenwick to Captain Gibson, of the national navy, on the 20th of April.

The appointment of the Surgeon-General bring the gratifying assurance that Secretary Seward is quite past all danger and will doubtless soon be able to attend to all the duties of his important position. Mr. Frederick Seward is also doing well.

The London Journal has information that the rebel General Gideon J. Pillow has requested to be allowed to return to his home in Tennessee, where he smartly cash and giving bonds.

The hundred rebels at Cumberland Gap surrendered on the 26th, and were paroled.

It will require eleven millions of dollars to pay off General Sherman's army.

The dismantlement of the drafting system will relieve from duty a force of persons estimated at 70,000.

Secretary Welles has sent a congratulatory letter to Admiral Thatcher on the fall of Mobile.

The rebel ram Albemarle, recently sunk in the Roanoke River, by Lieutenant Cushing, has been raised at an expense of $20,000, and towed to Norfolk, where she will be repaired. Her machinery is in good condition, and her hull not much damaged.

The Department of Washington has been subdivided into four military districts, under command respectively of Major-General John G. Parke, Brevet Major-General T. M. Harris, Brevet Major-General Wells, and Colonel M. D. Sweitzer; the whole under command of Major-General Augur.

FOREIGN NEWS.

EUROPE.

THE excitement in Europe on receiving intelligence of the capture of Richmond was most intense. The opinion was almost unanimous that this victory would end the war. Though the rebel organ pretended to wait an hour from the other side. The scene in the French Legislative body on April 10 when the news was communicated was somewhat extraordinary. A debate was in progress on the amendment to the address to the throne, expressing sympathy with our cause. Mr. Pelletan spoke in favor of the amendment. It was contested by Rouher, but by a majority. The amendment was rejected by 195 votes against 54.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

"IT BE EVENSAL!" asked—"Jack!" and "John" set, the question of the week. Jackson Square is the same as Johnson Johnson's son. Andrew Johnson, ex-Governor of Tennessee, the United States, is now the same as Andrew Jackson, seventh President. Both were born in North Carolina, both lived for a time in South Carolina, both emigrated to Tennessee. Andrew, under the new name, will accomplish what he promised under his old name: "The Union must and shall be preserved."

QUIDDITIES.

For the Old Ladies.—A tea-party without scandal is like a ball without a fiddle.

Words without deeds are like the barks without the seeds.

Features without grace are like a clock without a face.

A hand without a love is like a cat without a fur.

Life without cheer is like a cellar without beer.

A master without a slave is like a mule without the rein.

Marriage without means is like a horse without his mane.

A man without a wife is like a fork without a knife.

A convert without flushing is like thunder without lightning.

PROVERBS.—Proverbs by JOSEPH BULLOCK. Eighteen very wise sayings, and the wisest among you has effort to give them the big end of the trade. Merry young, and old, are invited to join in the chorus. Price, only 25 cents, clothes and cotton flannel. Also, a pleasant book for the sick bed—Bed-ridden. Cultivate modesty, put meat and keep a good conscience. Sold by all the trade. Orders by express-post stores were made on purpose. Code more than a thousand years old is done to boy. If a man's enemy can blackwhite he is a negro, or you are a fish. Keep fish in cage, but not in water. Never sell your cow if you left he fane, go into the grave-yard and scratch yourself with a tame-thorn. Young man, be careful about the pedigree your going to leave than you are about the wun somebody's gone, but don't be in a hurry. Remember sense and sure to cure. Two lovers, like two armies, generally git along quietly until they are engaged.

"Friendship with all, entangling silkscues with none," is as good a motto for women as for men.

A man with an enormously large mouth called on a dentist to get a tooth drawn. After the dentist had presented his instruments and was about to commence operations, the man began to strain and stretch his mouth till he got it to a fiddle shape. "Why, sir," said the dentist; "don't trouble yourself to stretch your mouth any wider, for I intend to stand outside of it to draw your tooth."

"God-morning, Mr. Jenkins; where have you kept yourself this long time?" "Kept myself," said Jenkins; "I don't keep myself, I live on credit."

THE TOOTH OF TIME.—"When Nineveh has departed and Palmyra is but a shapeless mass of ruins and fallen, and the Pyramids themselves are sinking into decay, it is to be wonder," sighed a French humorist, "that my old black tent should be getting seedy at the elbows."

Good prescription for a horse that will not eat a "bit"—Try him oats.

Somebody says the most difficult accent is getting up a subscription.

A PREACHER'S TOAST.—"Woman—the fairest work in creation. The last edition is large, and no mistake would be without a copy."

DEFINITION OF THE "HAPPY MEAN."—A joyful mixer.

A STARVED MAN, who was out at a white party, when he supposed great attention was paid to the supper, sighed, "Well," he replied, "perhaps I may as well; my wife, probably, is already as much as she can be."

THE FIRE-PIMPLE.—A lawyer's.

CHRISTIAN NOMENCLATURE.—What would be the best Christian name for a female friend?—Ambrosia.

Why are suicides the most successful people in the world?—Because they always accomplish their own ends.

The young lady who lost the little pink fan from her bonnet has found it again in a big brown straw at heaver.

QUAKER APPELLATION.—"Of drab it!"

There may be a hundred geese with all their quills in one pen.

Price-fighters, clam-eaters, and Turks, are all musicians.

If a man is drowned, water is his fate.

BED-IVY.—AY, BED.—The late Indies in Paris are all trying to make their hair golden. It is the correct thing to call it "golden," but the right word is "yellow." The meaning plan by which the color is imparted to the locks is a secret which ought to be soaked as the "secrety'd art-cry," as being to closely connected with the vain.

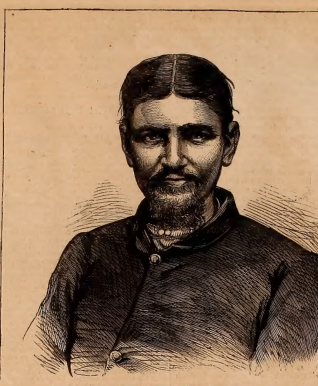
An Irishman, who had been fined several weeks in succession for getting drunk, coolly proposed to the judge that he should take him by the year at a reduced rate.

CHURCH.—The pronoun I and the interjection Oare always represented by a capital; when U is added, it is the representation of no capital at all.

EDUCATIONAL AVOCATIONS FOR THE AGRICULTURAL CLASSES.—Thrashing machines.

EFFECT ON AN OLD MAID.—A large—too late!

THE ASSASSIN'S END.



AFTER eleven days had transpired since the death of the President his murderer, JOHN WILKES BOOTH, was discovered in a barn on GARRETT'S farm, near Port Royal, on the Rappahannock. Immediately after the murder Colonel BAKER, of the detective service, set out to find BOOTH'S hiding-place. He soon succeeded in capturing ATZEROTH and Dr. MUDDS. It was the latter of these who attended to BOOTH'S crippled leg, and a boot with BOOTH'S name in it was found in his possession. A negro was then arrested, who said he had seen BOOTH and another man cross the Potomac in a fishing-boat. Colonel BAKER sent to HANCOCK for twenty-five mounted men to aid him in the pursuit. These were sent under Lieutenant DOUGHERTY, and BAKER placed them under the control of Lieutenant-Colonel E. J. CONGER, and of his cousin, Lieutenant L. B. BAKER, and dispatched them to Belle Plain, with orders to scour the country about Port Royal.

The detectives and cavalrymen left Washington at two P.M. on the 23d of April, and at ten o'clock disembarked at Belle Plain, near Fredericksburg. Here they commenced their inquest, but without any result. The next morning they came to Port Royal ferry and crossed. At Port Royal they found one ROLLINS, a fisherman, who referred them to a negro named LUCAS as having driven two men a short distance toward Bowling Green in a wagon. These men perfectly answered the description of BOOTH and his accomplice HAROLD. Some disbanded men, it was learned, belonging to MOSBY'S command, took BOOTH under their protection on the way to Bowling Green. On the 25th BAKER and his party proceeded to Bowling Green, a small court-house town in Caroline County. Here they found the captain of the rebel cavalry, and extorted from him a statement of BOOTH'S hiding-place. It was found that this was at the house of a Mr. GARRETT, which they had passed on their way to Bowling Green.

Returning with the captain for a guide, the worn-out command halted at GARRETT'S gate at two o'clock on the morning of the 26th. The World correspondent gives the following description of the house: "In the pale moonlight, three hundred yards from the main road, to the left, a plain old farm-house looked grayly through its environing locusts. It was worn and whitewashed, and two-storied, and its half-human windows glowered down upon the silent cavalrymen like watching owls which stood as sentries over some horrible secret asleep within. The front of this house looked up the road toward the Rappahannock, but did not face it, and on that side a long Virginia porch protruded, where, in the summer, among the honeysuckles, the humming-bird flew like a visible odor. Nearest the main road, against the pallid gable, a single-storied kitchen stood, and there were three other doors, one opening upon the porch, one in the kitchen gable, and one in the rear of the farm-house.

"Dimly seen behind, an old barn, high and weather-beaten, faced the roadside gate, for the house itself lay to the left of its own lane; and nestling beneath the barn, a few long corn-cribs lay with a cattle-shed at hand. There was not a swell of the landscape any where in sight. A plain dead level contained all the tenements and structures. A worm fence stretched along the road, broken by two battered gate-posts, and between the road and the house the lane was crossed by a second fence and gate. The farm-house lane, passing the house front, kept straight on to the barn, though a second carriage-track ran up to the porch."

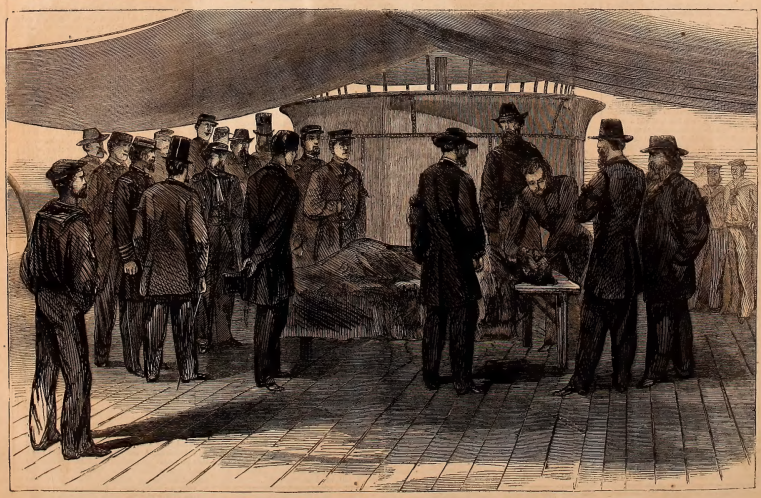
Without noise the house was surrounded, and BAKER went up to the kitchen door on the side and wrapped. An old man in half undress undrew the bolts, and had scarcely opened the door before BAKER had him by the throat with a pistol at his ear, and asked, "Where are the men who stay with you?" Under the menace of instant death the old man seemed paralyzed, but at BAKER'S order lit a candle. The question was then repeated. "They are gone," replied the old man. Soon a young boy appeared on the stage and told BAKER the men he sought were in the barn. The barn

SERGEANT BOSTON CORBETT.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.]

Lieutenant Baker. Colonel Baker. Colonel Conger.

PLANNING THE CAPTURE OF BOOTH AND HAROLD.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY GARDNER, WASHINGTON, D. C.]

BOOTH'S CAPTURE—THE ASSASSIN BROUGHT TO BAY.



was then surrounded. BAKER and CONGER went to the door. The former called out signifying his intention to have a surrender on the part of the men inside, or else a bonfire and a shooting match. He sent the young boy in to receive their arms. To the boy's appeal BOOTH answered with a curse, accusing the boy of having betrayed him. The boy then came out, and BAKER repeated his demand, giving BOOTH five minutes to make up his mind. BOOTH replied,

"Who are you, and what do you want with us?"

BAKER answered, "We want you to deliver up your arms and become our prisoners."

"But who are you?"

"That makes no difference. We know who you are, and we want you. We have here fifty men with carbines and pistols. You can not escape."

POST-MORTEM EXAMINATION OF BOOTH'S BODY ON BOARD THE MONITOR "MONTAUK."

After a pause BOOTH said: "Captain, this is a hard case, I swear. Perhaps I am being taken by my own friends." He then asked time to consider, which was granted. After a little interval BAKER threatened to fire the barn if they did not come out. BOOTH replied that he was a cripple and begged a chance for his life, declaring that he would never be taken alive. BAKER replied that he did not come there to fight but to capture him, and again threatened to fire the barn.

"Well, then, my brave boys," said BOOTH, "prepare a stretcher for me."

HAROLD wanted to surrender, and, in the midst of a shower of imprecations from BOOTH, did so. CONGER then set fire to the barn. Let such another brother who belongs to our regiment had a season of prayer with us, after reading it!" Weed and we three were just as happy as in a big Meeting. Brother CORBETT shouted, and nobody was hurt by it. Glory to God!"

Further on he says: "Give those dear little ones a kiss for me. God bless them! I wish to be remembered with the kindest affection and love," etc.

Sergeant CORBETT is well known in this city. He was a constant attendant of the Fulton Street Meeting, and was present at that very time when considered his fanaticism. He took part frequently, and in his prayers was in the habit of adding "or if not, my brother is in a better sphere." Of another brother who was present at the Fulton Street Meeting, and who was them he was a grave, plodding, careful, clever man, somewhat parsimonious as to his expenditure, provokingly reticent as to his private habits, and evidently bent on the accumulation of riches. They were about as correct in their conclusions as the conclave of cardinals which elected Pope Sixtus the Fifth for no other merits than his supposed age and infirmities.

Lost in anxious thought, William Trefalden sat at his desk, in the same attitude, till dusk came on, and the lamps were lighted in the thoroughfare below. Once or twice he sighed, or stirred uneasily; but his eyes never wandered from their fixed stare, and his head was never lifted from his hands. At length he seemed to come to a definite resolution. He rose, rang the bell, crumpled up the memorandum which he had written according to Mr. Behrens's instructions, and flung it into the fire.

The door opened, and a red-headed clerk made his appearance.

"Let the office-lamp be brought," said Mr. Trefalden, "and ask Mr. Keckwitch to step this way."

The clerk vanished, and was succeeded by Mr. Keckwitch, who came in with the lighted lamp in his hand.

"Put the sheds over it, Keckwitch," exclaimed Mr. Trefalden, impatiently, as the glare fell full upon his face. "It's enough to blind one!"

The head clerk obeyed slowly, looking at his employer all the while from beneath his eyebashes.

"You sent for me, Sir?" he asked, huskily.

He was a short, fat, pallid man, with no more neck than a Schiedam bottle. His eyes were small and almost colorless. His ears had held so many generations of pens that they hung from his head like the handles of a classic vase, and his voice was always husky.

"Yes. Do you know where to lay your hand upon that old copy of my great-grandfather's will?"

"Jacob Trefalden of Basinghall Street, seventeen hundred and sixty?"

Mr. Trefalden nodded.

The head clerk took the subject into placid consideration, and drummed thoughtfully with his fat fingers upon the most prominent portion of his waistcoat.

"Well, Sir," he admitted, after a brief pause, "I won't say that I may not be able to find it."

"Do so, if you please. Who is in the office?"

"Only Mr. Gorkin."

"Desire Gorkin to run out and fetch me a Continental Bradshaw."

Mr. Keckwitch retired; dispatched the redheaded clerk, took down a dusty-dead-looking still dustier corner cupboard; brought forth the old yellow parchment for which his employer had just required, and slipped it quietly within the lid of his desk. Having done this, he took an armful of mouldy deeds from another shelf of the same cupboard, and littered them all about the desk and floor. Just as he had completed these arrangements, Gorkin entered, unprovided with the volume in his hand, and Mr. Keckwitch took it in.

"And the copy?" said Mr. Trefalden, without lifting his eyes from an old book of maps over which he was bending.

"I was looking for it, Sir," replied the head clerk.

"Very good."

"Gorkin may go, I suppose, Sir? It's more than half past five."

"Of course; and you too, when you have found the deed."

Mr. Keckwitch retired again, released the gratefully placed, placid himself from the chair, proceeded with much deliberation to read the will.

"What's at the bottom of it?" muttered he presently, as he paused with one fat finger on the opening sentence. "What's wrong? Something. I smell it in his voice. I saw it in his face. And he knew I should see it too, when he told me about the shade. What is it? What's he peering into those maps about? Why does he want this copy? He never asked for it before. There ain't a fresh investment in him. I know. I've read it before. But I'll read it again, for all that. A man can never know too much of his employer's private affairs. Not much chance of learning a great deal of his either. Confounded private he keeps 'em."

He read a little further, and then paused again.

"Why did he send for that Continental Bradshaw?" he questioned to himself. "Why can I go, too, when there's plenty to be done here, and he knows it? He wants me gone, that's it. Where's he goin' himself? What's he up to? Abel Keckwitch, Abel Keckwitch, my best of friends, keep your right eye open!"

And with this apostrophe he returned to the deed, and proceeded with it sedulously.

"Well, Keckwitch," cried Mr. Trefalden, from the inner room, "have you found the copy?"

"Not yet, Sir," replied that trusty fellow, who was then rather more than half-way through it. "But I've turned out a boxful of old parchments, and I think I shall be sure—"

"Enough. Look closely for it, and bring it as soon as it turns up."

"I will, Sir," murmured Mr. Keckwitch, "as soon as I have finished it."

And so it did, about five minutes after, when Mr. Keckwitch made his appearance with it at his master's door.

"Found? That's right!" exclaimed the lawyer, putting out his hand eagerly.

"I won't be sure, Sir, till you've looked at it," replied the head clerk, with becoming modesty.

Mr. Trefalden's fingers closed on the parchment, but his eyes flashed keenly into the lustreless orbs of Abel Keckwitch, and rested for a moment before they reverted to the indorsement.

"Humph!" said he at length, in a slightly altered tone. "Yes—it's quite right, thank you. Good night."

"Good-night, Sir."

Mr. Trefalden looked after him suspiciously, and continued to do so, even when the door had been closed between them.

"The man's false," said he. "None but spies have so little curiosity. I shouldn't wonder if he's read every line."

Then he rose, locked the door, trimmed the lamp, dismissed the subject from his thoughts, and began to read the will. As he read his brow darkened and his lip grew stern. Presently he pushed the deed aside, and jotted down a few notes of it upon a piece of blotting-paper. Then he went back to the deed, and began again to the eighth, where he remained the frown settled deeper and deeper on his brow. Such a complex train of hopes and doubts, speculations and calculations, as were traversing the mazes of that busy brain! Sometimes he pondered in silence. Sometimes he muttered through his teeth; but no possibility that had been overseen a listener at the door (as perhaps there was) that listener would not have been a syllable the wiser.

He took up a little almanac printed on a card, and cast up the weeks between the fourth of March and the twenty-fifth. There were not quite five. Not quite five weeks to the expiration of a long, long century, during which Jacob Trefalden's half million had been accumulating, interest upon interest—during which whole generations had been born and lived, and had passed away! Good Heavens! to what a sum it had grown. It amounted now to nine million, three hundred and seventy thousand, four hundred and odd pounds! Words—mere words! Its brain refused to realize them. He might as well have talked of the distance from between the sun and the earth. And this gigantic bequest was to be divided between a boy and a girl. Half! Why, even the half baffled him. Even the half seemed too vast to convey any tangible idea to his mind. The half amounted to four million, seven hundred and seventy-six thousand, two hundred and odd pounds. Pshaw! Idiot that he was, not to remember that the one produced no more effect upon his imagination than the other.

He took up his pen and made a rapid calculation. Supposing it were taken as an income at five per cent.? Ha! one could grasp that, at all events. It would produce about two hundred and thirty-eight thousand pounds a year. Two hundred and thirty-eight thousand a year! A splendid income, indeed! More than the income enjoyed by many an English nobleman. And not one penny of which could be spent honestly and pleasantly spent by even a poor devil of an attorney like himself!

It might be spent in his own, that princely heritage—nay, would have been but for the accursed accident of birth! It might have been his to wed now to some high-born girl. But to a stranger—an alien—probably to an uncultivated boor, ignorant of the very language of his forefathers! Oh, the bitterness of it! Had it not been for at least as fair a right to this wealth? Did not he stand in precisely the same degree of relationship to the lover of it? By what law of natural justice was the descendant of the eldest son to revel in superfluities, while the descendant of the youngest, stood on the brink of ruin? Had it even been left for division between the two sexes, both might have claimed their own now—

He rose, pale and agitated, and paced restlessly about the room.

It was clear to him evident that this heir was his born foe and despoiler, and had he not the right to hate him? Was not the hand of the desperate man against all the world from the very beginning? but was it not first raised against those who had wronged him? The decoy—the—

If William Trefalden was a desperate man. Had he not appropriated that twenty-five thousand pounds? Had he not for the last fifteen years thrown two years ago for the liquidation of the mortgage, and did not ruin and discovery stare him in the face? Had he not thrown away every safety on one terrible die known only to himself, should he now hesitate to declare war upon the enemy who had wronged him beyond hope?

He smiled a strange smile of power and defiance, and ran his finger along the black lines of the pedigree. "Jacob Trefalden, Esquire," said he, by train, to Basle—Basle to Zurich—Zurich to Chur. Ah, Chur! Chur was the frontier. It could not be far beyond Chur where these emigrant Trefaldens dwelt. It would take him three days to reach it, and then—

"Keckwitch is a fool!" he exclaimed, aloud. All trace of excitement vanished from his face, as a breath clears from the surface of a looking-glass. He sat down at his desk, hastily scribbled a hasty note to his head clerk, carefully burned the clipped blotting-paper in the flame of the candle, and watched it expire among the dead ashes in the fire-place; locked his desk; tried the fastenings of the safe; glanced at the clock, and prepared to be gone.

"A quarter to seven already!" exclaimed he, as he locked the door. "I shall be late to—Pshaw!"

He had spoken aloud, believing himself alone, but now stood at the sight of Mr. Keckwitch, busily writing.

"You here, Keckwitch!" he said, frowning. "I told you you might go."

"You did, Sir," replied the scribe, placidly; "but there was Heywood and Bennett's deed of partnership to be drawn up, so I would not take advantage of your kindness."

Trefalden bit his lip.

"I had just written a line to you," he said, "to let you know that I am going out of town for a fortnight. Forward all letters marked private."

"Where to, Sir?"

"You will find the address here."

And Mr. Trefalden tossed the note down upon the clerk's desk and turned toward the door.

"Glad you're going to allow yourself a little pleasure for once, Sir," observed Mr. Keckwitch, without the faintest gleam of surprise or curiosity on his impassive countenance. "Begging pardon for the liberty."

His employer hesitated for an instant before replying.

"Thank you," he said, "but pleasure is not my object. I go to visit a relation whom I have neglected—ungratefully—for years."

With this he passed from the room and went slowly down the stairs. In the passage he paused to listen; and when in the street stopped just into the middle of the thoroughfare to look up at the windows.

"Strange!" muttered he; "but I never suspected that fellow so strongly as I do to-night!"

He then glanced right and left, buttoned his coat across his chest—for the March wind blew keenly—and walked briskly up the lane in the direction of Holborn. As he neared the top of the street, close to its junction with the great thoroughfare, a thought struck him, and he paused. Then he took a rapid movement into the recess of an old-fashioned doorway. There was no lamp within several yards. The doorway was in deep shade. It was a sentry-box. There, with eager ear and bated breath, he waited.

Presently, from the dim deep hum of traffic close by, he heard a footstep coming up—a footstep so light and swift that at first he thought he must be mistaken. Then his practised ear detected a laboring wheeze in the breath of the runner.

"The scoundrel!" ejaculated he, poised his right arm, set his teeth, and stood ready for a spring.

The signals of distress grew more distinct, the step slackened, ceased, drew near again, and Mr. Abel Keckwitch, panting and bewildered, made his appearance just beyond the doorway, evidently baffled by the disappearance of his companion.

He was not long left in doubt. Swift as a panther William Trefalden swooped down upon his man, and, with a short, powerful effort, flung that sent him reeling, pale and giddy, against the wall. It was surprising what muscles of steel and sinews of whipcord lay perdu beneath the white superfluities of that supple hand.

"Dog!" said he, fiercely, "do you dare to spy at my heels? Is not the Old Bailey for you suspected you; but I advise you to let it be the last time I convict you. Ay, you may scowl, but, by the Heavens! if I find you playing on this game again you'll repent it to your dying days. There! be thankful that I let you off so cheaply."

And having said this William Trefalden walked coolly away, without vouchsafing so much as a glance to a couple of delighted boys who stood watching the performance from the opposite side of the street.

As for Abel Keckwitch, he recovered his breath and his equilibrium as well as he could, though in the former instance, at a time, and ceased him to sit down ignominiously on the nearest doorstep. Not until at length he was in a condition to retrace his steps he rose, shook his fist in a fit of passion of impotent rage, and indulged in a volley of curses, and loud but deep.

"I'll be even with you," gasped he, more huskily than ever. "I'll be even with you, Mr. Trefalden, if it's for it! You're suspecting me, is you, but you shan't find it me. I'll know where you live and what you do with your money. I'll be even with you, if it's for twelve! I've done with you, and then let us see which will be master!"

INTERESTING ITEMS.

"DRINKERS BEWARE," says a French traveler, "it is a miserable thing to be a drunkard—a mark for public necessity. Beggars swarm in the Pyrenees. I never met a child that I did not ask, 'Who's your father?' He filled ten; this is their trade, and nobody is ashamed of it. The same system is in force among landowners. Every family is charging an age." A friend of his desired the landlord to serve a bottle of wine to his friends. In the evening she entered the room, pantaloons in hand, and said, with an undecided countenance, as if she had never learned what would be disputed. "C'est un sot." The master, without speaking, took the pantaloons, looked again and laid it on the table. Jeannette went on up-tize to the door. Monsieur, speaking to her, took the bottle, examined it, showed the button. "Ah! it is a beautiful button! (a pause.) I have a button like that." (Another pause.) "I bought that one at the grocer's—c'est un sou." She answered, with a courtesy, "Monsieur did me the honor to say, without speaking, laid on the table a second sou. It was a pause.) I have a button like that." (Another pause.) "I bought that one at the grocer's—c'est un sou." She answered, with a courtesy, "Monsieur did me the honor to say, without speaking, laid on the table a second sou. It was wonderful volubility, she cried, "Il l'a lie thread. I was very good thread. The button will not come off again. I will sew it myself." Then she left the room, and turned toward her a third sou. Two hours after Jeannette, who had reflected on the matter, brought the greasy breakfast with ministerial care, wiped up the slightest slops, rubbed the bottle, took the pantaloons, and (unfortunately admired) then she says, in the most eloquent and winning manner possible, "Monsieur has not drunk the red side me to look; the stuff was hard, I broke the pots of my mother." "Ah!" said he, "you have left me a sou." "C'est ça. Ce sou."

TO PRESERVE BUTTER OF MARBLE.—A Persian poet gives us the following instruction upon this important subject: "When the butter is made, take to please your wife, but listen not to all she says. From man's right side a rib was taken to form the woman, and never was there seen a rib quite straight. And wouldst thou straighten it? It breaks, but bends not. Bless, then, the plain that strokes it woman's temper, forgive her faults and blame her not; nor let her anger rise, nor coercion use, as all vain to straighten on what is curved."

A FRENCH actress, whose youth and beauty appeared inexhaustible, was asked how she managed to keep her age. Of course the more she wouldn't tell it the more curious people were to know it. A woman can't keep a secret! She kept that.

By good luck, as the multitude thought, she was summoned as a witness on a trial. The people rubbed their hands and chuckled. "Aha! we shall know it now. She must tell, or go to prison for contempt of court. She sees! go to prison; she will, therefore, tell."

The court was crowded with open-eared listeners. In French courts of justice the witness does not stand in a box to give evidence, but sits on a stool in the middle of the floor of the court, in front of the president's desk, and with his barrier or separation between it and himself.

The lady was ushered in, raised her right hand to bearing, took the oath to speak the truth, and then seated herself on the witness-stool.

"Your name?" said the president.

"Angélique Trefourchette."

"Age?"

"Attiez dramatique."

"Your age?"

You might have heard a pin drop, or the half grow on the by-standers' beards. Every ear was at her mouth in the twinkling of an eyelash.

Foolish Female!—Age is thick as Angélique simply was. Angélique simply looked, asked straight up to the president's desk, and whispered in a private tone. He, too, nodded, made his answer in a private tone, and smiling, continued the rest of his interrogatories as soon as she had removed her mouth to the ceiling.

The public rolled with feelings of mingled disgust and astonishment. The trial had lost all further interest; and the president was known to be a man of honor and of history, who would never let a pretty woman's cat escape from his presidential bag.

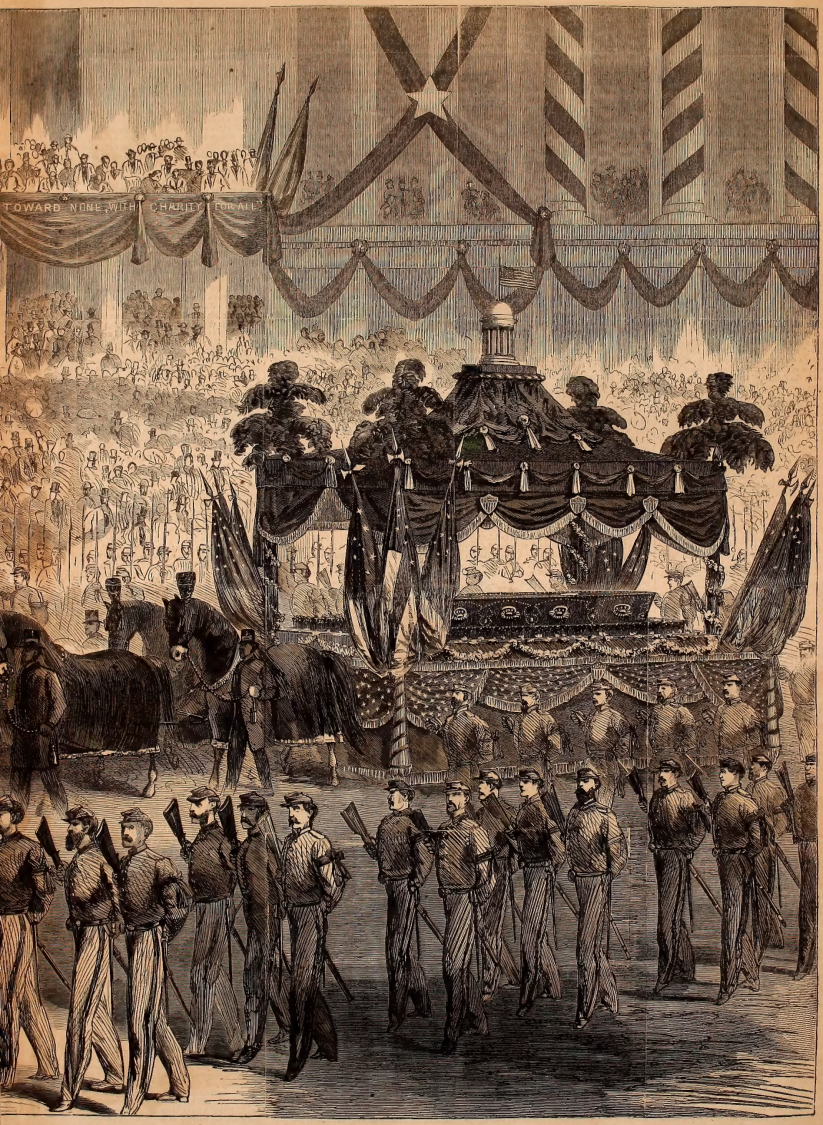
ITALIAN DRAMA.—There are two dishes so greatly relished by the Romans that we hardly believe they would eat of them until absolutely surfeited. The one is a soup called minestra maritata, or small bean—in which first, as the name implies, diminutive bone made of paste moulded into the form of a bone and filled with marrow, and the other, the orthodox and indigenous macaroni, which, boiled to rags, is served with a fervent Italian grimace beside seeming Italians. The justice done by a Roman family to macaroni is enormous; for the dish, if overdressed, and so called, is a sight which does not tend to increase our admiration of it. All the world, young, handsome ladies, "Unless you eat largely you can't be well," is a common remark in Italy. Organic and functional injury heard the death of a lady attributed to insufficient eating. Eating enormously is one of the great social virtues in Rome, among the Romans: nor did it appear to us that any thing else was.

FREIGHT MONEY.—A great portion of the immense quantity of bullion removed in England from the interior to the island of Corsica and from Brittany. Corsica produced in much such an income that the Island of Sardinia produced on an annual tribute of 100,000 pounds' weight. Salsette, which the inhabitants revolted, and which was purchased by the tribute being raised to 200,000 pounds' weight annually. The Sardinians were able to supply, as they do here in Corsica as one to fifteen, so that the inhabitants must have gathered 3,000,000 pounds' weight of silver. When Cordes became a dependency of the Papal Court it paid the taxes in kind, and the quantity of wheat raised by the rich the consumption not only of the churches in the city of Constantinople, but of those in Papal Rome. Germany likewise supplies a great quantity of honey, but of inferior quality to that from Corsica. The quantity raised in the forest and wax produced in that province is estimated at 1,000,000 pounds.

"HE'LL NEVER SEE THE TREE ON FIRE."—Many years ago, before steamboats, there was introduced a novelty for the purpose of stilling the noise; it was the custom of the day to send it home, and it was done. The same thing was done thus, but principally in Yorkshire: "The young, the slave, which was intended to be roasted, was divided from the bottom of it, was worked over the mouth," of the young pig, which was then put down to roast. An active fellow, who worked hard, not subsequently set the rim of the "wheel" on fire by force of friction against the rim of the fleur-barrel; so that, in fact, the department of domestic economy was formed a kind of system of land labor by machinery in this particular species of work, may possibly have contributed to the satisfaction of the feast in such phrases as "He will never see the Thames on fire," or "He never got a bit of work by it."

A MARRIAGE took place recently in Paris, and the bridegroom, being unable to write, affixed his mark: the bride, who could write well, signed her name in full round. The bridesmaid, a former school-fellow of the bride, having examined the signatures, exclaimed, "Ah, Caroline! You would have me humiliate my husband? To-morrow I will commence myself cashing, but you shall not learn."

NEVER try to correspond with youthful dress. Learn to dress in such a way as to be always "ready." Never, as a rule learn it not merely as a civilized, sensible lesson, but as a thing which it is easier to wear than to discard, when we might at first suppose. The fitness of things rests ultimately in the mind of God. Whatever He chooses we eat, drink—and why not add dress?—let us do all so as to please Him alone. We have never known a lady design his handiwork, and the changes which he has created in this matter, that it is not in which she has done it, and things he done decently and in order: rose for the June of life, snow for the January of life; yellow for the autumn, red for autumn; one beauty and one dress for the blossom, and another for fruit.



THE great caricaturists of the latter days of the George III. and same regent, Gillray and Cruikshank, were wont to make all the rest of the world laugh were themselves the most melancholy and humble. Hazlitt describes Gillray as sorry, Hogarth died of a broken heart, caused by attacks of paralysis, and Cruikshank, the last of the trio, the most genial of humorists, committed suicide in a fit of delirium tremens.

To talk well, and to write well, are quite distinct accomplishments, although they are sometimes found united in such a degree in the same individual as to astonish. It is quite otherwise. Poor Goldsmith occurs as a familiar example. Johnson remarked that he was not equal with his literary colleagues were so notoriously flat and pointless in conversation. The latter is not a common fault on record, and talked like poor Poll." Other great talkers, for instance, Sheridan and Coleridge, left no substantive records on non-and anecdotes recorded by others. But Burke, who was equally great in speech and pen, is generous more to Boswell than it did to himself. He sometimes wrote his speeches, but rarely after he had spoken from the same bit of paper on which he had jotted down the heads of his speech. Burke's speeches were to borrow them so, but the proof of which is forever before us.

THE camel and the dromedary may be studied to the greatest advantage in the Arabian, and parts of Asia Minor. In those countries there is no animal so useful as the camel, and there is more than one kind which object than the dromedary, when saddled and covered with the rich trappings of the East. There is not a country with two humps, such as the Bactrian camel is supposed to be, but is an animal of the most elegant shape, and of the greatest proportions, and exclusively used for riding. The camel, on the contrary, is a large and powerful animal, used for carrying heavy burdens. The dromedary may be approximately distinguished by the race-horse, the camel to the draught-horse. The most beautiful dromedaries belong generally to the pasture and men of wealth, and their value is frequently from 500 to 1,000 pounds sterling. The camel is the property of the Arabs and merchants in the sand and other burdens. The time of hunting this season they remain for days and days, living upon their own flesh and blood, and drinking their own urine when one is at hand to beat them.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FUNERAL—PROCESSION

NEW YORK CITY.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.]

BABY IS KING.

A BOY-STRAINED cradle, where, nestled within
Soft comforts and flannel, his pounds overthrow,
Is the throne of a tyrant—that pink little thing
In an autocrat sagque, for Baby is King.

Good, solemn grandfather dares hardly to speak
Or walk, lest the sleeper should hear his boots creak.
Grandma is a martyr, in habits and cap,
While the mammies of babies as well as her nap.

Papa, wise and mighty, just home from the House,
Grows meek on the threshold, and moves like a mouse,
To dare at his peeping; then outward he goes
Like an elephant trying to walk on its toes.

The queen of the ball-room throws loyally down
Before him her crown that was in her crimps,
And sings little love-songs of how she loves best
The fair baby blossom she rocks on her breast.

Good aunties and cousins before him bow low,
Though he wears not the ringlets, twists collar and bow;
He bids the nurse walk with his majesty's suit,
And cries when she stops like a merciless cuff.

He flings right and left his saucy fat feet,
And then the next moment expects to be kissed.
He demands sparkling watches to batter about,
And meets a refusal with struggle and shout.

Then, failing to conquer, with passionate cry
He scizes his lips, keeps a tear in his eye—
And so wins the battle, the wise little thing,
He knows the world over that Baby is King.

A DINNER BY MISTAKE.

"ONLY ten dollars a week, Sir, and no extras—and I may say you won't find such cheap, airy lodgings any where else in the place, not to speak of the sea-view" said the bustling landlady throwing open the door of a cosy, sunny little apartment, with just such a view of the sea, and of nothing else whatsoever, as is the privilege of an inland lodger. I was revolving in my mind how to make terms on one most important point, when she again took the matter off my hands. I could have let these same rooms again and again in the last two days if I had not given them to Mr. Johnson Smith, that she should have them next Friday fortnight, and I would never go from my word, Sir—never! though this month is over and it's hard for me to shave the rooms standing empty. As I told my niece only yesterday, I won't let forward again, not to please any one, if it don't answer, and it don't rise me out of my life. And I'm sure, Sir, if you like to come for the fortnight, I'll do my utmost to make you comfortable, and I always have given satisfaction; and you could not get nicer rooms nowhere."

"No," said I, taking advantage of her pause for breath; "these are very nice. I—I suppose you don't cook your own meals?"

The good woman's face assumed a severe expression, though I detected a comical twinkle in her eye. "Why, Sir, I am always to say—as if it's only a cigar, and not one of them nasty pipes—"

I smiled. "To tell the truth, it generally is a pipe."

"Is it now? Well, Sir, if you please, we won't say any thing about it now. We have a lady lodger up stairs, and if she should complain I can but say that it is against my rules, and that I'll mention it to you. And so, Sir, if you please, I'll go now and see to your portmanteau being taken up," and thereupon she vanished, leaving me in sole possession.

I had been out for the whole of one windy afternoon, the waves, watching the lobster-fishing, and "nused delerably" and finished with spray and with appetite. As I opened the door of my little sitting-room I beheld a most welcome sight—a white tablecloth, and lying upon it a card—a large, highly-gilded, most unmistakable visiting-card. With eager curiosity I snatched it up, but curiosity changed to amazement when I read the name, "Philip Hetherton, Grantham." Hetherton? Why, in the name of all that's incomprehensible, should he call on me? I had never even heard his name; I knew no more of him than the man in the moon. My impertinence could not be restrained till Mrs. Plumb's natural arrival with the chops; and an energetic pull at the bell brought her at once scurrying and smiling.

"I suppose," began I, holding the card with assumed carelessness between my finger and thumb—"I suppose this gentleman, Mr. Philip Hetherton, called here to-day?"

"Oh yes, Sir, this afternoon; not an hour ago." "He inquired for me?"

"Yes, Sir; he asked particularly for young Mr. Olifant, and said he was very sorry to miss you. He's a very pleasant-spoken gentleman."

"Ah, I dare say. Dined in Linbeach? Does he know many people living in the place?"

"Well, I believe he has many friends here, Sir; at least I never understood so; but he owns some of the houses in the town, and he is very kind to the poor, and I'm sure is ever turned away empty handed from his door."

"Does he see any thing of the visitors?"

"Nig, to my knowledge, Sir. He sometimes rides in of an afternoon, for Grantham is only four miles from Linbeach; but I don't think he ever stays long."

So it was not apparently an eccentric instance of universal friendliness, but a special mark of respect paid to me. It grew more and more mysterious. However, there was nothing to be gained by pumping Mrs. Plumb further, and as I was decidedly minded to keep my own counsel, I dismissed her. But meditating long and deeply over my solitary dinner, I came at length to the unwelcome conclusion that Mr. Philip Hetherton must have been laboring under some strange delusion, and that I should see and hear no more of him. I was rather in the habit of priding myself on my judgment and discriminations; but in this instance they were certainly at fault, for within three days I met him face to face. I was strolling slowly along one of the shady country lanes which led inland between cornfields and hedgerows, when I encountered a portly, gray-haired gentleman, mounted on an iron-gray horse, and trotting soberly toward Linbeach. He surveyed me inquisitively out of his merry blue eyes. Returning, I had scarcely stepped into Mrs. Plumb's passage, when that personage herself met me, open-mouthed, with a question. "Oh, Sir, Mr. Olifant, I wish you had come in rather sooner! Mr. Hetherton has been here again, and as he could not see you he wrote this note, for he had not time to wait. I was quite vexed that it should happen so."

Evidently the good woman was fully impressed with the dignity of the event, and not a little flattered at the honor paid to her lodger. I opened the note, and it contained a request that I would—a) invitation to dinner for the following day, coupled with many expressions of regret for my being out, lily, and regrets at having been hitherto unable to see me.

"I told him that I thought you had only gone down to the beach, Sir; but he laughed, and said he should not know you if he met you. I suppose you don't know, Sir, do you, Sir?" Mrs. Plumb added, insinuatingly.

"No," said I, thinking within myself that he need not be in a hurry to be communicative. However, this confession of his threw some light upon the subject, and suggested a solution. He might have been in my father or mother. Of course, indeed, he must have known them, or somebody belonging to me. His own appearance could please to infect me, and I wrote off an elaborate "I race, fully-worded acceptance; and then sa my large and a decent contribution to the ne- cents that night across to me through most praiseworthy cordiality. "After all," I mused, "it is no matter where one dines so long as one is sure to turn up every where;" and thereon arose visions of partridge-shooting in the autumn mornings, to be followed by pleasant little dinners with my host and a bevy of lovely daughters. But on the morrow certain misgivings arose within me, and I came to the conclusion that it would only be the civil thing to ride over to Grantham in the afternoon, and get my own friend Hetherton to make the introduction before appearing there as a guest. Accordingly I hired a long-legged, broken-winded hack, the only one to be got for love or money in the place, and set out upon my way. It was a fruitless journey; the fatal "Not at home" greeted my ears, and I could only drop a card, turn my horse's head, and, in gallant steed toward home, and resign myself to my fate.

Seven o'clock was the hour named in the note, and I had intended to be particularly punctual, but misfortunes crowded thick upon me. The first waits the hack, which was a miserable failure. My favorite curl would not be adjusted becomingly upon my brow; and the wretched donkeyboy who had solemnly promised to bring the carriages punctually to the door, did not appear till ten minutes after time. Last of all, when I had descended, I got up to Mr. Hetherton's door as the point of starting. I discovered that I was minus gloves, and little nothings from the room. I present fleeing off to the corner shop, where haberdashery and grocery were picturesquely combined. So it fell out that I arrived at Linbeach a few several minutes past the hour when we drew up under the portico at Grantham. I had no time to compose my features and person, or even to consider. Before I fully realized my position, I stood in a brilliantly-lighted drawing-room, full of people, and heard my name pronounced in stentorian tones. The next moment the florid gentleman whom I had encountered on the previous day came forward with outstretched hand and a beaming face, and a perfect torrent of welcomes burst upon me.

"Glad to see at last, Mr. Olifant, very glad to see you; I began to think there was a fate against our meeting. Let me introduce you. Mrs. Hetherton—my daughter—my son Fred. Come this way, this way."

And I was hurried along helpless as an infant in the lawful grasp of the host. Indeed, I had no appeal to any reasonable being—how could I stand stock-still and under the eyes of all that company make-manner my host? How could I in any wise force of his hospitality? It will be owned, I think, that in what afterward occurred I was not wholly to blame. Mrs. Hetherton was a very kind-hearted woman, with a mild face and soft voice; she greeted me with certain deep sympathy, and for a few placid commonplaces resumed her conversation with the elderly lady by her side, and left me to take care of the son, who was already made friends. Really it was very pleasant to drop in this way into the centre of a genial circle, and I found my spirits rising fast in the new excitement. A fresh arrival, however, soon disturbed the party, and directly afterward dinner was announced. Mr. Hetherton, who had been busily engaged in welcoming the last-comers, led off a stately dame upon his arm, and motioned to me to follow with the young daughter of the house being assigned to me. We were slowly making our way round the dining-room, when, just as we came to a door on the left, Mr. Hetherton turned and laid his hand upon my shoulder.

"I have scarcely had time for a word yet," he said; "but how are they all in Berkshire?"

I don't know what answer I gave; some one must have hooked legged here to pass, and I was borne on, utterly bewildered. Berkshire! what had I to do with Berkshire? And then, all at once, the appalling truth burst on me like a thunderclap—I was the wrong man! Yes; now I recalled a certain Captain Olifant, whom I had known at a mess-dinner, and who, as I had then heard, belonged to Berkshire. We could count no sort of kinship with them; but here I was, for some inexplicable reason, assumed as one of them, perhaps as the heir, and regaled accordingly. My situation was sufficiently unpleasant, and in the first impulse of dismay I made a dash at a central seat where I might be as far as possible from both host and hostess. But my manœuvre failed. Mrs. Hetherton's soft tones were all too audible as she said: "Mr. Olifant, perhaps you will come up here;" the post of honor ?" and of danger too, in my case; but there was no help for it, and I went. As I unfolded my napkin, striving hard for a cool and easy demeanor, I mentally surveyed my position, and decided on my tactics. I could not and would not there and then declare myself an embodied mistake; I must wait for a chance and my own wits to carry me through the evening, and leave my explanations for another season. Alas! my trials fell soon began. We had hardly been seated three minutes when Mrs. Hetherton turned to me.

"We were so very glad you were able to come to-night, Mr. Olifant," Mr. Hetherton had quite set his heart upon seeing you here. It is such a great pleasure to him to revive an old friendship; and he has spoken of you in the most kind spirit of your family."

I murmured something not very coherent about distance and active life.

"Ah yes, country gentlemen have so much to do that they can scarcely find time at home. I think, though, that I once had the pleasure of meeting a sister of yours in town—Margaret her name was, and she was suffering from some affection of the spine. I hope she is better now?"

"Much better, thank you." And then, in the faint hope of getting the conversation, I asked if they were often in town.

"Not as much as I should wish. Mr. Hetherton has a great dislike to the city; but I always enjoy it, for one meets every body there. By-the-by, Mr. Olifant, the Fordes must be near neighbors of yours."

I did not dare to say they were not, lest inquiries should follow which might betray my extreme ignorance of Berkshire geography; so I chose the lesser peril, and answered cheerfully: "Oh yes, quite near neighbors. Within a walk of us."

"What charming people they are!" said Mrs. Hetherton, growing quite enthusiastic. "The two eldest girls were staying here last spring, and we all lost our hearts to them; they were so bright and pleasant, and Miss Fordes is growing so very pretty. She is not out yet, is she?"

"No; I fancy she is to be presented next year," I responded, feeling more than while I was about it I might as well do it thoroughly. "She ought to make a sensation."

"Ah, that's all Mrs. Hetherton, eagerly, "you agree with me about her beauty."

"Oh, entirely. I expect she will be quite the belle of our county balls." And then, in the same breath, I turned to the shy Miss Hetherton beside me, and acted her many attentions whether she liked balls. She must have thought, at any rate, that I liked talking, for her timid, orthodox reply was received with a fervor I pled her with fresh questions, and deluged her with a flood of varied eloquence. For why? Was I not aware that Mrs. Hetherton was watching with the solemn old deacon opposite flagged from time to time, and that, at every lull, she looked toward me as though concerting fresh topics for me? But I gained the day; and at length, with secret exultation, watched Mrs. Hetherton rise, and, advancing to the end of table, glass in hand, seated herself in his wife's place at my elbow. I tried to believe that he might intend to drink wine with the deacon, but that good gentleman was more than half inclined to nod, and my left-hand neighbor was deep in a geological discussion; so I felt myself appalled, like the sparrow beneath the awful shadow of the hawk. Certainly, there was a strong resemblance between that bird of prey and Mr. Hetherton's comely, smiling visage, as he leaned forward, and said, cheerily: "Well, now, I want to hear all about them."

It was not an encouraging beginning for me, but I had certainly myself left to my fortunes. Not far for a retreat. Like Cortés, I had burned my ships. Before I had framed my answer Mr. Hetherton proceeded: "I know any of your more intimate ones, but your father and I were fast friends once upon a time. Mary's the lark we've had together at college; for he was a wild-spirited fellow then, was Harry Olifant, though, I dare say, he has settled down into a most respectable squire long ago."

It was plain that Mr. Hetherton liked to hear himself talk, and my courage revived.

"Why, not quite," I said; "years and cares do work great changes in most men; I dare say you would hardly know him now."

"I dare say not. But he is well, and as good a shot as in the old days?"

"Just as good. He is never happier than among his turnips." I was a little shadowed at my own audacity, as I pictured my veritable parent, a hardworking lawyer, long since dead, and with about as much notion of hitting a gun as one of his own briefs.

"Quite right, quite right," exclaimed Mr. Hetherton, energetically; "and we can find you some fair sport here, my boy, though the birds are wild this year. Come, you must give me a run like what you are at Linbeach; or, better still, come and stay here."

I thanked him, and explained that I was staying at Linbeach for the sea-air, and that I must be in town in a few days.

"I'm sorry to hear that. We ought to have found you out sooner; but I only chanced to see your name at the library last Friday. And so you are, then, in town?"

"Yes, I'm at Yale," said I, feeling it quite refreshing to speak the truth.

"Ah, I'm glad your father's stuck to the old college; you could not be at a better one. That boy of mine is wild for sculpting, or I should have sent him there."

The mystery stood revealed. I had recorded my name on the visitor's board as H. Olifant, Yale College; and, by a strange coincidence, Mr. Hetherton's former friend had belonged to the same college, and owned the same initial. The coincidence was indeed so complete that it had evidently never dawned upon Mr. Hetherton that I could be other than the son of his old chum. He sat now sipping his wine with almost a self-expression on his honest face.

"Ah, my lad," he said, presently, "when you come to my age you'll look back to your old college and your old friends as I do now. But what was I going to ask you? Oh, I remember. Have you seen any of the Fordes lately?"

I glanced round despairingly at the geologists, but they were lost to every thing except blue lias and old red sandstone, and there was no hope of effecting a diversion in that quarter.

"Well, no, not very lately," I responded, slowly, as though trying to recall the exact date when I last had that felicity. "To tell the truth, I don't go down into those parts so often as I ought to do."

"There's a family for you!" he went on, triumphantly; "how well they are doing! That young George Ford will distinguish himself one of these days, or I'm much mistaken; and Willie too. I never knew such clever lads; and as for beauty—but little Katie—" But here the slumberous doses came to my aid by waking up with a terrific start and a loud "Eh—what! time to join the ladies."

There was a general stir, and I contrived to make my escape to the drawing-room. If I could only have escaped altogether; but it was not yet half past nine. I felt convinced that if I pleaded illness Mr. Hetherton would lay violent hands on me, and insist on my spending the night there. After all, the worst was over, and in the crowded drawing-room I might with slight dexterity avoid all shoals and quicksands. So I encamped myself in a low chair, guarded by a big table on one side, and on the other by a comfortable-looking elderly woman in crimson satin, to whom I made myself agreeable. We got on very well together, and I breathed and felt startled freely in the blissful persuasion that she at least knew no more of the Fordes than I did. But my malignant star was in the ascendant. I was in the midst of a graphic description of the charms of a reading-party at the Lakes, when Mr. Hetherton again assailed me.

"Well, Mrs. Sullivan," he said, addressing my companion, "have you been asking after your little favorite?"

"My little favorite?" inquired Mrs. Sullivan.

She did not know who he meant, but I did; I knew quite well.

"Katie Ford, I mean; the little black-eyed girl who used to go into such ecstasies over your roses and fernery—don't you remember now? You have you?"

No, unluckily for me, Mrs. Sullivan had not forgotten her. I was charged with a string of the fond unmeaning messages which ladies love to exchange; and it was only by emphatically declaring that I should not be in Berkshire for many months that I escaped being made the bearer of sundry curious seeds and bulbs to the fair Katherine.

But Mr. Hetherton soon interrupted us. "There's a cousin of yours in the next room, Mr. Olifant," he said, evidently thinking that he was paying a most agreeable announcement; "she would like to see you, if you will. Shall I take you to her?"

I heard and trembled. Oh, the Fordes were nothing to this! Why did people leave cousins in the next room? Was there any imaginable evil behind me on this disastrous evening? Such were my agonized reflections while, with unwilling feet, I followed my host to execution. He led me to a young lady who was screening examining some prints. "I have brought him to you, Miss Hunter; your cousin Mr. Olifant."

She looked at me, but there was no recognition in her eyes. How could there be, indeed, when we had never met before? What would she do next? What she did do was to hold out her hand with a good-humored smile, and ask how I did, while Mr. Hetherton observed complacently: "You don't know one another, you know? Not know one another? of course we don't; but I took the liberty of introducing him to her; and in the joy of my reprieve I devoted myself readily to my supposed cousin, a bright, pleasant girl, happily not at all disposed during her real relatives as I was about my imaginary ones. Ten minutes elapsed fast away, the hands of the clock pointed to half past ten, the guests beginning to depart, and I was congratulating myself that the drive would be over, when Mr. Hetherton came to turn my head. I saw Mr. Hetherton once more advancing upon me, holding in his hand a photograph book. The villain was about to display the relentless persecutor was resolved to expose me, and with diabolical craft had planned the certain means. Terrible visions of public disgrace, durable disgrace, say, even of the pump itself, flouted before my dizzy brain, as he came nearer and ever nearer. "There!" he exclaimed, stopped short in front of me, and holding out the ill-omened book—"there! you can tell us who that is, can't you?"

It was a baby—a baby of a year old, sitting on a cushion, with a rattle in its hand, and it was, of course, utterly unlike any child ever looked. "Hm, haw," murmured I, contemplating it in utter desperation; "children are so much alike that really—for I was a brilliant and confidently flashed on me—"surely it must be a Forde!"

"Of course it is," and Mr. Hetherton clapped me on the back in a transport of delight. "I thought you would recognize it. Capital! isn't it? The little thing must be exactly like its mother; and I fancy I see a look of Willie in it."

I could endure no more. Another such victory would be absolute ruin and defeat; and while my cousin was rhapsodizing over the infantine charms so touchingly portrayed, I started up, took an abrupt farewell of my host, and, despite his vehement remonstrances, went off in search of Mrs. Hetherton, and beat a successful retreat. As I stepped out into the portico the porpyrius which I had ordered drove up to the door, and jumping in, I rattled away toward Linbeach, exhausted in body and mind, yet relieved to feel that each succeeding moment found me further and further from the precincts of Grantham.

I might have stolen off from Linbeach undiscovered, but I dismissed the notion instantly. I had gone far enough already—too far. Mr. Hetherton might not unnaturally think. No; I must write to him, and it had best be done at once. I wound up my epistle with the following eloquent and dignified words: "I can have no claim whatever to continue an acquaintance so formed, and I can only tender my grateful thanks for the warm hospitality of which I have accidentally been the recipient." The letter was sealed and sent, and I was left to speculate how it might be received. Would Mr. Hetherton condescend to a reply, or would he see with silent contempt? I could fancy him capable of a very tolerable degree of anger, in spite of his fondness, a little shored up to my brows when I pictured quiet Mrs. Hetherton recalling my remarks about Miss Lucia Hetherton. The second day's post came in and brought me nothing; and now I began to be seized with a nervous dread of encountering any of the Hetherton party by chance, and this dread grew so unpleasant that I determined to cut short my visit and return to town at once. My resolution was no sooner made than acted on. I packed my portmanteau, settled accounts with Mrs. Plumb, and went off to take my place in the early morning's coach. Coming hastily out of the hostelling-office in the dusk, I almost ran against somebody outside the door. It was Mr. Hetherton, and I stepped hastily back; but he recognized me at once, and held out his hand with a hearty laugh.

"Ah, Mr. Guthrie, is it you? I was on my way to your lodgings, so we'll walk together;" and not noticing my confusion, he linked his arm in mine, and continued: "I got your letter last night, and very much amazed I was, that I must own. I did not answer it at once, for I was half-dead with travelling, and, besides, I always like talking better than writing. So now I have come to tell you that I think you've acted like an honest man and a gentleman in writing that letter; and I'm very glad to have made your acquaintance, though you are not Harry Gilfillan after all. As for the mistake, it's not my own fault for taking it for granted you must be the man I fancied you. My lady is just the least bit vexed that we should have made such geese of ourselves; but come over to-morrow, and we'll give you a quiet dinner and a bed in your own proper room, and she will be glad to see you. Mind, I expect you."

After all my resolutions I did go to Grantham on the following day, and my dinner by mistake was the precursor of a most pleasant acquaintance, which became in time a warm and lasting friendship.

THE RED HAT.

On the evening of a dark and rainy day in the month of February, 16—, a solitary horseman, wrapped in a large cloak, might have been seen spurring his jaded steed along the highroad which lies from Paris toward the gloomy and antiquated chateau then the residence of the formidable prime minister of Louis the Thirteenth, Armand Jean du Cardinal and Duke of Richelieu. Remember, there was but one cavalier. Add another, and you might think I was borrowing from the lamented G. P. R. James.

The horseman drew bridle and dismounted at the door of an humble little village inn, bearing on its sign-board the effigy of St. Nicholas, and which stood at the entrance to a gloomy avenue of poplars, at the opposite extremity of which rose the chateau, and to which it served as a kind of lodge.

The horseman was a full-built stalwart plume, hand, or buckle; and his doublet of brown drugget, destitute of either ribbons, lace, or embroidery, was sufficient to indicate, in an age when costume so closely denoted the gradations of rank, that he did not belong to the patrician class; still, from his open and almost defiant countenance and upright and turned-up mustache, it was not difficult to pronounce him one of those sturdy and independent burgesses whose fathers had fought in the wars of the League, and who, temporarily kept in subjection by the iron hand of Richelieu, were already during the troubles of the Fronde, but were destined to be completely absorbed by the glory of the Grand Monarque.

His horse appeared completely worn out, and the muddy state of his cloak testified to his having come a long distance by bad roads, in an age when bad roads were execrable.

"May the devil singe light on the rogues who are bound to keep the king's highway in repair!" grumbled the traveler, as, tethering his steed to a post, he entered the house, and proceeded to examine with the butt-end of his whip upon a long table of coarse deal, which stood in the midst of a low-ceiled smoky common-room.

A fat man, of rotund abdomen and purpled face, clad in the traditional white apron and night-cap, and with a long mark in his girdle, that served as cook as well as host, entered the room.

"What can your humble host be pleased to want?" he asked, pulling off his cap, and making a lowly reverence.

"I am no lord, master of mine," replied the traveler, twisting his mustache not without complacency; "but a plain burgess, who owns nothing, and asks for nothing without he can pay for it. But I am hungered and athirst. Give me some supper; make up a blazing fire; see to my horse; and I promise you that you shall have no reason to complain of me."

And as he spoke the traveler struck his pocket, which gave forth a metallic chink pleasant to hear.

The purple face of the inn-keeper became one grin.

"We have not one room unoccupied," he said; "but my own private bedroom is at your grandeur's service. My wife shall make up a bed directly. As for the rest, you have but to wait a few minutes, and all your wishes shall be attended to."

Mine host was as good as his word. Ere long the traveler was comfortably stretched in a huge arm-chair, toasting his feet at a blazing fire, to which a couple of logs had been added. He could see through the casement that snow was beginning to fall thickly; he could hear the wind moan over its fully howling; a soft warm odor from the kitchen began to titillate his nostrils, and he felt at cozy and complacent as men in all countries and ages have felt under similar circumstances.

"Come, this is better," he murmured, with a sigh of relief. "A dog's life is that of a traveler in December. May the black fever choke the Cardinal—"

He bounded in his chair with terror; he was about falling into a swoon, as he turned round, he saw the inn-keeper, night-cap in hand, standing before him.

"Sacre, man, what do you want?" he exclaimed, with ill-disguised trepidation.

"I am desirous," returned the other, with apparent unhumanness, "to ask a favor of your excellency."

The imprudent burgess breathed a little more freely after this, for he had expected nothing less than to be at once arrested by an exempt of his terrible eminence the Cardinal.

"Ask what you will, my friend," he responded in a courteous tone.

"Only imagine, your highness," pursued the diplomatic inn-keeper, twisting one of the corners of his apron, "that no sooner had my wife made your room comfortable and tidy for you than another customer arrived. He is an old customer, and a very good customer too, for he only asks how much my cellar has, and allows me to tot up the reckoning. Well, you see, your superiority, that I cannot exactly turn out of doors such a valiant and honest man as my customer, and consequently I am obliged to ask you, your excellency, if you will allow him to share your fire and your supper till daybreak, when I must find him a shake-down somewhere."

"Is he an honest man, this customer of yours?" asked the traveler, with a frown.

If it were possible for the deep-tinted face of the inn-keeper to assume an intenser hue, he may be said to have done so.

"Yes, yes, your excellency," he replied; "he is as honest a very honest man, as honest men go, and in his way of business."

"Tell him, then, that I shall be very pleased with his company, and that he may come to half my supper—the best half; and, hark ye, Mr. Landlord, see that it be good, and that the wine is of the right sort."

The inn-keeper was profuse in his expressions of gratitude and in promises of a speedy appearance of excellent fare; and then left the room, somewhat precipitately, as the traveler thought, to inform his customer of the pleasant news in store.

In a minute or so the customer made his appearance. He was a strange customer—a curious customer, to tell truth, and not at all of my fair customer. He was very tall, very thin, had very harshly-marked features, very small gray eyes, behind which glowed like an infernal fire, and a full in the face, and a pointed beard and mustache coarse and grizzled. His hands were knotted and bony, and his fingers long and lean. He was dressed in a doublet, vest, and trunks of gray serge, bordered with red ribbons, and a mantle lined with scarlet of a tattered leather; but the most noticeable point in his apparel was his hat, which, of the same material as that of the traveler, and with the addition of a feather or buckle, was of a dull crimson color.

"I don't like the look of that Robin Redhead," the traveler thought himself. "His eminence wears a scarlet hat; but it has tassels and a broad brim. Who ever saw a peaceable citizen in such a headdress? Can he be a spy—an what?"

However, he was an open-hearted burgess; and, rising, held out his hand to the stranger, saying, "Welcome, sir and friend!"

To his surprise the man with the Red Hat drew back, as though half-doubting the cordiality implied at this simple act of courtesy, and, instead of reciprocating it, contented himself with making a low bow.

"A very ceremonious personage, upon my word," mused the guest. "Perhaps he is a Huguenot; or, what is worse, a Catholic in disguise. I am fanatic. The spotted fever take all religious differences, say I!" Then, raising his voice, he said, "Sir, I am extremely happy to be able to offer you a share of my supper and—"

"Thanks! thanks!" hastily interposed he of the Red Hat. Then diving into the recesses of a pouch at his belt, he produced a handful of silver and continued, "Take, I entreat you, what I have to pay as my share of the reckoning."

"Sir, Sir," protested the traveler, drawing himself up, "do you think that I am a beggarly scarecrow who expects a stranger to pay for the meal to which he invites him?"

"Not at all. Do you mean to say that you invite me?" faltered the Red Hat.

"Of course I do. I told the landlord so," replied the other.

"Then," responded the Red Hat, with a very perceptible sigh of relief, "I accept your kind invitation as heartily as it was given. This is the first time in my life that such a thing has happened to me. Methinks the fates have conspired to expect to catch roast larks." And he drew a stool up to the fire and began to bask and hug himself in the genial warmth.

Roast larks failed to come down; but a splendid roast goose just then came up, flanked by a hotchpotch of Burgundian capons, and two magnificent pitchers of wine. The strangely-acquainted friends sat down to table and did the agreeable to the dishes and potables; and so delighted did mine host seem with the appetites of his guests, that he insisted upon standing treat in more than one flask of his choicest vintage.

"No doubt, Sir," the Red Hat remarked, when the landlord had removed the paraphernalia of the repast and they were left alone, "that you are as well known as I am in this hostelry. Goodman Aubry waited on you as though you were a prince."

"Not in the least," replied the burgess, smiling. "But I just sounded my pocket, and he was content with the ring of the little livres Tournois."

His interlocutor smiled grimly in his turn. "Yes," he said, "money is the surest answer in every country; still it is far from prudent to show the contents of one's pocket to every body, especially in such a place as this."

The burgess looked at him uneasily.

"Do you mean that there are any pickpockets hereabouts, brother?" he asked.

"Do you mean to say that you are not acquainted with the neighborhood?" returned the other, answering one question by asking another.

"Faith, not I. This is my first visit, and I come from a long distance too. I am from La Rochelle."

"From La Rochelle!" and the Red Hat in his turn regarded his new-found friend with perturbed looks; "what on earth brings you from thence?"

"The fates, or circumstances, my unlucky star, and his eminence the Cardinal. 'Tis a very long story. I have been specially sent for to wait upon his eminence."

"Unfortunate man!" exclaimed the Red Hat; "what have you to do with him? Have you offended his eminence?"

"Never, to my knowledge," responded the burgess. "As fate would have it, however, I have been accused of doing so; but my complete justification can be neither long nor difficult. You must know that the Rochellois are very troublesome folks; and that evil-speaking, lying, and slandering are far too common there. Some scurvy wag among our citizens has written an anonymous satire against the administration in general, and Monsieur de Cerlind in particular. Then there has been a search made for the author, absurd tragedies and verses written by his eminence, about a certain sarabaud said to have been danced by him before the queen; and, in short, I am the unlucky scapegoat of mine has been good enough to denounce me as the author of these roguish pasquinades—I who never trip even a single foot together in my life. It is a most perverse and treacherous time. To exculpate myself to his eminence a certain worthy monk, Father Joseph, who is said to be honored with the friendship and confidence of his eminence. He was kind enough to intercede for me; and subsequently informed me that Monseigneur would deign to grant me an interview; and here I am, deeply flattered by the honor, and considerably alarmed, though I will very much prefer being snug at home in my own house at La Rochelle."

"Humph!" quoth the Red Hat; "for my part I think you would have done much better to have remained at home. Much as his Red's errand is to take care of itself. Cardinals are dangerous personages to have interviews with. But I must be going," he resumed, rising from his seat. "Farewell, master of mine! Thanks for your hospitality, and pray Heaven and St. Nicholas that we may never meet again."

As saying so he left the room abruptly left the room.

A fool's errand! what can he mean by that?" mused the burgess. "Poor man, he must be crazed. Well, the landlord would think of worshiping a red hat? However, my little affair will be soon settled—nine o'clock was the hour fixed at which I was to wait upon his eminence. I'll be at five minutes' walk to the chateau, and then I shall soon come back to my bed and board."

Paying his reckoning at the polite request of the host, who hinted that cavaliers who went up to the chateau sometimes made but brief arrangements for returning at a fixed hour interfered with—a hint which the traveler wholly failed to comprehend—he left the house in high spirits, whipping his cloak around him to shelter himself from the still falling snow.

He had not proceeded many paces along the sombre avenue of poplars before he thought that he heard the clinking of sword-blades and some smothered oaths. He paused instinctively; but a sudden gust of wind came howling about him and drowned the sounds of the conflict.

"It must have been fancy," he reasoned. "That confounded fellow with the red hat has made me nervous. If I were a coward I should dream of him to-night."

"Help! murder!" suddenly cried a lamentable voice close to his ear.

"Courage, we are here!" cried the brave burgess, drawing his sword and summoning up all his extempore energy. "Hold on, we are four of us, well armed! Ah, rascals, would you!" And he rushed forward in the direction whence the cries had come.

His rush had seemingly succeeded, for in the obscurity he could clearly descry at least three men making off in all haste, and anon he stumbled over a body lying on the ground. The moon came out from behind a cloud, and he recognized, alas! too late, bleeding, and groaning, the Red Hat. He seemed to be severely wounded. The burgess helped him to his feet, finding him too weak to walk, valorously hoisted him on his shoulders, and not without difficulty, for the Red Hat was tall and heavy, bore him safely to the inn of St. Nicholas.

"This pestilent fellow with his red hat," he murmured to himself, as, with the assistance of the landlord, he bore him up stairs and laid him in the bed which had been prepared for quite another purpose, "seems destined to be the means of saving my life. And I shall have to sleep in the arm-chair, forsooth, because he chooses to get waylaid and stabbed."

These reflections, however, whispered the wounded man, when his wounds had been bound up, and he had recovered consciousness.

"Among friends, brother," replied the honest burgess concisely, as he battled the temples of the patient with vinegar.

"Friends!" repeated the Red Hat bitterly; "I have no friends! Who was at the trouble of saving the life of a man whose wounds are such as I are?"

"Well, for the matter of that, twas I who picked you out of the mud, and set the rascals to flight who were beasting you. Three to one, the cowardly knaves! How they scampered! And then, you see, I brought you here, pickaback; for walk a step you could not."

"And you—you then are my preserver!" the Red Hat exclaimed in a voice of agony, and pressing the burgess's hand.

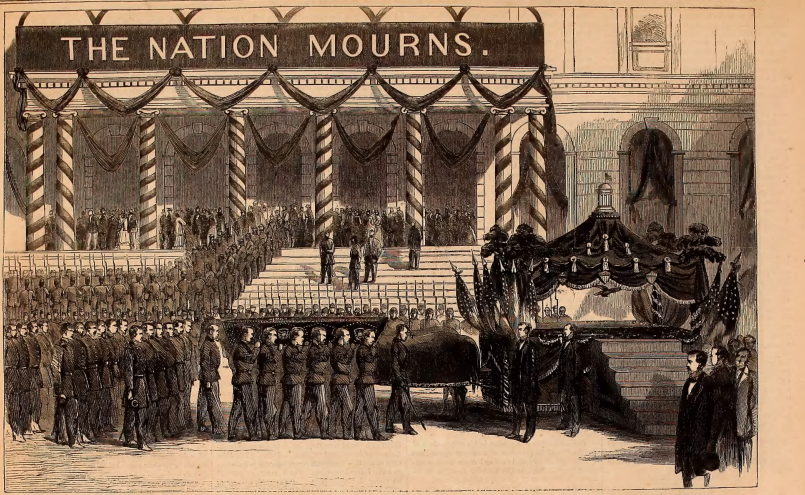
"Yes, if you like to call it so. Wouldn't you have done the same for me?"

The inn-keeper was down stairs. The wounded man made signs to the burgess to close the door securely, and to come close to the bedside. Then he put his lips to the burgess's ear, and in a hoarse whisper said,

"Had you not an appointment at nine o'clock this evening with his eminence?"

"Of course I had, and shall get a pretty scolding for being late. But perhaps the existence of a poor devil like me has escaped his mighty memory?"

"Then," quoth the Red Hat solemnly, "I can give life for life. You have saved mine. I too was bound by an oath upon his eminence's soul this night; and I have little doubt that it would have been a dreadful duty to strike your head from your body."



At this appalling intimation the Rochellois, with horror in his every utterance, made for the door, thinking the Red Hat to be in a state of delirium; but the other called him back.

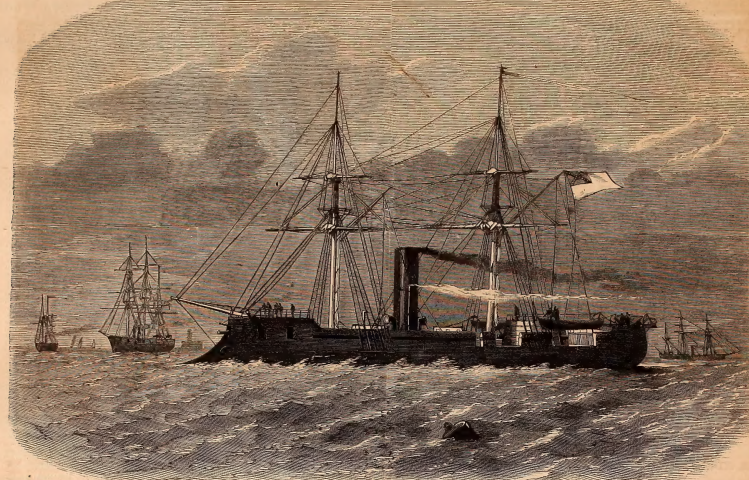
"'Tis only, unfortunately, that thou must fly," he said. "Escape rather from this horrible neighborhood. Listen to what I say. The merciless Cardinal had conceived a resentment against you without a hearing; and it would have been my task to execute the sentence; for I—yes, I whose hand you have saved from crime—am known to have never yet shed blood save in battle, and to have never yet failed in my word. Fly, then, while you have safety in your hands, and thank Heaven and St. Nicholas that you have escaped the fate which I was commissioned to inflict upon you."

"You may well shun me," continued the Red Hat, gloomily, "since the fates have decreed that we must not have some further communion before we part forever. Every time that his eminence has a deed of extra atrocity to execute I seem to have eaten and drunk with you—I am the most miserable, the most abandoned, the most accursed of mankind. I am the executioner of Chartres."

He paused for a moment, keenly eying his companion, who, brave and honest as he was, could not banish from his countenance the expression of repugnance he felt at being on familiar terms with such a personage.

"You may well shun me," continued the Red Hat, gloomily; "but

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FUNERAL—REMOVAL OF THE BODY FROM THE CITY HALL TO THE FUNERAL CAR, NEW YORK, APRIL 25, 1865.



RICHARD COBDEN.

THE late RICHARD COBDEN was the son of a Sussex farmer, where he was born June 3, 1804. Having learned the business of a salesman in the service of a City warehouse in the Manchester trade, he early removing to Lancashire, set up there for himself as a printer of calicos, and, by his skill in suiting the markets and by his fine taste in patterns, became, in a very few years, one of the most thriving manufacturers of that district. He was still a young man. He had made up for the want of a University education by his studies of political economy which he recommended in after-life as providing a better intellectual exercise and discipline than the exact sciences. His accomplishments were, an excellent faculty of logical exposition, with a rare talent of finding the readiest and happiest illustrations of his argument, and a perfect mastery of clear and forcible language in writing or speaking. He was familiar with the condition of the industrious middle and lower classes of England, both north and south. Foreign trade and foreign travel soon made him acquainted with the different countries of Europe and the United States. His political opinions were early formed. His task was to become one of the leading political executors of that legacy of economic science which the Scottish philosophers of the last century had bequeathed. The laws which regulate the production, distribution, and consumption of wealth appeared to his mind as the laws of bodily health—laws of Nature, ordinances of Divine authority—which it was no less impious than foolish to withstand. He took up, therefore, the vindication of those principles, almost with the zeal of an apostle, and for the sake of truth, while he demanded their practical observance for the relief of manufacturing interests. Such were the antecedents of this eminent public man, who came forward a quarter of a century ago as the ablest orator of the Anti-Corn Law League, himself a capitalist, a large employer of labor, and a successful mercantile adventurer, who could speak with sure knowledge of the operations of industry and trade.

In the House of Commons COBDEN was an earnest advocate for Free Trade, because of its necessity to the working men of England. The question became, in some of its aspects, so ominous that further resistance to the popular demands might have resulted in a national calamity. Not only had Lancashire made up its mind—not only had the merchants and traders of London, after long hesitation, become thoroughly convinced upon the subject—not only were the ranks of the ANTI-CORN LAW League swelled daily by fresh recruits, but in the agricultural counties themselves there were torch-light meetings of laborers, who declared that, come what might of Free Trade, Protection was not even giving them bread. SIR ROBERT PEEL saw that the time for concession had arrived; he had long been inclining in theory toward the change, and his essentially practical mind now perceived that, whatever might happen to his party or himself, Free Trade must become the law of the land. On the 26th June, 1846, the CORN LAW Repeal Bill received the Royal assent; and the great Minister, as he finally retired from office amidst the blessings of a people and the curses of a faction, owned that to RICHARD COBDEN was the chief meed of merit due. A great mark of public favor was conferred upon him by his countrymen. His fortune had suffered by his devotion to politics, and a splendid subscription of £60,000 was raised by his admirers, with which he purchased an estate near his native town. Shortly afterward he retired altogether from public life. His health was shattered, and it was hoped that repose might restore him—a hope that was entertained until almost the last day. In April, 1859, without any solicitation of his own, the electors of Rochdale recalled him to public life, and his return to the House of Commons was welcomed by men of all parties. Nor was it long before he again had it in his power to confer a superb service upon the country. In the autumn of the same year he concluded the Commercial Treaty with France; and, however opinions may have differed as to some details of that great agreement, there was no doubt that the illustrious free-trader had added another to his many claims upon public gratitude. The negotiation of the Treaty, indeed, may be regarded as the crowning act of his political life. The very earnestness with which he had maintained certain rather unpopular items of his creed had always excluded him from office. He had many sorrows and afflictions, of which the public were scarcely cognizant; and he found, like many another English worthy, his chief reward in the sense of duty performed. He began to speak less frequently in Parliament. His last great speech was delivered in the memorable Danish debate of 1864; and it sufficiently proved that he had lost very little of his trenchant vigor or of his uncompromising love for truth. What PEEL said of PALMERSTON, even PALMERSTON'S more recent antagonists might have said of COBDEN, "We are all proud of him." He was still sanguine of recovery, it is said; he made sure that a few days of warm weather would restore him to health; but the days of warm weather did not come; he gradually grew worse, and at a quarter past eleven on Sunday morning, April 2, at the age of sixty-one, he expired. The immediate cause of his death is said to have been bronchitis.

THE LATE RICHARD COBDEN.

THE CONFEDERATE STEAM RAM "STONEWALL" LEAVING LISBON HARBOR.

In this country the death of RICHARD COBDEN becomes as much an occasion of grief as in his own. His views in politics were cosmopolitan. He was on the side or struggling humanity every where. Hardly had he been buried before there were found Englishmen enough to ask, "Are we not making too much of this COBDEN? Was he not the advocate of manhood suffrage—that most pernicious doctrine to British aristocrats? Is not this the political Apostle who has preached until he has by his preaching destroyed the prestige of the privileged classes? Has he not put Generals, Admirals, civil servants, upon their trial? He never spoke or acted like an Englishman. 'He hath mocked at our gains, laughed at our losses, cooled our friends, heated our enemies.' He has uniformly given the least charitable construction to his country's acts, and gleaned ever the wrong-doing of other nations. He has admitted every charge made by foreign nations against us, and indorsed it with libels of his own." These things high-blooded Englishmen can not forget. Least of all can they forget that he stigmatized those Englishmen who sympathized with the American rebellion as the enemies of human liberty at home. But the people every where remember simply that he was their friend.

THE "STONEWALL."

IT has been mentioned that the Portuguese fort of Belem, at the entrance of Lisbon Harbor, fired upon the American ships of war Niagara and Sacramento when the Governor of the fort believed that they were about to break the neutrality of the harbor by going out in pursuit of the Confederate vessel Stonewall. The Portuguese Government has since apologized, and dismissed the Governor from his post. The Confederate steam-ram Stonewall came into Lisbon on the 26th of March. The Stonewall is a steam-ram of about 1200 tons measurement, brig-rigged, and of 500 horse power, capable of working up as high as 1700. She carries three guns mounted—two 70-pounder Armstrong guns in the turret aloft the mainmast, and one 300-pounder Armstrong gun in the forecastle, just over the ram; this gun can also be trained as a broadside gun, and is a most formidable piece of artillery. The turret is not a movable one, but the guns can be trained to bear either fore or aft, or as broadside guns likewise. She is plated with 5½-inch iron plates, and 6-inch forward. The ram projects about 18 feet under the water-line, and is very sharp; it gradually rounds off to the deck, and is surmounted by the 300-pounder. She steams very fast—the officers say thirteen knots at sea. The Stonewall was built at Bordeaux for the Danish navy, but not being finished in time was rejected by the Danes, and then was bought by the Confederates. She had just come down from Ferrol, where she had been repairing; and the Niagara and Sacramento, who had been on the look out for her, arrived March 27. The Stonewall is commanded by Captain T. J. PAGE, of the Confederate navy, and has a strong company of officers and men. She was ordered by the Portuguese Government to leave in twenty-four hours. We show in the sketch on page 304, besides the Stonewall, the Portuguese corvette Sagres and the United States steamers Niagara and Sacramento, and in the distance Fort St. Julian and the Bugio Light-house.

On reference to our illustration it should be observed that the Sacramento and Niagara are seen to the left hand, the Niagara being the nearer of the two; while the Bugio Light-house is seen in the distance, between the Niagara and the Stonewall; the Portuguese corvette and Fort St. Julian are shown to the right hand of the view.

THE TOWER OF BELEM FIRING ON THE UNITED STATES FRIGATES "NIAGARA" AND "SACRAMENTO" LYING IN LISBON HARBOR.

DO NOT WASTE YOUR MONEY buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOLD PENS which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the BEST IN THE WORLD.

Avoid the shameless Upstarts, whose lack of brains compels them to attempt IMITATION, even for the advertisement. If you want the full value of your money, call on A. MORTON, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

LADIES—GENTLEMEN.

The Patent Fastener, for use on Boots, Shoes, Corsets, Trousers, &c., will save the inclosed cost in time, annoying, and getting into kinks. GIVE THEM A TRIAL. Only 25 cents a pair.

FAIRY ALBUMS

For holding 40 Pictures, $1.25; 80 Pictures, $1.50. Our Illustrated Pamphlet and W. H. Seward's Photographs, 75 cts. each. Books, Pictures, Albums, &c. Send Stamp for illustrated catalogues. W. C. Wemyss, 875 Broadway, N. Y. J. WILKES BOOTH Pictures, 25 cts. each.

F. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

Manufacturers of Photographic Materials

AND

501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

In addition to their large stock of PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, we are Headquarters for the celebrated

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS,

Including reproductions of the Celebrated Paintings, Statuary, Groups of Fine Cities and Landscapes, Groups, Statuary etc., etc., for Parlor Stereoscopes, for pocket Stereoscopes, for pocket Stereoscopes, for pocket

PRICE REDUCED TO SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS.

The Convex Refector Lantern.

For burning Kerosene or Coal Oil without Chimney.

Patented in America and England.

Without exception, the Cheapest, Most Convenient, Safest, and very best HAND LANTERN in use.

Price 75 cts. SOLD BY THE TRADE GENERALLY.

It gives a pure white light—WITHOUT CHIMNEY.

It stands QUICK MOTIONS in any direction.

The Best Light for the Least Expense.

Address ARCHER & PANCOAST,

Manufacturers of

GAS FIXTURES, LAMPS, CHANDELIERS, &c., &c.,

9, 11, 13, 15, and 17 Mercer St., New York.

$8 OFFICER'S $10 WATCH

Our whole stock of Imported Watches, being of rich and rare designs, are now offered at reduced prices. Single watches at Wholesale rates.

An Elegant Watch in Fine Gold Plated Double Cases Richly Engraved, Turned Cases, Carved Balance Bridge, English Full Jewelled Movements, Adjusted Regulator, Spring Bolt, Spade Hands, and Fine Enamelled White Dial, in every particular similar in running order, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and a Gent's HANDSOME VEST CHAIN and a beautiful Rich Gold Coin Locket, to match, with Double Cases, Box, and Glass for Two Likenesses. Sent by mail to any part of the army or country for only $10.

A Near Silver Watch, especially adapted for army use, in Hunter Double Cases, Small Size, same as the above, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and Gent's Vest Chain, Improved Double Case Locket, etc., sent by mail to any part of the army or country for only $8.

The Imperial Watch.

Containing a Rare and Wonderful Combination of Mechanism, Chronometer, Duplex, Lever, and Patent Detached Escapements, Adjusted and correct working Tourbillon Regulator, Improved Adjusted Harrison's Compensation movements, an accurately adjusted a Reliable Calendar, indicating correctly the Day of the Week, Month, and Date, setting day of month, Hour, Half and Time indicator. The Watch is perfect in every detail. The watche Watch is encased in beautiful machine-turned Hunting, Mamie Spring 18 Line Crown (the strongest and best), Open Face Double Cases, of Solid Gold, Engraved Top and Bottom, with Floral Scroll Work, and Fancy Back Spring. Genuine English Engraved Jewited Action, M. J. Tobin movements, Open Face Solid Gold Cases, Stem Winding and Setting, Independent Actions, Fine White Dials, Polished Steel Cut Hands, and in fine Raised Position of Jewels, and used by the Royal Engineers and Officers of the Bavarian Army, in their model line-keeper. Each movement before leaving our private track-room. Price per single case, all complete by mail, to any part of the army or country, $30.

CATELY BROTHERS, Sole Importers,

208 Broadway, N. Y. Established 1855.

LINCOLN Morning Pin in silver plate, Price 50 cents. Address Union News Company, Chicago, Illinois.

"How 'tis Done." Whiskers in 6 wks. Gambling exposed. Everybody's Vest Companion, 25 cts. Gold secrets. Free for 25c. Andrew Hunter & Co., Hinsdale, N. H.

5 Cents. Richmond in Ours and It's all up in Dixie. Two new and amusing Songs. Just out. Sent free for only Five Cents. Address "BANNER," Hinsdale, N. H.

Prize Stationery Packets.

Splendid Steel Engravings and Photograph Card Pictures.

We want agents every where to sell our goods, which will pay 300 per cent. profit, and our stationery Packets contain a great deal of envelope and a fine assortment of Jewelry. GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES given as premiums to agents. Our packets are mailed, free, post-paid, together with circulars and full particulars to agents, for the price of 50 cents.

HASKINS & CO., 36 Ilerkman St., New York.

JEWELRY! JEWELRY!

$200,000 Worth of

Watches, Chains, and other Jewelry, are to be sold for $1 each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; then it is at your option to send the dollar and get the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a gold watch, diamond ring, or any sort of jewelry on one for $1 and no more. In no case can they get less than a dollar's worth, as there are no blanks. The Certificate will be sent by mail for 25 cts.; 25 for $5; 100 for $15. Great inducements offered to Agents. Call or send for Catalogues, containing full list and particulars, sent with the certificate. Address

FORWARDING AGENCY COMPANY,

58 Liberty Street, New York City.

LINCOLN Mourning Pin in silver plate, Price 50 cents. Address Union News Company, Chicago, Illinois.

WHISKERS AND MUSTACHES in 42 days. Also of Hair on Bald Heads in 9 weeks. Address, with stamp, to C. BRIGGS, Chelsea, Mass.

NO HUMBUG. Send 50 cents for a Recipe, which is WARRANTED to force Mustaches and Whiskers from their roots in from 6 to 9 weeks. The Recipe is good for ever. Sent by return mail. Address

BROWN & BRAY, Box 5,432, New York.

MERWIN & BRAY FIRE-ARMS CO.'S

Belt and Pocket Size Cartridge Revolvers.

The Size weighs 2½ lbs., carries a ball 45-100 calibre deeper than Colt's Navy, and can be used with either fixed or loose cartridges. The Pocket Size weighs 1½ lbs., and carries a ball 36-100 calibre (same as Colt's Pocket), 5 shots.

These Pistols are loaded and discharged with only four motions—as fast as a percussion never yet made or by any other arm. A full round can be loaded and discharged in thirty seconds. These arms have been pronounced unrivalled by the U. S. Revenue Service. Testimonials of their efficiency can be produced from the Army and Navy, also from civilians. Printed circulars (with illustrated cuts), naming prices, sent by mail when required.

Merwin & Bray are also sole proprietors of the Ballard Breech-Loading Rifle and Carbine. These arms need no comment. Their high character for Military and Sporting purposes is well established. Price, $50. Circulars sent free to know where they may be purchased.

Merwin & Bray are also sole Pistol and Fisk on the Overland Expedition to the Pacific, under orders of the U. S. Government, and the State of Kentucky. Over Seventy Thousand (70,000) now in active field service, by which the highest testimonials are received.

Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers generally.

MERWIN & BRAY,

Address Agents, No. 382 Broadway, New York.

P.S.—Important.—These Rifles can be used with either fixed or loose ammunition.

CHEVALIER'S LIFE FOR THE HAIR

RESTORES GRAY HAIR to its original color, stops it in falling out in three days, keeps the head clean, cool, and healthy, and will not stain the skin, nor injure the whitest fabric. THE BEST HAIR DRESSING EVER OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC. Can be used with confidence nothing injurious; strengthens and promotes the growth of the natural hair. IT IS HARMLESS AND USED BY THE FIRST MEDICAL AUTHORITY.

Sold at the Drug Stores, and at my Office, No. 1123 Broadway, New York. Price $1 per bottle; $6 per half dozen.

SARAH A. CHEVALIER, M.D.

BARD & BROTHER'S (Established 1849)

GOLD PENS,

PEN AND PENCIL CASES. Also Manufacturer of BARD & WILSON'S PATENT ANGULAR NIB GOLD PENS. 128 N. BARD, Ag't, No. 25 Maiden Lane, N. Y. Repointing, 50 cents. Send for a Circular.

ARCANA WATCH.

An Elegant Novelty in Watches.

The cases of this watch are an entirely new invention, composed of six different metals combined, rolled together and planished, producing an exact imitation of 18-carat gold, called Arcana, which will always keep its color. They are as beautiful and durable as solid gold, and are afforded at one-eighth the cost. The case is beautifully engraved, with pistol and shield for the gold-plated pendant, and engraved in the exact style of the celebrated Gold Hunting Lever, and are made in the same size and outline, and so exact an imitation of gold as to defy detection. The movement is manufactured by the well-known St. Jimer Watch Company of Europe, and are expertly finished, having patent levers, compensation balance, self-adjusting regulator, with gold balance, and the improved ruby jewelled action, with line dials, and are sold, and so warranted a good time-keeper. These watches are of three different sizes, the smallest for ladies' wear, and are all hunting cases. A case of six will be sent by mail or express for $12. A single watch will be sent upon receipt of price. Six will readily sell for three times their cost. We are the sole agents for the sale in the United States, and none are genuine which do not bear our name.

Address DEVAUD & CO., Importers,

35 Maiden Lane, New York.

Life of Abraham Lincoln.

THE PIONEER BOY,

And how he became President.

This is an authorized and trustworthy biography of this great man, giving all the facts relative to his early life, and how he was elected President. For sale by all Booksellers, or sent by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price, $1 00. WALKER, FULLER & CO., Publishers, Boston.

LINCOLN Mourning Pin in silver plate, Price 50 cents. Address Union News Company, Chicago, Illinois.

TO PHYSICIANS AND INVALIDS.—The Rev. CHARLES E. KING, recently connected as Resident Physician and Chief Medical Officer with the Freedmen's Bureau, cure of cots, the PRESCRIPTION with which he successfully treated all the cases of that terrible disease, principal, upward of a hundred cases of CONSUMPTION in the first, second, and third stages.

The remedy is equally adapted to the treatment of ASTHMA, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, and all affections of the LUNGS, THROAT, and AIR-PASSAGES; while it speedily invigorates the enfeebled DIGESTIVE ORGANS, and corrects the deranged functions of the STOMACH, LIVER, and BOWELS.

TESTIMONIALS from PASTORS or CHURCHES.

"Your Prescription acted like a charm."—Rev. Dr. Hoge, Richmond, Va.

"I very one who I have recommended it to has benefited much by its use."—Rev. G. D. Jones, Racine, Wis.

For Prescriptions, and particulars of many cases successfully treated, address, with stamp,

REV. CHARLES E. KING,

Box 1,304, Boston, Mass. New York.

Mourning Badges.

The beautiful badge, printed on white satin, draped in mourning, with splendid gilt pin attached (with likeness), will be sent by mail, postage prepaid, for 25 cents. Larger size, 50 cents. Badges without pin, $12 50 per 100. PHILLIPS & CROCKER,

No. 14 Chambers Street, New York.

LINCOLN Mourning Pin in silver plate, Price 50 cents. Address Union News Company, Chicago, Illinois.

Brandreth's Pills.

Their use produces that healthful sensation in a descent body which is experienced when one is first taken ill. Thus we see the dull, yellow skin made clear by their use; the eye becomes bright and animated; the blood is purified, and the whole system of circulation becomes is cured, and every organ and fibre of the body becomes healthy. And what is most important, Brandreth's Pills purify the blood, which is the source of all fatal diseases in the human frame. These facts are worthy of notice. Reader, if you would be free from disease, and enjoy a large share of robust health, cleanse your blood with Brandreth's Pills. Their operation is mild and painless, and hear evil fruits.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. Sent upon it B. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING,

NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicines.

UPHAM'S PIMPLE BANISHER

Removes Pimples on the Face, Freckles, &c. It also refines the skin and beautifies the complexion. No toilet is complete without it. Price 50 cents. Mailed to any address, for 75 cents, by S. C. UPHAM, 55 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE JAPANESE HAIR STAIN

Colors the Hair, Whiskers, and Mustache of a beautiful black or brown. It consists of only one preparation. Color will not fade or wash out. Only 50 cents per box. Mailed to any part. Address S. C. UPHAM, 55 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Mourning Badges,

Mourning Pins, &c.

BADGES, SATIN, 5x11. INSCRIPTION

With neat Pin and fine Portrait, the whole covered with crape. Price, by mail, 50 cents, $70 per 100; without pin, $50 per 100. MOURNING BREASTPIN, a fine portrait of Lincoln in silver plate, oval frame, with eagle, flags, and inscription "E Pluribus Unum," and black mourning ribbon for pin, $20 per 100. MOURNING PINS, 10 styles, from $10 to $25 per 100. ABRAHAM J. H. LINCOLN & CO., 185 Water St., New York.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A powerful stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Mustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Ongent, and failing in as represented (by following the of the fact, can have their money returned them at any time within 3 months from day of purchase. Price $1. Sent, sealed and post-paid, to any address, on receipt of the money. Address

A. C. CLARK,

P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

SHULTS' CURLIQUE. For curling the Hair. Price by mail $1. Warranted. Address

SHULTS & CO., Whitestown, N. Y.

$1. WHISKERS. $1.

For One Dollar I will send, sealed and post-paid, the "Grecian Compound," highly perfumed, which I warrant to force a heavy growth of Whiskers on smooth faces in five weeks, or upon bald heads in eight weeks, without stain or injury to the skin. Entire satisfaction given, or money refunded. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address E. A. SANFORD, Lansingburgh, N. Y.

The Brazilian Hair Curler.

One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair into ringlets or flowing curls of beauty. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of $1 00. Address

C. A. CLARK, Cohoes, N. Y.

Shults' Onguent warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent post-paid, for 50 cents. Address G. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED for Business fight, pleasant, and honorable. Those now engaged are realizing from $15 to $20 per day net-profit. Send stamp for Circular. Address E. ROBERTS & CO., Cincinnati, O.

USE THE BEST.

BOWDEN'S Moth Destroying Bait will certainly destroy Moths. It will also preserve Chintz, Furs, Carpets, Robes, Blankets, and all Woolen Goods from Moths and all destructive Insects. For sale by all Druggists.

LINCOLN Mourning Pin in silver plate, Price 50 cents. Address Union News Company, Chicago, Illinois.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN—His Portrait, with Counsels on his Character, Services to the Republic—in the Phrenological Journal. Also, "Signs of Character," embracing Cranium, Temperament, Cheerfulness, Memory; Climate; Color; Portrait of Dobson, Paul Denbecke, Madame de Stael, Gall, Dr. Wm. Wood; Notes of Music. Portraits of the People: Hons. George Brown, Gerrit Smith, Wm. Cullen, and Dr. Kennedy. Baked Spice; Lucca; Relden.

Health in the Closet: Swedenborg, Melancthon, Wesley, President Edwards, Dr. Chalmers, Dr. Tyng, Archbishop Whately, Dr. Payson, and Dr. Nott. Phrenology Hints for Husbands by Mrs. G. W. Wyllys; Victor Hugo's Character; Phrenology Applied to Children; Obedience as a Medicine; Borrowing Trouble. Physiology: Conflicting Philosophy; Metaphysics; Mode of Study. Our Social Liability, by Rev. Dr. Osgood; Secretiveness by Wetmore; Hair Dyes.

The Rice Grass Region: A graphic sketch by Mrs. Kirkland. Fruit and Fruit Culture. Model Dwellings; Ventilation; Southward Ho! Surrendered.

In a single No. of the Phrenological Journal, published a year for $2. Newmen have it. Address Messrs. FOWLER & WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, New York.

NEW MUSIC.—Funeral March, to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, the Martyr President, by Mrs. E. A. Parkhurst. Price, 30 cents. Published by the Composer, says, "This is a fine composition—well worthy the reputation of its author." Very extensively used. Price 30 cents; with Vignette of the President, 35. Mailed free. Publisher, HORACE WATERS, 481 Broadway, N. Y.

PORTABLE

PRINTING OFFICES

For Merchants, Druggists, Hospitals, small Job Printers, &c. Address ADAMS PRESS CO., 26 Ann St., New York; 607 Sansom St., Phila.; 27 Dey St., Cor. Church.

WILKES BOOTH Photograph, Price 25 cents. Address Union News Company, Chicago, Illinois.

PLAYING CARDS.

The American Card Company's New Union Playing Cards,

No. 1 Chambers Street,

They are the greatest card made, and suit the popular taste. The suits are EAGLES, SHIELDS, STARS, and PEACE, CROWNS, in place of KING, QUEENS or LADIES for Queen and KNAVE for Jack.

All the games can be played as readily as with cards having foreign emblems. Each pack is put up in an elegant card-case, and then in dozen boxes for the trade.

In order that all dealers may have an opportunity to sell these cards, a sample box of twelve packs will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of Five Dollars. Address

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,

No. 14 Chambers Street, New York.

PINEAPPLE CIDER.

DR. TALBOT'S CONCENTRATED MEDICAL PINEAPPLE CIDER is a preventive of sickness.

The experience that Dr. Talbot has had for the last 12 years convinces him that it is time the public had an article offered that will prevent sickness. The article offered is Dr. Talbot's Medicated Pineapple Cider, designed for all classes.

Old and Young. It is not new to the Doctor, but it is entirely new to the public. One quart bottle will last a well person a year. This is rather a new mode of introducing medicine to the public.

Save Millions from being sick. Is it not better to pay three dollars a year to keep from sickness than to pay ten or twenty dollars in doctors' bills, and as much more for the loss of time? Is it not better to keep from sickness than to be sick? To prevent sickness, use as follows:

Directions. Teaspoonful of Medicated Pineapple Cider to a tumbler of cold water, and drink the first thing after you rise in the morning, and the same before retiring at night. It will increase the strength, and give

Vigor and Action to the system. A celebrated New York merchant, who has made a thorough trial of the Pineapple Cider, writes that he has taken about one pound of fresh ice each month at the first trial. He continues its use as above directed, and finds it very beneficial: says it has proved as native

Preventive to Sickness in his case. Also another well-known gentleman in New York has used the Medicated Cider frequently for years, and has not been sick one day during that time.

This Wonderful Preparation will increase the appetite, aid digestion, and action of the bowels and regulate digestion. When taken internally, for gains of all kinds, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Headache, Nervous Pains in the Chest, Hoarseness, Coughs, Neuralgia, Headache, Pains Darting Suddenly, Affection of the Heart, Sciatica nothing and quieting effect on the system is most wonderful.

Dyspepsia, the ominous physician, used it with great success. Female Weakness, Palpitation of the Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Weakness, Palpitation of the Heart, Chronic Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cholera Morbus, Cholera Infantum, Sick Headache, Nervousness, and all diseases caused by physicians to defecate females, and as an excellent Stomachic and Restorative Digestion, Want of Appetite, Sexual, Nephritic Affections, Rheumatism, etc., etc. It never fails to relieve Pain in the Back, Kidneys, Spinal Column, and Stoop, etc. American indians have used this article with great success in curing Fevers, and other diseases.

It imparts a cheerfulness to the disposition, and brings back the roses to cheeks.

To Invalids, especially, it is of inestimable value, and should be preferred as a medicine before all others in which the water is likely to very in quality and tendency. Every bottle is sold with a full and explanatory circular with the utmost confidence as a timely, efficacious restorative.

PRICES:

Ten Dollars per Dozen, Medium Size.

Three Dollars per Bottle (Full Quart).

One Dollar per Bottle (Pint).

One Dollar per Bottle (Full Half-Pint).

Sold by Druggists, Grocers, and Country Store-keepers. Sent by express to any part of the country. Express charges will be paid by the purchaser. Address

DR. TALBOT'S MEDICATED PINEAPPLE CIDER Depot,

No. 616, Broadway, Cor. Prince Street, New York.

Having donated $1000 to the U. S. C. Shop to a former fair at Chicago, I have now donated 6000 complete sets of the Pineapple Cider to the Great Central Fair to be held at Chicago, May 30, 1865. Value of the above $1500.

AGENTS, COME and EXAMINE

An Invention unquisly needed by every body, or samples sent free by mail for 50 cts., which retails for $6 easily, by

R. L. DeWOLFE & Co., No. 13 Chambers Square, N. Y.

YOUNG MAN,

Would you sport a fine head or mustache? If so, use the Tonic Pomade Compound. Sent by mail, prepaid, by Dr. Ville of Paris. Warranted to force a heavy growth of hair upon a bald head or mustache, without stain or injury to the skin. Sent, post-paid, to any address on receipt of $1. Address

S. S. CHASE,

P. O. Drawer 5,586, Boston, Mass.

Weston's Metallic Artificial Legs—Lightest, cheapest, most durable, and most natural ever invented. Price $150. Send for a pamphlet.

J. W. WESTON, 491 Broadway, N. Y.

LANGENHEIM'S IMPROVED MAGIC LANTERN PICTURES. Stereopticon and dissolving views artistically painted. Superior lenses and condensers for sale. Also, &c. For catalogues and information, apply to W. LANGENHEIM, P. O. Box 1919, Philadelphia, Pa.

Great Closing Sale!!

$650,000 Worth of Watches, Diamond Pins $650,000 Worth of Jewelry, all to be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1. Then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any Set of Jewelry on sale for One Dollar, and in no case can they get less than a Dollar's worth, as there are no blanks. Six Certificates will be sent for 50 cents; 13 for $1; Thirty-five for $3; One Hundred for $12. Great inducements offered those who act as Agents. Call or send for circulars, containing full lists and particulars mailed free. Address

JEWELLERY ASSOCIATION,

295 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

P.O., Drawer 12.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE FOR MAY, 1865.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $4 00

An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00.

Postage prepaid by the Publishers.

HARPER'S WEEKLY and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $8 00.

The Publishers will accept a limited number of first-class Advertisements for their Magazine at the following rates: one quarter of a page, each Number, $75; one half, $125; whole Page, $200. The circulation of HARPER'S MAGAZINE is believed to be larger than that of any similar publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year ..... $ 4 00

One Copy for Three Months 1 00

And an Extra Copy will be furnished for every CLUB OF FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00. Payment invariably in advance.

The Bound Volumes of HARPER'S WEEKLY for the Year 1864, with over 1000 Illustrations. 624 pages, 4to, substantially bound in Cloth. Price $7 00.

Terms to Advertisers.—One Dollar per line for inside, and One Dollar and Fifty Cents per line for outside Advertisements each Insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

ABOUT THE SIZE OF IT.

UNCLE SAM. "Stand clear there, all airth and ocean! My hands are free now, and I'm goin' to hyst a flag so big that it'll cover most of 'em! And a good bit o' the sea in!"

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad Street,
(Two Doors from Wall.)
New York.

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks.
Bonds and Gold will receive our PERSONAL attention.

ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

FISK & HATCH.
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

Great Imperial Watch.
See Caleb Brothers' Advertisement on page 303.

Free to Every Body.
SOLDIERS, SAILORS, FARMERS, MECHANICS, and EVERY BODY throughout the country will receive, free, by mail, a First-Class, Interesting NEWSPAPER, by sending their address to Editors of "ARMY AND HOME JOURNAL," 40 Ann Street, New York.

BROOKS' PATENT
WRITING AND TOILET CASE.
From Commander Cushing (Hero of the Albemarle):
"Having worked one with me to sea, I can say that it is the most complete and convenient article for the soldier or sailor that has ever come under my notice."
Price, $2 50, sent free of postage.
D. B. BROOKS & BROTHER, Salem, Mass.

FOLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 602 Broadway (corner 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $2 to $20 each.

GOLD PENS.
The JOHNSON PEN is acknowledged by all who have used them to be the best pen for the least money of any in use. They are made of 14 carats fine gold, and warranted for one year (written guarantee when required). Pens in solid silver extension cases, $1 75; ebony stick holders, $1 75; rubber reverse holders, $2 50; telescopic extension holders, $2 50; duplex silver cases, $4 00; ebony holders and morocco boxes, $1 50. Pens repointed, 50 cents each. Pens sent by mail, postage paid. Send for Circular.
E. S. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office, 15 Maiden Lane, New York City.

DALLEY'S
MAGICAL PAIN EXTRACTOR
This invaluable salve is a certain cure for FELER, CORNS, CUTS, BRUISES, SORES, and RHEUMATISM. Relieves Burns Pained in five minutes. No one should be without it. It saves Doctors' Bills. 25 Cents a Box. Sent free by mail on receipt of 27 Cents. Depot 43 Liberty St., New York.

LAWRENCE,
BALDWIN
& CO.,
Bankers and Brokers,
No. 70 Wall Street, New York.
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
PETROLEUM,
And all kinds of Stocks, Bonds, &c., bought and sold on commission at the regular Stock, Petroleum, and Mining Boards.
Interest allowed on deposits.

Calenberg & Vaupel's PIANO-FORTES,
99 and 101 Bleecker Street, 2d Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

Officers, Soldiers, and Citizens!
Genuine Gold Rings.
All the Army Corps Rings in 10-carat gold enameled and warranted) at $3 and $5 each. Also 150 other styles of every size, plain, enameled, and fancy, at from $2 to $10 each. Sent by mail. Send stamp for Circular. Address F. P. BEACH, 13 Maiden Lane, New York.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $10
A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH. Double Case, Lever, Cap, small size, white enameled dial, coin bezels, "English Movements," and correct time-keeper, with an accurate "Minuteman Calendar," indicating the "Day of the Week, Month, &c." in back case.
A single one sent free by mail to any address in a neat case, with a BEAUTIFUL VEST CHAIN, for only $10.
A neat STERLING WATCH, same as above, with "Minuteman Calendar," &c., specially adapted to the ARMY. Sent free by mail, to any address, for only $7.
English and American Levers from $75 up. Good Watches of all descriptions.
Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Sole Importers, 28 & 30 Ann Street, New York.

CARPET WARP,
FIRST AND SECOND QUALITY:
Wrapping Twine made of Paper,
Twines and Paper. H. A. HARVEY, 74 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.
Magnifying small objects 500 times. MAILED FREE everywhere for 50 CENTS, or THREE for $1 00.
Address D. C. BOWEN, Box 520, Boston, Mass.

PINEAPPLE CIDER.
See advertisement on page 303.

TICKS, SCAB, VERMIN.
SheepWashTobacco
Should be in set of all Farmers on their
SHEEP, ANIMALS, AND PLANTS.
For sale by JAS. F. LEVIN, Agent South Down Co., 23 Central Wharf, Boston.
For sale in New York by R. H. ALLEN & CO., 189, 191 Water St.; DURLEY & STAFFORD, 60 Peekman St.; HAINES & FELL, 91 Courtlandt St.; and GRIFFING, BROTHER & CO., 56 and 69 Courtland St.

VINELAND LANDS
To all Wanting Farms.
Large and thriving settlement, mild and healthful climate, 20 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, producing large crops, which can now be seen growing. Tea, tomato, and fifty acre tracts, at from $15 to $25 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools, and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The finest view by which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post-Office, Cumberland County, New Jersey.
From Report of Solon Robinson, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune: "It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasure farming that we know of this side of the Western prairies.

VERMILYE & CO.,
No. 44 WALL STREET,
BANKERS,
And Dealers in all Classes of
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

JUST PUBLISHED:
President Lincoln
READING THE BIBLE TO HIS SON TAD.
PRESIDENT LINCOLN AT HOME.
Photographs of the admirable portrait of PRESIDENT LINCOLN AT HOME reproduced in HARPER'S WEEKLY of May 6) will be furnished as follows: Carte de Visites, by mail, postage paid, for Twenty-five Cents. Imperial Photographs, by express, freight paid, Two Dollars and a Half.
Also a fine Photograph, from life, of Boston Corbett,
the Avenger of the President. Price 25 cts. Sent by mail.
W. L. FOSDICK, 191 Pearl Street, Franklin Square,
New York—Harper's Building.

Kittle's Patent Spring Mattresses.
FOLDING BOX AND SPRING-BRACE BORDER.

Under-beds, elasticon and Stuffed. Good upholstered and best hair tops. Spring mattresses, perfect in comfort, durability, and economy. Worn mattresses greatly improved at light expense, being altered over our plan.
Every thing is complete and furnish a bed. The piece to buy is where a thing is made. S. J. KITTLE & CO., 150 Chatham Street, New York.

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS OF THE WAR,
OBTAINED AT GREAT EXPENSE, AND FORMING
A COMPLETE PHOTOGRAPHIC HISTORY
OF THE GREAT REBELLION CONTEST.

Bull Run,	Dutch Gap,	Strawberry Plain,
Yorktown,	Fredericksburg,	Trap Bottom,
Gettysburg,	Hanover Junction,	Belle Plain,
Fair Oaks,	Hanover Court House,	Monitors,
Savage Station,	Chickahominy,	Chattanooga,
Fredericksburg,	City Point,	Fort Memphis,
Fairfax,	Nashville,	Atlanta,
Richmond,	Charleston,	Mobile,
Petersburg,	&c., &c.	&c., &c.
&c., &c.

Every body is interested in these memorable scenes. Just published by A. H. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 Broadway, New York.
Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.

A "Electric" Enameled White, Specimens, 10c., 25c., & Sent by mail. White Enameled Stitched, $1 25. Cuffs, $2. The $1. Solid "Illuminated Enameled Cuffs," $1 50. Cuffs, $2. Mailed "free." Send "price." JEANS' RECT, 78 Nassau Street. Trade supplied.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS, Unsurpassed by any in the market. Send for catalogue of Philadelphia Photographs Co., 720 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

UNCLAIMED MONEY.—70,000 PERSONS WANTED TO CLAIM MONEY, ESTATES, &c., which have been advertised since 1794. Fee to search, for name in Registry, $1. Genealogies traced. All letters must be prepaid. GUY & CO., Unclaimed Money and Property Registry, No. 17 Charlotte Street, London (W. C.), England.

Beardsley's Shoulder Brace.
In these cases of scrofula, the tainted growth, the germs over which the lesions of the Tumefaction Sweeping Shrub has been found to excite the Beard, Mustache, &c., to a fine and vigorous growth. (See Testimonials.)
The History and a small sample of this Balsam send scrofula sufferers, free by mail.
JOHN RAWLINS, 815 Broadway, New York.

BENJ. F. KENDALL,
BROKER IN
PETROLEUM STOCKS,
No. 52 Wall Street, N. Y.

OLD EYES MADE NEW.
Without Spectacles, Doctor, or Medicine. Pamphlet mailed, free, on receipt of ten cents. Address
DR. J. ISAACS, Box 5174, New York City.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS give tone, vigor, and energy to the system when all other medicines fail. Only 25 cents per Box.

THE ENERGIES OF THAT IMPORTANT ORGAN, the Liver, are speedily restored when in a torpid state, or when there is not a due Secretion of Bile, by the use of TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT. It is the most wonderful Remedy of the Age. See Testimonials with each Bottle. Sold by all Druggists.

Hon. George Bancroft's Oration
ON PRESIDENT LINCOLN (April 25)
Will appear in PULPIT AND ROSTRUM, No. 24, with Mr. Beecroft's correction. Twenty cents by mail. SCHERMERHORN, BANCROFT & CO., Publishers, 130 Grand Street, New York.
American News Company supply the trade.

PHOTOGRAPHS
In great variety, the finest in the market. Large and small photographs and engravings of LINCOLN. Send for Catalogues. F. F. WHITING, 67 Fulton St., New York.

THE "SPENCER" SEVEN-SHOT Repeating Rifle.
As now used in the service. Calibre 56-100. Can be fired 7 times in 15 seconds. Range 1500 yards. Wholesale and retail, by WILLIAM READ & SON, 21 Parmali Hall Square, Boston.

THIS NATION IN TEARS.—New Music, in memoriam of President Lincoln, with a beautiful portrait; music and words very solemn and impressive, arranged to be sung as a solo, duet, trio, or full chorus, or performed as a grand march. "After Love me in the Shade," a very amusing and popular song. Also "Every Body's Love Song," a real gem. Just published by WM. A. POND & CO., 547 BROADWAY, No. 39 Beekman Street, and sold by all the dealers in music and periodicals, or mailed free on receipt of price—20 cents each.

SEE ANY NEWSDEALER OR BOOKSELLER for a copy of DAWLEY'S NEW WAR NOVELS. If he has not got them he will get them for you.
No. 1. Mosby, the Guerrilla.
No. 2. Pauline, the Female Spy.
No. 3. Semmes, the Pirate.
No. 4. Kidare, the Black Scout.
No. 5. Osgood, the Demon Refugee.
Illust'd, Illuminated Cover. Price 25c.; trade $1 50 per 100.
T. R. DAWLEY, Pub., 18 and 13 Park Row, N. Y.

C. W. FRENCH,
657 Broadway, New York.
Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods.
A large and complete stock of men's Furnishing Goods for the spring and summer wear, omitting all the novelties of the season, as they appear in Paris and London.
FINE SHIRTS
and
COLLARS
Made to Order.
JUST RECEIVED—A large stock of Colored Shirting Linen and Muslins direct from the French Manufacturers.

Great Sale
OF WATCHES AND JEWELRY,
BY
A. H. ROWEN & CO.,
(Agents for the Manufacturers.)
No. 25 Nassau Street, New York.
ALL TO BE SOLD FOR ONE DOLLAR EACH.

100 Gold Hunting-Case Watches	each $125 00
100 Gold Watches, sterling cases	" 75 00
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	" 50 00
500 Silver Watches	each 20 00 to 25 00
6,000 Latest style Vest & Neck Chains	" 5 00 to 20 00
1,000 Gold Rings and Gold Holders...	" 25 00 to 75 00
10,000 Gold Pens and Silver Cases...	" 5 00 to 8 00

With a large assortment of every description of jewelry for ladies' and gents' wear, varying in value from $3 to $15 each. The method of disposing of these goods at one dollar each is as follows:
Certificates of the various articles are first printed, enveloped, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the certificate you will see what you have, and then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch or any other of jewelry on our list for ONE DOLLAR.
Certificates sent by mail on receipt of the money: one for 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2 00; thirty, with a present, for $5; sixty-five, with a present, with a premium gold chain, for $10; one hundred, with a premium silver watch, for $15. Agents wanted, to whom we offer special terms. Send 25 cents for one certificate and our circular with terms. Address A. H. ROWEN & CO.,
P. O. Box 6270, New York.

Starr's Repeating Four-Shooter.
Safest Pocket-Pistol made.

1. It is the only pistol that can be placed in position to receive the cartridges with one hand. 2. It can be loaded in the dark quicker than any other pistol, and with no danger. 3. It carries a heavier cartridge than any pistol of the same size. 4. It is the safest pistol to load, shoot, or carry, as the cartridges are tight-fitting. 5. It has less parts than any other pistol, and is less liable to get out of order. 6. Another key, or other metal cartridge that can be purchased anywhere, either of these pistols will fire. Send for circular. Dealers' supplied. Address
MERRILL PATENT FIREARMS COMPANY, Boston, Mass.

California Wines.
Catalogue of Varieties, Notices of Press, Analysis of Surgeon-General, &c., sent free. Enclose stamp for 3-cent Stamp.
PERKINS, STERN & CO.,
189 Fulton Street, New York:
195 Tremont Street, Boston.

ARMY and NAVY AGENCY.
Pensions, Bounties, Pay, Prize Money, and all claims against the government promptly procured. Correspondence promptly answered. L. BROWN & CO., 3 Park Pl., N.Y.

To Consumptives.
THE ADVERTISER, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure.
To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure CURE FOR CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c. The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he considers to be invaluable; and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.
Parties wishing the Prescription will please address
Rev. EDWARD A. WILSON,
Williamsburg, Kings County, New York.

HARPER'S WEEKLY

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. IX.—No. 438.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER Y. AR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

THE ASSASSINATION.

In addition to the interesting sketches which we gave last week relating to BOOTH's capture we are able this week to give illustrations of GARRETT's house, on the porch of which BOOTH died, the ruin of GARRETT's barn in which the assassin was shot, and the house in which HAROLD resided near the Navy-yard at Washington.

The case against the assassins develops new features. President JOHNSON has issued a proclamation declaring that there is evidence in the Military Bureau which implicates in the assassination JEFFERSON DAVIS, JACOB THOMPSON, C. C. CLAY, GEORGE SANDERS, BEVERLY TUCKER, and other rebels, and offering $100,000 for the capture within the United States of DAVIS, and $25,000 each for the capture of the others. What this evidence is we can only vaguely conjecture, and therefore leave to further development. The fact that GEORGE SANDERS and BEVERLY TUCKER have, after most sturdily protesting their innocence, deemed it after all wiser to flee from justice, will not tend to produce a conviction of their innocence.

We give an illustration on page 317 of a meeting held in Johnson Square, Savannah, April 22, to take action in regard to the death of President LINCOLN.

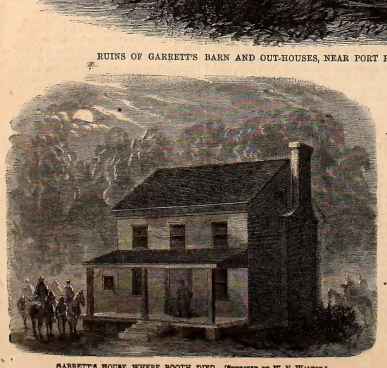
DR. VALENTINE MOTT.

VALENTINE MOTT, M.D., LL.D., whose portrait we give on page 317, died on the 26th of April at his residence, No. 1 Gramercy Park. He was one of the most eminent among our citizens, and will be remembered not only as a very skilful surgeon but also as a kind and philanthropic man. He was born at Glenecove, Long Island, August 22, 1785. His father, Dr. HENRY MOTT, was for many years a practicing physician in this city. The son graduated at Columbia College in 1806, and immediately went to Europe, where he pursued his studies with great ardor and success.

At the age of twenty-four Dr. MOTT was called to fill the chair of Surgery at Columbia College, remaining there until 1813. In 1820, he, with Drs. HOSACK, MITCHELL, FRANCIS, and others, established the Rutgers Medical College. About 1830 he began to devote his time to lectures and instruction, and his great abilities have ever since been the pride of the profession. His position as a surgeon was second to no living professor, and challenged from the renowned Sir ASTLEY COOPER the remarkable eulogy: "He has performed more of the great operations than any man living, or that ever did live." Dr. MOTT has left several works of great value to science and literature, among them a translation of "Velpeau's Surgery," the "Mott Cliniques," "Travels in Europe and the East," "Transactions of the New York Academy of Medicine," etc. Like the departure of HOSACK, MITCHELL, and FRANCIS, his co-laborers, the death of Dr. MOTT will mark an era in the history of the profession.

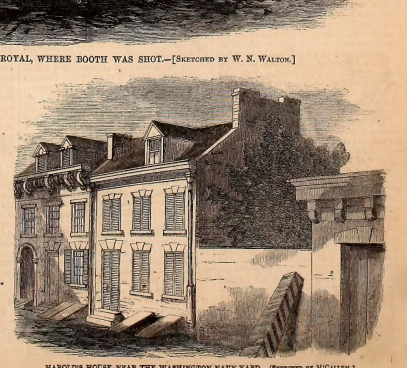
PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FUNERAL.

AFTER its departure from New York city the funeral cortège moved on its way to Springfield, where Mr. LINCOLN was buried May 4, 1865.



We give on pages 308, 309, and 317 illustrations of the ceremonies along the line of the procession. At Sing Sing a magnificent memorial arch was erected by the citizens over the Hudson River Railroad, of which we give a sketch on page 317. The arch was 41 feet span outside, and 38 feet high, and rested upon two pedestals. The whole was surmounted by an urn, 7½ feet high, from which drooped the American flag. Over the urn was thrown a wreath of ivy.

At Cleveland the train arrived on the 29th. A building had been erected for the especial purpose of receiving the remains. The building was twenty-four by thirty-six feet in dimensions, and was fourteen feet high from ground to plate. The roof was of pagoda style, and the rafters were covered with white cloth. Over the centre of the main roof, and directly over the catafalque, a second roof was raised about four feet, and covered in like manner. The catafalque consisted of a raised dais, four by twelve feet on the ground. The coffin rested on this dais about two feet above the floor. On the four corners stood columns supporting a canopy. The columns were draped and wreathed with evergreen and white flowers in the most beautiful manner. The ceiling of the building was hung with beautiful festoons of evergreen and flowers, while the four posts which sustained on either side the pagoda roof were hung with large rosettes of mingled evergreen and magnolia of two varieties. Appropriate drapery hung from the cornice of the building, and swung from pillar to pillar of the fairy structure. Gas lamps were attached to the pillars of the catafalque and to other points of the building, so that the remains could be easily seen at night, and to good advantage.



At Chicago the demonstration was, if possible, more impressive than at any other stage of the route. Among these was an escort of torches to the funeral train, showing the cortège as it passed to thousands who were themselves wrapped in darkness. On page 309 we illustrate the scene at the reception of the remains at Chicago. When the funeral car passed under a magnificent arch thirty-six young ladies in white placed wreaths upon the coffin or car. On page 308 there is an illustration of the catafalque upon which the coffin was laid at the City Hall.

RUINS OF GARRETT'S BARN AND OUT-HOUSES, NEAR PORT ROYAL, WHERE BOOTH WAS SHOT.—[SKETCHED BY W. N. WALTON.]

GARRETT'S HOUSE, WHERE BOOTH DIED.—[SKETCHED BY W. N. WALTON.]

HAROLD'S HOUSE, NEAR THE WASHINGTON NAVY-YARD.—[SKETCHED BY M'CALLUM.]

From Chicago the train proceeded on its way to Springfield.

THE SOLDIER'S WIFE.

"Or! weep not, weep not, mother,
And dry your tears, fond wife,
Your sorrow is not anguish,
You have not lost a life;
You, with a proud, sweet sadness,
In all the after-days,
Shall bear his name but uttered
In tones of loving praise;

"And all shall joy in telling
How in his happy youth,
With steadfastness unshaken,
He died to serve the truth;
While I, in bitter wailing,
Can only bow my head,
My heart alone preserving
The memory of my dead.

"For few among the many
Of all we daily meet
Will ever care to cherish
The ones who met defeat—
And yet he fought as bravely
As cheerfully he died,
No service to his country
Had ever been denied."

Thus spoke she, standing sadly,
In the dreary of the room;
Before her lay the sunshine,
Behind her lay the gloom:
She could not take the token
The light around her shed—
Her heart was ever sighing,
"My day of joy has fled!"

At last, with sudden courage,
She raised her timid eyes—
What sight had changed her pallor
To such a glad surprise?
What form is that approaching?
Whose arms enfold her now?
Whose lips are pressing kisses
On lip, and cheek, and brow?

His own! his own! no other!
Oh, welcome back again!
The swelling tide of rapture
Atones for all the pain;
And, listening to the story,
So mingled heard below,
Of light instead of darkness,
And joy instead of woe—
Her heart is singing praises
That he indeed was spared,
And in the hour of triumph
With double joy had shared.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1865.

THE BLACKS AND THE BALLOT.

In his excellent proclamation to the people of North Carolina General SCHOFIELD announces that the United States troops will protect them "until a civil government shall be established in harmony with the Constitution and Laws of the United States." This is a clear statement of the exact situation of the Provisionary States. It is desirable, upon every account, that there shall be as little delay as possible in inaugurating local governments in the States to their own loyal inhabitants. But it is plain that the immediate authority of the national government can not safely be relaxed until that proportion of the adult male population of a State which guarantees internal security is empowered to vote. The question of the hour then is, When the Government is ready to allow an election for any purpose whatever to be held in any such State, who shall be permitted to vote?

By the Constitution of Virginia R. M. T. HUNTER is a legal voter in that State. Would the Government of the United States allow him to vote there now? ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS, the Constitution of South Carolina did, and probably does, allow only those to vote who own ten slaves or ten thousand dollars. Would not the Government of the United States now permit other persons to vote there? Undoubtedly. There is no authority at present in Virginia and South Carolina except that of the United States; and they, and no other power, will decide who is to vote in reconstructing those States. The conditions of voting will be prescribed by the United States, and not by the State Constitutions. And if the conditions should be those named in the Constitutions they will be valid, not for that reason, but because the United States so determine.

In the States of which we speak there are three classes: the hopeless rebels, the poorer whites, and the blacks. The first of these classes is the smallest, and it will be always disloyal and dangerous, the Bourbons and Jacobites of American politics. The second and third are very large. Together they form the great majority of the population. By the census of 1860 it appears that, in the eleven late rebel States, the exact numbers were 5,447,222 whites, and 3,666,110 colored and Indian population. The present proportion is undoubtedly more favorable to the blacks. In two of the States they are a majority of the whole population. In five others they are more than one-third, and in every one of the old Slave States they are enough, when united with the loyal whites, to control the State. Upon what good grounds, therefore, can the ballot be refused to the loyal black citizens of the Southern States? They are the sturdy working-class. They have always been unfailingly true to the Government. Had they been otherwise—had they made common cause with the rebels chiefs, as the poorer whites were obliged to do—the triumph of the Government would have been indefinitely delayed. They are free men, and the plainest good policy requires that their self-respect be aroused, and their willing industry encouraged, without which no class of citizens is contented or valuable. There is but one way of securing this result. It is to give them the ballot.

That the mass of the population at the South, both white and black, is ignorant, is very true. But so are great masses of the Northern voters. Education is a good thing; but it appears that some of the staunchest patriots in the land can not read, and that some of the basest traitors are highly educated. Although we have, at the expense of their country, did not prevent LEE and his associates from trying to destroy their country. ROBERT SHAALS, whether he can read or not, is to our loyal hearts a more sacred and safer voter than ROBERT TOOMBS. Any black man who has succored a Union soldier escaping from the torture of rebel prisons is known to be as able to vote wisely as the extremely accomplished JUDAH BENJAMIN, or PIERRE SOULE, or ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS, or JOHN SLIDELL, or WADE HAMPTON, or CHARLES J. FAULKNER.

The question is not whether, abstractly, political privilege should depend upon education. It is, whether in the States, which we have in store to their peculiar action in our national system at the earliest moment, we shall require conditions of voting which contrary to universal fidelity has saved the nation which are not required of the whites in the same States, nor in other States of ignorant foreigners who can not speak our language, and who have no special interest in our institutions. Instruct them, say some, and their political rights will follow. But why is that equally true of the whites? The ignorance is the difficulty, why instruct the States to ignorant white men? By such a plan a discrimination is made at the outset against black color. The Government says, in effect, that ignorant loyal men who are black are not fit to vote, but ignorant loyal men who are white are fit. The Government thus flings its whole weight against the ignorant men who have been true to it, and favors those who have been false. "The mischief is inside the blacks." So it is. But it recognizes what is called the inferiority of the blacks, which has been always urged as the reason for enslaving them. And upon such a precedent, is the class of ignorant white loyalists who have believed, and do still believe, that blacks are made to be slaves, likely ever to receive justice then? The whites may not be able to enslave the blacks, but they will in every way despise and degrade them. No disfranchised class has a fair chance. And the fact that all the blacks have been made personally free will make them discontented so long as they are disfranchised. They will not consent to be ruled or governed by a minority. If they can not have legal redress they will still try to redress themselves. Is that the way to peace?

The colored race was brought into this country against its will and by an inhumanity and cupidity. It has wonderfully increased until there are now about four millions of them among us. Their blood in every degree is mingled with the blood of the whites. They are born and always remain here. Many of their ancestors came from Africa, as ours from England, Holland, Germany, or Ireland. They are an essential, integral, inevitable, most valuable and important part of our population. They have been enslaved, their color has been a sign of servility, and they have been made the victims of an inhuman prejudice and the objects of the most cruel partisan contempt. They have not resisted, for resistance was hopeless. They have protested silently by patient endurance. The man, of which we could not deprive them. Their long patience which merely hardened our hearts did not alienate God. When the hour came, He remembered. Our history darkened. The State right to enslave, which we held ourselves bound to respect, struggled with the human right to be free, which we could not see. The Union could not raise a hand, but the crisis came. The political and commercial effort to outrage nature and to treat men as brutes and chattels culminated in a civil war which has spent costly lives not to be counted, and wasted the long accumulated profits of our sin. It has steeped us in blood to our lips, and utterly failed; and kneeling among the dead and mangled bodies of our first-born and best beloved, amidst the fire and storm of battle, we have acknowledged that God has made of one blood all the nations of the earth.

We have now the power and the opportunity of settling this question of the colored rage in this country which has rent us from the beginning, and will heave and burn us until it is put honorably to rest. We have already declared them to be men and citizens. Our Government rests upon the broad principle that governments justly exist by the consent of the governed. For that principle the colored men fought with our fathers in the Revolution; and side by side in the fiercest fields of this war they have defended it side by side with our brothers. Within the enemy's lines they have been the guides, the messengers, the friends upon whom we have unfailingly relied. To see a black face was to find a true heart. Do we mean to be as faithful and honorable and friendly as they have been? Do we mean to trust them as they have trusted us? Do we mean to give them the chance of securing their own welfare as we have the chance of securing ours? Do we mean to be just? If we do, we shall give them a vote in the reconstruction of the insurrectionary States. If we are unwilling to do it, our victory has come in vain, and we shall pay the penalty of premature success.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

FOR some time after the late terrible events it was feared that Mr. SEWARD might have been so seriously injured by his accident and the subsequent murderous assault as to be compelled to retire from the public service. As that apprehension has been happily dispelled, and as the characteristic assertion of some of the Northern friends of the rebellion that Mr. SEWARD ought to retire because of his services in the Cabinet would be so distasteful to Messrs. LEE, DAVIS, WIGFALL, & COMPANY as to disincline them to submission, has also disappeared in derisive laughter, it is now interesting to know who suggest what they desire that President JOHNSON's policy will not have the cordial support of the Secretary of State. Therefore Mr. SEWARD must resign. Those who say this are not aware, perhaps, that Mr. SEWARD's friends in the Baltimore Convention which last June secured the nomination of Mr. JOHNSON as Vice-President, and that it is therefore a great waste of ingenuity to assume any grave difference between the President and Secretary in their general policy.

Mr. JOHNSON and Mr. SEWARD had served together in the Senate, where they were firm personal friends. Mr. SEWARD knew, as well as that his fellow-Senator, a hard-reformer, a stern Union man, a trusted representative of the people of the South as distinguished from the ruling aristocracy, was the very kind of leader by whom the political power of the aristocracy was ultimately to be overthrown in its own section. Mr. SEWARD watched Mr. JOHNSON's strong voice position in the dark winter of 1860-'61. He had heard his terrible denunciation of the conspirators in the Senate. As Secretary of State Mr. SEWARD had supported Mr. LINCOLN's "Border-State policy," as it was impatiently called; and it was only during that policy that Mr. LINCOLN had appointed his friend Mr. JOHNSON Military Governor of Tennessee. With his administrative ability SEWARD had been, of course, officially familiar.

As the time for the meeting of the Union nominating Convention approached, the perilous chances of the war made it essential that a candidate for the Vice-Presidency should be named whose character and career certified that, in case of the death of the Presidency, the established policy of the Government would not be changed or menaced. And we venture to say that the men whose nomination Mr. JOHNSON most earnestly desired was Andrew JOHNSON.

When the Convention assembled the nomination of Mr. LINCOLN was a foregone conclusion. But the nomination for the Vice-Presidency was not so easily determined. One point, however, was universally admitted by the wiser part of the Convention—that the services and honorable career of Mr. HAMLIN's career had been, and personally unexceptionable as he was, his nomination was not advisable. As the Convention was composed of men who had generally acted with different political parties, political comity required that the Union Convention of 1864 should not repeat the party mistake and the objects of the Convention of 1860, but, by naming a candidate formerly identified with the Democratic party, should prove that it was acting from patriotism rather than but to the hearty sympathy of all Union men in the country. Who should this candidate be? It was upon this question that the caucusing of the Convention turned. For whom would the sixty-six votes of New York be cast? As they went, so would the Convention probably go. It was soon evident that the choice practically lay between Mr. JOHNSON and Mr. DICKINSON of New York, and it seems to us indisputable that the final decision was made in the caucus of the New York delegation, and made by the friends of Mr. SEWARD in favor of ANDREW JOHNSON.

Mr. LUTHER TRIMBLE, the old political friend of Mr. DICKINSON, very properly and very powerfully led the DICKINSON movement. Mr. DICKINSON's long identification with the Democratic party; his instant and entire devotion of all his powers to the cause of the Union and the Government; his incessant and effective services from the outbreak of the war; his vast majority of one hundred and eight thousand votes in his own State as the Union candidate for Attorney General showing his great popularity in the State which it was necessary to carry at the Presidential election; his national fame; his spotless character; his heroic repudiation of old party ties; all these arguments were pungently and impressively urged by Mr. TRIMBLE, without an unkind word against any other candidate, and with an applause both in the caucus and Convention which showed how hearty was the appreciation of Mr. DICKINSON's claims and character among that great representative body of faithful American citizens. In the caucus of the New York delegation Mr. TRIMBLE was supported by some who had no sympathy whatever with the party to which he and Mr. DICKINSON had belonged, but who regarded the latter gentleman as a conspicuous national representative of what was called the War Democracy, and who thought that his nomination would greatly strengthen the ticket in the State of New York.

The discussion in the caucus was animated and exciting. It betrayed the differences and animosities which prevail in New York politics. But the one thing steadily obvious in all the discussions, in the spirit of opinion was that the friends of Mr. SEWARD were favorable to ANDREW JOHNSON. Mr. PRESTON KING and Mr. RAYMOND tearfully urged the irresistible advantages of a candidate who was a Southerner, a Border-State man, an old Democrat, yet a Union man who had been tried in the fire of the hate of the rebel chiefs whom he had denounced. They pleaded his solitary fidelity in the midst of the defection of his old associates in the Senate; his severe sufferings in the cause; the great confidence reposed in him by Mr. LINCOLN, who had intrusted to him one of the most difficult and delicate of responsibilities at a most critical time. They depicted the cordial sympathy between the President and Mr. JOHNSON, and the respect and confidence among the people of a man who had been born and bred in the humblest circumstances, yet who had risen to merited distinction. They recounted his services and his long practical experience of public life. They pointed to his administration of Tennessee, which only the bitter enemies of the Government and friends of the rebellion condemned, and contended that by selecting a candidate who did not live in the State of New York the dangers of political division in that State would be avoided. They did not forget to recall also that, in all the long course of a public life during which he had been an ardent and conspicuous actor, his personal character had been unsullied by suspicion. No man could deny that ANDREW JOHNSON was a name so identified with unswerving devotion and willing sacrifice to the country that it would be hailed with vast popular enthusiasm.

Meanwhile Mr. DICKINSON's friends were not idle, and his claims were impressive. Mr. SIMON CAMERON came to offer the fifty-two votes of Pennsylvania for Mr. DICKINSON if New York would unite upon him. Many of the New England delegations were ready to adopt him upon the same condition. But the friends of Mr. SEWARD, without denying the claims of Mr. DICKINSON, still held firmly that it was wiser to nominate Mr. JOHNSON. Had they yielded, Mr. JOHNSON would not now be President of the United States. It is pleasant to remember that when afterward in the Convention it appeared that Mr. JOHNSON had a larger vote than any other candidate, the friends of Mr. DICKINSON at once acquiesced. The vote of New York was thrown as a unit, and it was Mr. TRIMBLE who promptly and honorably moved that the nomination of Mr. JOHNSON should be made unanimous by the Convention. Nor is it less agreeable to record that one of the last acts of President LINCOLN, at the earnest request of the Secretary of State, was the appointment of Mr. DICKINSON, to his own great surprise, to his present responsible post.

If, therefore, Mr. SEWARD retires from the Cabinet, it will not be because the President is not of his choice. And why should he retire? He is in the plenitude of his powers, and his work is not yet done. Who would do it so well as he?

THE ASSASSINATION PLOT.

It is seems too incredible to be true that the conspicuous rebel chiefs were accessory to the assassination of President LINCOLN, it should be remembered that the crime is no more atrocious than many of which they are notoriously guilty.

It is surely not so black a crime to shoot one man as to murder hundreds of them by starvation. Yet that was done, and done with the knowledge of these chiefs who by a word could have prevented it. The poor crazed, emaciated, dying soldiers who were sent to Annapolis from within the rebel lines were tortured and slain with the complicity of DAVIS, LEE, BENJAMIN, and the rest. The fact of the starvation can not be denied. The proof is conclusive. And the men who would starve a sergeant or a private are not too honorable to connive at the shooting of the Commander-in-Chief.

The villains who tried to throw railroad trains from the track—who descended upon remote inland villages to pillage, burn, and kill—who would have burned down museums and hotels full of innocent women and children—who bought plague-tainted rags to disseminate promiscuous death—are surely not too virtuous to poison wells or to murder with the pistol or knife. And the men who did these things bore the commissions and pleaded the authority of JEFFERSON DAVIS and his Confederates. DID DAVIS or HUNTER or any of the rebel chiefs repudiate these acts? On the contrary, the Richmond rebel Congress adopted the crimes of BELL and made them their own.

Those who begin and prosecute a bloody war for the destruction of a mild and equal Government, and for the sole purpose of perpetuating the most odious outrage upon human nature—who deliberately spurn and deny the most sacred rights of man, embark in an enterprise of which arson, theft, assassination, and every form of inhumanity are the natural means and allies. Slavery imbrutes the masters, at least, whatever it does to the slaves. The spirit of a war which honored and applauded BROOKS for trying to murder SENATOR SUMNER is not too humane to inspire BOOTH to murder President LINCOLN.

Individuals, of course, will be held innocent until they are proved to be guilty. But the guilt in one class of those who are guilty in others quite as revolting, is not improbable. You may be as innocent as you assert, said the housekeeper to the man whom he found in the closet; you may not have stolen my purse, but what are my spoons doing in your pocket?

LABOR AT THE SOUTH.

We are glad to see that General SCHOFIELD, who commands in North Carolina, has issued the proclamation calling attention to the fact that the persons formerly held as slaves in that State are now free, and exhorting them to go to work, and to make their own bargains with such employers as they choose. General HALLECK, in Virginia, has issued a similar proclamation, but announces that the minors not cared for by parents the apprenticeship system will be introduced as soon as possible. Of course this distinction between classes of all races is odious. But General HALLECK will soon learn that no forcible general apprenticeship system will work.

Both of the proclamations recommend the masters to acquiesce in the new order. This is wise, for the practical difficulty in emancipation always proceeds from the masters, not from the slaves. It has been curiously illustrated even in some parts of the British West Indies, where the planters refused to submit heartily to the conditions of the case. They would pay but fair average wages. The laborers withdrew to the bush, and lived quietly and humbly there. The great estates languished. The crops failed, and the sullen proprietors, who were too angry and foolish to hire laborers upon fair terms, swore at the sentimental fanaticism which had ruined the fortunes of West India property.

But it does not seem to a candid mind a very terrible misfortune that gentlemen who have been living luxuriously without paying any wages for labor should be a little straitened because they can no longer force men to work for them for nothing. "Good for nothing, shiftless set!" sneered the planting gentlemen; "we knew they would not work without the whip." But if not working argues that a man is good for nothing, what were the planting gentlemen good for?

If the former masters of slaves in this country are wise they will not follow the West Indian examples.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMISSION.

As we suggested last week, the President of the Christian Commission has hastened to disavow the act of Rev. DR. PARKER and several others in calling "to pay their respects" to ROBERT E. LEE. He states that DR. PARKER is not connected with the Christian Commission, but is a member of the American Union Commission, and asserts that no authorized representative of the Christian Commission has ever called upon General LEE; and if any person connected with that body has so far forgotten his duty and self-respect, his conduct is severely condemned by the Commission.

The universal indignation with which the news of this call has been received shows how general and profound is the moral sentiment which that the chief soldier of rebellion is not considered a person to be "respected" by loyal men. The manner in which it was received by the rebel General LEE "magnanimous" has been most impressively rebuked.

GOLDWIN SMITH.

It is an agreeable duty to record that Professor GOLDWIN SMITH, whose delightful paper upon the "University of Oxford," the first part of which was published in the May number of Harper's Magazine, and which will be concluded in the June number, requested that the sum he was to receive from it should be given to the National Freedmen's Association. He thus adds another to his many practical tokens of sympathy for our cause which are already known. The friends of Professor SMITH will hear with regret that his physician forbids another visit to America, which he was contemplating. There is no man in England more justly honored by this country than GOLDWIN SMITH, and those who will more sincerely rejoice in his great success or more fully comprehend its scope.

EXHIBITION OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY.

In the large hall Mr. W. H. FURNESS has a portrait, No. 165, which pleases us less than any in the exhibition. The fine, firm modeling of the head, the force of the painting, and the skill with which the accessories are treated and perplexed, are all remarkable. The work is hard in some parts. The hands are awkwardly placed, and the drapery is rather stiff. But there is so much conscience and delicacy and power in the picture that a place in the first rank of our portrait painters can not be denied to the artist. His evident respect for his art, his subject, and himself, are inspiring, and give the work a sincerity which we find in few portraits. The fascination of a face in which archness is overflowed by serious sweetness, the virility dignity of the figure, a lark-like purity of impression—are rendered simply, and with a careful detail which does not destroy the technical unity of the work. It is a picture as carefully studied as a poem. The artist has evidently not learned, or doubted it is. He has worked at it with unfailing and patience and sympathy, and the result is worth all the pains and doubts and thoughts it has cost him. It is not pleasant to make comparisons by name. But let the spectator stand before No. 425 and compare it with some portraits near it, large and small. This is not muddy, nor mottled, nor superficial. It is not dramatic, nor vulgar, nor cold, nor conventional. It is solid, thought, intelligent, sagacious, unpretentious, and the artist has evidently much to do. Every truly good picture shows the painter and the spectator how much there is to do. But the fidelity and skill which this portrait reveals are the best possible auguries of the future success of Mr. FURNESS, by which we shall look with entire faith in their increasing excellence.

"True to the kindred points of heaven and home,"

Near by, No. 423, by R. M. STAIGG, is another admirable portrait. It has a certain refined and elegant character, and although wrought with great delicacy is not weak or feminine. The head is well ascended from miniature to portraiture with remarkable success. His pictures are always notable for a modest, manly, and truthful spirit in art and in life, as charming upon the shore upon the floor of the exhibition.

"Passing into the Shade" (318), by GEORGE H. BOUGHTON, is a delightful picture. To see it upon a cold February day is to command a sudden and cheerful autumn landscape. For it is autumn in the picture, but not sadness altogether, nor decay. The old Pennsylvania farmer sits in the sunshine, his withered leaves into the shade of the wood. They are very poor. Their dress is very coarse, and they stump along with a hoe. But there is a kind quality, her eyes cast down. She leans upon a stick on one side, and upon the other on the arm of her husband. She is older, doubtful, sad. As she goes deeper into the shade can she possibly recall, has she ever known—from some pleasant memory of her door, perhaps, in other years and singing the summer away—the yearning regret for youth and love and beauty? Is BEHAVE for EVERMORE? Does she too remember, and wistfully, with her old heart aching, recall

"The hops that dawned at twenty when I dwelt
In auld Tullibelt?"

If she does, her companion does not. With cheery face uplifted, pale, ignorant, he briskly encourages her, supports her bending sister and moves eretly forward into a shadow that can not dismay, and with a faith which fills the spectator's mind with all the bird voices and flowers and buds of spring. It is long since we have seen a more imaginative or poetic picture. It is entirely unobtrusive. It is poetic not sensational.

"A Lost Mind" (601), by ELIHU VEDDER, is an interesting and painful picture. The subject which leaves a painful impression still lacks an essential quality. Mr. VEDDER'S "Sea Serpent" of last year we can hardly recall now without a shudder. There is a tribute certainly to the talent of the painter, but not to the subject. "Suggestions of a Lost Mind" might be HAGAR, if there were an ISHMAEL. That is to say, that it is not at once seen to be an unmeaning human. Yet it is a work which commands attention. There is nothing commonplace in it. Indeed, the heaving, startling, restless hurry of the movement is almost terrible. The bare cliff, the blank sands behind, and on, on, no matter what lies before, on, on; and as you gaze steadfastly it seems as if the figure stride forth into the foreground. Just above to the left is another sketch by VEDDER, which hardly recall now without a shudder. It is a head merely, but there is a quaint vigor in the sketch which well befits the strange, dusky, tragic, half-fun, half-grim conception. HAWTHORNE would thought we had no material for romances in this country!

Among the landscapes, Mr. JERVIS MCENTEE'S "Last of October" (293) is admirable for its fidelity to the spirit and aspect of the autumn season. No actor seems to feel every part of his pictures more conscientiously than MCENTEE. Every twig and tendril and leaf and spire of grass is an affectionately rendered as the whole scene, and this without the technical Pre-Raphaelite treatment, but with a fidelity that reveals the enamored eye, and the sensitive heart. In MCENTEE'S landscapes there is not a careful study of the form only, there is also that translation of the soul and character of the scene which makes his works seem like reminiscences. This "Last of October" is one of those that strikes the spectator like a remembered melody. He may hold the May anemones in his hand, but his heart is sobered by the actual presence of the sad, though splendid, autumn fields and woods. These pictures also are truly American, yet none the less romantic. Our landscape, even if unsettled, inspires with exquisite melody as KEATS'S "La belle Dame sans Merci" as much as any landscape KEATS ever saw. This is the only picture by Mr. MCENTEE exhibited, and we are glad of the happy triumph of making the spectator wish for more.

PALM SUNDAY.

THE joy of Palm Sunday was sadly overshadowed before the week was ended. But the great event of the week, which the nation and world hailed as time passed. It was the day on which GRANT, our peace-maker in chief, received the surrender of the last of the rebel armies, and by his magnanimity added new lustre to his laurels. Mr. NAST has simply and strikingly commemorated upon page 313 and 314 of this paper the festival and the event which will be always associated with it in our history. The Lieutenant-General regrets that the true peace-makers, the fidelity, the love of liberty and union, and the unwavering resolution of the American people. These are the qualities upon which have conquered peace in the field, and they will confirm it in the council. LEE surrendered to GRANT the barbarous feudalism yielding to Christian civilization.

MR. PETER F. ROSENQUEST.

ALL who know him will hear with the sincerest sorrow of the death of PETER F. ROSENQUEST, for many years foreman for Rockhoffer & Ehrlich & BROTHERS. So faithful was this honorable and efficient man to his duty, so cheerful and serene in his demeanor, that the news of his death is a painful surprise even to some who had been in the constant habit of meeting him at his work. Mr. ROSENQUEST was one of the intelligent, sagacious, industrious, and patriotic men who are the glory of this country. Throughout the war his loyalty has been active and unfailing. His heart was sensitive to every shadow of misfortune unit darkened our cause, and to every ray of joy in our triumph. It is to the fidelity of such hearts that we owe the victory. Mr. ROSENQUEST had a true love of the work in which he was engaged. He was always busy, and by preserving his self-respect never failed to secure that of his subordinates. He had been with the HARPERS for twenty-five years, and their relations were never ruffled. His home was happy. His wife and children loved and honored him, and those who knew him best will mourn most truly the brave, kind, earnest, and honorable man.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE day of war bulletins is about over. There is no more thrilling interest in the nation's surveys, which has been made in terms similar to those granted to Lee. We wait to hear from Johnston, but his movements can be known to have been fully consummated. It is reported that PRESIDENT JOHNSON has issued a proclamation to Cabinet a proclamation declaring peace throughout the country. The specific steps of the war, about which there has been so much apprehension, will never probably be inaugurated upon any large scale. We hear of a few raids, on railroad trains in some quarters; but the fact that there was no attempt to kill all the prisoners, and in a time of peace, would attach to wantonness and violence, will deter even the most desperate from such barbarism. It is certain that all the prominent rebel generals have opposed any movement which the Southern people have for more to fear than the North. It is perhaps, after all, better for the Government to have prisoners than to show their real temper by overt acts of insurrection, as this will secure the most effectual punishment.

It is now supposed that when JOHNSTON first proposed a surrender he was merely playing for time. Of course these about 70,000 started off in irregular bands the moment their General's back was turned. Deserters, about 110 pieces of artillery were surrendered, and about 18,000 men and others. The following is General JOHNSTON'S farewell order to his troops:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE TENNESSEE,
NEAR GREENSBORO, May 1, 1865.

"COMRADES,—I have received from official evidence I expect you to observe the terms of the participation agreed upon for the discharge and dispersion of your paroled rebel citizens to the powers as well as you have performed the duties of soldiers. In bidding you adieu, I assure you I will decree comfort and restore tranquillity to your country. You will return to your homes with the admiration of our people, won by the courage and noble devotion you have displayed in battle. And the consciousness of a member with pride the loyal support you have given me, in part from your noble hearts and kill you forever the feelings of cordial friendship and with earnest wishes that you may be happy and prosperous.

"JOSEPH E. JOHNSTON, General."

As soon as Major-General Schofield took command of the Department of North Carolina, he issued the following important order in relation to the social status of the negro in that district:

"To remove a doubt which seems to exist in the minds of some of the people of North Carolina, it is hereby declared that, by virtue of the proclamation of the President of the United States, dated January 1, 1863, all persons in this State heretofore held as slaves are now free, and that it is the duty of the military to maintain the freedom of such persons.

"It is recommended to the former masters of the fleet men to employ them as hired servants at reasonable wages. And it is recommended to the freed people that they will be loyal to do so, they remain with their former masters and have faithfully served them, and that hereafter kindly and paid reasonable wages; or that they immediately seek employment elsewhere. The habit of work to which they have accustomed. It is not well for them to congregate about towns or military posts. It will not be regarded as a kindness."

General Wilson's cavalry command arrived at Savannah April 28, after having completed a most sweeping and unprecedented campaign. They have destroyed all fifty miles through the heart of Alabama and Georgia, in a region of country almost unmolested by the war. They captured Wilson left Chickasaw, Alabama, on the 22d of March, and moved southward through that State as far as Selma in the same time defeating and routing in several engagements the force of FORREST, ROBERTS, ARMY, and other notorious rebels, capturing forts and seizing and destroying immense amounts of rebel property. Thence he marched eastward and crossed into Georgia, carrying every thing before him. Four important towns, six thousand prisoners, over two hundred cannon, and large supplies of small arms were captured, and five hundred million dollars' worth of property belonging to the rebel Government was destroyed. Wilson's force of fifteen thousand men suffered very little hundred.

Jefferson Davis, who commanded the rear Webb on horseback, crossed the Red and Mississippi rivers in a skiff, and of his officers and escort, seven are prisoners on board the gun-boat Florida, and are now under guard at the Brooklyn Navy-yard. It was REED'S design to take the Webb to Havana, destroying on the way all the sentinel vessels he encountered, there sell his cargo of cotton, and then return and run the blockade of Galveston. Once in that harbor, he intended to convert his vessel into a torpedo-boat, and then destroy or drive away the blockading fleet. Ninety-two out of the one hundred and twenty-five men belonging to the Webb were captured and taken to New Orleans.

It appears now that Davis will find hard work to escape. He has been very nearly run down upon his native heath, and as he has turned westward in his flight there is good reason to believe that he will be captured in the vicinity of his own cavalry. Telegraphic communication is open from Washington to Galveston. It is said that the rebellion in possession of the Government in regard to Davis's complicity in Booth's assassination. Another is now on foreign government will be a moment hesitate to give him up. Davis is interested in nothing but escape. In addition to the assassination the Meridian Clarion, a rebel journal, says that Davis, Benjamin, Reagan, and other rebel men and address, or address by note Colonel A. J. M., 380 B Street, Washington, D. C. Office will also be opened in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and other cities. Office opens at 326 Pennsylvania Avenue, between nine and four."

NEWS ITEMS.

General Halleck has established in Richmond a court which will try all cases relating to the rights and title to the possession of real and personal property in that city and vicinity.

The Raleigh (North Carolina) Progress of the 24 inst. announces that the Governor of that State has left the capital before the approach of Sherman's cavalry. He crossed the Yadkin river and the rebel Legislature of that State.

The Tennessee Legislature has adopted a resolution in favor of offering a reward of five thousand dollars for the arrest of the fugitive rebel self-styled Governor of that State, Isham G. Harris.

FOREIGN NEWS

Our foreign files this week are of unusual interest. The commercial news of the English papers indicates a prosperous or characteristic. Those more in sympathy with the rebellion were in a state of despondency when Lee's conspiracy was subdued.

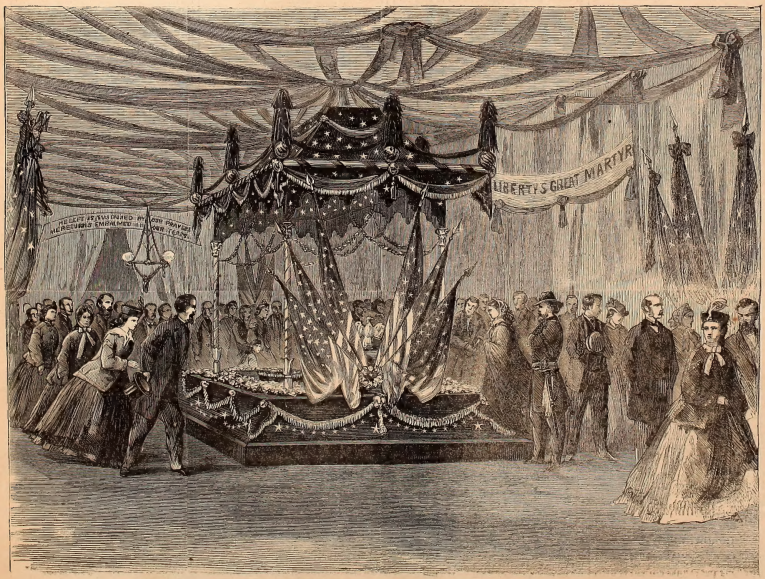
The London Times speaks enlogistically of our great Generals: "The war has brought out commanders of whom the world may be proud." Grant and Sherman. These drilled and disciplined their mixed forces until they were fit for every contingency of war, and when this was done the end of the Confederacy was plainly near. The superiority of the Federal armies over those of the rebels in actual conflict; their progress in discipline enabled them to make certain and speedy victory. Two years ago Lee would probably have escaped to Lynchburg, even after such a defeat as that which he suffered on the 9th day. But now the Federal Generals move with the rapidity and accuracy with the precision of the modern marshals. Their cavalry, which at the beginning of the war was the most inefficient arm, is now perfect. It is excellent, and they know how to use with effect the plentiful supply of horses with which their country abounds can furnish them. If the North has not gained in this struggle a high reputation for military genius, it has at least produced by the Confederates, they have shown a patience, a fertility, and an energy which entitle them to be ranked in the very first of military nations. They have now sufficiently proved their mettle to the world that the Monroe doctrine scarcy must be abandoned."

The news of President Lincoln's assassination created the most intense excitement in London. The Liverpool journals were filled with the deepest sympathy. The London Times editorially says that it would be received throughout Europe with a sorrow as sincere and profound as it awoke even in the United States. Mr. Lincoln's policy had steadily become approved, and Englishmen learned to respect him. A new epoch in the history of the war when the Confederate cause will not escape the dishonor cast upon it by these atrocious murders."

The London Telegraph says: "From vulgar corruption, from factious violence, from the tyranny of ignorance and baldness, this great ruler was wholly free. At last came the success which is the fruition of the labor, the reward of his patience and courage. He entered Richmond as a conqueror, but he bestowed no decree of proscription against the South, for the fight appeared to him to be at an end. He came in his hour of triumph to render again a beaten foe. He spoke very kindly of General Lee, one foreseen that in that case would be the end of the plunder for mercy and for peace a within killed him. Now for Lincoln's sake and for his country's sake it is unhappy."

On Wednesday there was only a day session of Parliament. The attendance was very slim, only about sixty members being present. They all signed the following address, which was presented the same evening to Mr. ADAMS:

"We, the undersigned members of the House of Commons, have learned, with feelings of profound horror, that the President of the United States has been deprived of life by an act of violence. We desire to express our sympathy at the end event to the American Minister now in London, as well as to the people of the United Kingdom in the future of that great country, which we trust will continue to be the home of freedom, prosperity, and peaceful relations with this and every other country."



END OF THE REBEL RAM WEBB.

On Sunday, April 24, the rebel ram Webb passed New Orleans having escaped from Red River. The excitement in New Orleans was very great, and astonished crowds rushed to the levee to witness the extraordinary spectacle. She passed under a full head of steam and hoisted the rebel flag. The Hollyhock was towed in pursuit, under command of Lieutenant-Commander GRIFFAN. After running some 24 miles below New Orleans Captain REED, of the Webb, discovered that not only was the Hollyhock in pursuit but that the Richmond was coming up in her front. The Webb turned, but when the Hollyhock dashed straight at her, she was in shore, and the officers and crew, springing on the levee, fled into the swamps, first firing the vessel in several places. The United States vessel sent out boats, and the Webb was boarded and every effort made to subdue the flames, but in vain. Upon entering the engineroom a man was found lying asleep, who had been greatly abandoned by his comrades to a fiery death. He was saved by our gallant seamen. His name is CHARLES PRESTON. The place where the vessel was burned was McCALL'S Point. After burning two hours the vessel blew up. Two hundred and seventeen bales of cotton were destroyed.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FUNERAL—BUILDING ERECTED FOR THE RECEPTION OF HIS REMAINS AT CLEVELAND, OHIO.

[SEE FIRST PAGE.]

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FUNERAL—THE CATAFALQUE AT THE CITY HALL, CHICAGO.—SKETCHED BY W. WAGE.

[SEE FIRST PAGE.]

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FUNERAL—RECEPTION OF THE REMAINS AT CHICAGO, ILLINOIS—SKETCHED BY W. WARD.—[SEE FIRST PAGE.]

THE GREAT CATHEDRAL WINDOW.

AN OLD LEGEND.

THE great west window was framed and done;
How proud was its painter, Father John!
The watchings by night at the furnace-door,
The long days' ponderings, all were o'er;
The fires were quenched, and the fluxes and paints,
The tracings of missals, and prophets, and saints,
Were rolled and labeled, and hid away,
And life for Friar John was all holiday;
His brushes were thrown in the nettly croft,
And so was the pallet he'd used so oft.

But when he saw that shining rood
Glow like sunset seen through a wood,
There rose in his soul a wicked pride,
And his heart beat quick with a fuller tide,
Nor thought of Christ, as his work he eyed,
If God in that work was glorified.

The window was a wondrous thing,
Blooming with an eternal spring
Of jewel-cups and precious dyes,
Deep and rich as the western skies;
At summer sunsets, and hues of dawns
That start up together after the showers—
The rose's crimson and iris bloom;
Sunny banter and happy glances,
Such as the depths of the forest hide;
Lapis, sapphire for martyr's robe;
Scarlet for Herod's fiery pride,
Ruby for Michael's flaming sword;
Golden splendor for crown and globe
Of David, the chosen of the Lord;
Amethyst, emerald, peacock's dyes,
Encircling a pale seed-lone,
A glory lighting it shed from skies
That shone like God's own dwelling-place;
And all these were blent and melted in,
That there was within a kingly glow,
A pales of light, a life-blood flowing,
Its varied colors ever showing.

What wonder, then, that as he gazed,
As in a mirror, he saw upraised
The veil that hides the spirit-world,
And the dim cave where Christ our Savior forled,
Showing behind that crystal vail
Fiends that shriek and howl and wail at his fall,
And members beaked, and fanged, and horned,
Goblins that him and his glass saints scorned,
And sneering faces above them all.

But Friar John prayed loud and long,
And chanted many a holy song,
And read his vesper service through,
And then put out his low,
Till heaven opened, and angel and saint
Came to comfort that sinner faint
With prayer and vigil and new again,
With purer eye and calmer brain,
He looked, and through the colored screen
That parted earth from heaven's serene,
He saw, through flushes of rainbow dyes,
The jeweled gates of Paradise.

ONE OF MANY.

I AM sitting by the open window and looking out upon the orchard, where the trees stand laden with apple-blooms, whose delicate perfume mingles in this twilight air just as it did four years ago to-night.

There is nothing changed about this old place as I look upon its picture now. There stands the stone-curbed well, over which the long sweep hangs, with its dangling bucket, moss-covered, and dripping with the moonlight—just as ever. There is Carlo's kennel, and Carlo himself is lying there, with his nose upon his outstretched paws, as if not to sleep, are squeaking and chattering in the eaves overhead. There dodge the swing under the oak.

Yonder comes Philip whistling up the road. He has changed no more in these four years than if he were an inanimate object of being, as he is, a middle-aged serving-man. Every thing my eye rests on is just the same—just the same. I wish it were not. But what would go on so unchanged?

It seems as if I had been dreamidge, here by the window in the sun of the warm May afternoon, and had just awakened to the fallen twilight. Has it by any wedding-night this night four years ago?

Yes. There, on the bed within this room, my boy is sleeping. Here on my finger is my "wedding-ring, and I kiss it, and it is as cold to my lips as his forehead. Here are my widow's cap and mourning garments. I am twenty-two. I was eighteen when Frank drew me to his heart, here in this very room, and called me his darling, his brave-eyed bride. Oh, how I loved him! You ladies who live in cities, and whose lives are crowded with events, who have heard and suffered one another another—whose hearts were older at eighteen than mine is to-day, even after all its deep joy and sorrow—you can not know how I loved my husband.

He was the only man I ever loved, remember—the only one. My father was so stern with me that him I never dared to love. My mother died when I was little, and my father kept me always under his eye, permitting me no such pleasures as those that country girls generally have, and books were my best companions. There were balls at the tavern at the cross-roads in winter, but I never went to them. There were picnic parties in the woods in summer, and husking-bees in autumn, and other merry-makings of which I sometimes heard, but which I never saw. Almost my only knowledge of life outside my own home was gathered from the glimpses I got of the neighbor-people on Sundays at the little church where all the farmers on Mormon Heights met to worship, and that was by peeping at the boys.

I went for little Frank, and held him up while his father wrapped him in his arms. The little fellow looked into the white and bearded face with a straight, earnest gaze, and then his eyes filled with tears and his lip began to quiver; but it was with pity, not with childish fear, for he put up his little hand to his father's mouth carressingly, and said, "Papa sick!"

Next day the doctor came. He sat an hour with Frank; prescribed cheerfulness, quiet, and generous diet. He instructed Jane in the duties of a nurse's office as nurse, for I would have no other; pressed Frank's hand cordially, and left the room. I followed him to the door.

"How long can he live?" I asked.

The doctor looked down and said,

"All will depend on the care you take of him, Mrs. Moreton. With such care as I know you will give him, he may survive a month, or even more. But I could not promise him a week of life. He has had a hard time. Damn the villains! They'll be torn to pieces like carrion if I had my way with 'em!"

When I went back to Frank he asked me what the doctor said.

"Don't conceal any thing from me, dear wife," said he. "There is no need. I have been on furlough many times with death for many months. I am ready to go."

Then I told him, and he smiled. There was a peculiar light in his eyes as he turned them on me, and said,

"Mary, I shall live till spring."

It was October then. So many months of life yet? It seemed like a priceless boon. Nearly half a year to spend in the sweet world of love that he crowded into that time! And I believed him, too. I don't know why, but I did.

The winter came on heavily, and he did not die. Sometimes I would feel a wild hope that he might recover, and he would see it shining in my eyes, and smile mournfully. But he had in answer to me spoken thought.

"In the spring," he said, very often—"in the spring I shall die."

The spring came too soon. The robins began to sing in the orchard, the bluebirds came to his old nest in the apple-tree by the well. Sometimes Frank would lie me open the window, so that he could hear the song of the bluebirds and the twitter of the sparrows under the eaves. Wrapped in heavy shawls, and sitting in his great arm-chair, he would look out at the window with his dreamy blue eyes till he seemed to forget that I was there.

"They are getting ready," he would murmur. "I shall hear from them soon."

I thought he was light-headed of the angels.

"What do you see out there, Captain Frank?" asked Doctor Thomas, one such day, as he entered the room.

"I am looking southward!" whispered Frank. "There will be ground news from the front very soon. That is what I am waiting for."

Then we understood him. The window looks toward the south, and commands a view of the road leading to the Heights six miles away. And it was there he sat when he died.

You must know that here on the Heights we get the news but once a week. We are on no highroad where travelers pass. The half-dozen farmers who live on the Heights with us, like us, go to the village on Saturdays, the common market-day. Then we get the weekly newspaper which is issued in the village every Monday morning, and contains all the events of the week that is past.

Frank slept none on Thursday night, and Friday morning he said that Philip must go to the village for the Republican.

It was afternoon when Philip returned. Frank sat by the open window, gazing earnestly down the road. It was a beautiful day. The air was as balmy as June, and the birds were flying about and twittering contentedly in the trees. Presently Philip came in sight around the bend in the road. He was waving the newspaper in the air, and seemed to be shouting something, but we could not hear. The orchard shut him from view a minute after, and I ran down stairs to meet him at the gate and get the Republican.

"Hooray!" cried Philip. "Victory!"

I devoured the news with quick eyes, and then ran up stairs to Frank, and knelt by his chair.

"Dear husband," said I, "the news is great. Do you want me to read it that you may hear it?"

"Mary," said he, "I shall never be stronger than I am this hour. Read it to me. Tell me the good news. I have waited long for it."

Amidst my tears I read the news. Richmond evacuated—was occupied by Federal troops! Jeff Davis was flying for his life, and Lee's whole army had surrendered to Grant. And there was also the account of interesting and startling. Peace had already dawned.

He listened with closed eyes, an expression of unutterable happiness on his white face.

"Glory!" he murmured, when I had done. "The night is past. Mary, I am happy now. I knew I should live to see the dawn."

An hour later he passed away. I sat at his feet, clasping his hand in both mine.

"Mary," he whispered, "you know the legacy I leave my boy. He is too young to understand now, but as he grows up teach him its priceless value. The day will come when he will be prouder to know that his father died for one of the martyrs in freedom's cause than he would be if I had made him heir to princedoms. I was a soldier, too! I were the army blue!"

His breath came fainter and fainter. His hand grew lifeless in my clasp. Then he rose up in his chair, gazed with brilliant eyes out at the window toward the south, waved his bony hand in the air, and fell back upon the cushions. I touched his cold forehead with my trembling lips, and heard his last faint whisper.

"Mary—don't forget!—I wore the blue!"

And he was one of many.

LOVE.

TELL me, maiden, maiden dear!
Tell me what is love!
In thy brown eyes shining clear,
On thy lips, O maiden dear,
Can I see it move?

It is two hearts, two hearts true,
Two hearts with one beat;
Two souls shining, singing through
Clapped hands of morning dew,
With one wish between the two,
And that wish to meet.

BROTHER'S LOVE.

"TIT, old fellow, the Title is mine; we can't both have that; but as to every thing else we go halves!"

He was my junior in this merry world by a quarter of an hour, and in spite of the representations and remonstrances of parents, nurses, governesses, tutors, poor relations, and friends, I never could understand why my brother, the handsomest, cleverest, pluckiest fellow that ever breathed, should be as thoroughly "distanced" in the race of life as though it had not been a neck-and-neck affair between us. I felt deeply that it had been by mere good luck that I had been landed the winner; and I rejoiced that he was so enabling me to give up all to my darling, my boy Arthur, dear old Tip.

"Was there any thing?" I thought, as I sat by the big bright fire in the room we called ours from at Chauntry, "was there any thing I would not give up to him?"

He was coming, my bright boy brother—the joy of my life—the best—the dearest—ah! there I stopped. A week earlier I should have finished the sentence; but now? Lovely, sweet Helen May, I close mine eyes, and see that mocking, winning glance, and I yield me. Hold May! "Golden! grâce! je me rends!" No longer dearest, oh Arthur! for there is one now, to whom I am devoted body and soul; here—here! Shall I forget Helen May? Shall I tell the lovely orphan governess that I am hers? I said so to her last night, shall I again? and kneeling to her shall I implore to be my own, my very, very own, my bride, my wife? Forever, forever, forever!

Hark! Yes, wheels! Coming crunching up the avenue to the great hall-door! So like Arthur! they never had to wait to the door, when every one else walks in without more trouble than the "lift up the latch and come in" of the nursery story!

But here he is—surely more glorious than ever. So like our mother! Yes, now that he has been away, absorbed in reading books for the fire, retailing off an account of his adventurous railway journey (Tip never made a railway journey that was not adventurous), he will want no answer from me, so that I can gaze at him slsefully and happily. Yet—like our mother? Yes, yet unlike, very unlike! Her hair, fair and soft, and silky, wavy hair; her eyes, blue and fond, but not now: cold and gray, they flash and seem as if hers could not; but then, Arthur, Arthur! never eyes before could brim with mirth, or—God help me! or so beam and glow with softness, without passion!

He was very tall, very graceful—and beautiful in youthful beauty! He had known no care, no disappointment, and his fair face was unbrowned as hers—my own sweet Helen!

"Home again! And the eve of good St. Valentine! My own Lord Harry! If half the valentines I ordered on my way through town are sent (and they better be) by the 14th, I shall be lucky. As proper initials put to each, there will be Cupid to remunerate, and no mistake, to-morrow! By-the-by, can't we get some to send to the little Trajectorys?"

"Well, we can't get any here, or—"

"Nonsense, Nell! I'll write them, I'll compose, print, illustrate—any thing you like—to pass the time till dinner."

"The 14th, eh? Why, we are going to dine with them to-day, so—"

"That's all right; and did the new governess turn out as pretty as reported?" and Tip laughed; I did not like his laugh, nor that peculiar expression of his eye, yet I could not but smile, and I answered,

"You shall see, Tip! And now here's John with sherry and biscuits, and then we'll dress and drive over."

Arthur had been away from home three months, and all that time I could detect about him a certain traction of the restless, clear-cut upper lip, and—but that might have been fancy—a sterner set of the narrow lower jaw.

He went to his room to dress, and I remained alone. It had never been the custom for Arthur to greet me left me I yearned to see the tender, womanly eyes that recalled my mother—to hear the deep, rich voice that resembled my mother's. From the moment he returned I shuddered back into myself from the pitiless, hard smile on those faultless lips; from the careless, cruel sneer in those low, soft tones; oh, Arthur, my only one, my twin brother, my other self!

When we reached the Chase, we found a large party assembled. My first inquiry was for Miss May. Our hostess smiled, and her answer puzzled me.

"Really you have behaved so well that I think I ought to prepare you for a surprise; I don't think it has been quite fair, I—"

A rustling silence superseding the hum of conversation, I turned and saw Helen gorgeously attired. I have said there was a large dinner-party; but this did not account to me for the sight of that young face surmounted by diamonds, the slender throat clasped by a broad band of the same stones—armlets, earrings, all to match, and the dress corresponding in magnificence. I was bewildered; she came up to me—floated up to me—leaning on

Arthur's arm, and laying one soft unglo ved hand on mine, she took it and murmured,

"So you won't speak to me! Did you only like me, then, while I could be patronized as the poor governess?"

I held her hand, I gazed down into her eyes—sunny, mirthful eyes; was I cruel to quench their light in the shadow of my own sorrow? I only answered, "I shall be happy to make your acquaintance again, madam, in my character you may please to assume." So Arthur introduced us.

Gone, Helen May—my love, my love!

By right of precedence I handed Helen down to dinner. I knew her well now by reputation, and I knew also that Arthur was personally acquainted with her.

She was brilliant; she was fascinating; and last, to me, she was humble. "Would I have been so, if it had not been intentional the deception, with regard to me—could I pardon it? She was so used to find things comme de rose that she wanted to see how they looked through the eyes of a dependent; they looked, I suppose, very like governess, and she had caused them to let her personate the girl—for fun!"

What right had I to feel injured? Ought I not rather to rejoice that, now when she had resumed her rightful station, she still made so flattering a difference in her manner to me? A cooling, offhand, tormenting to others—with me, retiring, gentle, humble. True, but the charm was powerless, the spell was broken; I was free, for I felt that I had been deceived. Granted the deception was a harmless one; still, she had suffered my attentions —attentions such as might have seemed natural in themselves to an unpractised village maid, but which must have spoken volumes to a woman of polished wiles. Besides, we had stood together—only last night, her fair hand in mine; she had listened to my tale of love, she had accepted—what was it honest, was it fair (it was not kind), to deceive me "for fun?"

And yet I liked her.

She devoted herself to me throughout the evening with a childlike importunce mixed with a womanly humility which was irresistible. But—I had been deceived.

No. I did not love her.

We were in a room once more, Arthur and I, alone together. Raymond, is she not perfect?" looked up inquiringly. "Helen, I mean. She had no idea you were a brother of mine when she first met you. What an idea her passing herself off for a governess! And fancy me your wife, indeed! But there, she is such an actress—such a consummate little hypocrite! Little fiend, how she tortures me, to be sure!—but how I love her!

"Tip, Tip! O God!" I said no more, but this was enough; his voice, in its simple depth of truth in his last words, was like an echo of the cry of my heart, and had stirred my whole being. He saw this.

We stood up and grasped hands, looking into each other's eyes. He spoke first.

"Raymond! We neither of us know that she loves him!"

I answered, "I have told my love, Tip."

"And?" he interrupted eagerly, looking away.

"She neither accepted nor declined; you are not together to-night."

"Oh, Raymond! I too have told my love." He paused, and now I looked away. He continued: "She listened, Raymond, and she listens; and I spoke first three months ago, and you saw us together to-night."

"Is she heartless, Tip, or coquette, or worse?" Arthur's eyes flashed.

"Heartless, perhaps; coquette, surely; worse? Not even you shall suggest that!"

I bowed and sat down. I remembered what I had thought while waiting my brother's arrival in the pink drawing-room. "Was there any thing that I would not give up to him?" I asked myself. I knew there was one chance that I could not yield. No. I doubted her, I hated her; but oh, how I loved her!

We separated for the night. I was haunted by the legend of the fated house. As the clock in the turnip-and-table-cloth ghost by daylight, now; but at midnight a gloomy prophetic legend of what had been horribly real in the olden days. I seemed to see it all.

On the morrow I went the first thing to the Chase. I saw her in the morning-dress again, and I knew how I had first seen her, as now, three weeks since. I thought how he had first seen her, as last night, three months since. We sat together alone, for Arthur all my evening doubt and hatred passed away, and I only loved her more than ever. And at parting I raised her fingers impressively to my lips.

On my return home I found Arthur at breakfast with the hard look, which with him replaced sadness. He had seen more of the world than I had.

"Tip, listen to me! you are the younger: you try first—you know what I mean! I will not be first; but you won't fail. Go down at once to the Chase."

He looked at me. "You have been there already, Raymond."

It was not the words, it was the tone that made my blood boil. What he was he, that I should be the first chance to him? My younger brother! My—yes! my younger twin-brother; and I shuddered and turned away to hide the agony I could not suppress. I would not quarrel with my brother! When I looked up he was peering at me sternly; but the stern look over was but a purpose to me, threw his arms round my neck in the old schoolboy fashion.

"Dear old Raymond! noble, generous! But I suppose, you know, you don't care much for her—you can't love me if you wouldn't—By God! I wouldn't give her up to any man! No, not even you, dear, generous, old Raymond; but then I love her so!" And he gazed at me with his rare, frank, loving gaze, that had ever been dearer to me than woman's looks, until, until—Oh, Helen May!

* * * * * * *

So far my brother's narration, of which I found the rough MS. in his desk when I was looking over his papers the other day.

Poor Raymond! What an enthusiast he was! He nobly fulfilled his own wonderful standard. The sentence with which he began this story he more than carried out, nay, I will say, carries out; for I believe he still exists, a self-exiled wanderer in strange lands. Helen and I live at Chaumtry, and our eldest boy is named after him.

P.S.—My husband has just brought in a report of Raymond's death somewhere in Africa. Poor Raymond! Quite one of the old school—unselfish, generous, and so courteous; and ah! how well I remember his dark, handsome, grave face—I sometimes think it— * * * H.V.

Extract from the note which accompanied the above MS.:

"We were rummaging in an old trunk to find materials for dressing up, and I found this story. I read it to you, knowing you have a fancy for such quaint scraps."

Reader! have you such memories?

THE LOVES OF BEETHOVEN.

THERE is a prevalent idea that no man can be a great musician or a great poet without having been in love. As most men have a preference some time in the course of their lives, there does not appear to be any reason why we should form an exception to the rule. The question whether Beethoven was ever in love has, it seems, been answered in despair by his biographers. Baron Ernoay seems to have set the question at rest in a recent article published in the "Revue Contemporaine," but it is a bold assertion goes, and if he has not been misled by Dr. Wegeler.

His first love, it seems, was Jeannette d'Honrath, of Cologne. This young lady is described as fair, of an affectionate character, and enchanting manners. She took compassion on Beethoven, and to visit a family there to whom Beethoven was known, and this led to his forming an acquaintance with them.

Unfortunately for his peace of mind, the young lady no sooner received the addresses of a captain in the Austrian service, than she abandoned her musical admirer; and yet he was not a man altogether unworthy of being regarded with favor by a lady from a merely physical point of view in the young days. He had not then the stern, unattractive expression of countenance which characterizes the portraits taken of him in middle age. Yet, fried, who knew him well in his youth, says he was then of the middle height, broad-shouldered, and active—very active, indeed, strength. Add to this that he had a keen, penetrating eye, and a lively and characteristic physiognomy, and we have a fair picture of a man who might reasonably expect that the course of true love would run smoothly in his case. But those who remember the pathos of the well-known pathetic sonata, "Absence and Return," would be surprised rather than otherwise to hear that he had escaped the ordeal which falls to the lot of most lovers—that of loving well, but not wisely. In point of fact it appears that this sonata is connected with a love passage in his life, and that it refers, as to the following letter, written by him to Dr. Wegeler:

"In this letter he refers, in the most passionate tone, to the state of his hearing, which, in spite of all the remedies he had tried, was getting worse; and he was then about to quit Vienna, having been describing how hard he was working, even grudging the time he was obliged to devote to sleep, to complete a work that should secure him wealth. He

"For the last two years I have lived a solitary life," durs my I am considered a misanthropes, and yet I am the very thing of the kind. My amusement is always worked in me by a dear and most ravishing girl, whom I love and who loves me. I am once more in a few happy moments during these two years, and for the first time I feel that I am not soaring more than is right. I perfectly happy. Unfortunately our social position is not the same... and in my situation I really could not marry. I shall have much to struggle against in my art.

Some passages are evidently suppressed in this letter; but we can gather from it that his life was embittered by the opposition of the lady's friends to the aristocratic prejudices of the Austrians placed in the way of his marriage; for the lady on whom he had placed his affections was a countess. In this circumstance, perhaps, quite as much as to any democratic convictions, may be attributed the struggles he afterward so frequently against social distinctions.

This passion, which seems to have been the first experienced by Beethoven after he had reached manhood, ended badly for him. The lady abruptly broke off the connection, and left him to mourn over a ruined cause—and, to complete the measure of his humiliation, a count who was by profession a musical composer, a circumstance which was not subsequently got a ballet of his placed on the stage at Paris, where it was overwhelmed by the condemnation of the press. It is not known if the ballets was had in America one of the critics reached that country, but not only of the New World but of the other world.

The effect of this deception on Beethoven was most disastrous: it nearly drove him mad. The wounding his pride as a man and as an artist. He uttered no complaints; but his melancholy was such that it was easy to see that it was mental rather than like. One of his greatest admirers, who felt for him as a man and a musician, thought to relieve his mind by inducing him to take up his residence at a country-house belonging to her and her husband. Here he began to dream about the park, but instead of finding peace he became more and more despondent. The rustling of the leaves, the notes of the birds, delighted him. His fortune continually, until, as he said at a later period of his life, he began to feel that he was abandoned by God as well as by the woman he had loved so profoundly. This disappointment was near ending fatally. One evening he did not return to the house as usual, and it was supposed that he had suddenly set out for Vienna; consequently no alarm was excited by his non-appearance. Three days afterward he was discovered by a friend lying at the foot of a tree, in the most distant part of the park, nearly dead from want of food. The earnest solicitations of his friends induced him to abstain from any similar attempts to end his pain in this way; and it was not until many years afterward that it became known he had ever done so. Not very long afterward he had the opportunity of nobly avenging the deceit that had been practiced upon him. The distress of the lady he had loved became so great that she actually wrote to Beethoven to tell him of their condition, and to solicit for assistance. He did not comply with her request openly; but he played the part of the good Samaritan in secret, for he got a loan of five hundred florins on the security of his future compositions, and remitted it to her by a sure hand, without suffering her to know the name of her benefactor. It was not until twenty years afterward that Beethoven related the affair to a most intimate friend named Schindler, to whom the intelligence of his death was broken at him in very unceremonious terms. His magnificent compositions will render him immortal; but we can now see that honorable man will not keep the skeleton out of a man's closet.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

A MAN MILLINER IN PARIS.—It is curious that it should be an Englishman who regulates the dress of the Parisian "woman of the period." It is said by those who profess to know that Mr. Worth has raised himself into his present position—independent of his own kind as Brest Sebastopol. It is nine years since Mr. Worth established himself next door to the Imperial Palace, and now he has his villa. A lady goes to his "magasin," or whatever it may be called, and after explaining her proportion; she criticises and the judgment on the "possibilities" are given in the gravest and most decided manner. But a refusal to obey his mandate may be sometimes unpleasing; for there are certain dresses which he declares are so unspeakably unbecoming that Mr. Worth declines to have any thing to do with them. The customer is then left to her own devices, they must pay for his taste as well as for the materials which he furnishes. Of course, this lets, the dress which he generally names eleven or twelve hundred francs as the price of his services, is not to be taken as a standard, but, of course, it hallies with it, he is there to direct, to display experience, and to be paid for it. Besides, he has given the proper amount of consideration to the subject, he opens upon the fashions for the season, and their meaning, best suited to the individual lady. The next process is entirely a private one, and customers are not admitted; but in due time they present the lady for the first rehearsal. He receives her in a very quiet suit of dark roman (Mrs. Worth being genarally present), looks, criticises, directs; and the lady comes round in a few minutes little fulness there, at his command.

SPIRAL CLOCKS.—The principle of the Scientific American says that common brass clocks may be cleaned by immersing them in a boiling water. Some years ago this treatment may appear," he says, "it works well; and I have for many years found it the best way to proceed: they stopped from accumulation of dust or a thickening of old gum the pivots will frequently be boiled as pure or rain water, and dried on a warm stove, or near the fire."

ROMAN FRIGHTENER.—The Roman princesses, blazing with diamonds, are, it is said, worth seeing; but we should also have a weakness for these things, you may gratify it by attending one of the balls given by the Duke de Grammont-Caderousse. You may also see them at the Opera, in the Corso, and in the Villa Borghese, but it is there in proper costume. At one of these, given by the Princess Hohenlohe, in the Palazzo Torlonia, earlier part of the evening, six ladies, side by side, literally enlivened in the Grammont-Caderousse. The ladies were Princesses Torlonia, ranged radiant with a nimbus-like glory; there was a fascination in the very sight of them, and they seemed from the splendor. The possessor of these gems were Roman principles, and the Princesses Torlonia have been the possessors for many centuries.

It is well known that snakes are fond of milk. There was once a snake, not exempt from this weakness of its fellow-reptiles, which left just the following night as expedient to gratify its taste: It visited a room in which a child was asleep and every night when it was supposed to be soundly sleeping would creep into the bed, cunningly insert the tip of its forked tongue into the child's mouth and suck away the first its crying, while the hideous reptile substituted itself for the infant, which in the morning, by its natural food, the nurse sleeping on unconscious of having such a monster nursing.

This went on for some time, until the infant, being thus deprived of half its nourishment, began to waste—in this the suspicion was excited, and an old negress was set to watch the nurse as she slept. The monster was caught in the act, and expiated its offense with its life, while the poor baby, "by the application of the old woman," recovered its strength, and grew fat as before.

PURITY OF CHARACTER.—Over the beauty of the plum and the apricot hangs a delicate bloom, which none but a cousin then the fruit itself—a soft, delicate flesh spreads the bathing clothes, and a fine stripe very often marks that it is gone. The flower that hangs in the morning dew-spotted with the purity of the maiden's character was arrayed with jewels—one shake it so that the bees may drift, and a pure white flower over it is no more, and it can never be again what it was when the dew and the sunlight kissed it. Purity of character is a priceless jewel—it is a flower covered with budding hopes. Now lay your hand upon the glass, and by the touch the fair flower will be defaced. So there is in each heart a delicate treasury of character, which, when touched and defiled, can never be restored.

THE STONE.—The portion of the solar disk which is free from spots is far from shining with equal brightness. The ground is pitted with innumerable minute dots, or luminous specks, in a state of continual change. When a spot is observed with a powerful telescope, it is generally found to have a dark nucleus, almost black, surrounded by a greyish penumbra, which sometimes, but not always, has the penumbra, by bands more brilliant than the rest of the surface, and which are usually attributed to be the tops of immense waves which are symptoms of the violent agitation which the fluid photosphere is subject to in those parts. The dimensions of the spots are sometimes enormous, their magnitude in this form appearing to rival or to exceed the earth whole, without filling it. The earth's diameter is only eight thousand miles, and Herschel mentions a spot whose orifice was forty-two thousand miles broad in his sarcoss.

THE SALE OF ORIENTAL WOMEN.—The smugglers, who usually carry on their operations by night, generally contrive, etc., from Sinope or Trebizond, bring back generally a few Circassian girls, destined for the harems of the Constantinople market. These poor creatures suffer the most dreadful privations on the journey, obliged to be sold by night, and to select the worst weather, for the purpose of avoiding the observation of the police. Some, far from lamenting their fate in thus leaving their native at any rate, consider they are greatly favored in the good of by their fathers and brothers at trayine and fourteen pounds sterling. Others, on the contrary, bid an affectionate adieu to their parents and relations, and to their native home. For among the Circassians, as among every other uncivilized people, the hardest work falls to the lot of the women, who, in consequence, become soon wrinkled and aged, assuming the appearance of veritable hags at a very early period. The prettiest girls of a family are invariably selected for the Turkish market, and, indeed, so far as the means of the family will permit, in silence, and to extend from the fashionable drudgery. Many are taken away from their beauty. On arriving at a suitable age the damsel takes a formal leave of the members of her mother and sisters, while her father and brothers, using all precautions to secure her escape from the clutches of the Muscovite and the dangers of the sea, launch her upon the market with anxious speculations as to the amount which a commodity so valuable, though in their useless, may bring. For, although in some instances a slave, merchant may himself purchase direct from the parent, yet in most cases one of the male members of the family accompanies the precious merchandise to the place of sale, and receives the money himself from his future brother or son in law, generally leaving on his return a part of the proceeds of the sale in the purchase of some contentment for the wife, mother, daughter or sister whose loss he bewails at the moment to be most in request among his companions.

LOVE.—People are loved, not in the proportion to their intellect, but in proportion to their lovability. Intellect is power, but love is life. Love is the only thing for the purpose of guiding them into the promised land of peace and tranquillity. Instead of showing them encouragement of it by the way. They are no more the things in love with each other than they would be with you, and in love and temper, then the means are without the end; or than a child is in a hurry to get in the play ground, with pen, knife, and quoit.

SEWING BY HAND AND BY MACHINE.—The advantage to this and other countries of the sewing-machine will be shown by the following figures: Hem a shirt, made by machine, take 3 hours and 10 minutes each; by hand 13 hours 30 minutes—a saving of 10 hours 20 minutes. Hem a chine, taken 13 hours 6 minutes—by hand, 36 hours 45 minutes; a saving of 23 hours, by machine. Hem a sheet, by machine, 2 hours 30 minutes—by hand, 16 hours 27 minutes; a calico dress, by machine, 2 hours 30 minutes—by hand, 11 hours 45 minutes. Other articles are in same what similar proportions, and in no case does any one require more than a fifth space is made, by machine, in 2 hours 30 minutes—by hand, 6 hours 30 minutes—a saving of 4 hours, by machine. 2 hours 30 minutes—by hand, 10 hours 10 minutes. A like saving of time will be noticed by the machine in all the operative: for instance, a common frock-coat, by the machine, is made in 5 hours 30 minutes—by the hand, 27 hours 30 minutes; a linen vest, by machine, 3 hours 44 minutes—by hand, 15 hours 15 minutes; a fine coat, by machine, 28 hours 13 minutes—by hand, 131 hours 30 minutes; a pair of pants, by machine, 5 hours 30 minutes—by hand, 25 hours 16 minutes; a fine business coat, by machine, 10 hours 30 minutes—by hand, 50 hours; a great coat, by machine, 8 hours 14 minutes—by hand, 12 hours 30 minutes.

DEVILS.—The people of Morzine, in Savoy, a remote valley to the south of the Lake of Geneva, have for the last two years been the victims of a set of devils, to all the tokens which beset the Jansenist convulsionnaires. The devils are the spirits of two priests, who, it is said, prepared for her first communion, and who exhibited circumstances which point to supernatural agency. Their choice agency. From her the infection seems to have spread to the rest of the household, and to other men of possession in a village of two thousand inhabitants. The symptoms are described as of the most extraordinary nature, ing to the last degree. The efficient persons went through contortions which would make contortionists. They groaned and swer in one bound. They leaped like a steel spring and remained suspended in the air, or on the point of the feet toothed the ground together. A boy of twelve ran up a pine-tree with his feet high. Two men lifted a heavy stone as is said and stood on it head downward, with the feet in the air. Others, in the midst of a fit of cursing and blasphemy, would suddenly fall down in a swoon, and exhibit all the symptoms of the most profound trance. Others, again, would sing in this child, that sang in the church. The devils, it is said, have also their good-nature, are the boy immediately ran down because he had left his prayer-book behind him. Among the strangest sights are positions, invariably spoke of themselves in the third person, and commanded evil spirits to leave the persons whom they possessed, during a religious service by a bishop, who, however, refused to believe in the reality of the devils. How dreadful to have to return to hell!...I must leave Jean Marie, I must leave this earth. The devils say that I have five more, and among them an old devil. It is not Jean Marie's turn to go. Jean Marie is a saint, and is promised to be spirits of human beings, who were sufferers in purgatory, and who had left this earth. The devils declare one woman asserted that it had been damned for eating meat on a Friday. The devils declare that they are sent Friday to the Maire and ask for bacon, which the grossly superstitious people have always ready enough at the stop to the plague. Physicians were sent and could do nothing. Exorcisms were tried, and, as might naturally be expected, the excitement only made matters worse. Processions were made to the spot where the devils had fell upon him and his gave d'armes. They lifted strong men from the ground, and carried them through the air. Then, with a sudden bound, they sprang through the window of the house, and alighted on the roof. The gendarme and tried the effects of a high mass. It produced a fresh scene of excitement. The devils declared that they were vicious, and the bishop was glad to escape without actual violence. Processions of the Host were next tried to the Morzine with despotic power, and backed by the importunities of the Archbishop of Paris, have been tried in vain. Each cure. The cure was to preach against the possibility of supernatural intervention, and to oppose 20 francs dollars to put down any overt acts. By dint of exiling all affected persons from the neighborhood possible, he seems to have finally succeeded in beating the devils.

THE ORIGIN OF FLOWERS, AND THE EVOLUTION PROCESS.—Flowers are always open to, and, as a general rule, to them use a store or in a gland, but they are developed in the bud state. While the flower is forming the color, fragrance, but will the flower, and fragrance ceases. It is the same with vegetables, as in the case of the onion, of celebrating, as it were, the breath of a flower—going to the bud state. Now in the bud of a flower the fragrance is near to butter grease, and the color is the color of the grease. The grease is secreted by the blossom, and in turn themselves become fruit. The grease is the material of the flower, and the color of two desert-plates, and then fill one of water, and the other of melted butter. Then, with a pencil, carefully trace over with the second grease, as much as you can, and then wash the plate with water. The grease will not dissolve, and the color will be left. The blossoms, though separated from the plant, will continue to live for some days, and will not fade and delight. In the laboratory the harvest of flowers his weighed, and the butter is then extracted from the grease. The same antiquated process is employed to-day as in the most remote ages. Glass, and butter have been collected of this process depends on the absolute purity of the grease employed, and on great attention to this end. In the laboratory there are several thousand chassis (sashes), or frames of glass, on which the grease is laid, and which is spread, and upon this grease the blossoms are sprinkled or laid. The chassis are then put by in a dark room, and every day it is at near as possible like a window-sash, only that the frame is four inches thicker, or deeper. Glasses are placed on another, there is a space of four inches between every two glasses, thus allowing room for blossoms. Every sash, or sash, it about two feet long by eighteen inches broad. The flower blossoms are changed every week or every other day, as is convenient to the general work of the laboratory or flowering of the plants. The sense the grease, however, remains in the chassis so long as the flowers are renewed. Each time particular plant being used yields a somewhat different, and, indeed, is poured into tin canisters.

PALM
"THE SAVIOR'S ENTRY INTO JERUSALEM."
WE HOLD OUT THE OLIVE BRANCH TO OUR
ERRING AND MISGUIDED BRETHREN OF THE SOUTHERN STATES,
AND PLEDGE TO ALL OF THEM WHO ARE LOYAL A HEARTY WEL
COME TO ALL THE BENEFITS OF OUR FREE REPUBLIC.
LIBERTY

SUNDAY

THE SURRENDER OF GEN LEE AND HIS ARMY TO LIEUT GEN GRANT.

Th. Nast.

HONOR THE ILLUSTRIOUS DEAD,
AND HEARTILY SYMPATHIZE WITH THE SUFFERINGS
OF OUR GALLANT
HEROES AND THEIR FAMILIES.

UNION

HUMAN LIFE.

Before the beginning of years
There came to the making of man
Time, with a gift of tears;
Grief, with a glass that ran;
Pleasure, with pain for leaven;
Summer, with flowers that fell;
Remembrance fallen from heaven,
And madness risen from hell;
Strength without hands to smite;
Love that endures for a breath;
Night, the shadow of light,
And life the shadow of death.

And the high gods took in hand
Fire, and the falling of tears,
And a measure of sliding sand
From under the feet of the years;
And froth and drift of the sea;
And dust of the laboring earth;
And bodies of things to be
In the houses of death and of birth;
And wrought with weeping and laughter,
And fashioned with loathing and love,
With life before and after
And death beneath and above,
For a day and a night and a morrow,
That his strength might endure for a span
With travail and heavy sorrow,
The holy spirit of man.

From the winds of the north and the south
They gathered as unto strife;
They breathed upon his mouth,
They filled his body with life;
Eyesight and speech they wrought
For the veils of the soul therein,
A time for labor and thought,
A time for sin and for sin;
They gave him light in his ways,
And love, and a space for delight,
And beauty and length of days,
And night, and sleep in the night.
His speech is a burning fire;
With his lips he travaileth;
In his heart is a blind desire,
In his eyes foreknowledge of death:
He weaves, and is clothed with derision;
Sows, and he shall not reap;
His life is a watch or a vision
Between a sleep and a sleep.

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS,
Author of "Barbara's History," &c.

CHAPTER IV.

THE CHATEAU ROTZBERG.

Amidst the many hundred miles which it traverses from its source in the glacier-land to its dispersion among the border flats of the Zuyder Zee, the great Rhine River flows through no district so full of strange interest, so wild, so primitive, so untrodden as that deep and lonely valley that lies between Chur and Thusis in the Canton Grisons. The passing traveler hastening on to the Splugen, the wandering artist eager for fields alike hungry with scarce a glance or a thought for the gray peaks above, or the stony river-bed below the beaten highway. They little guess what green delicious valleys, what winding ravines, what legend-haunted ruins, and fragrant uplands jeweled with Alp-roses and purple gentian-blossoms, lie all unsought among the slopes and passes of the mountains round about. Still less do they dream that to some of those crumbling towers, from which the very ivy has long since withered away, there cling traditions many centuries older than Christ; or that in yonder scattered chalets, some of which cluster like swallows' nests on shelves of granite six or eight hundred feet above the level of the valley, there is yet spoken a language unknown to the rest of Europe. Even the historian and archæologist care to remember how there lie imbedded in that tongue the last fragments of a forgotten language; and that by the veigs of the mountaineers who speak it, there yet linger some drops of the blood of a lost, a mighty, and a mysterious people.

Thus it happened that William Trefalden, who was a keen archæologist as well as a clergyman, but only a brilliant, unscrupulous man of the world, every fibre of whose active brain was busy plotting with a thousand perfidies, which he knew, nor cared to know, any of these things; but took his way up the valley of Domleschg without heeding a thought upon its people or traditions.

It was about five o'clock in the afternoon of the fourth day from that on which he left London. He had been on the road two nights out of the three; and yet his eye looked none the less bright, and his cheek none the paler. As he strode along in the deep shade, glancing up from time to time at the sunny heights above him, and his step grew freer, and his bearing more assured than usual. There was not a soul of travel on his garments. The shabby office coat no longer rabbi associated with its wearer in the minds of his clerks, was discarded for a suit of fashionable cut and indefinite hue, such as the British tourist delighteth to honor. His gloves and linen were faultless. Even his boots, although he was on foot, were almost free from dust. He looked, in short, so well dressed, and so unlike his daily self, that it may be doubted whether even Mr. Abel Keckwich would have recognized his employer at the first glance, if that astute head clerk could by any possibility have met him on the way.

Absorbed in thought as he was, however, Mr. Trefalden passed every now and then to reconnoitre the principal features of the valley, and make certain of his landmarks. The village from which he had started was already left two miles behind; and, save a ruined watch-tower on a pedestal of rock some eighty feet above the level of the road, there was no ancestral building in sight. The Hinter Rhine, with its gray waters still dull from the glacier, ran brawling past him all the way. There were pines formed climbing up the spurs of the mountains; and flocks of brown goats, with little tinkling bells about their necks, browsing on the green slopes of lower down. Far above the sound of these little bells, uplifted, as it were, upon gigantic precipices of bare granite, rose, incongruously enough, a whole upper world of rich pasture lands, cultivated fields, blossom-laden cherry-trees, and tiny hamlets, which, from the valley, looked like carved toys scattered over the velvet sward. Higher still, came barren mountain ranges of stunted firs, and rugged crags among which the unmelted snow lay in broad, irregular patches, while far away to the right, where another valley seemed to open westward, rose a mountain loftier than all the rest, from the summit of which a vast glacier hung over its own fold like an illitered to the sun, like sculptured drapery depending from the shoulder of some colossal statue.

But William Trefalden had no eyes for this grand scene. To him, at this moment, the mountains were but sign-posts, and the sun a lamp to light him on his way. He was seeking for a certain road-side chapel which, he had been told, he should find a path leading to the Château Rotzberg. He knew that he had not yet passed the shrine, and that by it he must be near it. Presently a chapel-bell chimed from the heights, clear and sweet, and very distant. He paused to listen to its voice, and then pressed forward more rapidly. It was already a quarter to five, and he was anxious to reach his destination before the afternoon should grow much later. There was an abrupt curve in the road a few yards further on. He hastened to it, looking forward to this point for some minutes, and felt so sure that it must bring him in sight of the chapel, that when it actually did burst struck up at once through the scattered pines that fringed the waste-ground to the left of the road, and told the hours with a silvery cadence, as if he were familiar with every foot of the way.

As he went on the sound of the hurrying river died away, and the scattered pines gave place to thick plantation, fragrant and dusky. Then the ground grew hilly, and was broken up here and there by moss-covered boulders; and then came open daylight again, and a space of smooth sward, and a steep pathway leading up to another line of pines. This pavement-like path was so precipitous that the path had in some places been laid down in flights of rough steps, and also in lengths of pine trunks, so as to form a kind of primitive staircase up the mountain-side. The sward, however, was short, and soon ended; and Mr. Trefalden had not been climbing it for many minutes before he saw a bright shaft of sunlight piercing the firs above him, and knew it to be advance. Then the moss became suddenly golden beneath his feet, and he found himself on the verge of an open plateau of rock, with a little pool, as deep shade some four hundred feet below, and the warm sun shining on the rock. Here was the steel-gray river, eddying but inaudible: there opened the broad Rheinthal, leading away into softer distances, with blue mountains and glimpses of white Alps on the horizon; while close by, within fifty yards of the spot on which he was standing, rose the ivied walls of the Château Rotzberg.

This, then, was the home to which his great-grandfather's latest and most successful plot had, two-and-twenty years before—this the stately home-stead of the Rotzbergs! William Trefalden smiled somewhat bitterly as he looked and looked upon it.

It was a thoroughly Swiss medieval dwelling, entirely irregular in its outline, consisting of a cluster of some five or six square turrets, no two of which were of the same size or height. They were surmounted by high, steep roofs of slate and grotesque weather-cocks; and the largest, which had been suffered to fall to ruin, was green with ivy from top to bottom. A low, square tower gave signs of only partial habitation. Many of the narrow windows were boarded up, while others showed signs of recent repair. There was a flower-pot on the sill. A low wall inclosing a small court-yard in front the south of the building, and was approached by a quaint old gateway supporting a sculptured escutcheon, close upon which was a bell-pull of iron.

None of these details escaped the practiced eye of William Trefalden. He saw all in a moment —poverty, incongruous neglect, and decay. He crossed the open sward, and came in sight of a steep road winding up from the valley on the other side, which he remembered to have seen a mile of wheels upon it. Passing under the gateway he observed that the iron hinges were effaced upon the shield, and how these fractures were such as could only have been dealt by the hand of time. Not even a weed grew in the flagging up amidst the paving in the court-yard, nor the mossy pent-house over the well, nor the empty kennel in the corner, remained untouched as he went up to the door of the château.

It was standing partly open—a massy oaken portal, studded with iron stanchions, and protected only by a heavy latch. William Trefalden looked round for a bell, but there was none. Then he knocked with his clenched hand, but no one came. He called aloud, but no one answered. At last he went in.

The door opened into a stone hall of irregular shape, with a cavernous fire-place at one end and a large modern window at the other. The ceiling was low, and the rafters were black with smoke. An old carved press, a screen, some chairs and settles of antique form, a great oak table on which lay a newspaper and a pair of clumsy silver spectacles, a curious Swiss clock with a toy skeleton sounding a little sentry-box just over the dial, a spinning-wheel, and a linen-press, were all the furniture that it contained. A couple of heavy Tyrolean rifles, with curved stocks to fit to the shoulder, were standing behind the door, and an old sabre, a pair of antlers, and a yellow parchment in a black frame hung over the mantle-piece. A second door, also partly open, stood nearly opposite the first. But all was silent.

Having surveyed this modest interior from the threshold, and found himself alone there, Mr. Trefalden crossed over to the fire-place and examined the parchment at his leisure. It was Captain Brandt's commission, signed and sealed by His Most Gracious Majesty King George the Second, Anno Domini seventeen hundred and forty-eight. Turning from this to the newspaper on the table he saw that it was printed in some language with which he was not acquainted—a language which was neither French, nor Italian, nor Spanish, but which seemed to bear a vague resemblance to all three. It was entitled Amity del Pievel. Having lingered over this journal with some curiosity he laid it down again, and passed out through the second door into the garden.

Here, at least, he had expected to find some one belonging to the place; but it was a mere kitchen-garden, and contained nothing higher in the scale of creation than cabbages and potatoes, with a border of beds of early salads. Mr. Trefalden began to ask himself whether his Swiss kindred had deserted the Château Rotzberg altogether.

Strolling slowly along a side-path sheltered by a high privet hedge, and glancing back every now and then at the quaint little turret-roof building with all its weather-cocks glittering, in the sun, he suddenly became aware of voices not far distant. He stopped, listened, went on a few steps farther, and found that they proceeded from some spot that lay beyond that on which he stood. Having once ascertained the direction of the sounds he followed them rapidly through the garden, and detected a gap in the hedge at the upper end of the garden. From this gap a flight of rough steps led down to a little orchard-terrace, and a wicket-gate by yellow—a mere shelf of verdure on the face of the precipice, commanding a glorious view all over the valley, and the setting full to the sunset. It was planted thickly with fruit-trees, and protected at the verge of the brink by a fragile rail. At the farther end, built up in an angle of the rock, stood a rustic summer-house newly thatched with Indian corn-straw. Through this point William Trefalden made his way through the deep grass and the wild flowers.

As he drew nearer he heard the sounds again. There was but one voice now—a man's—and he was reading. What was he reading? Not Gerner, surely. Not that strange dialect printed in the Amity del Pievel. Certainly not Latin. He advanced a little farther. Was it—could it be—Swedish?

Mr. Trefalden's Greek had grown somewhat rusty during the eighteen years or so; but there could be no mistake about those sonorous periods. He recognized the very lines as they fell from the lips of the speaker—lines sweet and strong as that godlike wine stored of old in the chamber of Ulysses. It was many and many a year since he had heard them, though at school they had been "familiar in his mouth as household words:"

About our heads elms and tall poplars whispered;
The brine in the sea-caves murmured like a lullaby.
The sacred waters of a limpid fountain
Fell cooling through the grots, and the sweet throstle
Sang loudly from the copse.

Who should this be but Theocritus of Sicily? William Trefalden could scarcely believe his ears. Theocritus in the valley of Domleschg! Theocritus in the hands of some rustic herdsman as the dwellers in the Château Rotzberg?

Having ended the famous description of the garden of Alcinous, the reader paused, and William Trefalden hastened up to the front of the summer-house. An old man smoking a German pipe sat there, bending over a book that were its only occupants. Both looked up; and both, by a simultaneous impulse of courtesy, rose to receive him.

"I beg your pardon," he said, lifting his hat. "This is, I fear, an unceremonious intrusion; but I am sent on a stranger, and—"

He checked himself. French was the language in which he could generally understand the Grisons, and he had inadvertently used his native English.

But the old man bowed, laid his pipe aside, and replied in English as pure as his own.

"Whoever you may be, Sir, you are welcome."

"I think I have the pleasure of addressing a relative," observed the lawyer. "My name is William Trefalden."

The old man stepped forward, took him by both hands, and, somewhat to his surprise, kissed him on each cheek.

"Cousin," he said, "thou art thrice welcome. Saxon, my son, embrace thy kinsman."

CHAPTER V.

MR. TREFALDEN AND HIS COUSINS BECOME BETTER ACQUAINTED.

Mr. Trefalden took the rustic chair handed to him by his younger kinsman, and placed it just against the entrance to the summer-house. It was his habit, he said, to avoid a strong light, and the sunset dazzled him. The old man resumed his seat. The youth remained standing. Both looked at the new-comer with a cordial, undissembled curiosity; and for a few seconds there was silence.

Mr. Trefalden's elder kinsman was fragile, pale, white-haired, with brilliant dark eyes and keen, sensitive lips, that trembled when he spoke earnestly. The other was a tall, broad-shouldered, broad-browed, powerful young fellow, with a boyish down upon his upper lip, and a forest of thick, golden-brown hair, crisp and curly as the locks of Chaucer's Squire. His eyebrows and eyelashes were some shades darker than his hair; and his eyes looked out from beneath them with an expression half shy, half fearless, such as sometimes we see in the eyes of children. In short, he was as goodly a specimen of the race of Adam as one might hope to meet with between Lucerne and the valley of Domleschg, or even farther; and this Mr. Trefalden could not but admit at the first glance.

The old man was the first to speak.

"You did not find your way without a guide, cousin?" said he.

"It was no very difficult achievement," replied the lawyer. "I enjoyed the walk."

"From Chur?"

"No—from Richmond. I have taken up my quarters at the 'Adler.' My landlord described the road to me. It was easy enough to find; not, perhaps, quite so easy to follow."

"Ah, you came by the foot-path. It is sadly out of repair, and would seem steep to a stranger. Saxon, go bid Kettli prepare supper; and open a bottle of d'Asti wine. Our cousin is weary."

Mr. Trefalden hastened to excuse himself; but it was all in vain. The old gentleman insisted that he should "at least break bread and drink wine" with them; and Mr. Trefalden, seeing that he had touched some tender point to this ceremony, yielded the point.

"You have a son, Sir, of whom you may be proud," he said, looking after the youth as he strode away through the trees.

"I have a son and a daughter," replied the old man, with a smile which was full of tenderness and gratitude.

"He is my great hope and joy," he replied; "the stay of my old age. He is the only child of my dear brother, who died twelve years ago."

Mr. Trefalden had already heard this down at Richmond; but he said, "Indeed?" and looked interested.

"My brother was a farmer," continued the other; "a simple, God-fearing churchl. He married late in life; I have been a bachelor all my days."

"And your brother's wife," said Mr. Trefalden, "is she still living?"

"No; she died two years after she became a mother. For twelve years Saxon has had no parent but myself. He calls me father—I call him son. I could not have loved him more were really my own offspring. I have been his only tutor also. I have taught him all that I know. The thought of his hearty love is rare to me. He is what God and my teaching have made him."

"He is a magnificent fellow, at all events," said Mr. Trefalden, dryly.

"My brother was almost as tall and handsome," said the old man, replied the pastor, with a sigh.

"What is his age?" asked the lawyer.

"He was twenty-two on the thirtieth of last December."

"I should not have taken him to be more than twenty."

"Twenty-two—twenty-two years and four months and a few days. He is strong in strength, in learning; but a boy at heart, cousin—a boy at heart!"

"All the better for him," said Mr. Trefalden, with his quiet voice and pleasant smile. "Many of the greatest men that ever lived were boys to the last."

"I have no desire to see my Saxon become a great man," said Martin Trefalden, hastily. "God forbid it! I have tried to make him a good man. That is enough."

"And I have no doubt that you have succeeded."

The old man looked troubled.

"I trust that it may," said he; "but I know not whether I have tried in the right way. I have trained him according to my own belief and ideas, as I said. I have done the best I have done for the best. I may have acted wrongly. I may not have made my duty to him and to myself clear. I prayed for light—I prayed for God's blessing on my work. I believed my prayers were heard. But I have had heavy misgivings of late —heavy, heavy misgivings!"

"I feel sure they must be groundless," said Mr. Trefalden.

The pastor shook his head. He was evidently anxious and ill at ease.

"That I cannot say—nor you do not know," replied he. "I can not tell you now—another time—when we can be longer alone. In the mean while, thank Heaven for the chance that has brought you hither. Cousin, you are our only surviving kinsman—you are acquainted with the world—you will advise me—you will be good to him! I am sure you will. I see it in your face."

He spoke with the very glad to receive your confidence and to give you what counsel I can," replied Mr. Trefalden.

"God bless you!" said the pastor, and shook hands with him across the table.

At this moment there rose a sound of voices from the farther end of the terrace.

"One word more," cried Martin, eagerly. "You know our family history, and the date that is drawing near."

"I do."

"Not a syllable before him till we have again spoken together. Hush! he is here."

A giant shadow fell upon the grass, and young Saxon stood on the floor of entrance stood between them and the sun. He held a dish in his hands and a bottle under his arm, and was followed by a stalwart peasant woman, laden with plates and glasses.

"The evening is so warm," said he, "that I thought our cousin would prefer to stay here; so Ketti and I have brought the supper with us."

"Nothing could please me better," replied Mr. Trefalden. "By-the-way, Saxon, I must compliment you on your Greek. Theocritus is an old friend of mine, and we read him remarkably well."

The young man, who had just removed the hook from the table, and was assisting to spread the cloth, blushed like a girl.

"He and I were my favorite poets," added the lawyer; "but that was a long time ago. I fear I now remember very little of either."

"I have not read Anacreon," said Saxon; "but of all those I know, I love Homer best."

"Ay, for the fighting," suggested his uncle, with a smile.

"Why not, when it's such grand fighting?"

"Then you prefer the Iliad to the Odyssey," said Mr. Trefalden. "Now, for my part, I always took more pleasure in the adventures of Ulysses. The scenery is so various and romantic; the fiction so delightful."

"I don't like Ulysses," said Saxon, bluntly. "He's so crafty."

"He is before all the truer to nature," replied Mr. Trefalden. "All Greeks are crafty, and Ulysses is the very type of his race."

"I am sorry for it, on that plea. A hero must be better than his race, or he is no hero at all."

"That is true, my son," said the pastor.

"I allow that the Homeric heroes are not Bayards; but they are great men," said Mr. Trefalden, defending his position less for the sake of argument than for the opportunity of studying his cousin's opinions.

"Ulysses is not a great man," replied Saxon, warmly; "much less a hero."

Mr. Trefalden smiled, and shook his head.

"You have all the world against you," said he.

"The world lets itself be blinded by tradition," answered Saxon. "Can a man be a hero, and steal? a hero, and tell lies? a hero, and afraid to give his name? Tell of Achilles was not one of that stamp. When Gessler questioned him about the second arrow he told the truth, and at once took the side for it."

"You are an enthusiast on the subject of heroes," said Mr. Trefalden, jestingly.

The young man blushed again, more deeply than before.

"I hate Ulysses," he said. "He was a contemptible fellow: and I don't believe that Homer wrote the Odyssey at all."

With this he resumed some observation to Ketti, who answered him, and took her departure.

"What a strange dialect!" said Mr. Trefalden, his attention diverted into another channel. "Did I not see a newspaper printed in it, as I passed just now under the house?"

"You did; but it is no dialect," replied the pastor, as he took their useless crockery away. "It is a language—a genuine language; copious, majestic, elegant, and more ancient by many centuries than the Latin."

"You surprise me."

"Its modern name," continued the old man, "is the Italo-Romaic. If you desire to know its ancient name, I must refer you back to a period earlier, perhaps, than even the foundation of Alba, and to a community long anterior to Rome. But, cousin, you do not eat."

"I have only an appetite," pleaded Mr. Trefalden, who found neither the goat's-milk cheese nor the salad particularly to his taste. "Besides, I am much interested in what you tell me."

The pastor's face lighted up.

"I am glad of it," he said, eagerly. "I am very glad of it. It is a subject to which I have devoted the leisure of a long life."

"But you have not yet told me the ancient name of this Romanoch tongue?"

Saxon, who had been looking somewhat uneasy during the last few minutes, was about to speak; but his uncle interposed.

"No, my son," he said, eagerly, "these are matters with which I am more conversant than thou. Leave the explanation to me."

The young man bent his head, and whispered, "Briefly, then, dearest father."

Mr. Trefalden's quick ear caught the almost inaudible warning. It was his destiny to gain more than one insight into character that evening.

The pastor nodded, somewhat impatiently, and launched into what was evidently a favorite topic.

"Look round," he said, "at these mountains. They have their local names, as the Galanda, the Ringel, the Aela, and so forth; but they have also a general and classified name. They are the Rhetian Alps. Among them lie numerous valleys, as this, the Hunter's Home, is. That is the chief. Yonder lie the passes of the Splugen and the Stelvio, and beyond them the plains of Lombardy. You probably know this already; but it is important to my explanation that you should have a correct idea of our geography here in the Grisons."

Mr. Trefalden bowed, and begged him to proceed. Saxon ate his supper in silence.

"Well," continued the pastor, "about two thousand eight hundred years ago, these Alps were peopled by a hardy aboriginal race, speaking the same language, or the germs of the same language, which is spoken here to this day by their descendants. These aborigines followed the instincts which God would seem to have implanted in the hearts of all mountain races. They wearied of their barren fastnesses. They poured down into the southern plains. They expelled the native Umbrians, and settled as conquerors in that part of Italy which lies north of Ancona and the Tiber. There they built cities, cultivated literature and the arts, and reached a high degree of civilization. When I tell you that they had attained to this eminence before the era of Romulus; that they gave religion, language, and arms to Rome itself; that, according to the decreed fate of nations, they fell through their own luxury, and were enslaved in their turn; that, pursued by the Gaul or the Celt, they fled back at last to these same mountains from which they had originated long centuries before; and that they erected some of those strong-holds, the imperishable ruins of which yet stand above your passes; and that in this Rhetio-Romansch tongue of the Grisons survive the last utterances of their lost poets and historians—then, cousin, I tell you that Homer belongs, you will, I think, have guessed already what the name of that ancient people must have been."

"Now I begin to understand, unluckily, that Mr. Trefalden had lately read, somewhere or another, a review of somebody's book on this very subject; so, when the old man paused, quite warm and flushed with his own eloquence, he found himself obliged to say with a sigh—

"If," said he, "I had not taken an impression—if, in short, I had not understood that the Etruscans were Rhetians, I should be—"

"You took that impression from Herodotus!" interrupted the pastor.

"No; for many reasons. I never was Grecian enough to do battle with Herodotus."

"From Tacitus, then?"

"Possibly from Tacitus."

"Yes, Tacitus supports that theory, but he is wrong; so does Herodotus, but he is wrong; so do Strabo, Cicero, Seneca, Pliny, Plutarch, Velleius Paterculus, Servius, and a host of others, and they are all wrong—utterly wrong—every one of them!"

"But where—"

"Livy suspects that the emigration was from the plains to the mountains—folly, mere folly! Does not every example in history point to the contrary? Do the dwellers in the city to the mountains for refuge; but emigration flows as naturally from the heights to the flats as streams flow down from the glaciers. Even the valley-Hellenics of Lesbos would have us believe they were Pelasgians. Dionysius of Halicarnassus asserts that they were the aborigines of the soil. Gorius makes them Rhœnician—Bonarota, Egyptian—Kiffer, Cassubian—Dalin, jestingly.

"I beg your pardon," interrupted Mr. Trefalden; "but when I said I had understood that the Etruscans were of Lydian origin—"

"They were nothing of the kind!" cried the pastor, trembling with excitement. "If they had been Lydians, we would not find Xanthus in Lydia have chronicled the event? He never even names them. Can you conceive an English historian omitting the colonization of America, or a Spanish historian passing over the conquest of Mexico? No, cousin, you have no excuse for saying that he who embraces the empty theories of Herodotus and Tacitus commits a grievous error. I can show you such archæological evidence—"

"I assure you," said Mr. Trefalden, laughingly, "that I have not the slightest intention to do any thing of the kind. It is a subject upon which I know absolutely nothing."

"And, indeed," began Saxon, laying his hand gently on the old man's arm, "I think you forget—"

"No, no, I forget nothing," interrupted his uncle, too much possessed by his own argument to listen to any other. "I have proved that both Dibbon pronounced th' Lydian theory a theme for only poets and r' ancists. I do not forget that Niebuhr, Micali, and many of the other opinions, at least admitted the unity of the Etruscan and Rhetian tongues. Then there are Niebuhr's own words, in a fine historical sense of supposing the Etruscan to be a mixed race, he believed the Rhetians of these Alps to have been the true stock; and maintained that they induced the Pelasgi to a state of vassalage. Niebuhr was a great man, a fine historian, a enlightened scholar. I corresponded with him, cousin, for years, on this very subject; but I could never get him to acknowledge that the purely Rhetian nationality of the Etruscan people. He always would have it that they were amalgamations. Well, well, perhaps. It was a great pity! I wish I could have set him right before he died."

Mr. Trefalden looked at his watch.

"I wish you could," he said; "but it grows late, and I shall never find my way back before dark if I do not at once bid you good-evening."

The pastor put his hand to his brow in a bewildered way.

"I—I fear I have talked too much," he said, shyly. "I have wearied you. Pray forgive me. When I begin upon this subject, I do not know where to stop."

"That is because you know so much about it," replied the lawyer. "But I have listened with great pleasure, I assure you."

"Have you, then, indeed?"

"And have learned a great deal that I did not know before."

"I will refer you all Niebuhr's letters, another time, and copies of my replies," said the old man, "if you care to read them."

He was now quite radiant again, and wanted only a word of encouragement to resume the conversation; but Mr. Trefalden had had more than enough of the Etruscans already.

"Thank you," said he; "thank you—another time. And now good-by."

"No, no—stay a moment longer. I have so much to say to you—so many questions to ask. How long do you stay in Richmond?"

"Some days, perhaps a week."

"Are you on your way to Italy?"

"Not at all. I wanted change of air, and I have come abroad for a fortnight's holiday or so. My object in choosing Richmond for a resting-place is solely to be near you."

The old man's eyes filled with tears.

"How good of you!" he said, simply. "I should never have seen you if you had not come here. Saxon, my dear boy, after all, we three are the last of our name. Cousin, will you come here?"

Mr. Trefalden hesitated.

"What do you mean?" he said. "I shall come again, of course, whenever—"

"I mean, will you come here for the time of your stay? I hardly like to ask you, for I know that Adler's inn is more comfortable than our little desolate eyrie. But still, if you can put up with farmer's fare and mountain habits, you shall have a loving welcome."

Mr. Trefalden smiled, and shook his head.

"I thank you," said he, "as much as if I accepted your hospitality; but it is impossible. We Londoners lead busy, feverish lives, and become confirmed slaves to all kinds of unhealthy customs. Your habits and mine differ as widely as the habits of an Esquimaux and a Friendly Islander. And I could not—I really could not have just supped—I am now going back to Richmond to dinner."

"To dinner?"

"Yes, eight is my hour. I can not depart from it even when traveling; so you see I dare not become your guest. However, I shall see you often, I hope, during the season here must do the honors of the neighborhood to me."

"That I will," said Saxon, heartily.

Mr. Trefalden looked at Tacitus."

"Yes, Tacitus supports that theory, but he is wrong; so does Herodotus, but he is wrong; so do Strabo, Cicero, Seneca, Pliny, Plutarch, Velleius Paterculus, Servius, and a host of others, and they are all wrong—utterly wrong—every one of them!"

"But where—"

"Livy suspects that the emigration was from the plains to the mountains—folly, mere folly! Does not every example in history point to the contrary? Do the dwellers in the city to the mountains for refuge; but emigration flows as naturally from the heights to the flats as streams flow down from the glaciers. Even the valley-Hellenics of Lesbos would have us believe they were Pelasgians. Dionysius of Halicarnassus asserts that they were the aborigines of the soil. Gorius makes them Rhœnician—Bonarota, Egyptian—Kiffer, Cassubian—Dalin, jestingly.

"I beg your pardon," interrupted Mr. Trefalden; "but when I said I had understood that the Etruscans were of Lydian origin—"

"They were nothing of the kind!" cried the pastor, trembling with excitement. "If they had been Lydians, we would not find Xanthus in Lydia have chronicled the event? He never even names them. Can you conceive an English historian omitting the colonization of America, or a Spanish historian passing over the conquest of Mexico? No, cousin, you have no excuse for saying that he who embraces the empty theories of Herodotus and Tacitus commits a grievous error. I can show you such archæological evidence—"

"I assure you," said Mr. Trefalden, laughingly, "that I have not the slightest intention to do any thing of the kind. It is a subject upon which I know absolutely nothing."

"And, indeed," began Saxon, laying his hand gently on the old man's arm, "I think you forget—"

"No, no, I forget nothing," interrupted his uncle, too much possessed by his own argument to listen to any other. "I have proved that both Dibbon pronounced th' Lydian theory a theme for only poets and r' ancists. I do not forget that Niebuhr, Micali, and many of the other opinions, at least admitted the unity of the Etruscan and Rhetian tongues. Then there are Niebuhr's own words, in a fine historical sense of supposing the Etruscan to be a mixed race, he believed the Rhetians of these Alps to have been the true stock; and maintained that they induced the Pelasgi to a state of vassalage. Niebuhr was a great man, a fine historian, a enlightened scholar. I corresponded with him, cousin, for years, on this very subject; but I could never get him to acknowledge that the purely Rhetian nationality of the Etruscan people. He always would have it that they were amalgamations. Well, well, perhaps. It was a great pity! I wish I could have set him right before he died."

Mr. Trefalden looked at his watch.

"I wish you could," he said; "but it grows late, and I shall never find my way back before dark if I do not at once bid you good-evening."

The pastor put his hand to his brow in a bewildered way.

"I—I fear I have talked too much," he said, shyly. "I have wearied you. Pray forgive me. When I begin upon this subject, I do not know where to stop."

"That is because you know so much about it," replied the lawyer. "But I have listened with great pleasure, I assure you."

"Have you, then, indeed?"

"And have learned a great deal that I did not know before."

"I will refer you all Niebuhr's letters, another time, and copies of my replies," said the old man, "if you care to read them."

He was now quite radiant again, and wanted only a word of encouragement to resume the conversation; but Mr. Trefalden had had more than enough of the Etruscans already.

"Thank you," said he; "thank you—another time. And now good-by."

"No, no—stay a moment longer. I have so much to say to you—so many questions to ask. How long do you stay in Richmond?"

"Some days, perhaps a week."

"Are you on your way to Italy?"

"Not at all. I wanted change of air, and I have come abroad for a fortnight's holiday or so. My object in choosing Richmond for a resting-place is solely to be near you."

The old man's eyes filled with tears.

"How good of you!" he said, simply. "I should never have seen you if you had not come here. Saxon, my dear boy, after all, we three are the last of our name. Cousin, will you come here?"

Mr. Trefalden hesitated.

"What do you mean?" he said. "I shall come again, of course, whenever—"

"I mean, will you come here for the time of your stay? I hardly like to ask you, for I know that Adler's inn is more comfortable than our little desolate eyrie. But still, if you can put up with farmer's fare and mountain habits, you shall have a loving welcome."

Mr. Trefalden smiled, and shook his head.

"I thank you," said he, "as much as if I accepted your hospitality; but it is impossible. We Londoners lead busy, feverish lives, and become confirmed slaves to all kinds of unhealthy customs. Your habits and mine differ as widely as the habits of an Esquimaux and a Friendly Islander. And I could not—I really could not have just supped—I am now going back to Richmond to dinner."

"To dinner?"

"Yes, eight is my hour. I can not depart from it even when traveling; so you see I dare not become your guest. However, I shall see you often, I hope, during the season here must do the honors of the neighborhood to me."

"That I will," said Saxon, heartily.

Mr. Trefalden looked at Tacitus."

WAITING.

Under the silent trees,
Here in the noontide glow,
Watching the winding line
Threading the valley below;

Waiting for one who is coming
Hitherward, early to-day—
Fair as a lily in moonlight,
Sweeter than milk-white may.

Near me the river flows
Silently on to the sea;
Yonder the kingfisher dips,
Dragon-flies glisten above.

Leaves are green, and the blue
Is soft as a wing overhead;
Shoots, like a sunbeam, the Kestrel
O'er the gold of the river's bed.

How have I longed for to-day,
With an aching void at my heart—
Can I believe she is coming;
Never again to depart?

Grant it, O thou bright Heaven!
For life would be dreary at best
Is a weary, aimless dream,
Dreamed in a night of unrest.

Yonder the quick white stream—
Oh! should she not be there!
Peace, wild heart, for I hear
The gleam of her golden hair!

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

CYNICAL SENTIMENTS.

A good-natured friend has favored us with some for a fool. To gain the name, do your friends' dirty work without hope of thanks or reward.

Why doctors give advice gratis is because it is generally worth nothing.

A modern bolus and a pauper are much alike. Each has to gain a settlement previous to admittance, the one by a parish.

When two women are seen talking earnestly together, an offhand may be taken that the subject of their conversation is them, or, if married, their husbands.

No man's character is so black but what it may be cleared up. Only let him get rid of the meal he sold.

Love in men is like the dictionary in dogs. Neither understand one word of it, but they think still they have had it.

A woman is always ready to praise a friend's dress when she wants to get a new one out of her husband.

A proverbial philosopher is a man who has to deal with the horse-leech had only one daughter, says the proverb, and she cried incessantly, "Give, give!" but the family must have been larger, since each husband fancies he has married her.

EPITAPH ON AN ÆRONAUT.—I shall rise again.

DOMESTIC MAGAZINE.—Wives who are always blowing up their husbands.

MISTAKEN EMPHASIS.—An elderly gentleman being ill one day at the Mansion House, was visited with the usual inquiries, which, however, he had not pronounced with due emphasis. "I thank you to take my compliments, and ask how old Mr. W. is." The messenger departed on his errand, and speedily returned, saying—"He's just sixty-eight, Sir!"

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.—Suspended Payment.

MORTIFICATION.—At a medical examination a young acquaintance of a gentleman was asked, "When does mortification ensue?" Think of the amazement his questioner must have felt, when he gave the following answer, "When you propose and are refused."

"Well, doctor," said a chap suffering with the toothache, "how much do you ax for the job? By Jove! but you did it quick, though!" "My terms," replied the dentist, "are fifty cents." "Fifty cents for one minute's work! Fifty cents, by Jove! Why, a doctor down at our place drawed a tooth for me two years ago, and it took him two hours. He dragged me all around the room, and had his grip half a dozen times. I never used such hard work—and he charged me only a quarter. Fifty cents for a minute's work! Oh, git out! you must be joke'in'"

Bachelors are not entirely lost to the refinement of sentiment, for the following toast was given by one of them at a public dinner—"The ladies, sweet-briers in the garden of life."

SHARP CHILD.—Recently the wife of one of the city fathers of New Bedford presented her husband with three children at a birth. The delighted father had his little daughter, four years of age, to see her new relations. She looked at the simultaneous babies in a few moments, and then, turning to the father, inquired, "Pa, which one are you going to keep?"

AUDIENCE TO LOW HABITS.—To tell lies and stick to them.

HOUSEHOLD WORDS.—Rent and Taxes.

"You make my blood boil," as the live lobster cried out in the sauce-pan.

A youth of nine or ten summers who attends to Sabbath-school, and is one of those "infants terrible," was asked the other day what was meant by long clothes, when the phylacteries of the Pharisees were. "Broad bands, such as ladies wear on their dresses," was the reply. "But the Pharisees didn't wear them for the same reason that the ladies do, did they?" "Oh, yes," was the wicked answer, "to be seen of men."

A dealer in ready-made linen advertises his shirts and chemises as possessing the unfortunate appellation of "male and female envelopes."

"Did you ever go to evening-parties?"

"Yes," said my friend Tom. "I used to, but I'm cured."

"How so?" said I, anxious to learn his experience.

"Why, you see," said Tom, "the thing is, I went to one some few years back, and fell in love with a beautiful girl there. She was—well, Sir, I courted her for many years, and I thought I had her sure, when she eloped with a fellow, who, I'm sorry to mention, was a cousin of mine!"

"She showed bad taste," said I, compassionately.

"More than that," remarked Tom, nervously, "Downright inhumanity is the word. I could stand being jilted by the girl I've broken my heart with twenty times, but my cousin, that I could; but to be cut out, like a suit of clothes, by the identical part of a man, is more than decimal fraction of humanity—that was brutality. But I owe my composure to a friend."

"Composure?" I nervously inquired.

"Yes, Sir, I'm happy with somebody else," and I took it. I pestonized the robber of my happiness, and ordered a full suit of clothes, regardless of expense. The tailor laid himself out on the job. I tell you they were stunning, you may believe me."

"But your composure?" said I, prompting him.

"I entered the tailor in his own bill, and paid—that I did. I never paid that bill—no, Sir, I didn't. But those interfal critters made the cause of all my future misfortunes—that they were."

"How so?" said I, with a smile of compassion.

"Wearing them I experienced my present wife. She told me so a few days ago, and I'm sorry to say it. I am bound to be square with that wretched tailor in the long-run. But with him a legacy on condition that he marries my widow."

THE BED.—A bed sees us born and sees us die; it is a theatre of changes, in which mankind has its most interesting dramas, laughable farces, and frightful tragedies. It is sometimes garnished with flowers, the altar of love, it is the couch of death, a resting-place on the way to the republic.

A gentleman passing through one of our public offices was attended by some clerks, and was advised to complain to the principal of what he did, that he was not attended here by some of the rascals of this place, and I came to acquaint you of it, as I understand you are the principal."

"Pap," said Mr. Brown's youngest son, the other day, can I go to the circus?" "No," was the affectionate reply. "Mr. R. C. "if you are a good boy I will take you to see your grandmother given this afternoon."

"A STRANGE STORY."—The present fashion of selecting odd phrases and mottoes as the titles for novels is open to much ridicule. A correspondent has sent us the following as the result of the cursory perusal of a publisher's circular:—"Bubbles of Enchantment," "Alone in the world," "Schoolgirl himself at taking a stroll. He passed "The House by the Church-yard," and, after lounging about the "Wheat and Tares," emerged "By the Sea." There, as it were, "Between Two Loves," "Against Wind and Tide," sped, "Beneath the Surface," "Breakers Ahead." This was "A Bad Beginning," and that of "Another Man's Guilt," returned into "Holiness," and encountered "Some Famous Girls" (with a "Wife Wanted"), while "Lights and Shades of Famous Women." He was introduced to "A Woman of Spirit by "Hook and Eye Without." He beheld "Honest Victory" and "Christine's Mistake," and heard "Carry's Confession" was "Told." He "Shattered Idols" and "Stupid Moths," quoth he; "Group your Nettles," but "Look before you Leap." "Be Wise Leonie, Days." Eleanor was "Put to the Test," Christian was "Paid in Full," and "Lucy" was "Reconciled to Mercy." It was just the "Darkest before Dawn," but Belini perceived "The Worst of Friends," "Bridged over" Pauline's "Beginning with "The Man in Chains," and "How to Manage it," he did not "Know Himself," but "Found Out" the "Secret of Power," "Lost and Saved," and "Under the Greatest Power of All," and fled, crying out "Quick! Quick! I am Pursued by Fate," "Lost in the Fog," "Lost in the Mist," "It was to be," and "Such Things Are;" for, though "Without Stronger," they are "Too Strange not to be True."

CHAMPION OF THE LIGHT WEIGHTS.—Panting.

EPITAPH ON A DRUNKARD.—"Screwed" up.

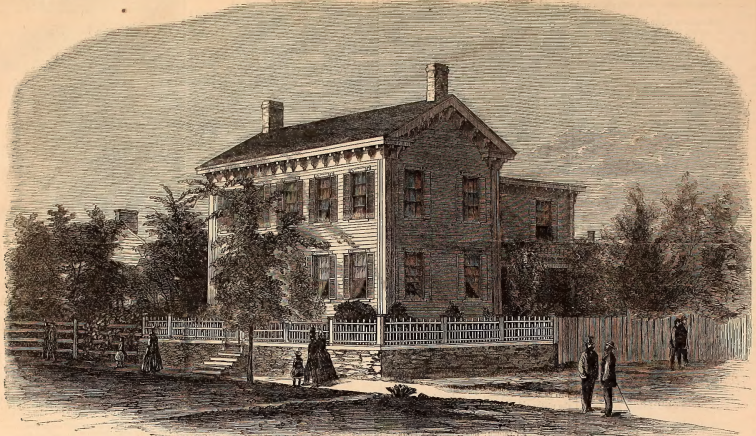
FOUR POINTS OF A CASE.—An Eastern editor says that a man is to be pitied who has himself for trouble by marrying two wives. A Western editor replies by assuring his contemporary that a man is to be pitied who has himself done the same thing by marrying one. A Northern editor replies to the foregoing editors of his acquaintance that he has enough by barely promising to marry, without going any further. A Southern editor says that a friend of his was bothered enough when simply found in company with another man's wife.

DO YOU GIVE IT UP?

My first does affliction denote,
Which my second was born to endure;
And my whole is the best antidote
That affliction can soften and cure!
We think.

If an ungrateful man's wife felt overboard, what letter would he exclaim?
Letter B (at her bed).

Why is a bee-hive like a bad patient?
A bee-hive is a beholder, and a beholder is a spectator, and a spectator is a bad patient.



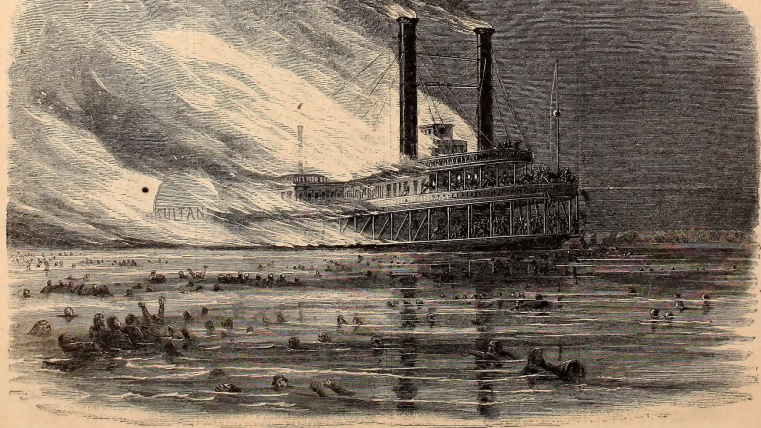
What is that no one wishes to have, but no one wishes to lose?
A bald head.

Why is a hen sitting across a gate like a half-penny?
Because there is a head on one side and a tail on the other.

My first is myself in a short little word;
My second's a puppet, and you are my third.
Lord.

Why was the elephant the last animal that entered the ark?
Because he stopped behind to pack up his trunk.

Why do fashionable ladies make the most economical housekeepers?
Because they make a great battle about a little waste of time.



PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FORMER HOME AT SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S OLD HOME.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S remains have been tenderly laid to rest at Springfield, his former home. The route, which little more than four years ago the then newly-elected President took from Springfield to Washington, has been retraced, under circumstances how different! Different as regards the terrible national drama of the last four years by what decrees of joy! Different as regards the personal drama in which our great leader has played, by what degrees of sacred sadness!

It was on the 11th of February, 1861, that President LINCOLN took leave of his fellow-citizens of Springfield, among whom he had resided for a quarter of a century. As he stepped upon the platform which was to bear him away he said: "I must now leave you—for how long I know not.... I go to assume a task more difficult than that which devolved upon WASHINGTON.... I ask your prayers." How the people hung upon every word which that man uttered on that memorable march to the front! Only the historian, who shall record the loose and ill-weighed utterances of other prominent men at that critical period of our history, can properly estimate to what degree Mr. LINCOLN moulded and almost created the national sentiment which from that moment prevailed. His statements were made not with JACKSONian ardor, but with all the firmness of a JACKSON, though couched in that argumentative style so peculiar to MR. LINCOLN. His insight into the great problem of the time did for him, though after a quieter fashion, what the attack on Sumter only could do for the masses. He did not, like JACKSON in 1833, say to the South: "Submit peaceably or I'll make you feel what virtue there is in harsher methods of procuring submission!" He carefully guarded against menace, but he said quietly and firmly: "I hold that the Union of these States is perpetual.... I shall take care, as the Constitution itself expressly enjoins upon me, that the laws of the Union shall be faithfully executed in all the States.... The power confided to me will be used to hold, occupy, and possess the property of the Government.... In your hands, my dissatisfied fellow-countrymen, and not in mine, is the momentous issue of civil war. The Government will not assail you. You can have no conflict without being yourselves the aggressors. You have no oath registered in heaven to destroy the Government, while I shall have the most solemn one to 'preserve, protect, and defend' it. We are not enemies, but friends. We must not be enemies!" Nothing JACKSONian in all that; but something of more than JACKSONian stability!

Four years have passed. LINCOLN has fulfilled his solemn pledge "to preserve, protect, and defend." Aggressive treason has been punished and crushed; and as the martyred President's remains moved homeward from the scene of his anxious but glorious career to the haven of his final rest, the people that erected arches of triumph at every stage of his last march did not forget, even in their sadness, that they had triumphed through him, their slain leader; and the very manner of his death disclosed to them the bitter malice of the treason over which they had gained the victory. They did not forget the anxiety with which they followed his

EXPLOSION OF THE STEAMER "SULTANA," APRIL 28, 1865.

THE LATE VALENTINE MOTT, M.D., LL.D.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY ROCKWOOD, BROADWAY, NEW YORK. [SEE FIRST PAGE.]

from the trees, even palings from the fence for canes."

A gentleman who recently visited the house thus writes us:

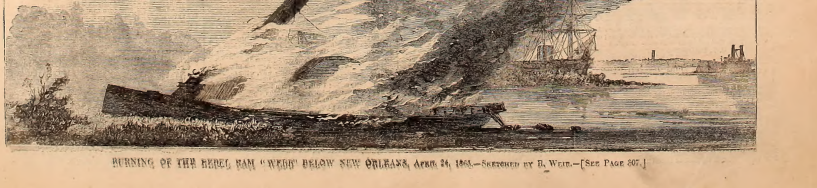
"I found the ante-Presidential mansion to be, exteriorly, not unworthy of the occupancy of a leading lawyer in the capital of his State; while the interior, as shown by the kindly-welcoming tenants of the President of the United States, revealed an exceedingly comfortable and roomy house; and as a portion of its movables was purchased from the landlord, I shall take the liberty of looking on the whole from a public point of view, and characterizing its furniture as at once abundant, good, and handsome, with enough of literary and æsthetic appliances, in the way of books, pictures, statuettes, and 'fine litter' generally, to make it fully as elegant as is consistent with its character. The parlors, dining-room, and library on the ground-floor, and the bedrooms up stairs (in ascending the staircase to which its tall inmate of four years ago must have been obliged to bend himself nearly double, I should suppose, to save his own head from the bulkhead above), contain many relics of its former occupants, perhaps the most interesting being a large book-case in the back-parlor, reaching quite up to the ceiling—which, however, somewhat corresponds altitudinally to the bulk head of the staircase. It is a substantial, handsome affair, of solid black walnut (if the somewhat dim light in which I saw it did not deceive me), without carving or ornament, the glazed upper leaves displaying a goodly array of standard books; and the lower portion having a folding-leaf desk, at which our worthy President used to sit, and with a row of pigeon-holes above, which doubtless used to hold his briefs when he was country lawyer.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FUNERAL—MEMORIAL ARCH ERECTED AT SING SING, APRIL 25, 1865.—[SEE FIRST PAGE.]

"When the ante-Presidential dwelling was first taken possession of by its late occupants it was but a one-and-a-half-story house, guiltless of balcony, cornices, brackets, or 'fancy mouldings' of any kind, in all of which it now rejoices; but as the family and legal reputation it jointly sheltered simultaneously increased, the mistress thereof—as is the wont in such cases—asked for more room and a more fitting exterior. Perhaps the master did not hesitate having the legal arguments revolved in his brain in front of the folding-leaf desk and its superjacent pigeon-holes knocked out of it by the din of hammering and sawing, or perhaps he thought it was best to leave well enough alone; but, for whatever reason, the desires of the mistress were not responded to as promptly as she desired; once when he was absent—attending some circuit, perhaps—she got the carpenters, and painters, and what not, at work, to add a story to it's height, and 'put on some gingerbread,' as he afterward expressed it. In due time the proprietor returned, and beholding the transformation, went about the town asking his neighbors if they knew where one ABRAHAM LINCOLN lived, and whose grand house it was that had gone up since he left?"

A letter to the Chicago Tribune speaks thus of the present appearance of the house:

"Plain, unpretending, and substantial, it is the type of Mr. LINCOLN'S character. The shrubbery in front of the house, principally rose-bushes, many of them planted by Mr. LINCOLN'S own hand, are in full leaf, and a beautiful rose vine clambers up one of the door-posts, and trails over the cornice. Lilies are sprinkled here and there, and closely-drawn trim grass-plats run down to the neat picket fence surmounting the wall. The columns of the piazza at the rear of the house are also twined with vines and creepers; and the apple-trees between the house and the barns showered the ground with the pink and white of the blossoms, and filled the air with fragrance."



course from Springfield to the Capital in 1861. Then all was uncertainty. But now, as they bore LINCOLN back to his rest, all was triumphant. Somehow they felt that this man had been linked in his life and his death inseparably with the national salvation that had been accomplished. It was fitting then, that, while they draped their streets with black, they should at the same time rear above his fallen head the arch of triumph.

Henceforth Oak Ridge, at Springfield, becomes, like Mount Vernon, the Mecca of our pilgrimage. Not only LINCOLN'S burial-place but his former homestead will become the centre of unusual interest. We give on page 316 an illustration of the house which President LINCOLN for fifteen years made his home. It was here that he received the deputation which came to officially inform him of his nomination to the Presidency. It is situated a few squares from the State House. The Tribune correspondent thus describes it:

"You remember that it is an unpretending two-story frame house with a one-story L, which, the house being on a street corner, fronts another street than the main building. It is, or rather was, some years ago, painted a yellow straw color, is plainly furnished, and contains but eight rooms altogether. In the small yard are several quite large apple-trees, now in full blossom, and there is some shrubbery. The favorite chair in which he sat and the desk at which he wrote are still there, as are many other of his old personal surroundings. To-day the hundreds of visitors are begging every thing available as souvenirs—sprigs from the shrubbery, blossoms

MEETING OF CITIZENS AT JOHNSON SQUARE, SAVANNAH, APRIL 22, 1865.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY READING & CO., SAVANNAH. [SEE FIRST PAGE.]

BURNING OF THE REBEL RAM "WEBB" BELOW NEW ORLEANS, APRIL 24, 1865.—SKETCHED BY B. WEIR.—[SEE PAGE 307.]

DO YOU WASTE YOUR MONEY buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOLD PENS, which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the BEST IN THE WORLD.

Avoid the shameless Upstarts, whose lack of brains compels them to attempt IMITATION, even in the advertisement. If you want the full value of your money, call on A. MORTON, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

"With Malice toward None, with Charity for All."

EVERY AMERICAN HOME should possess a copy of

Berger's new Bust of ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

It is a work of sterling artistic merit. Three sizes have been produced, in order to place within the reach of all classes a suitable memento of the Martyr Chief of Liberty.

Life size (17 inches high); $10; boxed and packed, $11.

Medium size, $5.

Small size, $3.

No clamp or packing the two smaller sizes.

Cartes de Visite, by mail, postpaid, or 25 cts.

As our orders are already very numerous for all sizes of this splendid work of art, we would request prompt application as necessary to avoid disappointment or delay.

 All orders filed and supplied in the order of their receipt. Address

BRENDISOHN BROTHERS.
103 Beekman St., New York.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials
AND DEALERS IN
ALL KINDS OF PHOTOGRAPHIC STOCK.
501 BROADWAY, N. Y.
Solicit the attention of Photographic Artists to their
STEREOSCOPES & STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS
Of American and Foreign Cities and Landscapes, Groups, Statuary &c., &c. Also, Everything Necessary for the Practice of the Art.
Albums. Our Catalogue will be sent to any address on receipt of Stamp.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS.
We were the first to introduce them into the United States, and we manufacture them in numerous styles, containing from 10 to 1000 pictures, from $1 to $25 each. Our ALBUMS have the reputation of being superior to all others, and are sold by dealers everywhere at manufacturers' prices. Send for circular, or 25 cents for sample. FINE ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER.
E. & H. T. CARD PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS.
Our Catalogues now embrace over FIVE THOUSAND different subjects to which additions are continually being made, of Portraits of Eminent Americans, etc., viz. about 100 Generals, 50 Army Officers, 100 Statesmen,
200 Reg. Generals, 100 Other Officers, 100 Authors,
225 Colonels, 24 Navy Officers, 100 Actors,
40 Artists, 100 Singers, &c., &c., &c.,
1,200 Copies of Works of Art.
including representations of the Most Celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statuary, etc. Colored copy of our Catalogue, 25 cents. An order for One Dozen Portraits from our Catalogue will be filled at the rate of $2.00, and sent by return mail.
Photographers and others ordering goods C. O. D. will please remit 25 per cent. of the amount of their bill with the order.
 The largest and best assortment of Scrap-Books and Soldiers' Pocket Albums for 19 Pictures, 75 cents.
24 Pictures, $1.00.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS
at Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 65 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

Whiskers! Mustaches!!—The celebrated HIMALAYA COMPOUND is warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in two weeks. An English patent article, which does no injury to the skin. Sent by mail, for $1. Address Dr. H. DE FORREST, Albany, New York.

LADIES' LETTER.

Five Anatomical Engravings.
Has information never before published.
By an Experienced Nurse and Female Physician.
Sent free in a Sealed Envelope for 25 cts.
Address MRS. DR. KEWLER, Brooklyn P. O., N. Y.

J. WILKES BOOTH Photograph, Price 25 cents. Address Union News Company, Chicago, Illinois.

New Books—The Art of Letter-writing, 50 p.; Boxing made Easy, 64 p.; Courtship made Easy, 64 p.; the Game of Whist, 64 p.; Guy Fox, each—all full of pictures. Catalogues free. Address HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

MADAME LE PIERRE'S
ART of PAINTING PHOTOGRAPHS
IN WATER COLORS.
COMPLETE IN ONE VOLUME, BOUND IN CLOTH.
Also a full set of FRENCH IMPORTED COLORS, in the original enclosed case, BRUSHES, PALETTE, and FIFTY DOLLAR. (Copyright secured.)
How foolish now! how charming! to be able to color your own photographs, without the assistance of a master, and at little expense! "Let your home be adorned with the works of your own genius."
To be able to color a photograph handsomely is certainly a superior accomplishment, and the art at present confined to the few (the object of Madame Le Pierre's work is to place within the power of Every Body the means to color photographs both pleasing and artistically.
Agents wanted every where throughout the country. Very liberal inducements offered. Send for a set of the handsomely bound in cloth, a full set of imported paints (in original case), and a set of Brushes, will be sent to any address, mailed free, for $1. Circulars sent free upon application. Address as above, SARAVIANNE & WILLIAMS, No. 167 Broadway, New York City.

AGENTS WANTED.

Any body can make $150 to $195 per day selling our valuable articles (samples and catalogues sent for 25 cts., or catalogues free), that sell for $1 to $5 each. Address
C. F. BRIDGE & CO.,
659 Broadway, New York.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHIOS? Then Cosgrove's Compound will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of an order. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 109 Nassau Street, N. Y.

MME. DEMOREST'S EXQUISITE TOILET PREPARATIONS—Lily Bloom and Rosalie Bloom for the Complexion, Curling Cream for the Hair, and Everlasting Perfume Pockets. Price 50 cents each. Sold by all Perfumers. Can be sent post free on receipt of price. MME. DEMOREST'S EMPORIUM OF FASHIONS, No. 473 Broadway, New York. Dealers supplied on liberal terms.

J. H. Winslow & Co.
(ESTABLISHED 1850).
100,000 Watches, Chains, Gold Pens and Pencils, &c., &c.,
Worth $500,000!
TO BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH,
WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE,
AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR TILL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO GET.
SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES,
All to be sold for One Dollar Each.

	EACH.
100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$115 00
100 Gold Watches	70 00
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00
600 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	18 00
2000 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	5 00 to 10 00
2000 Chatelaine Chains and Necklaces	5 00 to 10 00
5000 Oval and Chased Gold Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00
3000 Gold and Jet Revolving Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Gold, Gem, and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3500 Fronting Mosaic and Coral Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Ear-Drops' variety of styles, gold	4 00 to 6 00
5000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry, Gold and Jet	5 00 to 10 00
5000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry of various styles	5 00 to 10 00
2000 Ladies' Ball Buckles & Gold Thimbles	5 00 to 8 00
2000 Gold and Coral Pencils	2 00 to 4 00
5000 Solitaire Sleeve Buttons (various styles)	3 00 to 7 00
3000 Rosso Studs (variety of styles)	2 00 to 5 00
6000 Watch Keys, Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 6 00
5000 Gents' Massive Gold Rings	5 00 to 10 00
3000 Gents' Solitaire and Cluster Pins	4 00 to 10 00
5000 Gold Tooth and Ear Picks	2 00 to 6 00
4000 Plain, Chased, and Stone Set Rings	3 00 to 8 00
5000 Ladies' California Diamond Rings	3 00 to 8 00
8000 Magic Spring and Snap Lockets	4 00 to 10 00
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Mounted, and Cases	4 00 to 8 00
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00

All of the above list of goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various kinds of articles, one of each on one bank, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and, when ordered, one envelope will be delivered, postpaid to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the envelope you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for forwarding the Certificate, for paying and mailing and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every certificate sold, for which amount we remit remittances amount to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for forwarding Certificate, and remit the same to us in cash or postage-stamps. Great caution should be used by our subscribers in giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
No. 308 Broadway, New York.

J. WILKES BOOTH Photograph, Price 25 cents. Address Union News Company, Chicago, Illinois.

Closing Uicers Dangerous.

Many good persons are troubled with Ulcers and Skin Eruptions. Such persons should remember that they never be closed with external remedies. Brandreth's Pills will cure Ulcers and Eruptions by purging away those corrupt humors which cause them. So long as there no ulcers or eruptions will remain, all the impurities which occasional them having been expelled.

BRANDRETH PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, envelopes in full directions. Purchase none unless my PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. See upon it B. BRANDRETH, M.D. and the name of the PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING,
NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicines.

MESSRS. FOWLER & WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, have all works on PHONOGRAPHY, HYPNOTISM, PHRENOLOGY, PHYSIOLOGY, HYDROPATHY, MESMERISM, and the Natural Sciences generally. Also, Photographs, Engravings, Albums, Portfolios, Microscopes &c. Agents, Teachers, Physicians, and the Trade supplied.

Great Sale
OF WATCHES AND JEWELRY,
BY
A. H. ROWEN & CO.,
(Agents for the Manufacturers.)
No. 36 Beekman St., New York.
$1,000,000 Worth
To be disposed of at ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and to be paid for only when you know what you are to receive:

100 Gold Hunting-Case Watches ..... each $125 00
100 Gold Watches, various styles ..... " 75 00
200 Ladies' Gold Watches ..... " 50 00
200 Silver Watches ..... each $20 00 to 30 00
6,000 Latest style Vest & Neck Chns " 5 00 to 20 00
6,000 Gold Pens and Gold Pencils " 5 00 to 10 00
10,000 Gold Pens and Silver Cases.. " 5 00 to 8 00

And a large assortment of jewelry of every description for ladies' and gents' wear, varying in value from $3 to $100 each. The method of obtaining these goods at one dollar each is as follows:

Certificates, naming each article and its value, are placed in sealed envelopes and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail, postpaid, to any person of 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2.

Agents wanted, to whom liberal special terms and premiums. Address A. H. ROWEN & CO.,
P. O. Box 5,643, New York.

PRICES REDUCED.

Wheeler & Wilson Sewing Machines.
No. 3, Medium Size, Price $60.
No. 4, Large Size, Price $70.
Manufactured by the
WHEELER & WILSON MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
Nos. 343 & 345 Broadway, New York.

GREAT
Prize Distribution
BY THE
NEW YORK GIFT ASSOCIATION,
599 Broadway, New York.

EACH.
13 Elegant Rosewood Pianos, worth from	$250 00 to $300 00
15 Melodeons, Rosewood Cases	125 00 to 225 00
150 Silver Watches	15 00 to 45 00
100 Silver Reversing Patent Castors	15 00 to 40 00
100 Silver Fruit and Cake Baskets	15 00 to 30 00
500 Sets of Silver Tea and Table Spoons	15 00 to 30 00
100 Gold Hunting-Case Watches	75 00 to 150 00
150 Diamond Rings	50 00 to 200 00
500 Gold Watches	50 00 to 100 00
300 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00 to 75 00
800 Silver Watches	25 00 to 50 00

Diamond pins, brooches, and ear-drops, breast and ear-drops, gold coral, jet and gold, Florentine Mosaic, jet, and lava, ladies' sets, sleeve-buttons, sets of studs and shirt studs, solitaire and cluster gold pins, gold thimbles, lockets, new style bolt buckles, gold pencil cases, fancy work boxes, gold pens with gold and silver extension holders, and a large assortment of fine jewelry, of every description, of the best make and latest styles, valued at $500,000. To be sold for $1 each without regard to value, and to be paid for only when you know what you will receive. Distribution is made in the following manner: Certificates, naming articles and their value, are placed in sealed envelopes, which are well mixed. One of these envelopes, containing one certificate of some one article worth at least $1 at retail, will be delivered at our office, or sent by mail to any address, without regard to choice, on receipt of 25 cts. On receiving the certificate the purchaser will see what article it draws, and the article which may be from $1 to $500, and can then send $1, and receive the article drawn, or not, as he chooses. No blanks. Every purchaser will receive an article. Great care will be taken in forwarding prompt returns, and the article drawn will be immediately sent to the purchaser. Dealers supplied. Every satisfactie satisfaction guaranteed in all cases. Six certificates for $1, 13 for $2, 30 for $5, and 65 for $10, sent by mail, postpaid. All letters should be addressed

T. DELAFIELD & CO.,
599 Broadway, 2nd Floor, N. Y.

EMPLOYMENT, Pleasant and Profitable. Agents wanted to sell "Goon Boons." For particulars, address, with stamp, FOWLER & CO., Fulton, N. Y.

DR. GLOVER'S LEVER TRUSS retains and cures more ruptures than any other. Also, perfect ease and comfort. Elastic stockings, bnts, bandages, crutches, &c. No. 4 ASN STREET. Established 20 years.

The Great New England Remedy.

Dr. J. W. Howard's Vital Fine Compound has been for the last twenty years used throughout the New England States as the best medicine for Throat and Pulmonary affections, and all Kidney complaints and Constitutional Sores. Such as Throat, Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and Pain in the Side, Affections generally. It is a remarkable remedy for Kidney Complaints, Diabetes, Dirtiness of Water, Incontinence of Urine, Stone in the Kidney, Bladder, Gravel, Hydrocele, &c., &c., &c. For Piles and Fevers it will be found a most valuable remedy.

In most cases one bottle is sufficient to effect a cure. Give it a trial.

Prepared and sold by SCHAAR, Chicago, Illinois, Agents for Northwestern States.

JOHN D. PARK, Cincinnati, Agent for Southwestern States.

Sold by all druggists.

A N ILLUSTRATED ANNUAL OF PHRENOLOGY and PHYSIOLOGY for 1865, with Almanac for 100 years, 13 steel engravings, 192 pages, 25 cents. FOWLER & WELLS, N. Y.

NEW AND POPULAR MUSIC.—The Nation in Tears, in memoriam of President Lincoln, with monument, 35 cents; Weep, Weep, Weep, or, gone to the Better Land, impressive. Also, Love on the Brain, a very amusing song. Kiss me while I'm sleeping, songs like Harts with real Champaigne. Also Fatrolesme, What's the Matter? Every Body's Crazy, and a real gem: all with beautiful title pages. Just published by W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, 473 Broadway (Nos. 3, 5, and 7, Astor Place), and by all the local dealers, or mailed free on receipt of price, 30 cts. each —four for One Dollar.

Agents wanted every where, local and traveling. Steady employment the year round and big wages. For circulars, address, with stamp, FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, Jan. No. 20 cts. FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

Army, Navy, and Memorial Badges.
B. T. HAYWARD, 209 Broadway.

The above cut represents one side of the new Memorial Badge of our lamented President. The opposite side will be a true medallion likeness of Mr. Lincoln. We send a sample on the receipt of 50 cents. Every person in the Union wants one of these as a memento of the times. The Memorial Medal, suspended in the same way, with the date of its capture on an inside plate, is a true Representation of Grant on the other: I will send it on the receipt of 50 cts. I have now on hand the Registration Badge for every Corps and Div. in the Army. I will send a sample guaranteed silver, with your Name, Reg't, and Co. handsomely engraved thereon, on the receipt of $1 50. GOLD CORPS BADGES.—I will send a genuine 18-carat Gold Pin for either Div. or Corps, on receipt of $2 (3 sizes). Gold Badges of every description made to order. Agents, men and women. I will send each agent an illustrated circular, with the same terms as wholesale dealers.

B. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler, 209 Broadway, N. Y.

PHRENOLOGY, PHYSIOLOGY, PHRENOLOGY, Physiognomy, and Psychology, with characters of nations and individuals, given in the ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, 20 cents a Number or 30 cents a year. New Volume commences in July. To secure the Prize Portrait Double Numbers, with all the portraits, send at once to FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

Important Announcement.

GREAT SALE of
WATCHES, CHAINS, DIAMOND RINGS, &c.
One Million Dollars' Worth!
TO BE DISPOSED OF AT
ONE DOLLAR EACH!
Without regard to value!! Not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive!!!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES!
All to be sold at One Dollar Each!!

300 Music Boxes, from	$10 to $150
150 " with Bells and Castinets	500 " 800
1,500 Silver Teapots and Coffee Urns	5 " 10
1,500 " Chafing Dishes	10 " 100
1,500 " Cake Baskets	5 " 10
1,500 " Syrup Cups with Salvers	5 " 10
2,000 " Card and Dram Cups	5 " 10
2,000 " Castors	15 " 50
2,000 " Fruit, Cake and Cake Baskets	10 " 50
3,000 Silver Tea Spoons, per dozen	10 " 25
2,000 " Table " "	20 " 50
2,000 " Dessert " "	10 " 40
250 Gents' Gold Hunting-Case Watches	40 " 100
250 Ladies' Gold and Enamled-Case do.	35 " 75
500 Gents' Hunting-Case Silver Watches	20 " 40
500 Diamond Rings	50 " 100
5,000 Gold Vest and Neck Chains	8 " 10
5,000 Gold Coral Band Bracelets	4 " 10
5,000 Jet and Gold Bracelets	4 " 10
5,000 Gold Medallion Chains and Guard Chains	4 " 10
7,000 Solitaire and Gold Brooches	4 " 10
5,000 Gold Thimbles, Pencils, and Pens	4 " 8
5,000 Mosaic, Jet, Lava, and Florentine Ear Drops	4 " 8
7,500 Coral, Opal, and Emerald Ear Drops	4 " 6
5,000 Gold Coral and Emerald Finger Rings	4 " 6
4,000 Gold Fob and Vest Watch Keys	2 50 " 8
5,000 Gold Pens and Pencil Cases	5 " 10
25,000 Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs, and Pins	3 " 8
3,000 Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc	4 " 6
5,000 Gold Lockets, Magic Spring	4 " 10
5,000 " " Magic Spring	10 " 30
5,000 Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, Pins	4 " 6
5,000 Plain Gold Rings	4 " 10
5,000 Chased Gold Rings	4 " 10
10,000 Stone Set and Signet Rings	2 50 " 10
10,000 Plain Diamond Rings	5 " 25
7,500 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Jet and Gold	5 " 15
7,500 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Florentine, Opal, and other Stones	4 " 15
10,000 Gold Pens and Silver Extension-Holders and Pencils	4 " 10
10,000 Gold Pens and Gold-Mounted Holders	5 " 10
5,000 Gold Pens and Gold Extension-Holders	15 " 25
5,000 Ladies' Gold Jet Bracelets	5 " 10
5,000 Ladies' Gilt and Jet Heart Bracelets	5 " 10

ALL ARTICLES ARE WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED.

Broadway, New York, announce that all of the above list of goods will be sold for One Dollar Each.

In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the manufacturing districts, which has been caused by the shutting out of the supply of cotton, a large quantity of valuable goods, suitable for presents, have fallen into our hands, which has been sent off for sale in this country, and MUST BE SOLD AT ONCE, REGARDLESS OF COST.

Under these circumstances, AURINDALE & CO., actuated by a desire to do a large business, and thereby secure, have resolved upon a Great Gift Distribution, subject to the following liberal conditions:

Certificates of the various articles are first put into envelopes, sealed, and well mixed. Each envelope, with one taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all an equal chance. On receipt of the envelope you will see what you are to have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any list of Jewelry or an our list for DOLLAR.

Send 25 cents for Certificate.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for forwarding the certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—We want agents in every regiment, and in every town and county in the country, and those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every certificate ordered by them, provided their remittances amounts to One Dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps.

AURINDALE & CO.,
No. 167 Broadway, New York.

What the "Press" say of us.

AURINDALE & CO. are responsible. A rare opportunity is offered for obtaining watches, chains, diamonds, and jewelry at a low price.—Evening Express, Broadway, New York. They have an immense stock of articles, which they offer for sale at one dollar each. The success which attends their business is very fairly deserved—you agree to take a certificate for one dollar, and in an envelope you receive one. You are required to pay your dollar unless you are satisfied with the article you receive, and certainly by receiving more than the amount, and may be $50 or $100. An excellent mode this of investing a dollar.—Sunday Dispatch, New York, April 19, 1865.

AURINDALE & Co. have long been personally known to us, and we believe them to be every way worthy of public confidence.—N. Y. Journal of Commerce, Journal, June 11, 1864.

We have inspected at the office of Arnindale & Co.'s Agency for European Municipality Jewelry, a large assortment of jewelry, watches and valuables of the newest patterns. We also noticed a large quantity of silver plate, and understand they have also a large quantity of these articles are to be disposed of on a novel principle, giving great advantages to buyers, and affording great facility of payment to agents. We know the firm in question to be very respectable and thoroughly worthy of public confidence, and recommend our friends to read their advertisement.—N. Y. Illustrated News, Nov. 5, 1864.

By Messrs. Arnindale & Co.'s arrangement the advantage must be on the side of those who purchase. It is very successful in the way, not only in filling her own purse, but also in doing a good turn to those to whom she sends the Certificate, as will be seen from our advertising columns. Arnindale & Co. are the blue ribbon of the Broadway.—Leader, August 13, 1864.

In our columns will be found to-day's find an advertisement of Arnindale & Co., dealers in gold watches, jewelry and silverware. In payment of that advertisement we received several days ago a letter, which we find, and are warranted in saying that, both in fairness and liberality, all of the articles were worth treble the amount of cost to the recipients, and some of them six times.

We have seen some very pretty specimens of Table and Tea Spoons, Gold Watches, Ladies' Chains, Pins, Bracelets, etc., which are offered by Arnindale & Co., at one dollar each.—Anglo-American Reporter, N. Y. State, Feb. 17, 1865.

$8 OFFICER'S $10
WATCH.

Our whole stock of Imported Watches, being of rich and novel designs, are now offered at reduced prices. Single Watches at Wholesale Rates.

An Elegant Watch in Rich Gold Plated Zenith Cases, Richly Engraved, Turned Centres, Carved Balance Bridges, English Full Plate Jeweled Movements, silvered dial, hour, spring Bell, Second Hand, Fine Enamelled White Dial, a serviceable article for running order, with Key, Dial, a serviceable article for running order, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and Gem's Hanover Vest Chain and a beautiful Fancy Case, Sent to any part of the Country by Express. Sent free for Two Dollars extra. Sent by mail to any part of the army or country for only $10.

Nice Steven Watch, especially adapted for army use, in Heavy Double Cases, Small Size, entire new, silver, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and Gem's Vest Chain, Engraved Hunting Lever Jewelled, etc. Sent by mail to any part of the army or country for only $8.

The Imperial Watch,

Containing a Rare and Beautiful Combination of Mechanical Effects, combining within its cases and attached to its movements, in addition to many important and novel MOVEMENTS, an accurately adjusted Mariner's Compass, to indicate, with a Dial, and a Reliable Gentleman's, indicating day of month, week, etc., in Cases, rendering the Watch a perfect Chronometer for Time and Direction. The beautiful machinery of this valuable Watch is seen through Fine Finely Polished Glass Horizontal Dial, 14,000 Gold, inner Cases (the outer cases being of Richly Engraved Top and cases of 20,000 Gold Composition), and Fancy Dials, at Bottom, with Fancy for Sense, and Fancy Dials, at Top, Centre Second, Hunting Lever Action, Movements, Jewelled Movements, Polished Cases, Sporting Cases, Hunting Cases, Stem Winding Actions, Fine White Dials, Polished Steel Inner Linings, and is an Exact Imitation of $100 watch, and has the Royal Economies and Officers of the Bureau [illegible] and is indeed their keeper. Note Caution, we will not be carried on private trade-mark. Price per single case, with Compass, to any part of the army or country only $20. CATELY BROTHERS, Sole Importers.

No. 208 Canal Street, N. Y. Established 1858.

L INCOLN Mourning Pin in silver plate, Price 50 cents. Address Union News Company, Chicago, Illinois.

JEWELRY! JEWELRY!

$200,000 Worth of

Watches, Chains, and fine Jewelry, all to be sold for $1 each, without reserve, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Sand 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers can have a choice of a gold, diamond ring, or any set of jewelry on our list for $1, and in no case can they obtain less than a dollar's worth, as there are no blanks. Five certificates will be sent for $1; 12 for $2; 26 for $4; 100 for $15. Circulars containing full list of those who act as agents. Catalogues, containing full list and particulars, sent with the certificates. Address

FORWARDING AGENCY COMPANY,
No. 208 Canal Street, New York City.

WHISKERS AND MUSTACHES in 40 days. Also Hair on Bald Heads in 3 weeks. Address, with stamp, to Dr. C. BRIGGS, Chicago, Illinois.

MERWIN & BRAY FIRE-ARMS CO.'S
Belt and Pocket Size Cartridge Revolver.

size weight 22 oz., carries a ball 45-100 calibre (larger than 44/100 Navy), and can be used with either knob or [illegible] cartridges. The Pocket size weighs 16 oz., and carries a ball 30-100 calibre (same as Colt's 5 and 6 inch).

These Pistols are loaded and discharged with only four motions—do not get out of order never yet missed fire in either arm. A full round may be loaded and discharged in thirty seconds. Every arm has been subjected to severe proof by the U. S. Revenue Service. Testimonials of their efficiency in the hands of men from the Army and Navy also from civilians. Printed circulars (with illustrated cuts), showing prices, sent by Mail when requested.

Merwin & Bray are also sole proprietors of the Solid Breech-Loading Rifle and Carbine. These speak for no comment. Their high character for Military and Sporting purposes is well established. Parties in the country desiring to know where they may be put to a practical test of the Rifle or Revolver, can apply to Gen. Fitz-John Porter, Superintendent of Public Gardens and Piers of the City of New York, or to the Superintendent and the State of Kentucky. The General Government has had 20,000 new rifles, many have about Twenty Thousand Dollars' worth of Revolvers in actual service, of which highest testimonials are received. Sold by Wholesale and Retail Dealers generally.

MERWIN & BRAY,
Address orders to No. 363 Broadway, New York.

F. B.—Important.—Those Rifles can be used with either fixed or loose ammunition.

BAIRD & BROTHER'S (Established 1840)

GOLD PENS,

PEN AND PENCIL CASES. Also Manufacturer of Baird & Wilson's Patent Anguilar Nib Gold Pens. 24 MAIDEN LANE, No. 22 Maiden Lane, N. Y. Repointing, 50 cents. Send for a Circular.

PLAYING CARDS.

The American Card Company's New Union Playing Cards, National Emblems.

They are the prettiest card made, and suit the popular idea. The suits are Eagles, Shields, Stars, and Flags. Concerts in place of Kings, Governor or Leaders for Queens, and Major for Jacks.

All the packs are played as readily as with cards having foreign emblems. Each pack is put up in a neat box with name and then in dozen boxes for the trade. Any order for these cards may have an assortment of packs, each a sample box of twelve packs will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of Five Dollars.

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
No. 14 Chambers Street, New York.

L INCOLN Mourning Pin in silver plate, Price 50 cents. Address Union News Company, Chicago, Illinois.

Wonderfully Strange!

Prof. Henri Lavergne, who has astonished the scientific men of Europe and America, has now permanently established at Troy, N. Y. The Professor, by the aid of his wonderful discoveries, is known as the Electropathic Physician and as to produce a life-like picture of the future husband or wife of the inquirer, together with the date of birth, occupation, &c. By stating age, height, complexion, color of eyes and hair, and inclosing 50 cents and stamp to envelope addressed to yourself, you will receive the picture by return mail. Address Prof. HENRI LAVERGNE, Box 177, Troy, N. Y.

"The West Indian Hair Curler."

Warranted to curl the most straight and stiff hair, on the first application, into short ringlets or wavy masses. Sent to any address on receipt of $1 10. Address THE HENDERTON HAIR-CURLING CO.,
Box 6281, New York Post-Office.

TO THE LADIES.

Use PERRY'S Moth and Freckle Lotion, which is at once potent, infallible, and harmless. Prepared only by Dr. B. C. PERRY, 49 Bond St., New York. For sale by all Druggists. Price $1 per bottle. Send for circular.

FRICE REDUCED TO SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS.

The Convex Reflector Lantern.

For burning Kerosene or Coal Oil without Chimney.

Patented in America and Europe.

Without exception, the Cheapest, Most Convenient, Safest, and very best HAND LANTERN in use.

Price 75 cts. SOLD BY THE TRADE GENERALLY.

It gives a pure white light—WITHOUT CHIMEY.

It stands QUICK MOTIONS in any direction.

The flame is regulated from OUTSIDE the lantern.

ARCHER & PANCOAST,
Manufacturers of
GAS FIXTURES, LAMPS, CHANDELIERS, &c., &c.,
9, 11, 13, 15, and 17 Mercer st., New York.

ARCANA WATCH.

An Elegant Novelty in Watches.

The cases of this watch are an entirely new invention, composed of six different metals combined, rolled together and engine-turned. The movements are of the finest quality, gilded Arcana, which will always keep in color. They are as beautiful and durable as solid gold, and are afforded at one-eighth the cost. The case is beautifully decorated, with gold and chief for name, and has the appearance, and engraved in the exact style of the celebrated Gold Hunting Levers, and are also made in open face style, and so exact an imitation of gold as to defy detection. The movement is manufactured by the well known St. Jimar Watch Company of Europe, and are expertly finished, having engine-turned plates, Arcana dial, Breguet hairing regulator, with gold balance, and the improved ruby jewel setting, with fine side stem winder, and are warranted a good time-keeper. These watches are of three different sizes, the smallest for ladies, and the next for hunting cases. A case of six will be sent by mail or express for $12.5. A single one for $2.5. Sent to any part of the country, free for $25. Will readily sell for three times their cost. We are the sole agents for the sale of this watch in the trade, and none are genuine which do not bear our trade-mark.

Address DEVLIN & CO., Importers,
35 Maiden Lane, New York.

L INCOLN Mourning Pin in silver plate, Price 50 cents. Address Union News Company, Chicago, Illinois.

UPHAM'S PIMPLE BANISHER

Removes Pimples on the Face, Freckles, Moth Patches, Blotches, and Discolorations on the complexion. No toilet is complete without it. Price 50 cents. Sold by Druggists generally. Depot, 49 Bond St., N. Y. Upham, 58 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE JAPANESE HAIR STAIN

Colors the Hair, Whiskers, and Mustache with a beautiful and natural appearance. Unlike other preparations. Color will not fade or wash out. Only 50 cents a box. Sold by Druggists. Depot, 49 Bond St., N. Y. C. UPHAM, 58 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A powerful stimulant. Each pocket warranted to make a Sick Man Well, a Well Man Strong, and a Weak Man Robust. Will restore the smoothest face without scar or injury to the skin. Any person using it, if they find anything it does not as represented, by informing one of the local agents, will receive a refund of the money, and a month's worth of purchase. Price $1, neat, sealed and post-paid, to any address, on receipt of the money.

Address A. G. CLARK,
P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

SHULTS' CURLIQUE. For curling the Hair. Price by mail $1. Warranted.
C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

$1. WHISKERS. $1.

For One Dollar I will send, sealed and post-paid, the Celebrated Canadian Whisker Dye, warranted in every case to force a heavy growth of hair upon the smoothest face in six weeks, or upon bald heads in eight weeks, without stain or injury to the skin. Entire satisfaction given, or money refunded. Address, with stamp, for reply,
E. L. SANFORD, Lansingburg, N. Y.

The Brazilian Hair Curler.

The only application warranted to curl the most straight and stiffest hair into short ringlets or wavy masses. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of $1 00. Address
E. L. SANFORD, Lansingburg, N. Y.

L INCOLN Mourning Pin in silver plate, Price 50 cents. Address Union News Company, Chicago, Illinois.

Shults' Onguent, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in 40 days. Price $1. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.
C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED. Business light, pleasant, and honorable. I have now a number of agents from $15 to $30 per day out profit. Send stamp for Circular. Address O. S. BOWEN, Boston, Mass.

USE THE BEST.

BOWDEN'S Moth Destroying Packet will certainly destroy Moths. It will also destroy Bed Bugs, Fleas, Carpets, Robes, Blankets, and Furs will be safe from Moths and all destructive insects. For sale by all Druggists.

Price 50 cents per packet.

L INCOLN Mourning Pin in silver plate, Price 50 cents. Address Union News Company, Chicago, Illinois.

DEVLIN'S PHRENOLOGICAL CHART. Complete Description of his Life and Death—in the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, for June. Mrs. George Bowers, "authentic Casualty, Confessions, Cherubisms; Chiromancy; Examples; Portraits; Portfolio; Fowler's Phrenology, Madame du Staal, and Benjamin West; Notes of Life. Original Articles, Fine Wood Cuts, George Bowers, Carrier, and Gift, of Canada; Real and Kennedy, Retail Dealer; Lamb's Phrenology.

Heads or the Clergy: Swedenborg, Malanchton, Wesley, Bishop Simpson, Beecher, Talmage, Dr. Hawks, Dr. Hughes, Dr. Storrs, Lyman Beecher, and Dr. Channing. Heads and Portraits of Rev. Dr. G. W. Clinton, N. Y. [illegible]; Criminal Lunatics. Resources: Christian Cheerfulness a Duty, Social Intercourse, Memory, Physiology, Confucius Philosophy; Metaphysics; Mode of Creation. Self

THE RETURN HOME.

COLUMBIA. "Tell me, Soldier, did you not pass a Wayward Sister of mine on the road?"
RETURNING SOLDIER. "I did. I fetched her a good part of the way myself; but she says she don't require my services any more now; and here she comes over the hill."

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad Street,
(Two Doors from Wall.)
New York.

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks.
Bonds and Gold will receive our personal attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

FISK & HATCH.
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities.
No. 5 Nassau Street, New York.
(Continental Bank Building, near Wall Street.)

Great Imperial Watch.
See Cauley Brothers' Advertisement on page 319.

Free to Every Body.
SOLDIERS, SAILORS, FARMERS, MECHANICS, and EVERY BODY throughout the country will receive, free, by mail, a Five-Cent Interesting Newspaper, by sending their address to Editor of "ARMY AND HOME JOURNAL," 49 Ann Street, New York.

BROOKS'S PATENT WRITING AND TOILET CASE.
From Commander Cushing (Hero of the Albemarle): "Having carried one with me to sea, I can say that it is the most complete and convenient article for the soldier or sailor that has ever come under my notice."
Price, $1.50, sent free of postage.
D. B. BROOKS & BROTHER, Salem, Mass.

POLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 619 Broadway (near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail, at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $20 each.

GOLD PENS.
The JOHNSON PEN is acknowledged by all who have used them to be the best pen for the least money of any in use. They are made of 14 carats fine gold, and warranted for one year (unless overworked when required). Pens on solid silver extension cases, $1.75; strong wire holders, $1.75; rubber reverse holders, $1.50; telescopic extension cases, $1.50; Ebonite silver cases, $1.00; Ebonite and morocco cases, $1.50. Pens repointed, and old pens made new by send our pens. Send stamp for Circular.
E. S. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office, 15 Maiden Lane, New York City.

DALLE'S MAGICAL PAIN EXTRACTOR
This invaluable salve is a certain cure for FILES, CORNS, CUTS, BURNS, SCALDS, and BRUISES. Relieves PAIN in five minutes. No one should be without it. It sells itself. 25 cents a box. Sent by mail, free, on receipt of 27 cents. Depot 49 Liberty St., New York.

From the Interest Monetary Circular on the World.
I am acquainted with Mr. H. T. Helmbold, Manufacturer of Helmbold's Genuine Preparations. He occupied the drug store opposite my residence, and was successful in carrying the business where others had not been equally so before him. I have been favorably impressed with his character and enterprise.
WILLIAM WEIGHMAN,
Firm of PROWNE & WEIGHMAN,
Manufacturing Chemists,
Ninth and Brown Streets, Philadelphia.
HELMBOLD'S GENUINE PREPARATIONS.
PRINCIPAL DEPOTS.—Helmbold's Drug and Chemical Warehouse, 594 Broadway, New York, and 104 South Tenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

LAWRENCE, BALDWIN & CO.,
Bankers and Brokers,
No. 70 Wall Street, New York.
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
PETROLEUM,
And all kinds of Stocks, Bonds, &c., bought and sold on commission at the regular Board, Petroleum, and Mining Boards.
Interest allowed on deposits.
Special Agents for the New 7-30 Loan.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS
AND
Unprincipled Dealers
Endeavoring to dispose of their own and other preparations on the reputation attained by HELMBOLD'S GENUINE PREPARATIONS.

Calenberg & Vaupel's PIANO-FORTES,
99 and 101 Bleecker Street, 24 Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

OFFICERS, SOLDIERS, AND CITIZENS!
Genuine Gold Rings.
Sent by the Army Corps Rings in 16-carat gold (stamped and warranted) at $2 and $3 each. Also 100 other styles of every size, plain, enameled, and fancy, at from $2 to $10 each. Sent by mail. Send stamp for Circular. Address F. J. BEACH, 13 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $10
A BEAUTIFUL ENGLISH GOLD PATENT LEVER WATCH, Double Case, Large Size, small size, white enameled dial, cut bands, "English Movements," and correct time-keeper, with an accurate "Minuteman Calendar," indicating the "Day of the Week, Month, &c." in back case.
A single one sent free by mail to any address in a neat case, with a beautiful VEST CHAIN, for only $10.
A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, with "Minuteman Calendar," &c., specially adapted to the ARMY. Sent free by mail, to any address, for only $7.
English and American Levers from $15 up. Good Watches of all descriptions low.
Address CHAS. F. NORTON & CO., Sole Importers, 38 & 40 Ann Street, New York.

PINEAPPLE CIDER.
See advertisement on page 319.

STAMMERING
Cured by Bates' Patent Appliances. For descriptive pamphlet, &c., address H. G. BATES, 177 W. 23d St., N. Y.

UNCLAIMED MONEY.—70,000 PERSONS WANTED TO CLAIM MONEY, ESTATES, &c., which have been advertised since 1856. Have to search for none in Registry, $2. Genealogies traced. All letters must be prepaid. GUN & CO.'s Unclaimed Money and Property Registry, No. 17 Charlotte Street, London (W.C.), England.

BENJ. F. KENDALL,
BROKER IN
PETROLEUM STOCKS,
No. 52 Wall Street, N. Y.

HELMBOLD'S
EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA
Cleanses and renovates the blood, instils the vigor of health into the system, and purges out the humors that make disease.

THE "SPENCER" SEVEN-SHOT
Repeating Rifle.
As now used in the service. Calibre 56-100. Can be fired 7 times in 12 seconds. Range 1000 yards. Whole sale and retail, by WILLIAM READ & SON, 13 Faneuil Hall Square, Boston.

VINELAND LANDS.
To all Wanting Farms.
Large and thriving settlement, milk and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, producing large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty, and fifty acre tracts, at from $10 to $30 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools, and good society already here. Now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The best way with which the press is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post-Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.
From Regent of Solon Robinson, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune: "It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming that we know of this side of the Western prairies.

VERMILYE & CO.,
No. 44 WALL STREET,
BANKERS,
And Dealers in all Classes of
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

HELMBOLD'S
Concentrated Extract Buchu
IS THE GREAT DIURETIC
HELMBOLD'S
Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla
IS THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.
Both are prepared according to rules of Pharmacy and Chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

AK ANY NEWSDEALER OR BOOKSELLER for a copy of DAWLEY'S NEW WAR NOVELS. If he has not got them he will get them for you.
No. 1. Mosby, the Guerrilla.
No. 2. Pauline, the Female Spy.
No. 3. Semmes, the Pirate.
No. 4. Kildare, the Black Scout.
No. 5. Osgood, the Demon Refugee.
Illust'd, Illuminated Cover. Price 25c.; trade $2.50 per 100.
T. R. DAWLEY, Pub., 13 and 15 Park Row, N. Y.

C. W. FRENCH,
697 Broadway, New York.
Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods.

A large and complete stock of every Furnishing Goods for the spring and summer wear, combining all the novelties of the season, as they appear in Paris and London.
FINE SHIRTS
TO COLLARS
Made to Order.
Jean Breeches—A large stock of Colored Shirting Linen and Muslins direct from the French Manufacturers.

California Wines.
Catalogue of Varieties, Notices of Press, Analysis of Surgeon-General, &c., &c., mailed upon receipt of 3-cent Stamp.
PERKINS, STERN & CO.,
199 Broadway, New York;
105 Tremont Street, Boston.

AMERICAN STEEL COLLARS PATENTED
APRIL 19TH 1864
Electric, self-adjusting, enameled snow-white, $7 and $9 per dozen. Spencerian Model, No. 7c., $1. Button-holed, $1 25. Cuffs, $2. Bosoms, $3. Suitable No. 51. Ladies' linen embroidered and plain cuffs, $1 50. Send size when prices. Trade supplied. BILLON & FOGGAN, 73 Nassau Street, Inventors, Patentees, and Manufacturers.

A THING OF BEAUTY
IS A
Joy Forever.
These who desire brilliancy of complexion must purify and enrich the blood, which HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT SARSAPARILLA invariably does. Recollect, it is no patent medicine. Ask for HELMBOLD'S. Take no substitute.

ARMY and NAVY AGENCY.
Pensions, Bounties, Pay, Prize Money, together with all claims of the army and navy promptly procured. Correspondence promptly answered. L. BOWEN & CO., 12 Park Pl., N. Y.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND PERFUMERS.
IN INDIA AND CHINA British soldiers were amply provided with Holloway's Ointment and Pills, for Wounds, Sabre-Cuts, &c.

$100 A MONTH! Genteel, neat, and profitable employment can be had immediately by a living man, member of either sex, and any position of life. Can be performed at home. Address, for particulars, W. W. SWARTS & CO., 16 Greenwich Street, New York.

ONE PACKAGE NOW stops as much mischief as a dozen packages will next June.

CEDAR CAMPHOR
for Moths is cheap, fragrant, durable, and reliable. For descriptive circular, address H. HARRIS & CHAPLIN, Boston, make it.

To Purify, Enrich the Blood,
AND
Beautify the Complexion,
The HELMBOLD'S HIGHLY CONCENTRATED FLUID EXTRACT SARSAPARILLA. One bottle equals in strength one gallon of the Syrup or Decoction.

THE NATION IN TEARS.
A Dirge to the memory of A. Lincoln. With an exquisite portrait.
Send for noble leader in his glory lies;
A martyr true to liberty he dies.
Music very suitable and impressive. May be sung as a solo, duet, or full chorus; also arranged for the piano and organ as a grand march. Published by WM. HALL & SONS, 239 DEMOREST, No. 20 Beekman Street, New York. Sold by music dealers, mail, price 4 cents per single copy, $3 per hundred.

OLD EYES MADE NEW
Without Spectacles, Doctor, or Medicine. Pamphlet mailed, free, on receipt of ten cents. Address
E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

Why Injure
THE COMPLEXION
BY
Powders and Washes
Which choke or fill up the pores of the skin, and in a short time leave it harsh and dry? It is in the blood, and if you want smooth and soft skin use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA. It gives a brilliancy to the complexion.

A LANGUISHING CIRCULATION, Sour Stomach, Coated Tongue, Foul Breath, and Sallow Complexion are sure signs of a coming bilious attack. Take TARRANT'S EFFERVESCENT SELTZER APERIENT, and check the coming disease with all its terrible consequences. Sold by druggists all over the world.

Starr's Repeating Four-Shooter.
Safest Pocket-Pistol made.

"1. It is the only pistol that can be placed in position to receive the cartridge with one hand. 2. It can be loaded in two-thirds quicker than any other pistol, and with no danger. 3. It carries a heavier cartridge than any pistol of the same size. 4. It is the safest pistol to load, shoot, or carry, as a premature discharge is impossible. 5. It has less parts than any other pistol, and is less liable to get out of order. 6. It obtains the ordinary metal cartridge that can be purchased any where.
To be found at the principal gun and hardware dealers'.
MERRILL PATENT FIREARMS COMPANY,
Baltimore, Md.

FREE. A PHOTOGRAPH OF GEN. GRANT will be sent to any address, free, upon application to CRAWFORD & WILLIS, No. 107 Broadway, New York.

Heating and cooking by Gas cheaper than coal or wood.
Eagle Gas Cooking Stoves and Ranges
WILL BOIL, BROIL, ROAST, TOAST, BAKE, STEW, FRY, HEAT IRONS, &c., &c.
EAGLE GAS MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
474 Broadway, New York.

Not a Few of the Worst Disorders
That afflict mankind arise from corruptions of the blood. HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA is a remedy of the utmost value.

MUSIC OMNIBUS.
Musician's Omnibus No. 1.—700 pieces music; 40 sets quadrilles; 40 contra and fancy dances, with calls; polkas, &c., $1. Musician's Omnibus No. 2.—500 pieces; 200 songs, with Irish, 200 reels, 100 jigs, 100 dances, waltzes, &c., $1. Musician's Omnibus Complete—contains all in Nos. 1 and 2, and much other music for violin, flute, cornet, fife, flageolet, clarionet, &c., $2. How's new violin, flute, guitar, banjo, accordeon, concertina, fife, drum, flageolet, and clarionet without a master, 50c. each. How's 100 duets for two violins, flutes, or cornets, 50c. Sent by mail, prepaid. ELIAS HOWE, 103 Court Street, Boston.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.
Magnifying small objects 500 times. MAILED FREE everywhere for 50 CENTS, OR THREE FOR $1 00.
Address F. C. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

CARPET WARP,
FIRST AND SECOND QUALITY;
Wrapping Paper and Cords of Paper.
Twines and Paper. H. A. HARVEY, 94 Maiden Lane, N.Y.

A CLEAR, SMOOTH SKIN,
AND
BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION,
Follows the use of HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED FLUID EXTRACT SARSAPARILLA. It removes black spots, pimples, and all eruptions of the skin.

WARD'S PATENT FRENCH PRINTED PAPER COLLARS
387 B'WAY, NY. & ALL GENTS. FURNISHING STORES.
Caution to the Public.
Certain parties are infringing on my rights by selling a common, worthless printed paper collar.
Don't be cheated by them in this way. All collars made by me have my name on the collars and box also.
The only genuine and perfect collars is made from linen rags, which makes them very strong in the button-holes.
Trade Supplied
BY THE FOLLOWING AGENTS!
NEW YORK, F. S. JARVIS & CO.
CHICAGO, ILL., TYLER BLOCK, LA SALLE ST., CHAS. N. HALL.
BALTIMORE, MD., ISAAC COALE, JR., & BROTHER.
BOSTON, MASS., D. LYONS & CO.
BUFFALO, N. Y., H. CONE & CO.
CINCINNATI, OHIO, LEAVITT & BEVIS, and OTTINGER, BLATT & CO.
CLEVELAND, OHIO, KOCH, LEVI, MAYER & CO.
DAYTON, N. Y., KLOCK & OULD.
UTICA, N. Y., A. FIDDIMORE.
ALBANY, N. Y., FRYER & KNOWLTON.
HARTFORD, CONN., C. A. GRIFFIN & CO.
LOUISVILLE, KY., J. VON BORVIES & CO.
WASHINGTON, D. C., MCCLELLAND & CO.
Manufactory, 387 Broadway, New York.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

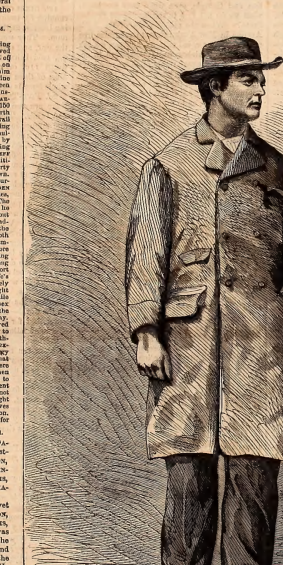
VOL. IX.—No. 439.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 27, 1865. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

CAPTURE OF DAVIS.

A PICKED company of WILSON'S command captured JEFFERSON DAVIS on the morning of May 10, at Irwinsville, Georgia. The company was commanded by Colonel PRITCHARD, of the Fourth Michigan. The following is General WILSON'S dispatch announcing the capture:

MACON, GA., 9.30 A.M., May 15, 1865.



Hon. E. M. Stanton, Sec. of War.

Lieut.-Colonel HARNEY, commanding the First Wisconsin, has just arrived from Irwinsville. He struck the trail of DAVIS at Dublin, Laurens County, on the evening of the 7th, and followed him closely, night and day, through the pine wilderness of Alligator Creek and Green Swamps, via Cumberlandsville to Irwinsville. At Cumberlandsville Colonel HARNEY met Colonel PRITCHARD, with 150 picked men and horses of the Fourth Michigan. HARNEY followed the trail directly south, while PRITCHARD, having fresher horses, pushed down the Ocmulgee toward Hopewell, and thence by Horse Creek to Irwinsville, arriving there at midnight of the 9th. JEFF DAVIS had not arrived. From a citizen PRITCHARD learned that his party were encamped two miles out of the town. He made disposition of his men, and surrounded the camp before day. HARNEY had camped at 9 P.M., within two miles, on hearing of learned, from DAVIS. The trail being too indistinct to follow he pushed on at 3 A.M., and had gone six miles more when one of the pickets of the Fourth Michigan fired upon by men of the Fourth Michigan. A fight ensued, both parties exhibiting the greatest determination. Fifteen minutes elapsed before the mistake was discovered. The firing in this skirmish was the first warning that DAVIS received. The rapture report that he hastily put on one of his wife's dresses and started for the woods, closely followed by our men, whom first thought him a woman, but seeing his boots while he was running, they suspected his sex at once. The race was a short one, and the rebel President was soon brought to bay. He brandished a bowie-knife and showed signs of battle, but yielded promptly to the persuasions of CAPTAIN'S revolvers, without compelling the men to fire. He expressed great indignation at the energy with which he was pursued, saying that he had believed our Government were too magnanimous to hunt down women and children. Mr. DAVIS remarked to Colonel HARNEY, after the excitement was over, that the men had better not provoke the President, or "he might hurt some of 'em." BRADLEY behaves himself with dignity and resignation. The party, evidently, were making for the coast.

J. H. WILSON,
Brevet Major-General.

The captured party included DAVIS'S family, with REAGAN, Postmaster-General; Colonel HARRISON, Private Secretary; Colonel JOHNSON, Aide-de-Camp; Col. MORRIS, Colonel LUBBICK, Lieut. HATHAWAY, and others.

Less than five years ago Brevet Major-General JAMES H. WILSON, the captor of JEFFERSON DAVIS, was a cadet at West Point. He was born in Southern Illinois, about the year 1840. He was made Second Lieutenant at the beginning of the war, to date from June 10, 1861. He occupied the position of Chief of Engineers on the Staff of General T. W. SHERMAN in the expedition to Hilton Head, South Carolina. In the operations against Pulaski he rendered valuable service in finding a passage for gun-boats drawing ten feet of water and clear of the guns of the fort. This enabled our troops to establish a battery at Venus Point. Lieut. WILSON remained in the Department of the South, conspicuously engaged on engineer duty until the summer of 1862, when he served for a short time as aid to General MCCLELLAN. On November 8, 1862, he was appointed Assistant Inspector-General, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel of Volunteers, and assigned to General GRANT, by whom he was for several months assigned to duty on the staff of Major-General JAMES B. MCPHERSON. During the operations in Mississippi and against Vicksburg Colonel WILSON was again conspicuous for his engineering skill; and in the brilliant victories of General GRANT, in the vicinity of Chattanooga, won the official commendation of General W. F. SMITH, with whom he was then acting. On December 31, 1863, he was nominated Brigadier-General of Volunteers, to date from October 80, 1863, and was confirmed May 12, 1864, upon the recommendation of Lieutenant-General GRANT. In January, 1864, General WILSON was appointed chief of the Cavalry Bureau in Washington. In April following he was assigned to the command of the Third Division Cavalry Corps, Major-General SHERIDAN, Army of the Potomac. During General GRANT'S Virginia campaign he acted independently, to the right and rear of the army, to destroy railroads. He also covered the rear from Coal Harbor to the south side of the James River. In June and the beginning of July he conducted a raid south of Richmond, destroying the railroads and throwing the enemy in a great state of alarm. After the necessity of cavalry operations in the vicinity of Richmond and Petersburg had passed, General WILSON was transferred to the Shenandoah Valley, where he added to his reputation as an efficient officer. For distinguished service he was brevetted Major-General of Volunteers, to date from October 5, 1864. During the winter he was transferred to the Department of the Cumberland, and by Gen. THOMAS was placed in command of the cavalry corps of the Army of the Cumberland. On March 23, 1865, General WILSON started from Chickasaw, Alabama, with his troops well mounted and equipped. After routing RODDY at Monticello, he moved on and annihilated the combined forces of FORREST, LYON, and CHALMERS, under FORREST, and occupied Selma, Alabama, on April 2. Thence he moved on to Montgomery, thence swept across Georgia, reaching Savannah on April 28, having marched at least six hundred and fifty miles.

LEWIS PAYNE THE ASSASSIN.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY A. GARDNER, WASHINGTON, D. C.]

PAYNE THE ASSASSIN.

IN regard to LEWIS PAYNE, the assassin who entered Secretary SEWARD'S sick room and inflicted upon him and his son wounds intended to prove fatal, little is yet publicly known. We publish his portrait on this page. Apparently he was a hired assassin dispatched from Canada. He is said to be an outlaw from Kentucky, and to have been concerned in the St. Albans raid and other schemes of murder and arson concerted in Canada. He was captured at MRS. SURRATT'S house in the disguise of a laboring man.

The course of the trial now going on at Washington will develop the biography of PAYNE—if blood that be his real name. This trial has for its principal object not merely the conviction of PAYNE and ATZEROT, and the other tools of this base plot, but the disclosure of its extensive conspiracy. The agents in Richmond, and those in Canada, commissioned from Richmond—for they are, what they have attempted, and by what means—are the central objects about which the great trial revolves. It was for this reason that some parts of the testimony was given in secret, in order that no warning might be given to those thus implicated. It was for this reason that so much care was necessarily taken to prevent any but loyal men from pleading as counsel. But the history of this trial is yet to be written. The infernal schemes for murdering and plundering peaceful citizens, and even for burning down crowded places of amusement over the heads of defenseless women and children, and the plots for torturing and starving our prisoners, will no doubt be found but parts and parcels of the gigantic crime of treason which culminated in the murder of our President and the attempt to assassinate his Cabinet.

FORT MAHONE.

WE give on page 334 an illustration of the capture of Fort Mahone, commonly known as Fort "Damnation," by the Ninth Army Corps, early in the morning of April 2.—The charge was as impetuous as its conduct was skilful. The chevaux de frise, which was broken through by the furious onset of the national troops, was, after the capture of the fort, carried over to the other side, so as to form a protection against an attempt on the part of the rebels to recapture the work. The troops were thus enabled to hold the fort until the arrival of reinforcements.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S BURIAL.

IT was on a beautiful May day that President LINCOLN was buried at Oak Ridge, Springfield. At noon the remains were brought from the State House to the same hearse which had carried Lieut.-Gen. THOMAS H. BENTON to their graves. The hearse was surmounted by a graceful canopy of flowers. From the portico, as the procession advanced, a chorus of hundreds of voices sang the hymn—

"Children of the heavenly King,
Let us journey as we sing."

The Funeral Procession was under the immediate direction of General HOOKER. The President's tomb is two miles from Springfield. A dirge was sung; and after the reading of Scripture, a prayer, and a hymn, the President's second Inaugural was read. A dirge succeeded, when Bishop SIMPSON delivered the Funeral oration. It was in the highest degree eloquent and patriotic.

"We have," says a correspondent of the Times,

"followed the remains of President LINCOLN from Washington, the scene of his assassination, to Springfield, his former home, and now he to his final resting-place. He had been absent from this city ever since he left it in February, 1861, for the national capital, to be inaugurated as President of the United States. We have seen him lying in state in the Executive mansion, where the obsequies were attended by numerous mourners, some of them clothed with the highest public honors and responsibilities which our republican institutions can bestow, and by the diplomatic representatives of foreign governments. We have followed the remains from Washington through Baltimore, Harrisburg, Philadelphia, New York, Albany, Buffalo, Cleveland, Columbus, Indianapolis, and Chicago to Springfield—a distance in circuit of 1,700 or 1,800 miles. On the route millions of people have appeared to manifest, by every means of which they are capable, their deep sense of the public loss, and their appreciation of the many virtues which adorned the life of ABRAHAM LINCOLN. All classes, without distinction of politics or creeds, spontaneously united in the posthumous honors. All hearts seemed to beat as one at the bereavement; and, now that the obsequies are ended, our mournful duty of escorting the mortal remains of ABRAHAM LINCOLN hither is performed. We have seen them deposited in the tomb. The bereaved friends, with subdued and grief-stricken hearts, have taken their coffin and turn their faces homeward, and we remember the affecting and impressive scenes which they have witnessed. The injunction, so often repeated on the way, 'Bear him gently,' for he has been obeyed, and the great heart of the nation throbs heavily at the portals of the tomb."

THE HOME CALL.

Enter home the battle-flags, all stained and torn
With heroes' gallant blood and grimy battle smoke,
The flags that through the fierce fight ye have borne
Amid the loving land, the others' hearts to cheer!
And place them on each waiting armory wall,
That they may speak of the great deed in all.

Bring home your muskets, stand them one by one
In the vast arsenals, and then leave them there,
The glorious arms which called them forth in done,
The din of war is no more in the air;
The battle-voices fade and fade away,
And Peace is coming on a broader day.

Bring back the cannon, let the spider spin
Her thin-laced web within them where they stand,
No more their iron throats shall wake with dreadful din
The drowsy hamlets of our widowed land,
Or rent them with bolts that ne'er shall cease
To fill the air with sweet-toned notes of peace.

Bring home the leathern knapsacks ye have borne
With bending backs along the dusty ways,
'Tis meanest toil to those belie ye've so proudly worn;
A new light shines from brighter, happier days,
The cloud of battle is swiftly passing by,
And once again the sun shines in the sky.

Bring back your swords, and lay them by at home;
Ah, it is sad, proud, a noble thought
To know your children in the years to come
Shall point to these and say, "Our father fought!"
Bring back your swords, and hang them on your walls,
To grasp again whene'er your country calls.

Come home, ye veterans; welcome, welcome home!
"Come," say the lips of mother and of wives;
Your children's joyous voices echo "Come!"
We thank the God of Battles for your lives,
And now the morning dawning on the night
Breaks in the future beautiful and bright.

HARPER'S WEEKLY

SATURDAY, MAY 27, 1865.

THE MAIN QUESTION.

THE late Chief Justice of the United States, ROGER B. TANEY, will be forever infamous for endeavoring, under the solemn sanction of the highest court in the land, to work that utter demoralization of public opinion which would have made JEFFERSON DAVIS's crimes unnecessary. He was his own purpose. The present Chief Justice, SALMON P. CHASE, will be forever honored as the first eminent public man who has proposed a policy which will render all future crimes like DAVIS's abortive. In a letter read at the twelfth American Congregational Reunion in Brooklyn Chief Justice CHASE says that "I would like to say to the Christians who shall assemble at your reunion an earnest word on the present great national duty of planting on the freedmen of the South the right of self-protection by the ballot."

President JOHNSON also, in a speech delivered in Baltimore before the death of Mr. LINCOLN, after saying that to save the Union he would be willing to sink the whole African race, was interrupted by a voice in the crowd which said, "Don't do that, Governor, give them the ballot;" to which Mr. JOHNSON instantly replied, "Yes, and I would do that, too!" Last week, when a deputation of colored men waited upon him, the President said, in his reply, that he had always maintained that the slaves had as much right to be free as those who claimed them as property, and that freedom means liberty to work and enjoy the fruit of your own toil, "in its most extensive sense." That is to say, freedom is the right to be protected in the fulfillment of all the relations of citizens exactly as other men are. For no man has the liberty to work and enjoy the fruits of work, in its most extensive sense, who is the victim of disabilities which are not imposed upon other free men.

In this country, where the Government rightfully exists by the consent of the governed, every man has an equal right to a share in political power. Suffrage for colored Americans is, therefore, not a privilege for which we plead—it is a right which, as American citizens, we consistently demand. Nor is the claim of this right vitiated by any traditional and uniform exclusion of colored citizens from the ballot-box. Mr. JUSTICE CURTIS, in his masterly opinion dissenting from that of Chief Justice TANEY in the Dred Scott case, distinctly asserts that, in his opinion, it is untrue that the Continental Congress intended to say that the white race exclusively possessed the rights and liberties rights asserted in the Declaration of Independence. It is from these rights that our political rights spring. And that there were free colored men in the fathers did not mean to make color a political disqualification, it is enough to cite the action of Congress on the 26th of June, 1778, when, in discussing the articles of Confederation, South Carolina, always Tory and aristocratic, proposed the insertion of the word "white" as a condition of general citizenship. Eight states voted against it, two for it, and one was divided. The Constitution of the United States was subsequently adopted by the voters in the several States, and South Carolina was the only one in which color was a disability.

The conditions of suffrage in the States at the beginning were either free or by personal freedom, property, or residence, except in South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, Georgia, Maryland, Delaware, in which colored voters if they were old enough, had lived long enough in the State and county, owned sufficient property, or had paid the requisite taxes. The disability of color has crept into the State constitutions in exact correspondence with the increasing demoralization of the public mind produced by slavery. While the framers of the Nation reflected the political rights of their colored fellow-citizens to propitiate the Southern slave interest. The most abject submission to the will of the Southern political alliance. Thus in the State of New York, by the first Constitution, "every male inhabitant of full age," who had resided six months in the county, who had a small freehold, or who had paid a certain rent or taxes was a voter. It was only in 1820 that New York consolidated the basis of the same by making a man's complexion vitiate his natural rights; and the provision in her present Constitution of 1846, which decrees that "no man of color" shall vote unless he has lived in the State three times longer than is required of any other citizen and has paid a tax which freeholders are exempt from pay, is as absolute and arbitrary a violation of the principle of our Government as if it declared that no man between the ages of forty and forty-five should have the right of voting. Complexion is no more an actual disability than red hair. Habitual drunkenness is a disability; yet it does not disqualify.

We may add that slavery was not satisfied with restricting or destroying the political equality of colored citizens in the States. But the Missouri Compact in some of these States to protect the personal liberty of colored men, to prevent the native free inhabitants of Wisconsin and Massachusetts from being kidnapped by such men as M. MASON and his confederates and sold in Virginia and elsewhere as slaves, was among the pretenses for rebellion. And when South Carolina put forth, at the South, and which were alleged in extenuation of treason by MASON's political allies at the North, the political fiction of cities of colored citizens is no new thing. It is older than the Constitution of the United States. If we are startled by the suggestion now, our surprise is only an evidence of the utter thoughtlessness in which we have been held by the slave power.

But aside from the undoubted original right, it is enough to urge the voting of the blacks at the South upon President JOHNSON's own ground. Political enfranchisement is indispensable in order to be secure in the enjoyment the liberty to work and live, "in its most extensive sense." The white population at the South have been educated in a peculiar system of ideas of every degree as an inferior race. Mr. JOHNSON undoubtedly expressed exactly the general Border State feeling about them in his Baltimore speech, to which we have alluded. He was willing either to exterminate them or to enfranchise them, as the means of conquering the rebellion. We do not mean, however, in these days, when we grow ten years in ten hours, to hold public men too precisely to words or even to opinions; and President JOHNSON has doubtless a right in saying that it was only Mr. JOHNSON's way of expressing a preference for his own color. We merely mention the fact to illustrate the universal feeling of men who have been educated amidst the influences of slavery.

If this be so, and the political power in the late insurrectionary States be intrusted exclusively to the whites, the colored population will be left entirely at the mercy of those who have always regarded them with contempt, and who doubtless feel bitterly toward them as the real cause of the war which has desolated the South. If colored men are not to be enfranchised, it may be made a penal offense in the reorganized States to teach them to read. They may be deprived of the right to testify in courts of law, and any villain may enter the house of a colored man, may commit what atrocity he will, if only in presence of the family, and go unsearched. The colored men may be forbidden to bear arms; to attend church; to sit upon juries. Their wages may be restricted. There is no enormity whatever of which they may not be made the victims, if they are not to be enfranchised. If the sole, final law in the State is to be the will of those who are unfriendly to them, it is manifest whether more emancipation is an advantage. And as born of practical wisdom, knowing history and human nature, we have no right to refuse, while we have the power, to secure to the freedmen, since the right to work and enjoy, "in its most extensive sense."

Is it said that it is foolish to suppose the white citizens would pay the black voters' liabilities? Why so? Are those who were perfectly willing to sell other men's children likely to shrink from forbidding those men to learn to read or to bear arms? Are those who were willing that others should be made to work for nothing too humane to say that they shall not work only a shilling a day? Or, again, will it be urged that palpable self-interest will prevent such legislation? But the same reason should have abolished Slavery at the South long ago; and the people who were too ignorant to see that can not be supposed to have learned suddenly that justice is the truest policy. Why should we ignore of the whites of North Carolina and Georgia, even when they are loyal, what we do not find in the intelligent Empire State? When the Union clubs of the Fifth Avenue in New York refuse to recognize free colored men as equal citizens, how can we ask the hoods of Alabama and Mississippi to acknowledge the equal rights of those who have been always despised slaves? Five years ago the white citizens of the State of New York contemptuously declined that color should be a political disability, and that ignorance and drunkenness should not. Would it be very wonderful that the white people of Louisiana should declare that color shall be a bar to knowledge or to high wages?

If we are asked whether it is probable that the people of New York would wish to do in South Carolina what they refused to do at home, we reply that five years have undoubtedly opened their eyes and hearts, and that they will do it at home whenever the opportunity is offered. And even if we thought otherwise we should have no choice but they ought to do it. For the same principle that makes it right in one State justifies it in all. The opportunity is not now given to us to call the attention to that fact, but it is in the late rebel States, through our Senators and Representatives. The colored citizens at the South are more than likely the governed. In South Carolina a large majority of the population is colored. We have no more right to abandon them to the will of the whites because they have been a badge of servitude, than we have arbitrarily to disfranchise the whites because their color has been a sign of treason. And if the representatives of a State organization in South Carolina, which disfranchised any citizen of the State because of his color, should claim seats in Congress, it would be the plainest duty of Congress to refuse to receive them until a republican form of government should be established in South Carolina.

If any President of this view should retreat upon the assertion that the United States have nothing to do with suffrage in a State—that the national Government was not even prescribe the qualifications of voters at the national elections —we remind him of the simple fact that none of the insurrectionary States will ever again be organized except on the terms laid down by United States ordain. Not a man will vote in Virginia or Carolina by any other authority than that of the United States. According to a doctrine which was proclaimed rather truculently at one time, whenever what was called active rebellion ceased in a State, the State was at once restored with all its privileges to the Union. Active rebellion has ceased in Virginia, in Georgia, in South Carolina. Does any sane man propose that a single one of the United States shall be immediately withdrawn, and the voters under the Constitutions of those States be invited to send Representatives to Congress? No. The United States will withdraw their hand when they are satisfied that peace is secure. They can not be asked to be secure until the State Constitution shall forbid the State imperatively and forever to allow any legal disability upon the grounds of color or race. And that result should be secured by an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, making every native and properly naturalized citizen, if unconvicted of crime, a voter. After that the "Negro question" will take care of itself.

When more than half the adult male population of the late States are disfranchised they will instantly appear to be as good as any body. The "natural antipathy" will vanish. They will be courted as much as they are now contemned. Their most sweet voices will be wooed by demagogues as obsequiously as those of ignorant foreigners are now. We shall hear FERNANDO WOOD assert that his life-long aim has been the restoration of his fellow-citizens of African descent to the rights so long and wickedly withheld; and the Honorable AUGUST BELMONT declare that, as a free-born American, he has cherished no hope so dear as the enfranchisement of his fellow-countrymen of every color.

President JOHNSON says that freedom is the right to work and enjoy the fruits of toil in the most extensive sense. That means political as well as personal liberty.

OUR DEBT AND SPECIE PAYMENTS.

THE second series of the Seven-Thirty loan has been exhausted—in other words, the people of the United States have subscribed, in forty-five days, including Sundays and holidays, three hundred millions of dollars in support of their Government. History may be ransacked in vain for a parallel.

England stood aghast with amazement when the French nation, stirred by all the appliances of imperial menace and bureaucratic intrigue, offered the Emperor 750,000,000 francs, or $150,000,000, for the war in Italy. A bagatelle of $150,000,000 has been lent our Government half a score of times since our war began; and now we are tendering $30,000,000 a day.

Four descriptions of United States Bonds—besides old five and six per cent. Bonds, interest-bearing legal-tender Treasury Notes, and certificates of indebtedness—are now in the market.

1st. SIXES OF 1881. These are long bonds, running for twenty years from 1861, and bearing interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum. They were issued at the beginning of the war, and many of them were sold at 91 @ 94, gold being then at par. They are now worth 110 @ 112, excluding interest, say 108. Most of these bonds are held in Europe. The whole issue is $282,561,000.

2d. FIVE-TWENTY BONDS. Of these bonds there are two descriptions, known as old and new bonds. The old bonds are dated in 1865, and mature in 1885-'87. The new bonds are dated in 1863, and mature in 1868-'83. Of the former, $510,545,000 are in existence; of the latter, $86,000,000. Both are redeemable at the pleasure of the United States at maturity, but payment can not be demanded until twenty years have elapsed from the date of the bond. Both bear interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually in gold. Of the old five-twenties, a large proportion are held in Europe. When gold rose from par to 200 above, the five-twenty bonds, which were offered to purchasers at par in legal-tender currency, could be laid down in Europe at 80 @ 90 cents on the dollar. Our English friends, who took the rebel cotton loan (now offered at 13 per cent.) at or near par in gold, would not touch five-twenties. The shrewd merchants of Amsterdam—the wisest financiers and the richest in the world—eschewed cotton rebel loans, and subscribed for $30,000,000 of our securities. Germany followed the example, and took from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 more. Amsterdam can now sell its bonds at a profit of nearly 100 per cent. on the original investment; London can not realize on its cotton bonds even at a loss of 85 per cent. People here who subscribed for five-twenties at par when gold was 200 per cent. have, at present prices, made 50 per cent. in gold on their investment—no mean profit—to say nothing of the interest in gold, which has at times amounted to 15 per cent. in currency.

3d. SEVEN-FORTY BONDS. These bonds, of which $178,770,000 are in existence, are so called because they are redeemable at the expiration of ten years, and payable forty years from date. They bear interest at the rate of five per cent., payable semi-annually in gold. These bonds were issued at the solicitation of friends of the Government, who urged that the 6 per cent. was enough to pay for money. Agents of European bankers likewise suggested that foreigners would be more likely to place confidence in a five per cent. bond than in one bearing a higher rate of interest. Neither in this country nor in Europe, however, have the five per cent. bonds become favorites. They are, in fact, almost disposed of with difficulty, and very few of the bonds have been placed in Europe.

4th. SEVEN-THIRTY NOTES. These securities are so called because they bear interest at the rate of 7.30 per cent. per annum, payable in currency. At the expiration of three years from their date they are either payable, or funded into new five-twenty bonds, at the wish of the holder. Of these notes $830,000,000 have been issued, and in a few months six hundred millions of them have been disposed of at par to the people of the United States. The second series, as we stated, has been taken up in just forty-five days. It is now announced that the third and last series authorized, consisting of $400,000,000, is offered to the public on the same terms as the two previous ones.

Our national debt it is now pretty safe to estimate at three thousand millions of dollars. There are those who believe that claims for damages, and the military and other expenses of Government, which must remain large for many years to come, will so far exceed the revenue from customs and taxes, as to render further loans indispensable. But it seems unlikely that this will be the case, at all events to any extent. All hope of successful resistance to the National authority having vanished, the South will be as anxious for the complete restoration of peace and trade as the North, and will not be prone to put the Government to much further expense for military operations. It is safe to estimate the revenue from customs and taxes at $350,000,000. For interest on the public debt about $150,000,000 will be required. This would leave $200,000,000 for the ordinary expenses of Government—say nearly three times as much as they used to be before the war.

Three thousand millions is, of course, a very large sum of money to owe. It may be said to amount to $100 a head for every man, woman, and child in the country; the annual interest $6 a head. But Great Britain owes nearly $40,000,000,000, and has not a tithe of our resources. France, the debt of France, which may be set down in rough figures at $1,500,000,000, and that of Austria, $1,100,000,000, are heavier burdens, if we are to trust to the resource and progressive wealth of these countries, than $3,000,000,000 will prove in the United States. Dr. Evans has shown, in an elaborate paper on the subject, that this large debt may be paid off, if deemed desirable, within the century, and that the annual interest charge will not be felt as oppressively as the taxes which European nations pay.

A question closely connected with the settlement of the national debt, and scarcely less important, is—How soon can specie payments be resumed? It took England six years to resume after the peace, though the Bank of England issues, at short notice, figures, were less than one-fourth those of our Government. Precedents, however, are unsafe guides in such cases. The United States in 1865 are a very different country from Great Britain in 1865. Austria and Russia have never been able to resume, but those countries are not progressive.

It is clear that no attempt to resume can be made until the necessity for borrowing currency to pay expenses has passed away. It is also clear that this will command a premium—no matter how strong the confidence in the General Government—so long as we have $200,000,000 of irredeemable paper afloat. When the necessary revenue from taxes and customs equals or exceeds the Government expenditure, a step toward resumption can be made by buying gold to fund the legal tenders. But this can not be effected suddenly, or all at once. When Government has ceased to contract the currency, the money market will become stringent, a stagnation in business will ensue, and the revenue from customs and taxes will decline. From this cause the attempt to resume has failed in every country from Great Britain in 1865. Austria and Russia have never been able to resume, but those countries are not progressive.

It is clear that no attempt to resume can be made until the necessity for borrowing currency to pay expenses has passed away. It is also clear that this will command a premium—no matter how strong the confidence in the General Government—so long as we have $200,000,000 of irredeemable paper afloat. When the necessary revenue from taxes and customs equals or exceeds the Government expenditure, a step toward resumption can be made by buying gold to fund the legal tenders. But this can not be effected suddenly, or all at once. When Government has ceased to contract the currency, the money market will become stringent, a stagnation in business will ensue, and the revenue from customs and taxes will decline. From this cause the attempt to resume has failed in every country from Great Britain to Austria. It is to be hoped that our Government will profit by the example. A currency approach, to be successful in its object, must be gradual, and should extend, probably, over more than two years.

Something will depend on the confidence placed in American securities by Europeans. Europe holds over $350,000,000 of our bonds. If the holders send them here for sale now, they can not realize a large profit on their investment. Should they do so gold would rise, United States stocks would fall, and the difficulty of funding the currency would be increased. But instead of selling the bonds they hold, Europeans should buy more, or, if as has been suggested, a special loan should be negotiated in Europe with the effect of placing $100,000,000 of gold at the disposal of our Government, gold would momentarily fall, bonds would rise, and the path would be smoothed for an early resumption. It is difficult to determine what course the European capitalists will pursue, but among the foreign bankers it seems to be believed that more bonds are likely to go out than will come home.

With the restoration of peace, the construction of the Pacific Railroad, and the establishment of steam lines across the Pacific, nothing is wanting to make New York the financial centre of the world but the resumption of specie payments.

IN A PETTICOAT.

The London Spectator, commenting upon the sudden attack of our jubilee of victory by the murder of Mr. Lincoln, calls it the "irony of fate." So it may have seemed at the moment; but surely it is clear that Fate was never so generous as in dealing with this rebellion. Within less than two months the great conspiracy, which had lasted long enough to gain the semblance of a power sudden and fearful, crashes, and crumbles utterly away. In the last struggle its expiring force is concentrated into one crime so black that we shudderingly recoil every where recognizes the utterly devilish spirit of the rebellion; and that the whole gamut of emotion was run, from the extreme of joy, through the most harrowing tragedy, to utter farce and contempt, while America and Europe are still aghast, a peal of inextinguishable laughter goes ringing round the globe as the chief conspirator, "the statesman who has created a nation," skulks trembingly away in petticoats, and wishes that it is too bad to pursue women and children!

So this rebellion, the most formidable in history, which, it is not too much to say, would have prevailed against any other government in the world, is not only absolutely annihilated by the rebellious energy of a truly popular Government, but ends without a sign of the dignity that lesser crimes sometimes assume, despicably and ridiculously. Even Judas Iscariot went out and hung himself. Booth, the murderer of one beloved man, at least died like a savage beast at bay. Nobody will ever smile at the mention of his name. But Davis, with the blood of untold thousands of brave and noble victims upon his soul, will go down to posterity, covering under a petticoat, the object of mingled horror and derision.

EARL RUSSELL AND EARL DERBY.

If any eminent American statesman should be guilty of the public ignorance of current affairs which Earl Russell displays in his speech, moving an address of sympathy to the Government of the United States, he would be universally ridiculed. Earl Russell coolly says: "Upon another question the United States and the Confederates will have a most difficult task to perform."

The fall of Richmond, the surrender of Lee, the flight of Davis, the general crash of the rebellion had not yet cleared his Lordship's mind of Mr. Gladstone's statement that Jefferson Davis had "created a nation." He speaks of vanquished and scattered rebels as of a power with which the United States were to conclude a treaty for the settlement of affairs. Even as if there were a portion of the citizens of this country who were to be known as "Confederates." It is as if he should say, "After the Restoration of William III., his Majesty and James II. had a most difficult task to perform. The Confederates have performed their task as James did his. In England then, as now in this country, there were the Government and its enemies, and no other parties or powers.

His Lordship proceeds to speak of the proclamation of President Lincoln in these words: "At a later period he made a communication to the Commander-in-Chief of the United States forces in which he proposed that in certain States the slaves should be entirely free; but as a later period he proposed to pass by a constitutional qualification to propose, that there should be an alteration in the Constitution of the United States by which compulsory labor should hereafter be forbidden. It is impossible that the man in all England whose peculiar business it is to know better should make such a statement. The President's letter was not to Commander-in-Chief, and by his order directly emancipated the slaves; and the "later period" to which Earl Russell refers is the election with the resolution of the Convention which approved a constitutional amendment of emancipation.

No honorable Englishman can expect us to forget what Earl Russell would of our late war while it was in progress. If we were likely to forget, Earl Derby, the Tory leader of the Lords, has reminded us. He has given us instructive hostility of aristocracy to triumphant democracy, and with venomous glee at the chance of contrasting Lincoln's funeral with the pomp with those of yesterday, Lord Derby says: "There may be differences of opinion as to the merits of the two parties who are contending, de one de quare nobis, alter de quare nobis, in the United States. I follow the words of the noble Lord opposite."

It was a splendid sneer; nor was it understood by Lord Russell, who, while that famous phrase of his was still perfectly fresh in public memory, has so completely lost his way that the commencement of the contest he had declared that he did not believe "the great republic of the United States would perish in this war."

It is not of the moment to dwell on the mysteriosy of the British Government that the loyal citizens of this country have complained. If Lord Russell supposed that the British Government would be destroyed, he virtually said that he thought it ought to be. And the very House of Commons in which he proposed the address of condolence cheered Lord Derby's remark that the assassination was wholly alien to the "sympathies of humanity," and "forbearing" spirit in which the rebels had made war upon loyal citizens.

We beg our real English friends not to suppose that we are deceived. We certainly do not. We set value Lord Russell's delight in our success and Lord Derby's sympathy for our sorrow.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Treason is the highest crime known to the Constitution. The name of Jefferson Davis and his confederates has been prolonged and bloody beyond precedent. The Government of the United States owed it to itself to spare no effort to arrest the acknowledged chief of the conspiracy. It has secured him, and no sound reason can be urged why the law should not take its course. Jefferson Davis must be tried for treason. If convicted he must be sentenced. If sentenced he must be executed, unless for high reasons of state the President should commute his punishment.

The sole question will be, how Davis's fate can be made the most emphatic warning. Would it be wiser to disable him forever as an American citizen; to banish him from the country under penalty of death upon his return, and so deprive him of the opportunity of making that final appeal from the scaffold as a political victim, which always awakens sooner or later the sympathy of mankind; or to show the country and the world that a Senator of the United States, who deliberately resigns his office at the capital and withdraws to wage cruel and ceaseless war against the Government, however imposing his rebellion may be, however its scope and duration involve his country to the heart and command the attention of the world and the sympathy of an aristocracy every where, is still a criminal, when arrested by the law will be brought to trial, and upon that conviction will be made to suffer the penalty, exactly like the obscurest thief, and will not be shielded from punishment on the ground that his crime has involved the desolation of the country, the slaughter of thousands of innocent citizens, and the national embarrassment of a colossal debt? Can any lesson be so permanently impressive as the final proof by the solemn sanction of the supreme authority that treason against the United States is not a political difference of opinion, but a crime whose enormity will not permit the legal penalty?

It is clear that if Davis shall be lawfully convicted, the question must be finally settled whether treason shall ever be punished in this country as a crime. If in his person the penalty is remitted it can never be enforced upon any other offender. Treason to towering, the sanguinary, and the obscure agents is committed. If magnanimity or good policy require that Davis shall not suffer, they require that treason shall cease to be accounted a capital crime.

THE QUEEN'S LETTER.

The kind letter of sympathy which the Queen of England has written to Mrs. Lincoln is doubtless dictated by the very acute sense of the affliction which has befallen the late President's widow, but also by her pious remembrance of the friendship for his country of the late Prince Consort. The letter is also, whether intentionally or not, a masterly stroke of state policy. It is a further and extraordinary earnest of the feeling which the head of the British Government cherishes for this country, and will naturally tend to soothe the disagreeable remembrance of the unfriendly conduct of her ministers.

We are very sure that the great mass of the people of England must understand that while we have manfully every word spoken in Parliament and elsewhere in the progress of the war, and do not change our opinions of their spirit and significance, we yet cherish no national hostility. We do not forget that we have had no more constant friends than certain illustrious Englishmen, whose names we honor, and whose principles we shall endeavor to imitate.

LITERARY.

"Kate Kennedy" (Harpers) is the title of a thousand novel, "the old story of honor, true, and devoted love," which has something of the delightful plot of the ballad of "The Lord of Burleigh," and will be a welcome summer companion for the mountains or sea-side.

"Lovers and Thinkers" (Carleton) is an American tale of to-day. Its earnest, noble spirit, its generous sympathy with every humane aspiration and movement, and its healthy and scholarly tone will win hosts of friends among those scholars for which it is happily named.

We are courteously reminded by a gentleman in the know, that we were in error in supposing that Louis Napoleon was ever a denizen of Leicester Square, in London. During his English residence he was regarded as the head of his house.

WHAT IS WEALTH?

Wealth is something more than gold,
More than luxury and ease;
Treasures never to be sold
May be found in these.
Men who great possessions own
May be needy none the less:
They are rich, and poor alone,
Who have store of nobleness.

Palaces are dreary domes;
Fair demesnes, but deserts will;
If there be not happy homes,
Gentle thoughts, and manners mild.
Trust me, though his lot be small,
And he make but slight pretense,
He who lives with all
Dwells in true magnificence.

If you'd prove of noble birth,
O beware of judgments rash:
Scorn to measure human worth
By the sordid rule of cash.
Gold and silver may depart,
Proudest dynasties may fall;
He who has the truest heart
Is the richest of us all.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

Among the many blessings which come to the loyal people of this country through the return of peace it is not to be reckoned as the least that we are henceforth secure not only against overt warfare against our Government, but also against the infernal schemes which have been concerted for the murder and robbery of peaceful citizens.

The assassination of Mr. Blackburn at Bermuda has fully established that foul piece of bloodguiltiness, with a resident of that place named Sanders, as its instrument. Montreal, Philadelphia, and other Northern cities, trunks containing infected clothing, with the object of thus introducing yellow fever, have been built from Canada, and the funds used in carrying out his nefarious plots were drawn from the Confederate exchequer.

Several important rebels are now under arrest. Davis has been captured. Governor Brown, of Georgia, and R. M. T. Hunter, of Virginia, are under arrest.

NEWS ITEMS.

The Government has decided to reduce the army to from 125,000 to 150,000 men. The reduction will not be made so rapidly as was at first intended, but some time will be required to arrange regulars, restore, and muster out.

Correspondence of the Philadelphia Inquirer states that the rebel archives have taken their departure for Washington. Many thirty-two large boxes, packed with the papers of the late rebel Government, and directed to Hon. C. A. Dana, Assistant Secretary of War, were on Friday witnesses that the rebellion is over.

The steamship Sydney, of Panama, that left San Francisco sailed from Melbourne on the 15th of February. She destined to the same ports, but it was generally supposed that she would undertake a cruise on the Pacific coast in the track of vessels bound for California.

Major-General Rosecrans visited the Representatives' Hall at the Hotel Bonta, Boston, on the 15th, and at the close of the session made a speech, in which he emphatically denied the truth of the report that he was organizing a force of 30,000 men for the invasion of Mexico and the establishment of a French empire.

Major-General N. J. T. Dana, United States Volunteers, has relieved from command of the Department of the Mississippi, and Major-General G. K. Warren, United States Volunteers, assigned to that command.

The Times Washington correspondent makes the following statement: "Lajazd to the effect that Jefferson Davis and Sherman's Pulaski stories of discourteous conduct on the part of Mrs. Sherman to Mrs. Davis at the house in Richmond are in circulation here, and are founded on fact. When General Sherman arrived at Washington from Raleigh, via City Point, General Halleck sent word to him that he would receive no evidence in Richmond in the Government's use, as long as his head-quarters should be in the field. General Sherman thus took the hostilities of rebellion to his position. General Sherman replied curtly, declining the proffered courtesy, and added that he would not recognize General Halleck. The latter replied in a friendly note, which, however, said that hope that General Sherman would not consider a friendship of twenty years' standing interrupted because of Halleck's official position. Sherman cordially forfeits an unpleasant duty, and expressing a hope that he might have the pleasure of visiting General Sherman's troops on their passage through Richmond. To this General Sherman replied that he regretted that he could not recognize General Halleck, and that his corps commanders were instructed that if they found him in their march through Richmond in a position to review the troops they would not consider it a personal courtesy to ask him to do so. The Committee on the Conduct of the War, it may be added, in addition to General Sherman, has also, in the course of the weekly adjournment, that he proceed from Richmond to Washington by land, and that he receive the honorities at an early day. He declined peremptorily, and proceeded to march onward with his troops."

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE AFFAIR AT LISBON.

The United States Minister to Portugal makes the following statement respecting the difficulty in Lisbon Harbor, which we have before to the London Times:

"The two Stonewall came into the Tagus on Sunday the 7th inst., and anchored in the usual berth assigned to ships of war. A notice was soon afterward given by the Portuguese Government, requiring them to quit the port within twenty-four hours, which timeliberation was granted. The Sumter left Lisbon on the 8th, and the Stonewall on the 9th, by which time 10.30 A.M. On the 10th of March, the Stonewall left Lisbon, and proceeded to Gibraltar. Fort St. Julian guards the entrance to the bar, five miles beyond Belem Castle.

"The Portuguese gun-ship Sagres was moored above Belem Castle when the Sagres and Sarmento entered, and the Portuguese officer of that ship came off and conveyed, by mistake of a person called an interpreter, a verbal message to the effect that, as the pressure of the commander had excited much anxiety, it was desired that the Sagres should not be fired upon, and that the Sagres would go out for twenty-four hours after the Stonewall.

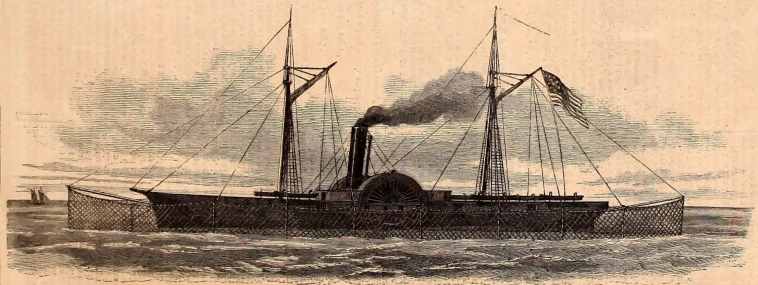
"The Stonewall started out on Thursday morning, the 29th of March, at 10.30 o'clock. When all alarm was supposed to be over, the Sagres, under way at 5.30 P.M., and barely five hours afterward, and when the idea of pursuit had been given up, the ship in the main morning, for convenience to the city. Owing to the state of the tide she was obliged to anchor, the shipping in port were under Belem Castle. The Sagres and Sarmento were under the auspices of the batteries of Portuguese guns, waving the uniform and other insignia of his Majesty's Government. The Sarmento had never advanced as far as the Sagres position, but backed and turned. Owing to the great length of the Stonewall, the Portuguese could not fire at to attempt a similar movement, but, with a sweep in the river, described the arc of a circle, during her turn, by her own anchorage-ground. In executing that movement the Portuguese dropped on to the Sagres by only Sagres, lying between the Sagres and Belem Castle, from which all the vessels and messengers had left the ship's company. The Sagres and Sarmento were under the command of the Portuguese officer

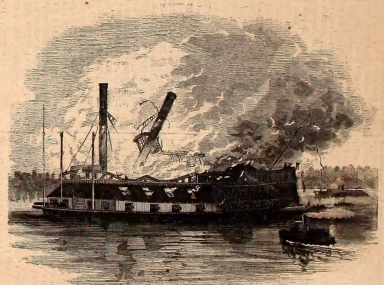
CHARGE OF THE NINTH ARMY CORPS ON FORT MAHONE, April 2, 1865.—[SKETCHED BY A. R. WAUD.]

THE FIGHT BEFORE MOBILE—STORMING OF FORT BLAKELY, APRIL 9, 1865.



THE FIGHT BEFORE MOBILE.

We have already, in a previous number, described the assault on Fort Blakely, which we illustrate this week on this page. Probably the last charge of this war, it was as gallant as any on record. Fort Blakely formed the left of the rebel line of works defending Mobile. The approach to the work was impeded by obstructions of every sort, which the national troops were fully one hour in making their way through. The loss here was great; but no obstacle hindered, no degree of carnage daunted the men. They carried the work, and this brave and successful assault finished the fight before Mobile.



Several batteries of artillery and large quantities of ammunition were taken with the fort, besides 2400 prisoners. Our loss in the whole affair was about 2000 killed and wounded.

THE "BLACK HAWK."

We engrave on this page an illustration of the burning of the Black Hawk, the flag-ship of the Mississippi squadron, off Mount City, April 22. The fire broke out below where paints and oils were stored. It was found impossible to subdue the flames, and the boat was entirely consumed. Only four lives were lost. The magazine, containing 500 pounds of powder, exploded about an hour after the fire broke out. The officers and crew of the Black Hawk numbered somewhat over three hundred. The boat was commanded by Captain CHARLES A. BABCOCK. The fire is supposed to have been originated by the negligence of a painter, who went below for oil or turpentine, and carelessly set a lighted lamp where it quickly ignited the combustible material around it.

THE GUN-BOAT "GENESEE" PROVIDED WITH A NET-WORK AGAINST TORPEDOES.—[SKETCHED BY GEORGE WATTERS.]

BURNING OF THE "BLACK HAWK," APRIL 22, 1865.—[SKETCHED BY ADAM ROÜE.]

MAY LILLIES.

Ye gentle, modest flowers,
With bending bells of snow,
Ye felt the tramp of thousands
That May so long ago;
Ye saw the Nation's bravest
Go forth to meet the foe—
Ye caught the first faint sobbing
Of that long wail of woe.

The bursting buds of lilies
Grew white on every hill,
When the whole land awakened
Felt yet the Sumter thrill.
The cry for peace was silent,
Each doubting voice was still—
Then came from out the darkness
A Nation's stern "I will!"

The flowers bloomed and faded,
Four weary Mays went by;
There came no gleam of morning
To light our stormy sky:
But sweet as lily fragrance,
Unspotted, pure and high,
Shone forth the grand devotion
That gladly went to die.

O fearful drops of crimson
That stained the lilies fair!
O robe and wails of anguish
That rent the summer air!
Our longing eyes turned Southward,
Defeat and death were there;
Our country's hope seemed changing
To blackness of despair.

It came at last—a flushing
Of light across the sky;
Then swelling o'er the Northland
There rose a midnight cry—
"Rejoice, O happy nation!
Lift up thy voice on high,
Break forth in songs of triumph,
The hour of Peace is nigh!"

"Peace to the Northern hill-side,
Peace to the Southern shore;"
The wild, free winds rejoicing
The heavenly message bore—
"From Lake to Gulf our banner
Floats proudly as before,
The one dark stain upon it
Is gone for evermore!"

Swing your fair bells, O lilies,
Rejoicing in the light!
This year no stain of crimson
Is on your spotless white.
And thou, O Mother-Country!
Victorious in the fight,
Kneel down in glad thanksgiving,
For God has sped the flight!

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS,
Author of "Barbara's History," &c.

CHAPTER VI.

THE VALUE OF A WIDOWER.

As the two cousins passed across the grass-grown court-yard, and under the gateway with the stork's nest overhead, Mr. Trefalden pointed up to the broken escutcheon.

"Is that a record of some medieval fray?" asked he.

"Oh, dear no!" replied the young man, laughingly. My great-grandfather smashed that heraldry when he bought the place.

"Then he was a zealous Republican?"

"Not he. Quite the contrary, I believe. No—he defaced the shield because the château was his, and the arms were not."

"I see. He did not choose to live in a house with another man's name upon his door. That was sensible; but he might have substituted his own."

Saxon's lip curled sneeringly.

"Bah!" said he, "what do we want of arms? We are rich enough. We have no right to them."

"Neither has any one else, I should fancy, in a republic like this," observed Mr. Trefalden.

"Oh yes—some have. The Rothbergs, who lired here before us, the Plantas, the Berensteins, are all noble. They were counts and knights hundreds of years ago, when the feudal system prevailed."

"Nobles who subscribe to a democratic rule forego their nobility, my young cousin," said Mr. Trefalden.

"I have heard that before," replied Saxon; "but I don't agree with it."

This young man had a sturdy way of expressing his opinions that somewhat amused and somewhat dismayed Mr. Trefalden. He had also a frightful facility of foot that rendered him a difficult companion among such paths as led down from the Château Rezberg to the valley below.

"My good fellow," said the lawyer, coming to a sudden stop, "do you want me to break my neck? I'm not a chamois!"

Saxon, who had been springing from ledge to ledge of the slippery descent with the light and fearless step of a mountaineer to the manner born, turned back at once, and put out his hand.

"I beg your pardon," he said, apologetically. "I had forgotten. I suppose you have never been among mountains before?"

"Oh yes, I have—and I can keep my feet here quite well, thank you, if you will not ask me to come down in a comatose. I have been up Snowdon, and Cader Idris, and plenty of smaller heights—to say nothing of Holborn Hill."

Saxon laughed merrily.

"Why, what do you know of Holborn Hill?" said Mr. Trefalden, surprised to find that small jest appreciated.

"It is a hill rising westward, on the right bank of the Fleet River."

"But you have never visited London?"

"I have never been farther than Zurich in my life; but I have read Stowe carefully, with a nap."

Mr. Trefalden could not forbear a smile.

"You must not suppose that you therefore know any thing about modern London," said he. "Stowe would not recognise his own descriptions now. The world has gone round once or twice since his time."

"So I suppose."

"I should like to take you back with me, Saxon. You'd find me a better guide than the medieval surveyor."

"To London?"

"Ay, to London."

Saxon shook his head.

"You do not mean to tell me that you have no curiosity to visit the most wonderful city in the world?"

"Not at all; but there are others which I had rather see first."

"And which are they?"

"Rome, Athens, and Jerusalem."

"Then I have no hesitation in prophesying that you would be greatly disappointed in all three. One is always disappointed in places that depend for their interest on remote associations."

Saxon made no reply, and for a few moments they were both silent. When they presently left the last belt of pines behind them and emerged upon the level road, Mr. Trefalden paused and said:

"I ought not to let you go any farther. My way lies straight before me now, and I can not miss it."

"I will go with you as far as the bridge," replied Saxon.

"But it is growing quite dusk, and you have those mountain paths to climb."

"I could climb them blindfolded. Besides, we have arranged nothing for to-morrow. Would you like to walk over the Galunda to Pfeffers?"

"How far is it?" asked Mr. Trefalden, with a glance of wonder toward the mountain in question, which looked loftier than ever in the gloaming.

"About twenty-three or four miles."

"Each way?"

"Of course."

"I am much obliged to you," said the lawyer, "but, as I said before, I am not a chamois. No, young man, you must come over to the Adler to-morrow morning to breakfast with me, and after breakfast, if you like, we will walk to Chur. I hear it is a fine old town, and I should like to see it."

"As you please, cousin. At what hour?"

"I fear if I say half past eight you will think it terribly late."

"Not at all, since you do not dine till eight at night."

"Then I may expect you?"

"Without fail."

They were now within sight of the covered bridge and the twinkling lights in the village beyond. Mr. Trefalden paused for the second time.

"I must insist upon saying good-by now," said he. "And, by-the-way, before we part, will you be kind enough to explain to me the real value of this Swiss franc?"

He took out a handful of loose money, and Saxon examined the pieces by the waning light. My charmeter to-day would rate the French francs," continued Mr. Trefalden, "but asked for Münts money. When I offered him these Swiss francs he was satisfied. What is the difference in value between a French and a Swiss franc? What is Münts money? How many of these pieces should I get for a Napoleon or an English sovereign?"

Saxon shook his head.

"I don't know," said he. "I have not the least idea."

Mr. Trefalden thought he had been misunderstood.

"I beg your pardon," said he. "Perhaps I have not explained myself clearly. This Münts money—"

"Münts money is Swiss money," interrupted Saxon. "That is to say, the new uniform coinage voted by the Diet of 1850."

"Well, what is this Swiss franc worth?"

"A hundred rappen."

"Then a rapp is equivalent to a French centime?"

Saxon looked puzzled.

"The rappen are issued instead of the old batzen," said he.

Mr. Trefalden smiled.

"We don't quite understand each other yet," he said, taking a Napoleon from the number. "What I want to know is simply how many Swiss francs I ought to receive for this?"

Saxon took the Napoleon between his finger and thumb, and examined it on both sides with some curiosity.

"I don't think it is worth any thing at all here," he replied, as he gave it back. "What is it?"

"What is it? Why, a Napoleon! Do you mean to say that you never saw one before?"

"I don't think I ever did."

"But I know they are current here, for I changed one at Chur."

Saxon looked as if he could not comprehend his cousin's evident surprise.

"You may be right," said he. "I can not tell. I will ask my father when I go home. I dare say he can explain it to you."

Mr. Trefalden's amazement was so great that he took no pains to conceal it.

"But, my dear fellow," he said, "you can not be unacquainted with the standard value of money—with the relative value of gold and silver?"

"I assure you I know nothing at all about it."

"But—but it is incomprehensible."

"Why so? It is a subject which has never come under my observation, and in which I take no interest."

"Yet in the ordinary transactions of life—of farming life, for instance, such as your own—in the common buying and selling of everyday—"

"I have nothing to do with that. My father manages all matters connected with the land."

"Well, then, if it were only as a guide to the expenditure of your own money, some such knowledge is necessary and valuable."

"But I have no money," replied Saxon, with the simplicity of a savage.

"No money? None whatever?"

"None."

"Do you never have any?"

"Never."

"Have you never had any?"

"Never in my life."

Mr. Trefalden drew a long breath, and said no more.

"That seems to surprise you very much," said Saxon, laughingly.

"Well—it does."

"But it need not. What do I want with money? Of what use would it be to me? What should I do with it? What is money? Nothing. Nothing but a sign, the interpretation of which is food, clothing, land, and other commodities and necessaries of life. I have all these, and, having them, need no money. It is sufficiently plain."

"Ah yes, it is plain—quite plain," rejoined the lawyer, abstractedly. "I see it all now. You are right, my dear Saxon. You would not know what to do with it if you had it. Good-night."

"Good-night."

"Don't forget: half past eight to-morrow."

"No, no. Good-night."

And so they took leaves and parted.

Mr. Trefalden was somewhat like the retired farmer of his dinner; but the one at the Adler was an older man, and one to be disconcerted by no commonplace an emergency. It was a very recherché little dinner, Mr. Trefalden was unusually well disposed to enjoy it. Never, surely, was trout more fresh; never was Mayonnaise better dressed, never had Lafitte a more delicate aroma. Mr. Trefalden dined deliberately, praised the cook with the grace of a connoisseur, and lingered luxuriously over his dessert. His meditations were pleasant, and the claret was excellent.

A simple old pastor with a mania for archæology," muttered he, as he sipped his curaçoa and watched the smoke of his cigar, "a simple old pastor with a mania for archæology, and a young barbarian who reads Theocritus and never saw a Napoleon! What a delicious combination of circumstances! What a glorious field for enterprise! Verily, the days of El Dorado have not passed away!"

CHAPTER VII.

PASTOR HARTH'S THEORY.

The pastor had spoken from his heart of hearts when he told Mr. Trefalden with what pleasure he welcomed his nephew and niece; but he did not tell him all, or even half, of the zeal, humility, and devotion with which he had studied that sacred duty. Knowing the full extent of his responsibility, he had accepted it from the very hour of the boy's birth. He had him at once right into his study, and had begun to get in his cradle, pondering, and praying, and asking himself how he should bring him up, what would appear the best preparations of the world. He had written out full a dozen elaborate schemes of education and put before the child could handle an articulate word. He spent his leisure in studying the lives of great and virtuous men that he might thereby gather some wisdom for the tutelage; and to this end toiled patiently once again through all Plutarch's crabbed Greek and Cicero's stiff and pompous Latin. He even spilled formidable lists of all kinds of instructive books for his pupil's future reading long before the young one had ever heard of the penances ending in "ology." He filled reams of sermon paper with extracts and extracts from the classic poets, and made easy abstracts of Euclid and Aristotle for his sole use and benefit. In short, he laid the foundation before the child was out of this baby Juggernaut in a spirit of the uttermost self-devotion and love, giving up to him every moment which his pastoral duties held no claim, and sacrificing even the Etruscans for his dear sake.

The boy's education may almost be said to have dated from the day on which he first began to laugh and put out his little arms at the sight of those he loved. Uncle Martin, in spite of some maternal opposition, took care of that. He asserted his position at once, and quietly but firmly maintained it. He it was who taught the child his first utterances—who guided his first feeble steps upon the soft sward out of doors—who trained his tongue to stammer its first prayer. He taught him that God had made the sun, and the stars, and the green trees. He led him to see use and beauty in all created things—even in the most unlovely. He brought him up to fear the darkness no more than the light; to admire all that was beautiful; to reverence all that was noble; to love every thing that had life. He would not even let him hate a toy that was ugly, and in some ways suggestive of gracefulness or service.

When little Saxon was but two years old his mother died; and the good pastor pursued his labor henceforth without even a semblance of opposition. Saxon the elder looked on his brother as of old, and deferred to him in every thing. Martin did not, perhaps, believe quite implicitly in himself; for, as he said to his cousin, he prayed for light, and only strove to know his duty, that he might perform it.

As time went on that duty became daily of more extensive operation. The boy grew portentously, both in ideas and inches. He developed an alarming appetite for books, as well as bread and butter. His curiosity became insatiable, and his industry indefatigable. In short, he perplexed his tutor sorely, and unconsciously raised up a host of difficulties which had been quite unprovided for in the good pastor's theories.

For Martin Trefalden had theories—very strange, unwieldy, eccentric theories indeed, which looked wonderfully well upon paper, and had been proved by him to his brother over and over again as they sat smoking together in their fireside o'nights; but which had various disagreeable ways of tripping him up, and leaving him in the lurch, now that they came to be put into practice.

Chief and foremost among these was his grand theory about the Trefalden legacy.

Having persuaded his brother to merry, and having, as it were, compelled him by the tongue to enter on this stage of mortal life, it obviously behooved him above all other things to arm that child Christian against the perils, temptations and temptations to which his singular destiny exposed him. He must be trained in habits of independence, frugality, charity, and self-denial. He must be taught to prize only the simplest pleasures. He must be dowered and trebly fortified against pride, avarice, prodigality, self-indulgence, and every other sin of which wealth is fruitful. In a word, he must be prepared for—he must love money. Nay more, he must be wholly indifferent to it. He must regard it as a mere sign—as a symbol—as a medium of exchange—a thing valueless in itself, and desirable only because it is convenient. His childish hand must never be sullied by it. His innocent thoughts must never entertain it. He shall be as pure from the taint of gold as the first dwellers in Paradise.

"But when he grows up, brother Martin," suggested the father one evening, as they sat talking it over, as usual, in the chimney corner, "when he grows up, you know, and the money really falls due—what then?"

"What do you mean, Sax?"

"He won't know what to do with it."

"Pooh, pooh!" replied the pastor, sharply; "and, after all, 'tis you are the heir—not he. You never seem to remember that, brother Sax."

The latter made no reply.

"And by that time, too," continued Martin, "he will be old enough to understand the right uses of wealth."

"You'll teach him those, brother Martin," said the farmer.

"You and I together."

Saxon the elder smoked on in silence for a moment or two; then, laying his hand gently on the pastor's sleeve, "Brother Martin," he said, "thou'rt younger than I, as I have reminded thee once or twice before. I don't believe I have a very long life before me. I don't feel as if I should ever inherit that fortune, or see my boy with a beard upon his chin."

He was right. He died, as we know, twelve years before the present century opened, and Martin Trefalden continued to bring up his nephew in his own way. He could ride his hobby now at his ease, undisturbed, without the slightest interruption of a meek question by the way; so he rambled on year after year with his eyes shut, and his mind completely absorbed in the task he no longer a boy. He made himself wilfully blind both to his mistake and his inches. He would never look at the boy's face to discover the time for discussing the forbidden subject. He could not endure to tell his young Spartan that he must one day be rich; and so, as it were, be the first to raise his hand against that fabric of unworldliness which it had been the labor of his life to erect.

Of late, however, he had had misgivings. He had begun to speculate whether perfect ignorance of life was really the best preparation for a career of usefulness, and whether the college at Geneva might not have proved a better school for his nephew than the solitude of Domleschg.

These matters stood when William Trefalden, Esquire, of Chancery Lane, London, made his appearance at the Château Rotzberg; and thus it happened that the cousins found each other at four millions and a half of funded property, had no notion of the value of a Napoleon.

CHAPTER VIII.

MR. TREFALDEN MEETS ACQUAINTANCES BY THE WAY.

Punctual as the minute-hand of the quaint little Swiss time-piece on the mantle-shelf was Saxon to his appointment. The first metallic chime of the half hour was just striking as he reached the inn door, and the rapid smiting of his iron heel on the paved corridor leading to the salon drowned the vibrations of the second. He found the breakfast-table laid beside an open window looking upon the garden and the mountains, and his cousin turning over the leaves of a large book at the farther end of the room.

"It is pleasant to find one's self so good a judge of character," said Mr. Trefalden, advancing with outstretched hand. "I felt sure you would be true to time, Saxon—so sure, that I had sent the eggs away to be poached—and here they are! Come, sit down. I hope you're hungry."

"Indeed I am," replied Saxon, making a vigorous onslaught upon the loaf.

"You seem to have brought the mountain air in with you," said Mr. Trefalden, with a half-envious glance at his fresh young cheek and breezy curls. "It is a glorious morning for walking."

"That it is; and I have been up to some of the high pastures in search of one of our goats. It was so clear at six o'clock that I saw the Järnish quite plainly."

"What is the Gärnisch—a mountain?"

"Yes—a splendid mountain; the highest in the Canton Glarus."

"What wine do you prefer, Saxon?"

"Oh, either, thank you. I like the one as well as the other."

Mr. Trefalden raised his eyes from the carafes vins.

"What 'one' and what 'other' do you mean?" asked he.

"The red and the white."

"You mean vin ordinaire?"

"Certainly. Why not?"

Mr. Trefalden shrugged his shoulders.

"I don't drink vinegar myself," said he, "and I should not choose to place it before you. We will try a bottle of our host's Château Margaux. I suppose you like that?"

"I don't know," replied Saxon. "I never tasted it."

"Have you ever tasted Champagne?"

"Never."

"Would you like to do so?"

"Indeed I don't care. I like one thing just as well as another. These cutlets are capital."

Mr. Trefalden looked at his cousin with an expression of mingled wonder and compassion.

"My dear boy," said he, "what have you done that you should only like one thing as well as another?"

Saxon looked puzzled.

"It is a shocking defect either of constitution or education," continued Mr. Trefalden, gravely. "You must try to get over it. Don't laugh. I am perfectly serious. Here, taste this paté, and tell me if you like it only as well as the cutlets."

Saxon tasted it and made a wry face.

"What is it made of?" said he. "What are those small black things in it?"

"It is a paté de foegras," replied Mr. Trefalden, with a shudder, "and the small black things are truffles—the greatest delicacies imaginable."

Saxon laughed heartily, poured some claret into a tumbler, and put out his hand for the water-bottle.

"You are not going to mix that Château Margaux?" cried Mr. Trefalden.

"Why not?"

"Because it is sacrilege to spoil the flavor."

"But I am thirsty."

"So much the better. Your palate is all the more susceptible. Try the first glass pure, at all events."

Saxon submitted, and emptied his glass at a draught.

"That is delicious," said he. "Are you really think so?"

"Unquestionably."

"You prefer it to the vin ordinaire?"

"I do, indeed."

Mr. Trefalden drew a deep breath of satisfaction.

"Allons!" said he. "Then there is some little hope for you, Saxon, after all."

"But—"

"But what?"

Saxon blushed and hesitated.

"But I am not sure," said he, "that I prefer it to the vin d'Asti."

Mr. Trefalden leaned back in his chair and groaned aloud.

"In fact, I'm very sorry," laughed Saxon, with a comic look, half shy, half penitent. "But —but it isn't my fault, is it?"

Before Mr. Trefalden could reply to this appeal there was a rustling of silk, and a sound of voices in the corridor, and a lady and gentleman entered the salon, conversing earnestly. Seeing others in the room they checked themselves. At the same instant Mr. Trefalden, who sat partly turned toward the door, rose and exclaimed:

"Mademoiselle Colonna!"

The lady put out her hand.

"You here, Mr. Trefalden?" said she. "Paradise nulle, remember Mr. Trefalden?"

The gentleman, who held his hat in one hand and a bundle of letters and papers in the other, bowed somewhat distantly, and said he believed he had had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Trefalden before.

"Yes, at Castletown," replied the lawyer. The gentleman's dark face lighted up instantly, and, laying his hat aside, he also advanced to shake hands.

"Forgive me," he said; "I did not remember that you were a friend of Lord Castletown. Have you seen him lately? I hope you are well. This is a charming spot. Have you been here long? We have only this moment arrived."

He asked questions without waiting for replies, and spoke hurriedly and abstractedly, as if his thoughts were busy elsewhere all the time. Both his accent and his daughter's were slightly foreign, but his was more foreign than hers.

"I only came yesterday," replied Mr. Trefalden, "and I propose to stay here for a week or two. May one venture to hope that you are about to do the same?"

The young lady shook her head. Her father had already moved away to the opposite side of the room, and was examining his letters.

"We are only waiting to breakfast while our vetturino feeds his horses," said she; "and we hope to reach Chur in time for the mid-day train."

"A short sojourn," said Mr. Trefalden.

"Yes; I am sorry for it. We have travelled by this road very often, and always in haste. The place, I am aware, would repay investigation. It is very beautiful."

"You come from Italy, I suppose?"

"Yes, from Milan."

"And are, of course, devoted as ever to the good cause?"

Her eyes seemed to flash and dilate as she lifted them suddenly upon her interrogator.

"You know, Mr. Trefalden," said she, "that we live for no other. But why do you call it the 'good' cause? You have never joined us; you have never helped us. I had no idea that you deemed it a good cause."

"Then you did me injustice," replied the lawyer, with an enharmonic change of tone. "The liberty and unity of a great people must be a good cause. I should blush for my opinions if I did not think so."

"Then why not give us the support of your name?"

"Because, my dear madam, it would bring no support with it. I am an obscure man. I have neither power nor influence."

"Even if that were so it would be of little importance," said Mademoiselle Colonna, eagerly. "Every man is a unit, and every unit is humble and weak. But you are neither, Mr. Trefalden. You are far from being an obscure man. You are a well-known man—very, I mean no compliment. I only repeat what I have often heard. I know that you have talent, and I am sure you are not without influence. You would be a most welcome accession to our staff."

"Indeed, Mademoiselle Colonna, you overestimate me in every way."

"I do not think so. I ought also to tell you that I am a very busy man. My whole life is absorbed by my professional duties."

"It is always possible to find time for good deeds," replied the lady.

"I fear not always."

"Ah, yes, we are exacting. To those friends who can give us but their names and their sympathies we are grateful. You will be one of those, I am sure."

"It is better to give nothing than to give that which is worthless," said Mr. Trefalden.

Mademoiselle Colonna met this reply with a slight curl of the lip and another flash of her magnificent eyes.

"Those who are not for Italy are against her, Mr. Trefalden," she said, coldly, and turned away.

The lawyer received his position with perfect tact.

"I am not allow Mademoiselle Colonna to mistake me a second time," he said. "If she does me the honor to value my poor name as more than a blank, I am glad to place it at her disposal."

"Are you sincere?" she said, quickly.

"Undoubtedly."

"You permit us the use of your name?"

Mr. Trefalden smiled and bent his head.

"Thanks, in the name of the cause."

"But, Signora—"

"But what?"

"You will forgive me if I desire to know in what manner you propose to make my name serviceable?"

"I shall enter it on our general committee list."

"Is that all?"

"All—neither more nor less."

Mr. Trefalden's face showed neither satisfaction nor dissatisfaction. It was perfectly placid and indifferent, like his smile. Mademoiselle Colonna turned away as if she would read him through; but she could do nothing of the kind.

"If you repent of the permission you have granted," she began, "or object to the publicity of—"

"No, no," interposed the lawyer, with a little deprecatory raising of the hand; "not at all. It gives me much pleasure."

"Then, on the contrary, you choose at one time to favor us with more active aid," continued she, "you need only write to my father, or Lord Castletown, or, indeed, any of the honorary secretaries, and your co-operation will meet with grateful and immediate acceptance. Till then no demand will be made upon your time or patience."

Mr. Trefalden bowed.

"I hope you may such chances in your life, Signora?" asked he.

"Many indeed."

"But they can only be encumbrances."

"Quite the contrary; they are of considerable value. Their names give weight to our cause in the eyes of the world; and the printed lists which contain them find their way into every corner and recess in Europe. For instance, I have here a paper—"

She paused, glanced toward Saxon, and, dropping her voice almost to a whisper, said,

"Your guide, I suppose? Does he understand English?"

"Perfectly," replied Mr. Trefalden, answering the second question and taking no notice of the first. "As well as you or myself."

"Dio! Have I said too much? Is he safe?"

"I would answer for him with my head, if even he were a confirmed reporter of our conversation—which he has not done."

"How can you be sure of that?"

"Because he is a wild mountaineer, and knows no more of politics than you, Signor Colonna, know of the common law of England."

The young lady took a folded paper from her pocket and placed it in Mr. Trefalden's hand.

"Read that," she said. "It is from Rome. You are aware, of course, that Sardinia—"

Her voice fell again to a whisper. She drew the lawyer away to her father's table, spread the document before him, and proceeded to comment upon its contents. This she did with great earnestness and animation, but in a tone of voice inaudible even to Saxon, who, Mr. Trefalden was all attention. Signor Colonna, his thin hands twisted fin his hair, and his elbows resting on the table, remained absorbed in his papers; and Saxon, who had not presumed to lift his eyes from his plate while the lady stood near him, ventured to glance now and then toward this group at the farther end of the room. Having looked once he looked again, and could not forbear from looking. It was not at all strange that he should do so. On the contrary, it would have been strange if he had done otherwise; for Saxon Trefalden was gifted with a profound, almost a religious sense of beauty, and he had never in his life seen any thing so beautiful as Olimpia Colonna.

HEAD AND FACES.

CAN you judge by a smile who is gay,
Nor one by a frown who is low?
I know that I laughed aloud one day
From a heart that was almost broken.

But my laughter rang false, do you say?
Or tears followed as very soon after,
You are wrong; for I wept not that day,
And my laugh was the merriest laughter.

That my grief was not deep, you maintain,
Since I found a few lines of verse to convey
But I tell you I writhed with the pain,
And one writhes not when anguish is over.

For my own part, I scarcely believe
Their philosophy who, judging from cadence;
And I wholly misdoubt, you perceive,
That laughter must always prove gladness.

Are you sure it is grief when a tear starts?
Can you put miles of ocean in all places?
If aught can be falser than human hearts,
It must surely be human faces!

INTERESTING ITEMS.

ORNAMENTAL HOME.—The house we live in for a number of years can be made a thing of a great deal more ever to. The same pleas inspires the same traits of thought, till at last we give to the dwelling a character. In the passing room, the dining-room and the study are the matters and certain favorite objects, as well as pictures and engravings, are selected and are ever before the eye. There is a charm of home all this is revolutionized. You have to discuss aspects and views, the points of the compass, and the prevailing winds, the balance with regard to advantages of the rising against the setting sun—to think where you can sleep coolest in summer and lose most sunlight; and, above all, if a man of my own temperament, thinking to be undisturbed myself, to be quiet myself, and religiously believed sacred to meditation and labor, but, in short reality, a little more than the asylum of refuge, deduced to that noble pastime that is said to have a disreputable neighbor—gardening. For all the vegetables I consume, I would not exchange for many a practical tangible piece. Less. With the change of time there develops upon you. You can not begin the daily work of life till they be determined, and you can determine them without a constant reference to the past. Your drawing-room may be larger and loftier, your library may be more spacious or accommodation, but, depend upon it, there will always be something, be it insignificant in itself, to represent a memory which the by-gone will contrast favorably with the present. Now, I am not going to write a treatise, but I am inclined to believe; at least, all my friends who have been married a second time have unanimously imparted to me something that would go far to confirm it.

AN EASY INDIAN PARADISE.—The entire circumference of the island is one continuous, where the magnificent tropical forest with its undergrowth of jungle run down at one place to the very water's edge, where its large leaves into the glassy sea, and at another is abruptly broken by a white sandy beach, on which the waves break in foam that has not yet had time to extend itself. Here and there, too, are coverts of cocoa-nut trees, whose tall palms in the bosom of the loudest waters, between which the excursionist, the tired, may find a shade if she would avail herself of. Eternal summer glide these shores;" no sooner has the blossom of one fruit appeared than that of another bursts its place, and shade fresh perfume all around; so for the things, that have been, and for those that are to come, the many people's minds merely fulfilled dreams, but they are easy of realization. Here, indeed, are the days of the Ireland, except those few places where the original forest and jungle have been cleared away to make room for the vine, on the first breathings of the dawn the dewdrops of this time are sparkling like diamonds at the distance of more than a mile from the shore. The sea-breeze, which has been blowing all night, is soon to cease, and the sea to blow, but only to breathe more softly, and then only to catch its influence, and to be ruffled by the slightest breath of ourrise. They are welcome to all this—the visitors and the residents of the other course, and by the wearied resident because of the fresh coolness.—Cumming's Tropical Sporting in the Malayan Indies.

HAPPINESS.—The idea has been transmitted from generation to generation that happiness is one thing, and that all precious stone, a single gem so rare that all search after it is vain and all hope hopeless. It is not so. Happiness is a mosaic composed of many smaller stones. Each taken by itself and viewed singly may be of little use, but when all are grouped together and judiciously combined and set they form a most beautiful whole —a costly jewel. Trample not under foot, then, the little pleasures which a gracious Providence scatters in our daily path, and which, in eager search after some great happiness, we are apt to overlook. Many persons in always long our eyes fixed on the bright and distant horizon, while there are at their very feet many little flowers in which we are permitted to walk! The very order of our chare other flowers in which we are permitted to walk! often hinder our grasp. We pantingly strain after her when she has been graciously brought nigh unto us.

THE GRAVE OF OUR BELOVED.—The grave of those we have lived—what a place for meditation! There it is that we call up, in long review, the whole history of virtue and gentleness, and the thousand endearments lavished upon us almost unheeded in the daily intercourse of intimacy; there it is that we dwell upon the tenderness—the solemn, awful, tenderness of the parting scene. The tone of dear, which we shall hear no more—the look of tenderness—its mute, watchful solicitude! The last testimonies of expiring love! The fervent, heart-felt blessing! —oh, how thrilling!—pressure of the hand! The last fond look of the glazing eye, turning from us even on the threshold of existence! The faint, faltering accents, struggling in death to give one more assurance of affection!

Ah, go to the grave of buried love and meditate! There settle the account with thy conscience for every past benefit unrequited—every part endearment unregarded—of which departed being who can never, never return to be soothed by thy contrition! If thou art a child, and hast ever caused a sorrow to thy parent, or a frown to the severest brow of an affectionate parent—if thou art a husband, and hast ever caused a sorrow to the heart entrusted by all worldly happiness into thy care, to doubt one moment of thy kindness or thy truth—if thou art a friend, and hast ever neglected, through pride, or scorn, or dust, the spirit that generously confided in thine—if thou art a lover, and hast ever given one unmerited pang to that true heart which now lies cold and still beneath the grass and flowers of the churchyard—kneel down in the penitence word, every ungenerous thought, and pray to Him who can forgive, and who knows the frailty of our nature to pardon! There will be days when you will be down sorrowing and repenting over the grave, and when the violets and daisies are growing there in the moon deep, more bitter, because unheard and unavailing. Then every the slightest of offenses, and every the bounties of nature about the grave; consider them with regret, if thou canst, when thou pardon, and fruitful, change of regret; but take warning by the bitterness of this thy humble reflection over the dead, and henceforth be more faithful and affectionate in the discharge of thy duty to the living.

WHITE LIES.—"How do you do, Mr. Jones? Tan glad to see you." Now here is a white lie at the very beginning. Jones knows, and you also can tell what harm have I done? and yet again, lie as it is I contend that it is absolutely necessary and even a point of virtue into the bargain. I certainly am not glad to see Mr. Jones. I have no dislike to him, and perhaps like him rather than not, and it may be that I distinctly respect her and think highly her many excellent qualities; but to see her! when she has come just at the most awkward time she could have chosen—only cold mutton for dinner, not enough of that, Emma gone a visiting, and only that dirty slattern Jane left to cook and do all the work, baby fractious with his teeth and will not go to the new nurse, and I with a headache and worried to death myself. Jones does has a shrill metallic voice, not unlike the rasping of a saw or the sharpening of a knife. But what can I tell him but she is a nuisance, and that I can say thing but that I am glad to see her? Why, I should be a fool—he is a white one, when I welcome her and bid her be seated and take off her bonnet. What is the sense to make the life both hard to do and not see an outlet any where else. If she says—believing me to be in earnest—"Oh, I am sorry to hear it, I hope you are not ill," "No, my dear," I shall reply, "I would bid me answer, "Oh! I am very glad to hear it," and, trembling and distressed, I shall say, "I am ill, I am, indeed." This candor is the best breeding we have—crisp, sparkling, true proper white, and the child from off the knee, beside upon a string the conventional words, "Not at all, dear Mrs. Jones. I am very glad to see you," and I am not up with things a little uncomfortable and out of order." If I say to my wife, "I am glad to see Mrs. Jones," she is obliged to you if you will go," I think I should be doing a great wrong. Mrs. Jones has come very much out to me: she lives at Watford and Lives at Bayswater; she has had nothing to see but her eight children and Watford and is new one; but if I were to tell her, though never so mildly, that she was a nuisance, and must go home, and decidedly on my back as the French say, she would take her self as nearly as ever another Mrs. Jones, and would and be off again at a moment's notice, wounded, unsatisfied, and I sorry for life. I took upon this rule as the simple self-sacrifice and discipline, and I should regard the truth as a bit of rather coarse and unchariable selfishness.

"IF you please," said the Weather-cock to the Wind, "I am not to be blamed for the way I turn. I am regulated the cold that I am afraid they'll pull me down if I step much longer in the north quarter."

So the Wind flew from the south, and the sun was master of the day, and the Weather-cock was happy.

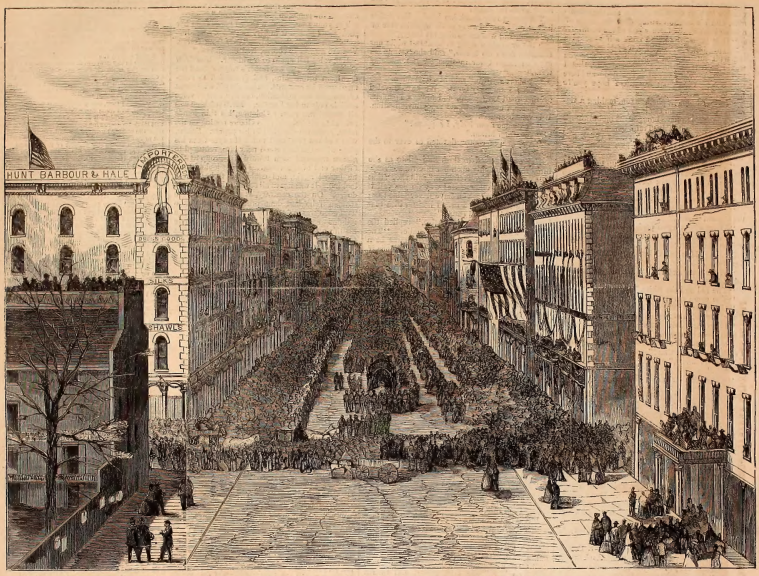
"Oh, please to turn me from the south," said the Weather-cock to the Wind, "I am getting so rusty that I will be spoiled, and the corn wants dry weather, and while I am in this rain of it"; and the Wind blew from the west, and the farmers are just and against me."

So the Wind pulled into the west, and the corn and set drying breeze day after day.

"Now," said the Wind to the Weather-cock, "here's a pretty to do! such evil looks as I get from eyes all round me the first of the morning! my corn is getting getting parched up, and there is no water for the stock; and what is to be done? As to murderers, and you don't you won't be a pea to be sore, and the vegetables will wither away, and I shall be blamed for it."

Upon which the Wind grew very angry, and with a blow puff and blew the Weather-cock off its perch.

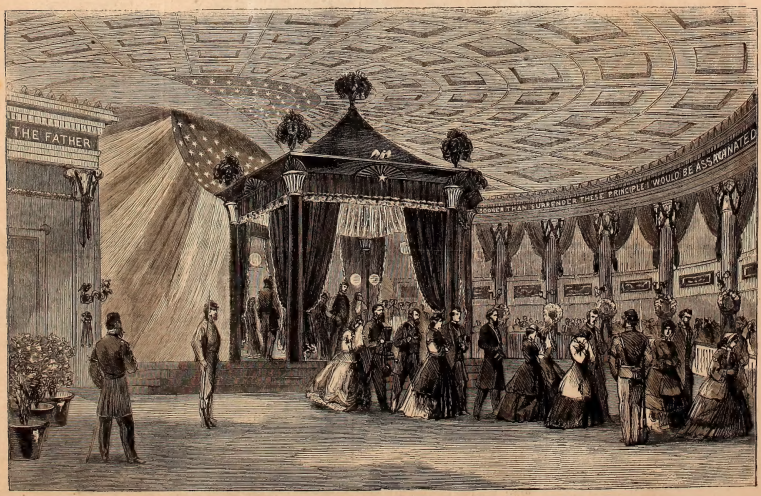
"What do they say to you now?" he asked.



And "Oh!" cried the Weather-cock, "they say my body has caught cold, and every thing is blighted—that's what they say to me, and I am to be taken down from my lofty post, somehow or other, they by it to the east wind."

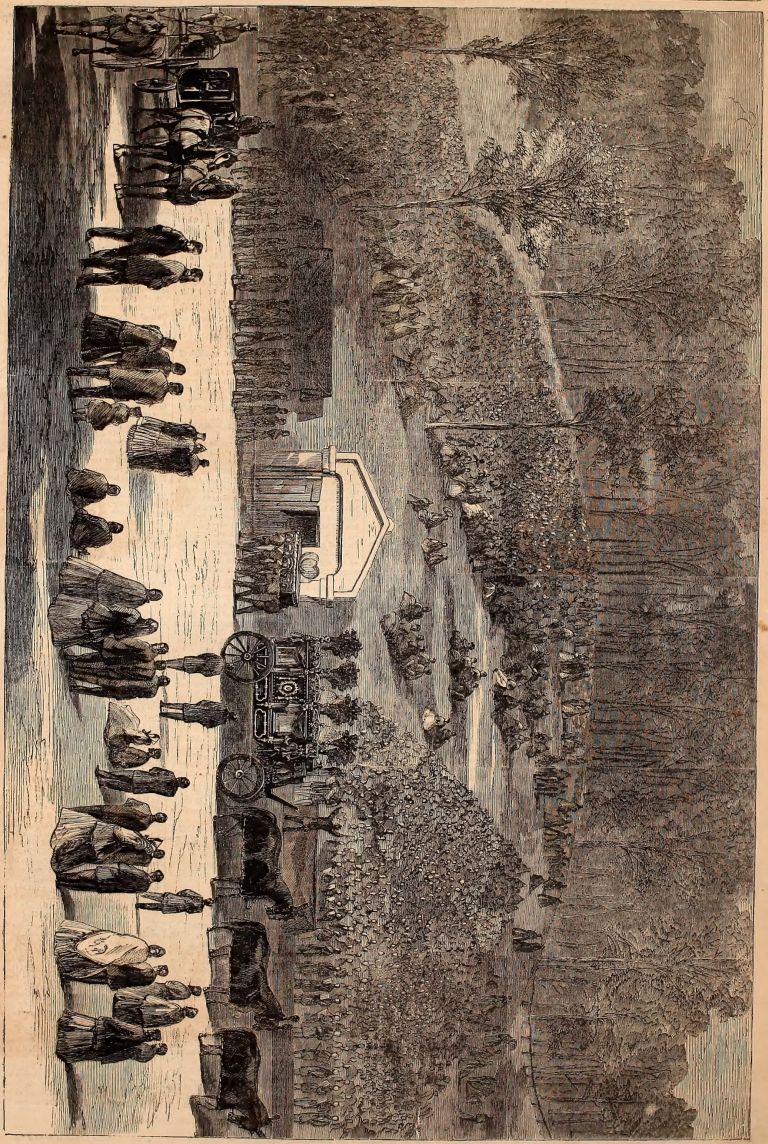
"Well!" cried the Wind, "it is not my fault! I can't help it! impossible for you and me to please every body: so as I have I shall blow where I like, and you shall go where I like, without asking any questions. I don't know but that I shall suffer more than you we can do now, with all our consideration."

PHOTOGRAPHS may flatter us, but the looking-glass does not. When you look at yourself in the glass, the suggestive little monitor in your own mind hints that such and such features are not quite right. Perhaps he is a busy to console yourself with your nose, or teeth, or eyebrows, or some other feature, but he will always throw your facial beauty or capabilities to the best; but sources, take for granted that you are not a monster, and that you are likely to be possessed of, that your acquaintances, if they have any regard for you, will not be always on the look out which you pay by in order to contemplate what pleases them in your face. Now, this is a very important point to have lots of defects. No drawing or imaginative artist ever to better or worse than that of his own face. Its familiarity, easy feature, that is about it. Now, if you are handsome or plain, accept it as a matter of course, and don't be always looking at your small features, and with the conviction that they are pretty, or that your nose is Grecian, or absorbed as much of your time and thoughts, need detain you no longer. There there you can't help it, and it is no duty to do so, if you paint or dye, you make yourself ridiculous, if you are handsome, others will discover it; they notice it, and say nothing, because they don't like to hurt your feelings by telling you so. If they respect you, and you respect yourself, so much the less.



CANADA, rather a nation than a province in any common acceptation of the word, has a territory of 350,000 square miles of territory, independently of its north-eastern possessions not yet fully given for settlement. It continues as large as Great Britain and Ireland, and more than three times as large as France. It lies between the towns the Great Northwest and the Hudson's Bay territory, and the United States, although it touches also the territory of the United States, although it touches also the Lawrence and the Atlantic coast south of the St. Lawrence, where fisheries of cod, herring, and mackerel abound. The fisheries of Canada are described as valuable, and are to be also in the lakes. It is rich in minerals, and in its forests are some of its forests. In the growth of wheat, barley, and potatoes it ranks with the north. During the life of the other cereals, or the last quarter of a century, its present generation, the population has increased more than fourfold, or from $50,000 to 2,500,000.

A TRIP OF MERCHANT.—A gentleman had to bed a memory, and so circumscribed, that he never knew what his wife, friends, acquaintances, or the shop-keepers took to send seven times over; and being asked after a time how he liked it, replied, that it was a very pleasant occupation, but the author sometimes repeats the same things.



PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FUNERAL—PROCESSION IN CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

[PHOTOGRAPHED BY ATZSCHULET, CHICAGO.]

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FUNERAL—CATAFALQUE IN THE CITY HALL, SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS.

[SKETCHED BY W. WAUD.]

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FUNERAL—BURIAL SERVICE AT OAK RIDGE, SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS.—[Sketched by W. Ward.]

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

LIFE'S DOOR-SCENE.—The gallows.

THE DROP-SCENE OF THE DISSIPATED.—The public house.

A CONTENT'S DEFENDER.—A country gentleman was strolling out with a cockney friend—a genuine cockney—when they finally approached a pig-sty. The cockney gazed at it standing a picture cap of fun—it wasn't what's-a-name's comfortably. It wasn't grass—but even you call this stuff" turnip-tops, spoused the cockney. "Then, why, boy, to be sure!" said he to his companion. "Then, why, boy, to be sure!" was the reply. "Why! he! come, that's cutting it a little too thick! If that's boy, just show me the hay-corn-ers, now!"

A BACHELOR'S CHOICE.—"Oh, Mr. Grubbles!" exclaimed a young lady to her partner, "I shouldn't you like to have a family of rosy children about your knee?" "No, ma'am," said the disagreeable old bachelor, "I'd rather have a lot of pulpy bags in my pocket!"

ANATOMICAL DISCOVERY.—For a long time it has baffled the medical authorities to account for the force with which the sneeze beat against the shore, and it is now certainly come to light that it arises from the fact of there being "motive" in the sea.

"Well, Sambo, how do you like your new place?" "Not berry well, massa." "What did you have for breakfast like the last?" "Why, you see, massa blind three eggs for herself and grib me de brof."

A NEW INVENTION.—The Emperor of the French is about to produce Julius Cæsar in a new light. He says the piece is about to be published—we should say banished—and he will be named after the great Roman. This may be considered as a new edition "with plates."

NOTES TO BE REMEMBERED.—Constant occupation prevents trifling.—Virtue and happiness are likely to run in a daughter.—God gives every bird its food, but does not throw it into the nest.—As the sole aim of man in spirit by gentle words and resolute actions; he is neither hot nor timid.—A man is never so apt to be cheated as when he is in a strait.—A teamster may do a brisk business, but he will not always be driving. Many will believe him, but few will say few. The stomach tires of every thing but bread and water.—Every man's good will be the measure of his love, but his every married man think that he hath her.—The man who was ashamed of his name is a fast man indeed.—A woman's tears soften a man's heart; her fastness hardens it.

A contraband explains how blood-hounds tear in pursuit of fugitives may be thrown off the track:—"I dem hounds gets close upon him, why, I just gib him a kick and drop about twenty feet if you kin. You do dis four or five times, and when you gets right well into your range you must be do holes what your heels make, and when de hounds come dere dey run about, and den you can get away." The next barnacle they saddles up dat ar pepper into dar nostrils, and den dey'll smell and cheer: cheer! and don't be de last when dogs can do dat day."

Needs a work on punctuation—that private in the army who used a period in a sentence to kill a comma.—Why? Why Heaven cherish and keep you from yours truly John Smith."

IMPOSING NATURE.—A lecturer addressing a Hampshire audience contended with tiresome prolixity that air could not displace water, until one of his hearers, a simple old patriarch, sat from him in a rage by exclaiming, "How would you have the water get wig?"

BE ALWAYS at leisure to do a good action, never make business an excuse for avoiding offices of humanity.

EPITAPH FOR A WIRY PLAYER.—"No Cards."

EPITAPH ON A CROSSING-SWEEPER.—Being swept away, he returned to dust.

There is no monarch's signet-ring that is typical of as much duty as the wedding-ring.

Why is St. Paul's Cathedral like a bird-bath?—Because it was built by a Wren.

A laughable story is told of a farmer who thought he saw a man sleeping in his barn, and sent for an officer who, after providing him off with lantern, handcuffs, and staff, went to the barn, stirred up the fellow, bettered him and threatened it, and ended by discovering that it was the old figure-head of a ship, partly covered with hay.

LEFT WELL OFF.

THIS is a story of deep and seemingly successful guilt; but that, in making it public, we are chargeable with murdering crime less ingeniously and hope assert until they have read it to the ending.

Among the wild but significant legends of Scandinavia there is a tradition of a noble Count who lived around her in ruin and desolation, only by sitting in a certain fixed place in the hall. Until this legend knew her I thought of old Mrs. Ainsworth. Mrs. Ainsworth, like that witch of the north, blighted the whole neighborhood, of which she was the chief proprietor, by the posture in which she chose to sit —I mean, with her hand tightly clutched over her pocket.

The best part of her estates were in a manufacturing town, and their tenants willing to charge themselves with all necessary repairs, so that she was blighted as her frugality may be deemed, her ugliness was of living made her extremely rich.

A word or two on the circumstances under which Darwen Hall, where she resided, together with the other property, had first come into her possession.

Her husband, William Ainsworth, had been the younger of two brothers. Christopher, the elder, had inherited a small estate in Lancashire. William had been left entirely penniless; but Christopher had insisted on giving him the half of what had fallen to himself. Both the brothers were bred to the cotton trade. Christopher was unlucky and lost his all; but William, thanks to the discovery of coal on the property his brother had resigned to him, grew, in no long time, to be a wealthy, very wealthy, manufacturer and proprietor. He was not over-mindful of his ruined brother. But when that brother lay dying, while still a young man, with an only child to leave behind him, he likewise was really sorry that he should have received so much and returned so little, and he told his brother (whose wife had preceded him to the grave) to have no fear for the future of the boy. "If course," he said, "Richard's welfare would be his chief concern as long as he lived, and at his death he should leave him heir to the whole of his fortune."

All which he fully intended to do; but William Ainsworth was one whose intentions of to-day were but sorry guides to his performances of the morrow. Richard, who thus left by his father, was just then seven years of age, and his uncle was a bachelor little over forty. At the age of fifty, Mr. William Ainsworth rewarded his housekeeper for her long years of service by giving her his hand.

I do not think the marriage very much increased his happiness. She kept him in a bondage which grew in rigor as he grew feebler and feebler in health. But the crowning folly and wrong of William Ainsworth was the very last act of his life. By his will he bequeathed his large property to Mrs. Ainsworth herself. It is, however, due to him to say, that he first endeavored, by a solemn promise to that effect, to wealth he now left her should, by herself, be left to Richard at her own decease. "If she only leave it to me for life," he also said, "it will spend it before he has got it, you know."

But it is due also to her to say, that within a week after her husband's funeral, she had made and executed a will in strict accordance with his instructions. So poor William Ainsworth had gone to his last home to fancy that he had gratified the wife he so greatly feared, at the cost of no injustice to the nephew, whose claims upon him were so strong. He nephew, you may be sure, took no such view of the affair. Richard was about completing the really excellent education which had been given him; and, just when he needed money to start him in the world, he found himself virtually disinherited almost. He could not avoid at any time touch a sixpence of the wealth he had been trained to expect depended on the good faith of the mean and sordid woman to whom he had been unrighteously favored before him. Granting that she might be trusted to observe her solemn engagement, he could but little realize she might fail, should her faculties diminish as years increased upon her. At the age of twenty-one, Richard was twenty years old, and twenty, or even thirty years might elapse ere her death made room for her heir.

But he could expect no help from her as long as she remained alive, Mrs. Ainsworth took an early opportunity of hinting, in the most decisive manner possible, that Richard must look to his profession. He ventured to tell her that his uncle would surely have aided him, now that he was beginning to read for the bar, to get a reply from her that only widow warning him, that though she had kept, and doubted not to keep, her word, she was getting old and at b' death, still, if not satisfied with his excellent prospects, he persisted in making demands to the present, she, for the future, must take into consider whether his uncle would really have wished his money to go to a person so very likely to squander it away. Richard Ainsworth was a hazarded last a future in so hopeless an enterprise as an appeal to the pity or justice of his aunt.

Only just before his marriage—for in spite of his poverty he married at six-and-twenty—he wrote, informing her of the step contemplated by him, but in the most satisfactory terms.

Had he set himself resolutely to battle against misfortune, and, since it would not be conquered but eluded his grasp, to show that he could do without it, he might ever have come to exult in the cruel disappointment of his youth as that which never have fallen to my lot to write the dark story of his actual life. But he was hardly of a stomach to face and defy the obstacles to a prosperous advancement. And ever present was the knowledge that any day might put to his lips the golden draught which for the present denied him, but would scorch the thirsty Tantalus. Any morning might bring him the news that Mrs. Ainsworth's illness had ended in self translated, as from a waste wilderness, into a land overflowing with milk and honey.

But no such joyful tidings reached Ainsworth dragged on a weary life, kept from absolute ruin by the small income which came with his wife, and to owe or to feel himself indebted to her for his relations on the side of his mother. His uncle Tuckaway, an ex-captain in the merchant service, left him a few hundred pounds, and a few more collected by him from different regions he had visited, in his elder's career. Richard was about to commence the parlor of Richard's house in the New Kent Road—for to that transpontine locality did his straitened circumstances compel him. But Captain Tuckaway's cabinet had held one curiosity which, as he also told Richard while alive, he would not have bequeathed were it to remain in his own. It was a colorless gum, prepared from the juice of some South American shrub, and well known in the West Indies as a means of causing, by the touch on the tips of their darts and arrows, or dissolved in drink, it was alike undiscoverable in its traces, and fatal in its effects. The few Europeans who were acquainted with it were very backward, considering the wicked uses which it was capable of it, in extending that knowledge to any one besides.

Richard locked the perilous treasure carefully away, and, with his darkness enough, for I know not how long a period.

I dare say many whom nothing would tempt to commit a crime might feel a vague sense of triumph in having so fearful a power in their hands. And such, I believe, was the nearest approach to evil its possession excited in Richard Ainsworth.

He had now, for some years, had no remembrance, not so much as a formal note—of his detestable aunt's existence: and when he received one from his door, now threatened to take permanent possession of his house, or otherwise dispose of his old Cambridge friends undertook, once upon a time the temporary canary of the village near which Mrs. Ainsworth resided.

This enabled Richard to gather a few confidential particulars as to Mrs. Ainsworth's manner of life, and other such information as his uncle had—indicated any softening of disposition as she grew older; whether any symptoms portended that her life would soon reach its termination; and other matters of a similar kind. The curate, who knew why these questions were interesting to his friend, though he knew not how present poverty interested their interest, wrote back a lively and minute account of such matters as he had been able to collect.

Mrs. Ainsworth grew meaner as she grew older. Some cold her health was precarious; but nothing apparently forbade her living for several years to come. (She was only sixty-seven now.) In spite of her desperate love of money she took some care of her life. "Every Saturday afternoon," wrote Richard's correspondent, taking him at his word, and giving minutely all he could tell —"every Saturday afternoon Druggerby makes up for her a small bottle of quinine draught, with which, I suppose, she braces herself up for the devotions of Sunday. Any time between two and five on Saturday you may see the little round vial, wrapped in its blue paper, lying on the counter of the shop." A few other particulars were likewise not material to the story.

It is a subtle and, and never agreeable, to profess to trace the rise and progress of an evil purpose. That Richard should meditate bitterly on the wealth, which, as the only one enjoyed by its present owner as by himself, will be matter of surprise to no one.

He brooded with increasing frequency of the fearful weapon which lay within his power. At one time, pressed by new difficulties, he would resolve to rest in Providence no more, but with his own hand to accomplish the event which would change his circumstances for him. Then again he would repel the temptation, and resolve that, lose what else he might, he would never part with his integrity. Himself put the crime beyond his reach by destroying the deadly thing. But this intention he never carried into practice. And so, for months on end, he went on, looked to and fro between evil and good, his wife believing that his frequent fits of melancholy were only due to their cruel embarrassments, and he himself not knowing his own mind, greater hardship than ever.

One summer day in the month of May was nearly half over, he told her that, ill as they could afford it, he must take a short excursion into the country, as he should very soon be as bankrupt in health as in wealth.

Mrs. Richard, the most loving and unselfish of wives, cheerfully assented to the proposal. He demeanor for some time past had been afflicting her with horrible fears, lest, under the continued pressure of their troubles, he might be giving way, and such a loss no future gifts of fortune could possibly repair. So she urged on the plan with every argument she could think of.

He was to go alone, and proposed to return within a very few days.

On the evening before his departure he rambled through different regions of London, making several unnecessary calls never buying more than one thing at any single shop.

He was to go to Matlock, and thence take a walking excursion through some of the choicest scenes of Derbyshire. He gave an assumed name at the Matlock hotel. There was little likelihood that at that part of the year he would meet any one who knew him. If he did, they would very plausibly set down his change of name to a well-grounded dread of pursuing creditors. One Saturday morning, having arrived the previous evening, he started, with a knapsack on his shoulders, and carrying a small carpet bag in his hand. He walked a good distance out of Matlock in a northerly direction, then crossed the country by a footpath which a pathway, he prepared for his next proceeding. Announcing himself in the shelter of the trees, he unstrapped his carpet bag, took out of it the things he had brought from London. Among them were a coat and "wide-awake," greatly differing from those with which he had walked out of Matlock. These he hastily assumed. Then he took out a black wig and false beard and mustache, and a pair of black eyebrows, placing each according to its proper destination. Then, with a mixture out of a little bottle, he stained his hands, previously than the dark yellowish tint of a Spaniard or Italian. Then, closing the bag, he wrapped it in a large red pocket-handkerchief, and carried it on a bundle. The stick with which he had left the hotel he threw away, likewise the bottle he had been using. Then, emerging from the wood by the gate at which he had entered, he walked until he reached, by a circuitous route, a village about four miles and a half from his way into Lancashire; and—to make short a story there is no need for prolonging—on o'clock on that day was entering the quiet-looking market village of Darwen. A mile or two off, but very little inconvenient by the smoke of the tall chimneys of the mills and factories, had been justice done him, would long ago have been his home.

He took some refreshment at the "Black Bull;" and, after that, left the public, walked quietly up the village, looking out for the apothecary, Mr. Druggerby. He approached the window just as the man of medicine had set on his counter (visible from the street) a small vial wrapped up in blue paper.

Richard entered the shop at once.'

"I have got a pain in my chest," he said; "it will you send a little ginger and soda, or something of that sort?"

Mr. Druggerby suggested some additional ingredients, and then handed the bottle which graced the wall behind him. While he did so, Richard hastily exchanged the vial on the counter for his own, put it into his left hand out of his pocket; for he had brought with him prepared bottles of two or three different sizes, each containing a quinine mixture.

Then he complained of feeling faint and requiring air. He would, he said, return in a few minutes and take the draught, which could be mixed for him in the interval.

Turning in his pocket the vial he had removed from the counter, and which was addressed, "Mrs. Ainsworth, Darwen Hall—to be taken as before," he walked slowly toward a field which lay near, for one lengthy street constituted the entire village. When there, he stooped down, as if in pain, and (as carefully that one standing within a foot of him might not have detected the act) he poured on the ground the contents of the bottle he had taken, and refilled it from one of those he carried in his pocket. Then he returned to the shop, drank off the mixture which lay ready for him, and, watching his opportunity, restored to the counter the vial he had removed a few minutes before. The blue paper had not been sealed up, although even for that emergency he was not unprepared. So neatly and so carefully had he done the deadly work, that any suspicion of the thing was improbable in the last degree. Once more settling the shop, he walked up the village in the direction of the Hall. So many years had elapsed since last Mrs. Ainsworth had seen Richard, that, disguised as he was, she would never detect him should he any where encounter her. His friend, the curate, had quitted Darwen some time before. He waited to the lodge gates of the house which might so soon be his, not—how the grass-grown walks bore witness to the niggardly spirit in which the woman who lived out of his rights. He thought, on the next afternoon (a Saturday, would it be the will of Providence that she should any longer cumber the world—and him?

To remain all night in the neighborhood was too hazardous a thing to be thought of. A stranger, unable to give any clear account of himself, stopping in a place with which he had no ascertainable connection, just when the neighborhood is startled by the sudden death of its wealthiest inhabitant—this were a coincidence far too striking to escape comment and inquiry. So, leaving that to the accident would mar his plot—successful thus far—he quitted the village, reversed, when at a safe distance the disguise process through which he had gone in the morning, and, without revisiting Matlock, returned to his home in time for church on Sunday morning.

We must now record one or two things which occurred at Darwen after his departure.

Early that evening Mrs. Ainsworth received, in obedience to her summons, a visit from her lawyer. He had ridden over from Clitheroe, which is about five miles away, and was now sitting at tea with her in the parlor, which looked out on a small but very pretty park.

But the poor woman had on the receipts of the day of fortune. Alone inside the box, and with a scanty allowance out of the caddy, but a liberal supply from a bottle containing carbonate of soda, the only relief she had ever known under indigestion, Christie M'Parnie, her Scotch servant, was buttering the bread beside her.

"Oh dear! not so much butter as that, Christie! I'm sharply exclaimed; for Christie had erroneously believed that Mr. Dreply's presence would authorize a departure from the rigid economy of ordinary days—" not so much butter as that! How you are wasting my property! I'll tell you what, I know I never have it in that way; and I know Mr. Dreply likes his bread as I do—rather dry."

The lawyer, who had a decided preference in favor of hot buttered cakes and kindred delicacies, gave a ghastly acquiescence, and Christie relievingly believed that Mrs. Ainsworth was past observing. The meal over, she carried the tea-tray out of the room; and Mrs. Ainsworth addressed herself to the business of the evening.

"I have felt a little unwell lately, Mr. Dreply, and I wanted to see you respecting my will. You know I did as my husband wished, and made a will leaving to his nephew all he left me. But since then I have considered, being very careful, to part by a few savings, and I have no idea of Mr. Richard having them. He'll be rich enough without, in all conscience; and I want you to draw up a will with some legacies to relations of my own."

"Ah, my dear madam, don't be too hard upon him! I hear he is miserably poor, and it's hard, you know, to make an empty sack stand upright."

"What are we left off—"

"Speak for yourself, Mr. Dreply, if you please."

"Well, then, we that are comparatively well off should make allowances for him."

"I know you persist, like other people, in thinking me rich, Mr. Dreply," resumed Mrs. Ainsworth, forgetting she had just said how rich her heir would be if he inherited but a part of her present possessions. "I wish I had pretty much what my husband, and I've been careful since then; that's all."

Mr. Dreply knew that the savings of which his client spoke so modestly could not be over the sheet of sixty thousand pounds; but assured that she needlessly alarmed herself, endeavored to her.

"Let me see! I might leave two thousand to my cousin, Alice Howcroft, and one thousand to William Longworth—but I don't know; should I wish to alter it, if they don't behave well to me, it would be fearfully expensive to draw up a new will. They all look upon me as a person to be preyed upon. I think—"

Then she rang the bell, which the servant presently answered.

"Christie," said Mrs. Ainsworth, "has Druggerby sent me my draught as usual?"

"Oh yes, ma'am. Will you take it now?"

"Why, upon my word, Christie, I've been thinking it's a terrible expense to me having those draughts once a week. I thought of trying if I could do without them; but then, you know, if I became really ill, I should have such expenses as would nearly ruin me! I think I will take it; but not now—by-and-by. You can bring it when I go to bed. Christie, I've been talking with Mr. Dreply ly about arranging the disposal of my little property. Now, if you continue to satisfy me, why, besides all my own, you'll one day find yourself handsomely remembered. Only recollect I can't afford any waste in my house!"

And Christie retired from the room. Her mistress resumed her occupation, and continued writing down figures and names for an hour or two—more than she rung the bell; and long before eleven the house was dark and quiet.

About eight o'clock the next morning the people of Darrow were startled from their late Sunday slumbers by the tillings that Mrs. Ainsworth had been found in her bed. The poison of which Richard had availed himself was said, by the few who were acquainted with its qualities, to leave no traces in the body. And the coroner's jury, who sat in Darwen Hall, reported the cause of death as natural, though startling. Mr. Dreggett acted the conspicuous part of the draught which, as Christie deposed, her mistress had taken before retiring. And the physician from Manchester pronounced the fatal compound by some long name, which I will spare myself the trouble of writing and you the trouble of reading. The anger of her relatives was, we found, from the paper left in her desk, what handsome legacies they had narrowly missed receiving! I say also in your imagination.

But Richard acted very generously, and gave large sums to all of them who could be thought to stand in any pressing need of money. This was in all things to be a liberal steward of the wealth which had come to him in every greater amount than he had expected. He felt, "To gain all this I have taken a bold departure from the right; only by doing the utmost good with my wealth can I hope to be clear in God's sight or my own."

Their sudden prosperity came to Mr. and Mrs. Richard in time for them to enjoy the latter part of that year's London season.

Quitting the New Kent Road forever, they took for the month of May apartments somewhere near the Regent's Park. In August they proposed to give themselves what they had long vainly desired —a Continental tour. In autumn they would return home, to find Darwen Hall refitted and refurnished, and to commence that long course of splendshes and hospitality of which Darwen was henceforth to be the favored scene.

They set out for their new morning in July, talking of their past privations and future prospects. Christie M'Tarrie, at her own desire, had been permitted to remain at home. She might be more at full freedom now. The beggar-maid whom King Cophetua made his queen on lordly leave had a larger measure of freedom than a mere change of dress had brought to poor Christie; but, as Mrs. Richard was remarked by her husband, the Scotchwoman looked as if something were on her mind which she wished, but could not resolve, to make known. Especially in the evening was she seen to sit in a dead mistress, Christie betrayed confusion, and seemed to hesitate whether she should speak or be silent.

Richard told his wife that he had no pleasant thoughts connected with Mrs. Ainsworth, and would rather dismiss from his remembrance.

"You look dreadfully dull, my dear," he presently inquired of her.

"I was only thinking," she replied.

"But I don't like to see you thinking, my love." You can very well afford to do without thinking now; so pray don't think!"

No, he was in earnest! he did not like her to be thinking. He felt as King Henry may have felt (Fair Rosamond's King Henry) when he heard that Queen Eleanor had taken a fancy to ramble about Woodstock Forest. Thinking people are often led by their thoughts into strange conclusions. With such a secret hidden in its depths, the less the Christie part the better the safer and the better for him.

"You are not so absurd," he asked, a minute or two after, "as to suspect the poor woman of having caused the old lady's death, sudden as it was?"

"My dearest Richard, how can you suggest any thing so frightful? Poor woman! I believe her as incapable of harming any body, even in thought, as you are, dearest. But I was thinking how mercifully—though it seems too much like rejoicing at another's death—we have been rescued from our poverty just when it seemed at the worst. I feel, you God would not forsake us, would not but wish His proper time; and you see you have not trusted Him in vain."

Within two months of Christmas they had taken possession of Darwen. And great indeed was the joy, both of Richard and Christie, at the new world which had begun to reign there. Not that Richard threw himself into extravagance; he had been far too intimate with Dame Poverty not to take heed that his parting with that severe, but sometimes serviceable acquaintance, should be a lasting one. However; both with estates yielding six thousand a year, and forty or fifty thousand in ready money, he was entitled to indulge a little in the luxury of scattering. So vast were the largesses bestowed upon the poor that even the vicar of the parish, than whom none could be more desirous of the welfare of dependants, ventured to hint that a virtue in excess may become a vice.

"But really, Mr. Creed," said the new squire of Darwen, "you must know how bad a thing it is when the rich withhold their money."

"Assuredly, Mr. Ainsworth. I have groaned many a time over the state of things which—well, de martuis nil nisi bonum—which once prevailed here. And I'm sure you have my heartiest thanks, as the clergyman, for the very different spirit in which you are acting. But don't you think—trust I shan't give offence—don't you think you may be in some danger of mistaking reverse of wrong for right? I fear, and I tell it you, because I feel it were not honest in me to keep it back, that the help you so generously extend is not always well received—that is, not always rightly used."

Richard was not offended. He saw that Mr. Creed's motives were excellent, and he promised that henceforth his charities should be not less profuse, but more discriminate.

But when it was in his mind to proclaim that none but the "deserving" should receive, something from within him asked how he, of all men, dared to think of any body as unworthy of his alms. "Hypocrite!" said the inner voice, "because you could not endure poverty, and thirsted for wealth, you took the life of a fellow-creature who stood in your way! What now can your wretch privileges compared to those which daily compass about the people whom you call undeserving? What if there were full cause could whisper the fault of your life to them? Why, the most destitute and disreputable of them all would start away from you, even if you held out a pound of gold to them. You forsooth, to talk of giving only to the 'deserving' poor!"

Richard was startled by these and other unexpected crime is likely to be a source of weakness to the secret criminal, and cripples the energies he would exert for good.

When the new reign had lasted for six months I grieve to say that the moral condition of Darwen was a little more relaxed than it had been under the rule of the days gone by. And Richard could not obtain what must be coveted—such evidence of good done by him as might be thought to atone for the fearful guilt that had enriched him.

Persuaded that it is not so easy to be a good steward of wealth, he was glad, when spring came round, to remove for a season to London. Once there, he would have the desire which he anticipated by throwing himself into the benevolent work no largely provided by that enormous metropolis. He found, indeed, that he was not mistaken in that some distraction in work from the thought which gnawed him, save when the present shut out the past. And he felt that he was not unworthy of it, he should succeed in pushing to a further and further distance the troubles thoughts which haunted him.

Christie had now gone with Mrs. Richard under domestics—that is, she had married, and devoted part of the wife's handsome dowry to purchase for her the purchase of a public house in Paddington. She had grown much attached to her new mistress; and as the "Darwen Stores" was quite close to Kew Gardens, Christie paid frequent visits to Mrs. Ainsworth in her London home.

One morning, when a little past midsummer, and at about twelve o'clock, Richard walked home from a dinner in Grosvenor Square, for he had begun to love great company, and to like the polite gentleman just as he turned into the inclosure, pacing his monotonous way. If that policeman could have known under what circumstances the passing thing upon a second time, he would be summoned to behold the gentleman were walking at midday, he would have said now by the light in his bedroom that his wife had already retired. As he neared the front door it was opened by a servant, who told him that Christie was Christie. He thought she looked a little afraid of him. He said some word in answer to her request, hurried by without looking at her, was already in the house, and went up stairs to his wife at once. There was a peculiar paleness about her face; but, in answer to his eager inquiries, she declared herself to be quite well, only a little fatigued.

"So you've had Christie again," he remarked. "I met her going away."

"And so you know, I've found out now why it was that the poor woman seemed so strangely confused whenever we spoke about her old mistress! Poor Christie! if any body had been wicked enough to accuse her of having given Mrs. Ainsworth medicine that night, she could have given them a very complete answer. I now know it."

"Why, what old woman's secrets have you and she been talking? I do wish, Emma, you'd drop that matter, once for all."

"My own love, I shall drop it; only let me explain myself. Christie has proved that the draught never did her mistress any harm whatever."

"Of course! of course! Who ever was fool enough to say it did?"

"They could be very soon convinced of their error, at all events, for the last draught the old lady never took."

"Never took it! Then how came it—"

"Christie has just told me that on that last night her mistress was alive she spoke something about having her a legacy, which she was intending to put out of her hand; and it seems her mistress forgot it when Mr. Dreggett took the bottle, after she had left the coroner (having no idea of telling a falsehood) that her mistress had taken it as usual. That is what has made her poor thing so very superstitious. She fancies that, had she remembered it, her mistress might not have died. And you can't wonder that, when no good would come of it, she did not like to tell people. Besides, she was afraid that something might happen to her for giving wrong evidence to the coroner; but she has told me (in confidence, of course); and she brought the draught here."

So his crime had been superfluous, after all. And it was to be a clear, bright sunshine, but with strict veracity, that the physician had declared his oath to have been given unwillingly?

Such innocence as may consist in crime carried no further than intent was now absolutely restored to him!

"And what has she—what have you done with that accursed stuff?" he presently inquired, with frantic emphasis.

"My love, how nervous dining out appears to have made you! Why, I felt that a tonic would do us good, and, as Christie very much wished it, the old lady would never have loved poor thing for that small humbug. I've taken it—good, so I drank it myself, just before you came in."

"Great God! then I have murdered you!"

"Oh, my dearest, you are not mad? And I feel as if it were chilling me all over. Oh!" And she sank back, fainting—dying—in the chair.

"Oh, forgiveness, Emma! It was more for your sake than my own. I could not bear to be kept out of my rights. And this poison was for that devil—yes, devil! for she has destroyed me, body and soul. And all would have been well had I but waited a single day longer! Oh, say you believe that I would've have died again and again sooner than harm you, Emma!"

He knelt beseechingly before her; but whatever was in her thoughts, her lips were restrained from uttering the words. His next entreaty was poured into the ears of the dead.

The policeman, repassing the house not many minutes later, saw him dash himself out of the topmost window. He was taken up not yet entirely dead.

He gasped out, "I have murdered my wife; she lies up stairs!" and in a few moments he had ceased to live.

They found the unhappy lady even as he had said. A few traces of violence could be detected, and as the poison defied all chemical analysis, it was believed that her death, however unaccountable, was not otherwise than natural, and that his distraction at the sudden shock of losing her had driven him to his terrible self-destruction.

So they were buried in the cemetery side by side. Their three children all died young, and the property went away to be divided among their distant relations.

This is the end of my story.

CONFESSIONS OF A BACHELOR.

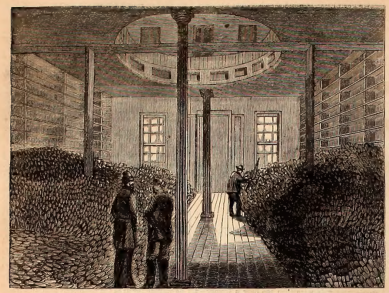
In my young days I had a friend named Chinny Hub. Or rather, his name was Hubbell, and he had a long chin as was nicknamed Chinny Hub. Our best amusements then were fishing and swimming. One morning, with my seasoned rod—for even then we were but a boy—I hooked a cork stolen from my pious aunt's molasses jug, and a round tin box that once had held Fresh Miller's Cocking, I was pretty sure, a respectable Chinny. I found him pulling weeds out of a garden-bed, and this credition parents, no doubt, believed that I was pulling them out. Every time the pulling of his weeds brought up a worm he sighed. At length he found one more than the rest. He looked it up carefully, gazed on it with a grim kind of affection, swung it aloft and said with energy, "I'll that's for a bully-day. Mag, fetch the box—be quicker'n blazes!" Chinny's language had its peculiarities.

But "Mag" brought the shovel. She was much afraid of the squirming worms, and the consequence was that Chinny accidentally threw a great many of them around her feet, and he actually dropped a handful of them on her head. Of course I had to see that the worms there was no fun; and the result of it all was that when the bait-box was full, and after I had protected her against half a hundred Spider's worms walking up my trousers-legs to me, and we were well acquainted. I caught few fish that day. Chinny called out half a dozen times, "Say, Jim, I'll—I'll—don't you know how to bait a hook better'n that?" My line got fastened to a snag. I moved the end of my rod around in the water, this way and that, and in circles, as if I were stirring porridge. "What y' 'cirin' to do'a said Chinny, "wishy-washy to get fish?" "Oh, I thought y' was 'cirin' to wind the river up around yer pole," grinned he, as he shoved up his cork and threw in deep for Uncle Gilbert's Cod. I didn't tell him I was thinking all the time about his sister.

My friendship for Chinny was a passport to the Hubbell parlor on certain occasions. For several years I saw Maggie often, and liked her each time better than the last. How many times I turned my mouth about for it with the bitter dandelion stems cut for her! How many green May-apples I have put in bran and in the hay-mow, waiting patiently for them to ripen! Ah! and how willingly would I have changed myself to a May-apple, and lain a month in the hay-mow to have been a fair like theirs between her delicious lips! She went fishing with us sometimes. Chinny always told her not to, and then he would go on to our going if she went along. Chinny held that all girls knew was just enough to get the hooks fast, and tip over the boat, and raise the devil with the lines. And a girl never knew when to pull; she was always too late, and then the next time she'd jerk at a bullhead.

Mr. Hubbell became moderately wealthy, or, as his neighbors said, "comf'table," though not through the son's exertions. He left the farm, and moved to town. I took an affectionate farewell of Chinny, and bore myself like a man. But Maggie, the day before they went we had a long walk in the meadow. We pulled in pieces a great many buttercups and daisies together, and talked a little about the town to which she was going, which had a wharf and a steamboat running to New York. But it was the old story, and we never had. If either made the attempt to say a humorous thing, it was a dead failure. Our hearts were in our mouths every time we opened them to speak. I believe the pleasantest thing she told me was a tradition about one of her father's ancestors who had been a Tory, and that the memory of our parting is too sacred to be written—I kissed her at the gate, and on the morrow she was gone.

Could I remain in that dull neighborhood when its only charm had flown? What-ills could I do? I had read of soldiers who, when bad power failed, and thither across the world to seek their fortunes. And they always found them; I had never read of one who failed. What thought of Maggie she thought fairly drove me mad. She would grow up as a lady should, a fairer grow up an awkward boobie. She would be familiar with the very highest and finest social life; I would know little outside of our dull hamlet. I would study them, but I had learned even then that books would be of what use were they to one who did not know the men in the main? Besides, the world from whence they came? I did not doubt the truth of Maggie, but I knew that I would soon become unfit for her. It was not enough that I should be virtuous; that might do for a woman, but a man must be something more. "Poor but honest," looked well in the book; that I had read, but I knew it would not be in real life. Why does not the world say, "Rich but honest?" Maggie had gone forever, and there was no more beauty in the places we had known. Or, rather, there was a new beauty, a new meaning,



For the first time I felt myself a man. Old things must go.

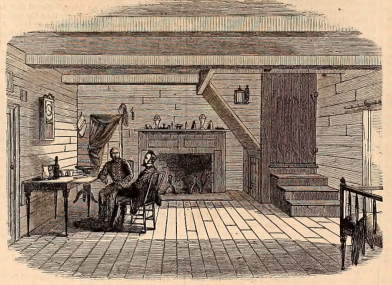
Hope, fear, determination, regret, how they struggled in my breast as for the first time I turned my back on the old place where Ivy all I had known of the world and life! I gained the top of the hill, looked back once, and passed on down. I hesitated at the bottom—I looked down on the bank. When I looked back from the hill's top I clenched my teeth and swelled my breast with what I thought to be the first wretched will of manhood; when I buried my hands and face in the dear grass like a child. It was but a moment. My breast swelled again; but this time it was with anguish, and again I clenched my mouth again, but it was to keep back moan. God, how much it sometimes costs to be a man!

I reached the town where the Hubbells had gone, and was warmly welcomed by Chinny. Maggie was a trifle more reserved, but none the less sincere than of old. And Chinny's lip clothes were cut differently from mine; he had grown tall, thin, and pale a little; and his vocabulary was even stranger than it used to be. He talked much about bunches, puntins, tea-strikes, Tarrens, and other things of which I was obliged to confess some ignorance. But he had the same good soul as ever. After tea he said to Maggie, "Say, show me round." So we made an interesting circuit of billiard-rooms, bowling-alleys, liver-stables, and groceries, to all of which I assured him I was highly delighted. I reminded him several times that Maggie would be waiting for us in the parlor, but he said it was altogether too early for that sort of thing—go to one place more—hadn't seen half—must be put through before we went home this time old Hub's round. Mag'll wait—all be jolly then. My fears were realized. Chinny didn't wait until he got home before being "jolly," for he was very even beat it when I have made a very good holiday; but Chinny assured me that his danger was all over for the rest of the night, and I assured Chinny that he was all right, excepting that he talked too much. At last we were at home. Maggie was waiting in the open-meshed doorway like an angel at the gate of heaven. She needed no apology for being left so long alone; she knew her brother's failings, and expected such scenes in a moment. And Chinny could find no words sufficient to express the amount of blame he took upon himself. I assured Maggie that Chinny's fault was all right, and that I was all right, and that every thing was all right. A rough visit of Chinny's, whom I had never seen before, came in as she retired to say good-night, whereupon Chinny commenced with the great perplexity of a fit of "funny thing 'at 'appened jes he come out 'e 'otel. His thought he would jes leam up agins' 'e hitchin'-pos' 'e hitchin'-pos' 'e hitchin'-pos' 'e hitchin'-pos' agins' 'e hitchin'-pos' 'e hitchin'-pos' s-s-staggered an' walked off!" "Oh, what would your mother say if she should see you?" Something about the maiden aunt. At which Chinny proceeded to inform her that if his mother should see him at that moment she would undoubtedly say he was drunk. Of Miss Hubbell the elder I had heard her nephew often enough to understand that there was to see that she would get rapid in case she ventured to indulge in her small methodical smile. In no case was her laugh to be called in a state of reversal between the molars and incisors of her upper jaw. Over her organ of firmness the hair was parted in the form of an inverted V, which was the reason for this peculiarity of combing Chinny took particular delight in quoting to me. But in her opinion of Chinny, she affirmed that she should be disappointed if he did not come to some dishonorable end. Comforting Maggie proposed to leave him for a moment, she paused at the threshold to inquire what it was his sister had been pouring into his ear, by which Chinny understood her to say that he had "never poured any thing into his ear except some turp'ntine once, when there was a bug in there."

Next morning, after a good-by to Mr. Hubbell and to Maggie in the hall, Chinny and his mother and affectionate aunt went with me to the steamboat wharf. The bell rang, the engines groaned, the great wheels moved. I was cut loose from all I knew and loved on earth, and I was alone. After some distance a public park extended to the water's edge, terminating in a rocky bank and a beautiful beach. Why was I not there? Something of it—for there I was leaning eagerly over the netting to take a last look at the receding people on the wharf, and of the Hubbell family in particular—the nearer point below the park, as graceful as the lightfooted plovers round her, I saw Maggie. I swung my hat. She saw me then, and raised her white hand. I have parted from a thousand friends since then, but my eyes were dry as stone.

Among the sayings of great Dr. Johnson is the one that we perform no act, however trivial in itself, or the last importance, without a motive. The desire and beauty of these words so much impressed De Quincey that he quotes them in his marvelous Confessions as the basis which their author erected, in that they evince deep human feeling. There is no man in the world who has not felt their truth. Years ago, perhaps, you knew the name of a lily, and of a hand, whiter and softer than your own, which one sad day you clasped for the true hand, and the white village grave-yard. You had felt the same a hundred times before; but how that last kiss, that farewell pressure of the hand, will live when all the hundred others are forgotten! And so there is no language of words, there is nothing in the whole universe of art, that can reproduce the picture of that girl standing on the shore, in a gentle tumult of excitement—waving her handkerchief as the steamer trembled rapidly from land. It hangs as far above the witcheries and reaches of expression as an evening star above a clattering child. Close below her feet the waters climbed and fell and climbed again, as if possessed with endless hope. Above her head the rank and dusty spread in clouds. In her taste she wore no art; her heavy hair had become somewhat disordered in the wind. For a moment on the green bank, and then the polished beech, and then a jutting rock. I saw the fluttering of drapery, the outline of an impassioned form, the last dim waving of the hand. A mist was in my eyes. I had taken the last look of her forever.

REBEL SMALL-ARMS TURNED OVER BY JOHNSTON'S ARMY TO LIEUTENANT LYSTER, CHIEF OF ORDNANCE, DEPARTMENT NORTH CAROLINA, GREENSBOROUGH, MAY 3, 1865.



ACCOUTREMENTS OF JOHNSTON'S ARMY TURNED OVER TO J. S. CLINGMAN, ORDNANCE OFFICE, DEPARTMENT NORTH CAROLINA, MAY 3, 1865.—[SKETCHED BY DAVIS.]

I have lived fifteen feverish years since then. The advantages lost to impoverished boyhood were to be made good in manhood. I know not what others might have done; but it took me seven years to gain an education, and then the work was but half done. The battle-field, the prison, the bivouac, the march—I know them all, but never did they require the fortitude of that fierce struggle, that forlorn hope against poverty and misfortune. Cherished objects eluded me. Disappointment followed disappointment until I lost faith in myself. I thought that fate was against me. Perhaps I ought to blush to say so, but I did despair. Then I saw again with misty eyes a white hand in the distance. And last, still not last, it is waving to me yet, as I drift each moment farther out on the years widening between. At length I dared wait no longer. Ten years of faithful work had left their marks upon my face; but I thought I saw my way clear in the world. I would no longer fear the future. I could support such a wife as Maggie would be. I would go back to the old town and marry her.

When I returned she was traveling in the South. Although she had not written any intention of leaving home, and I had expected to meet her there, yet a longer time than usual had elapsed since my last writing. She had not expected my coming, and at first there appeared nothing remarkable in her absence. She would be home in a few weeks.

INTERIOR OF JAMES BENNETT'S HOUSE—SCENE OF JOHNSTON'S SURRENDER, APRIL 26, 1865. SKETCHED BY DAVIS.]

I visited the country place which I had left ten years before. I walked again in the woods, and by the river, and in the paths where our feet had walked together so many, many days ago. I passed through the gate where I had kissed her the first time we ever knew what sad things partings are. The moss was deeper on the rocks; some trees had grown, and others had decayed; many of the country people whom I expected would meet me with outstretched hands had passed into the grave-yard, or had forgotten me, or eyed me as if I was no longer their friend. Next to parting from a place we love the saddest thing is to return again.

Chinny, who was now called Mr. Charles Hubbell, had completed sawing his wild oats, and succeeded to his father's business. He still lived with his father, and my head-quarters, when in town, were at his rooms. Ah, what pleasant hours we spent together, talking over old times! He kept unsoured the same generous heart that had made me his devoted friend in boyhood, and the old spice of devilry within him was not quite subdued. But Chinny was a man.

I was soon impressed that there was something strange connected with Maggie's departure, something unexpected even to her parents, something which they desired me to know, and yet forbore to tell. A letter was received from Miss Hubbell the elder, who had accompanied Maggie, but none from Maggie herself. A deeper shade passed over the faces of the Hubbells. But a few words were read aloud, yet I saw the letter brought unwelcome news. She could not be married, and on a bridal tour? No. The last lines I had received from her were the fondest she had ever written. She could not be dangerously ill? No. Her aunt had spoken of a long ramble they had had about a relative's plantation on the left bank of the Alabama; Maggie had seemed delighted with the evergreen Cherokee roses; and the next week they would be in Montgomery.

JAMES BENNETT'S HOUSE, WHERE JOHNSTON SURRENDERED TO SHERMAN—EXTERIOR VIEW.—[SKETCHED BY DAVIS.]

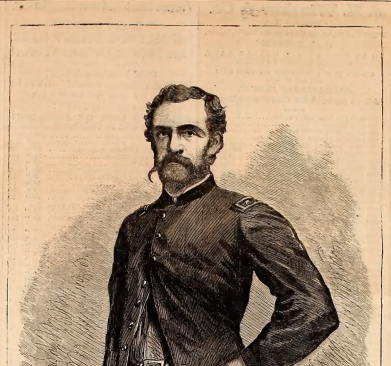
That evening in his room, with a sad face, between the nervous puffs of our cigars, Chinny told me all the truth. It had come upon her suddenly with a slight illness; his sister was—insane. He told me, too, that among the characteristics of her malady was an intense aversion to me, whom she had loved her whole life long; it amounted to positive hatred; the mention of my name excited her; she would not consent to see me; I was seeking to perpetrate some hideous wrong; I was endeavoring, by some infernal process, to extract the heart from out her bosom, and to put my own heart in its place. Chinny went through with these details bravely, though almost choked with emotion. They had not informed me sooner, in the vague hope that change of scene and climate, and the soothing influence of Southern travel, would alleviate or cure her. But by this letter she was becoming daily more indifferent to all things except those in which her former affections had been concerned; still she passed with many strangers for a person of sound mind.

What Maggie's life has been God only knows. I have never seen her since that morning, years ago, when she waved me a passionate good-by from the receding shore.



GEN. JOHNSTON'S SURRENDER.

GENERAL JOHNSTON surrendered his army to General SHERMAN at Greensborough, North Carolina, on the 26th of April. The previous arrangement entered into between those two commanders on the 18th having been discarded by the Government, the terms of surrender granted to General LEE were made the basis of capitulation.

We give on page 332 four illustrations relating to this important event. The house in which the details of the capitulation were arranged belonged to Mr. JAMES BENNETT, and was a plain, unpretending structure, innocent of paint without and within.

The small-arms of JOHNSTON'S army were all turned over to the Ordnance Officers of the Department of North Carolina, with the exception of five per cent., which was retained for the use of the men doing guard duty. There are certainly not over ten thousand muskets, all told, in the ordnance building, and as this comprises all the guns turned over there is a very large per cent. to be accounted for under the heads "destroyed" or "carried off." Of the equipments turned over there are remarkably few cavalry sets; for with the exception of the brigade of ROBERT ANDERSON—an officer whose soldierly conduct and bearing impressed even his enemies with a sentiment of respect—the cavalry followed the example of their fugitive President.

Lieutenants LYSTER and CLINGMAN, Ordnance Officers of the Department of North Carolina, have these guns and accoutrements in charge, and in their onerous duties have been materially assisted by Lieutenant-Colonel KENNARD, late Ordnance Officer for General JOHNSTON.

BREVET MAJOR-GENERAL JAMES H. WILSON.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MAY.

THE first two reunions of the Paris Spring Race Meeting at Longchamps, favored by the most delightful weather on the 17th and 22d ult., brought together a vast number of the real Parisian élégantes, who congregated in front of the principal tribunes with their habitual grace. ISABELLE the Bonapartiere was there on both occasions, still wearing M. DELAMARRE'S colors, red and black, and distributed exquisite bouquets of white lilac, roses, and camellias to the ladies, and moss-buds to the gentlemen of the Jockey Club or others who elected to be thus florally decorated, for a five-franc piece. The groups of ladies were charming to look upon, wearing, for the most part, unicolored costumes of light blue, white, or stone-colored silk, with long trains, the toilet being completed by one of those pretty little contrivances still termed by courtesy a bonnet, although, in fact, only a function when compared to those recently worn.

Pearl beads and drops, jet and steel ornaments, and large gold and silver stars, are the usual decorations for chapeaux, to which they are now restricted, the fine weather having almost entirely suspended their application to robes. The steel ornaments enjoy, indeed, a tremendous vogue just now, but persons well informed say that this mode can not last, and that Parisian caprice will very shortly set it aside.

Our limited space obliges us to conclude with a mélium in parvo, to the effect that the materials indicated for the month of May are, in consideration of the advanced state of the season, light plain silks, spotted muslins, and patterned foulards; and, as to the style of the dresses, they should be provided with an ornamental basquine, a high-necked corsage, and a long independent train, capable of being drawn up by the useful tirettes, the use of which has now become so general.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Fig. 1. Evening Dress.—Light green moire antique robe, trimmed round the bottom of the skirt with three rows of darker green velvet edged with narrow blond. The ornaments on the skirt, as well as those on the corsage, are also of green velvet, similarly edged. The head-dress is composed of plaits and curls, and is decorated by a small bouquet placed just above the chignon.

Fig. 2. Walking Dress.—Robe of mauve foulard trimmed throughout with graduating stripe of black velvet dotted with steel beads. A white guipure is placed round the bottom of the basquine as well as on the edge of the sleeves. White crape chapeau fanchon, with fronted flowers and blue velvet bow, in the tour-de-tête.

Fig. 3. Sortie de Bal.—This graceful opera-cloak may be either in crimson velvet or satin embroidered with gold. It is trimmed with deep white and yellow lama fringe, the capuchon being ornamented with a very light passementerie and gold-colored silk bells.

The Bonnets.—These bonnets are drawn from the originals. The body of the first, on the left hand of the engraving, is in black tulle, with an ornamentation of wild autumn-tinted vine-leaves; the sides are in rich black lace, and the wide black silk ribbons are golden-edged. The second chapeau is in white tulle, studded with gilt beads and ornamented with a golden stripe. The double bavolet is of white lace, and the large drooping ornament on the side consists of the light material coiled under; the wide white ribbons completing the bonnet are provided with a deep gilt edging. The body of the third bonnet is in blue silk, with a deep edging of imitation pearl beads and drops; the shell-shaped ornament on the top is of white lace, and precedes the white moire bavolet, from which depend two white lace streamers; the long ribbons in front are of blue silk.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MAY, 1865.

DO NOT WASTE YOUR MONEY buying any of the numerous worthless articles called GOLD PENS, which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pens which are acknowledged to be the BEST IN THE WORLD.

Avoid the shameless Upstarts, whose lack of brains compels them to attempt IMITATION, even to the advertisement. If you want the full values of your money, call on A. MORTON, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

* ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE NEW BOOKS.

St. Philips—new Novel, by author of "Ruffledge"...$1 75

Mary Brandegee—a splendid new "woman's novel"..$1 75

Lovers and Thinkers—a Novel, by Howe Gordon..$1 50

Bullods—by the author of "Barbara's History"....$1 50

The Habits of Good Society—an excellent book.....$1 75

The Art of Conversation and Self-Culture.....$1 50

All handsomely bound in cloth, and sent by mail, free, on receipt of price, by CARLETON, Publisher, New York.

LADIES—GENTLEMEN.

The Patent Fastener for use on Boots, Shoes, Corsets, Trimmers, &c. They avoid tying, untying, and putting into Boots. Corsets a trifle. Only 25 cents a pair.

FAIRY ALBUMS

For holding 40 Pictures, $1 25; 80 Pictures, $1 50.

AMUSEMENTS.

Pantomimes arranged for Parlor Parties, College, Camp, &c. The explanations are so explicit and simple that children could perform them after reading. Each containing three very different and popular ones sent for $1. Trade supplied. Books, Pictures, Albums, &c. Send Stamp for Catalogues. W. C. WOOSTER, 575 Broadway, N. Y. J. WILKES BOOTH Pictures, 25 cts.

"With Malice toward None, with Charity for All."

EVERY AMERICAN HOME should possess a copy of

Berger's Bust of ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

It is a work of sterling artistic merit. Numerous busts have been produced, in order to place within the reach of all classes a suitable memento of the great Martyr of Liberty.

Life size (37 inches high), $10; boxed and packed, $11. Medium size, $8.

Small size, $5.

No charge for packing the two smaller sizes.

Cartes de Visite, by mail, postpaid, on receipt of 25 cts.

As our orders are already very numerous for all sizes of this splendid work, we would suggest an early application as necessary to avoid disappointment or delay.

All orders filled and supplied in the order of their receipt. Address

BERENDSOHN BROTHERS,

103 Beekman St., New York.

WANTED: 500 Good COMPOSITORS—careful, steady men, used to the finest book-work. Apply to HENRY MARSH, Foreman of HARPER & BROTHERS' Composing Room, 83 Cliff Street, New York.

The Great New England Remedy.

DR. J. W. POND'S WHITE PINE COMPOUND has been proved the thousands of cases throughout the New England States to be the very best medicine for Throat and Pulmonary affections and all Kidney complaints. This Compound cures Sore Throat, Coughs, Colds, Dysphonia, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and Pulmonary affections generally. It is a Powerful Cure for Kidney Complaints, Inflammation, Difficulty of Voiding Urine, Bleeding from the Kidneys and Bladder, Gravel, Dysphonia, &c., &c. For Piles and Scurvy it will be found an invaluable remedy.

In no case one bottle is sufficient to effect a cure. Give it a trial.

BURNHAM & VAN SCHAACK, Agents, No. 483 Canal Street, Agents for North-Western States.

JOHN D PARK, Cincinnati, Ohio, Agent for Southern States.

Sold by all druggists.

$80 a Month Offered.

One Agent wanted in every town in the United States and Canada. Business suitable for ladies or gentlemen. Inclose stamp for circular.

E. L. TRIPPE & CO.,

No. 161 Broadway, New York City.

DR. GLOVER'S LIVER TRUSS retains and cures more ruptures than any other. Sent by mail. Elastic stockings, belts, bandages, crutches, &c. No. 4 ANN STREET. Established 1847.

AN ILLUSTRATED ANNUAL OF PHRENOLOGY and PHYSIOLOGY in connection with HEALTH, Illustrated. Commencing with the January number, a new volume will be commenced, containing more than one thousand pages, and several hundred engravings. Published monthly at $3 a year; single numbers 30 cents. Specimen numbers sent for 10 cents. Address FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, New York.

Brandreth's Pills.

Why are they so reliable? Because they are prepared by the light and knowledge of an experience running through a period of one hundred and fifteen years. An eminent physician writes: "I have an extensive practice, and for thirty years have used Brandreth's Pills in all cases where an energetic cathartic was required. I have always found them reliable—indeed more reliable than any other purgative of the Materia Medica, which I attribute to the care in selection and judgment used in preparing the same by Dr. B. Brandreth."

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. Sent upon it B. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING, NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicine.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

(ESTABLISHED 1850).

100,000 Watches, Chains, Gold Pens and Pencils, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

TO BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE,

AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR TILL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO HAVE.

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES,

All to be sold for One Dollar Each.

	EACH.
100 Gold Hunting-Cased Watches	$125 00
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	60 00
200 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	30 00
2000 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	5 00 to 10 00
2000 Chaslaine Chains and Necklets	5 00 to 10 00
5000 Oval and Chased Gold Bracelets	4 00 to 10 00
1000 Gold and Enameled Studding Brooches	4 00 to 8 00
3000 Gold, Onyx, and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Florentine Mosaic and Coral Brooches	4 00 to 6 00
3000 Ear-Drops (variety of styles)	4 00 to 8 00
5000 Set Ladies' Jewelry (variety of style)	5 00 to 10 00
5000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry (variety of styles)	5 00 to 10 00
5000 Ladies' and Gents' Gold Buckles	3 00 to 6 00
5000 Ladies' and Gents' Gold Pencils	3 00 to 6 00
5000 Initial or Stone Button-Studs	2 00 to 4 00
5000 Sets Studs (variety of styles)	2 50 to 6 00
5000 Watch Keys, Fob and Button Studs	2 50 to 5 00
2000 Gents' Masonic Pins and Rings	4 00 to 8 00
2000 Gents' Solitaire and Cluster Pins	4 00 to 8 00
2000 Gold Teeth and Ear Picks	3 00 to 6 00
2000 Plain, Chased, and Stone Set Rings	3 00 to 6 00
6500 Ladies' California Diamond Rings	3 00 to 8 00
1800 Magic Spring and Snap Bracelets	4 00 to 8 00
10000 Gold Pens, Silver-Mounted Holders	4 00 to 8 00
5000 Gold Pens and Pencils, Ivory Holder for Ladies	4 00 to 8 00
5000 Pencils	2 00 to 4 00

All of the above list of goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one is, and when paid for, will be carefully mixed, and sealed; and, when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, or express, as may be desired. On receipt of the Certificate you will see what it is you can have, and then, if you do not wish to pay a dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail there shall be no discrimination between persons. Every one who sends a dollar and receives a certificate, will receive, in an envelope, and are not required to pay a dollar until you have seen and received the article, which will certainly be worth more than that amount, and may be worth $100. An excellent mode for the purpose of investing a dollar.—Sunday Times, N. Y. City, Feb. 26, 1865.

Messrs. Arnandale & Co. have long been personally known to us as gentlemen fully to be relied on for the security of public confidence.—N. Y. Scottish American Journal, March 11, 1865.

We have inspected at the office of Arnandale & Co.'s Agency for Exposing and Introducing Jewelry, a large assortment of fashionable and valuable jewelry at the lowest possible rates. We also noticed a large quantity of silverware, and understand that the whole of these newly-imported articles are to be sold at one dollar on a novel principle, giving great advantages to buyers, and affording extensive employment to agents.—The Times (in addition to its usual correspondents and thoroughly worthy of public confidence), must recommend to our readers to read their advertisement.—N. Y. Albion, Sept. 3, 1864.

Mr. Arnandale, in addition to the arrangement the advantages must be on the side of the customer, for he has every article in his list to choose from unquestionably to have. We know what he will get for his dollar beforehand, and he can send what he likes.—N. Y. Saturday Press, Aug. 6, 1864.

TO OUR COUNTRY LADIES.—The most eligible and profitable business ever offered to them to whom the sale of certificates for the "Great Gift Distribution" of Arnandale & Co. is a lady of our acquaintance has been very successful in this way, not only in filling her own purse, but also in giving pleasure to those to whom she sold the Certificates, as will be seen by our advertising columns.—Sunday Mercury, August 14, 1864.

In our columns to-day our readers will find an advertisement of Arnandale & Co.'s Gift Distribution of watches, jewelry, and silverware. A number of this establishment have received several sets of the jewelry advertised, and we are interested in saying that, as to finish and quality, they exceed our expectations. They turned out to be just what many of the gifts represented.—True American (Lancaster, Ohio), August 11, 1864.

The British Whig of Kingston, C. W., say, Nov. 26, 1864, one of our lady subscribers became an agent for Arnandale & Co., and in a few days sold a number of certificates, sent as prizes for her agency, to the office for inspection, and without exception, every one stated that each and all of the articles were worth treble the amount of cost to the purchasers, and some of them six times.

We have seen some very pretty specimens of Table and Tea Spoons, Gold Watches, Ladies' Chains, Fine Bracelets, etc., which have been sent by Arnandale & Co. to this place for $1 each.—Appleton Reporter, N. Y. State, Feb. 15, 1865.

AGENTS.—We want agents in every regiment, and in every town and county in the country, and those acting as such will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to ten Dollars. Send 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps.

ARNANDALE & CO.,

No. 167 Broadway, New York.

Important Announcement.

GREAT SALE of WATCHES, CHAINS, DIAMOND RINGS, &c. One Million Dollars' Worth!

TO BE DISPOSED OF AT

ONE DOLLAR EACH!

Without regard to value!! Not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive!!!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES!

All to be sold at one Dollar Each!!

		EACH.
300 Minute Repeating Watches	$20 to $150
150 "	with Bells and Cuticura	200 to 500
500 Silver Repeaters and Coffee Urns	20 to	50
500 " Chafing Dishes	20 to	100
1000 " Tea Brooches	10 to	20
1500 " Syrup Cups with Silvers	10 to	50
1000 " Ladies' and Drinking Cups	5 to	10
2000 " Castors	15 to	50
2000 " Fruit, Card and Cake Baskets	10 to	50
5000 Dozen Silver Tea Spoons, per dozen		10
10,000 " Table Spoons and forks, per dozen		20
250 Gents' Gold Hunting-Cass Watches		90
250 Ladies' Gold and Enameled Hunting-Cass Watches		90
500 Gents' Hunting-Case Silver Watches		35 to 70
250 Diamond Rings		50 to 200
6,000 Gold Vest and Neck Chains		5 to 10
6,000 Gold Guard Chains		5 to 10
6,000 Jet and Gold Bracelets		5 to 10
2,000 Gentlemen's Gold Guard Chains		10 to 20
7,000 Solitaire and Gold Brooches		5 to 10
6,000 Florentine Mosaic and Coral Brooches		5 to 10
5,000 Mosaic, Jet, Lava, and Florentine Ear Drops		4 to 8
7,500 Coral, Opal, and Emerald Ear Drops		4 to 8
5,000 Gold Ear and Finger Picks and Tweezers		2 50 to 5
5,000 Gold Fob and Vest Watch Keys		2 50 to 5
5,000 Fob and Vest Chains		2 50 to 5
5,000 Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs, and Shirt Pins		3 to 8
5,000 Gold Pencils		3 to 6
10,000 Miniature Lockets		2 50 to 10
5,000 Gold Rings, Magic Spring		2 50 to 5
3,500 Gold Toothpicks, Combs, etc.		4 to 8
5,000 Plain Gold Rings		2 50 to 5
5,000 Chased Gold Rings		4 to 11
5,000 Stone Set and Signet Rings		4 to 11
10,000 California Diamond Rings		3 to 8
10,000 Ladies' and Gents' Gold Pens and Pencils		4 to 8
6,000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Cameo, Pearl, Coral, Jet, Florentine, and Lava		10 to 20
10,000 Gold Pens, Silver Extension-Holders and Gold Pencils		4 to 10
10,000 Gold Pens and Gold-Mounted Holders		4 to 10
5,000 Gold Pens and Gold-Mounted Extension Holders		5 to 10
5,000 Ladies' Gilt and Jet Buckles		5 to 15
5,000 Ladies' Gilt and Pearl Buttons and Belt Pins		5 to 15

ARNANDALE & CO., Manufacturers' Agents, No. 167 Broadway, New York, respectfully call the attention of the above list of goods will be sold for One Dollar Each.

